PREFACE.

The importance of placing in book form biographical history of representative citizens — both for its immediate worth and for its value to coming generations — is admitted by all thinking people; and within the past decade there has been a growing interest in this commendable means of perpetuating biography and family genealogy.

That the public is entitled to the privileges afforded by a work of this nature needs no assertion at our hands; for one of our greatest Americans has said that the history of any country resolves itself into the biographies of its stout, earnest and representative citizens. This medium, then, serves more than a single purpose; while it perpetuates biography and family genealogy, it records history, much of which would be preserved in no other way.

In presenting the Commemorative Biographical Record to its patrons, the publishers have to acknowledge, with gratitude, the encouragement and support their enterprise has received, and the willing assistance rendered in enabling them to surmount the many unforeseen obstacles to be met with in the production of a work of this character. In nearly every instance the material composing the sketches was gathered from those immediately interested, and then submitted in typewritten form for correction and revision. The volume, which is one of generous amplitude, is placed in the hands of the public with the belief that it will be found a valuable addition to the library, as well as an invaluable contribution to the historical literature of the State of Connecticut.

BIOGRAPHICAL

MAXWELL, HON. GEORGE, deceased. For considerably more than a century and a half the Maxwells, from whom the late George Maxwell was descended, were a prominent family of north-western Massachusetts.

Hugh Maxwell, the founder of the family in America, a descendant of good old Scotch-Irish stock, came to this country in the summer of 1733, with his wife, Sarah (Corbett), and four children, the youngest of whom was Hugh, then only six weeks old. This Hugh Maxwell later became distinguished in the Revolutionary war. In early youth his mother was his only teacher, but later he attended school, and made a specialty of the study of surveying. His first public service was in 1755, in the French and Indian war, when he voluntarily entered the ranks and served "five fatiguing and dangerous campaigns" under Gen. Johnson, with the "Militia of New England." He was in action on the banks of Lake George, where Baron Dieskau was defeated and slain, and was also at Fort William Henry when the Marquis de Montcalm laid siege with nine thousand men, and was taken prisoner six days later, when the fort capitulated. The Indians caught him and stripped him of all his clothing except his trousers, when he slipped from their hands and escaped to Fort Edward. In 1759 Gov. Pownall of Massachusetts appointed him ensign in Brig. Ruggles's Regiment, which rank he held until the close of the war. At the beginning of the Revolutionary war, in 1775, Hugh Maxwell was appointed lieutenant of a company of minute-men which joined Col. Prescott's Regiment at Cambridge. Soon after the battle of Lexington, and on the organization of the regular army, he was made senior captain of a company in Col. Prescott's Regiment, his commission dating from May 26, 1775. Two years before this he was one of a band under Capt. Hughes who threw the tea overboard in Boston harbor. Before the battle of Bunker Hill Hugh Maxwell, assisted by his brother Thompson, had charge of laying out the fortifications, and was slightly wounded in that battle. He remained with the army until peace was established, attaining to the rank of lieutenant-colonel. He was one of the original thirteen members of the Massachusetts Society of the Cincinnati, which was formed at the close of the Revolutionary war. In 1759 he married Bridget Monroe, of Lexington, Mass., and they had seven children, the youngest of whom, Sylvester, was the father of the subject of our sketch.

Sylvester Maxwell was born in the town of Heath, Mass., April 16, 1775. He graduated from Yale College twenty-two years later, and in 1801 settled in Charlemont, Mass., as a legal practitioner. On Dec. 25, 1806, he was married to Tirzah Taylor, of Buckland, and eight children were born to them.

George Maxwell was the fifth child of Sylvester and Tirzah Maxwell, and was born July 30, 1817, in the town of Charlemont, Mass. His youth, until he was seventeen, was passed at home, attending school and in the performance of home duties. Later he attended Fellenberg Academy, at Greenfield, Mass., and for a short time was clerk in a store there. In 1847 he removed to Rockville, Conn., and for several years engaged in the mercantile business, in association with Stanley White, the store being located on the southwest corner of Main and Union streets. In the late forties he became identified with the New England Co., manufacturers of woolen goods, and later transferred his business relations to the Hockanum Co., manufacturers of similar goods, in which firm he bought an interest. On the reorganization of the New England Co., in 1879, Mr. Maxwell was made president thereof, and on becoming identified with the Hockanum Co. was made treasurer, and subsequently president, relations which he sustained through life. On entering his career as a manufacturer Mr. Maxwell speedily became an influential factor in the leading financial enterprises of Rockville, where his executive genius and sound business qualities caused him to be placed in many positions of trust. At the time of his death, which occurred

April 2, 1891, Mr. Maxwell was president and treasurer of the Hockanum Co., president and treasurer of the Springville Co., president of the Rockville National Bank, the Rockville Gas Co., the Aqueduct Co., and the Rockville Railway Company, treasurer of the Water Power Co., and a director in various other enterprises, including the Society for Savings of Hartford, the Hartford Trust Co., and the National Fire Insurance Company.

Always a stanch Republican in politics, Mr. Maxwell served as representative in the Legislature, in 1871, from the town of Vernon, and in 1872 represented his district in the Senate. For years he was a deacon in the Second Congregational Church and later served (in the same capacity) in the Union Congregational Church, of Rockville, and was also a trustee of the Hartford Theological Seminary. In benevolent causes, and in all efforts to promote Christianity, he was a leading spirit. "Religion to him was not merely a creed and a profession, it was a life. A true church man of the best type, sweet, genial, attractive in his manner and spirit, he left behind him an unsullied record." Mr. Maxwell was a successful business man, and during his nearly fifty years of life in Rockville was always actively engaged, by personal effort and generous pecuniary aid, in the advancement of all public improvements and in the widest possible dissemination of knowledge through the medium of the public schools. He was also the founder of the Rockville Public Reading Room, and the Rockville Public Library.

On Nov. 3, 1846, Mr. Maxwell was married to Harriet Kellogg, who was born May 2, 1824, daughter of Hon. George Kellogg, of Rockville.

COL. FRANCIS TAYLOR MAXWELL is the son of the late Hon. George and Harriet (Kellogg) Maxwell, and was born in Rockville, Conn., Jan. 4, 1861.

Mr. Maxwell was educated in the public schools of his native town, being a member of the class of 1880 in the Rockville high school. His first business position was with the Hockanum Co., in 1878, shortly after he became its secretary, and on the death of his father he became treasurer of the company, a position that he has held ever since. Mr. Maxwell is director in the Springville Manufacturing Co., the New England Co., the Rockville National Bank, the National Fire Insurance Co., the Aetna Indemnity Co., the Western Auto Machine Screw Co., and is president of the Rockville Public Library, etc.

Col. Maxwell is a stanch Republican, and has taken an active interest in politics. In 1896 he was elected a member of the common council of the city of Rockville. In 1898 he was elected to represent his town in the Connecticut House of Representatives, and during the session was House chairman of the committee on Insurance. In 1900 he was elected to the Senate by the voters of the 23d District, and served as chairman of the committees on Education and Engrossed Bills. For four generations Col. Maxwell and his ancestors have served in the General Assembly of Connecticut. In 1892 Mr. Maxwell was commissioned aid-de-camp, with the title of colonel, on Gov. Morgan G. Bulkeley's staff.

The marriage of Col. Maxwell occurred in Providence, R. I., on Nov. 18, 1896, to Florence Russell Parsons, who was born in Torrington, Conn., and is the youngest child of Phineas F. and Helen (Bronson) Parsons. Two daughters have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell: Helen, born April 19, 1898, and Priscilla, born April 13, 1899.

Col. Maxwell is a member of the Society of Colonial Wars and also of the Sons of the American Revolution, while Mrs. Maxwell is a member of Sabra Trumbull Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution. Both are members of the Union Congregational Church, Rockville.

WILLIAM MAXWELL, the secretary and treasurer of the Springville Manufacturing Co., at Rockville, is one of the most substantial business men of the place. Though he is among the younger citizens, his worth entitles him to a position among the best, as a representative of one of the most prominent families and the son of one of the noblest citizens the town ever had, one who placed the name of Maxwell in a position second to none.

William Maxwell was the youngest but one of the children of George and Harriet (Kellogg) Maxwell, who grew to maturity, and was born Dec. 7, 1862. He received his early schooling in his native town, graduating from the Rockville high school in 1881, thence entered Yale, and graduated from that institution in the class of 1885. Taking great interest in all athletic sports, he was a member of the Mott Haven Athletic Team. It was in the days of the ordinary bicycle that he obtained more than ordinary prominence as a rider, and in distances from two to ten miles scored quite up to the highest standard, and approached very nearly the United States amateur record. While at Yale he was a member of the Greek letter society, the Psi Upsilon.

College days being over, Mr. Maxwell spent a few months in North Dakota, coming East when he became identified with the Springville Manufacturing Co., and at its re-organization accepted the position of secretary and assistant treasurer, upon the death of his father becoming treasurer.

Always a Republican, Mr. Maxwell cast his first Presidential vote for James G. Blaine, but politics have appealed to him only in the sense of public spirit, he having no desire for party rewards. At present he is a member of the high school committee, and has served as city assessor. From his youth he has been a member of the Congregational Church, and he has served as clerk of the Union Ecclesiastical Society at Rockville. His business interests are large, and he is serving as director in the following companies: The Hockanum Co.; the New England

Francis Taylor Marshall.

; the Springville Manufacturing Co.; the Rockville National Bank; the Rockville Building & Loan Association; the Savings Bank of Rockville; and the Aqueduct Co., of Rockville. He is also secretary of the Rockville Public Library. Mr. Maxwell is a public-spirited, enterprising and liberal-minded man, noted for his strict integrity and the unostentatious manner in which he carries the honors which have fallen upon his shoulders. He resides with his mother and sister at the Maxwell homestead.

HON. HENRY HAMMOND. The many attainments, developed through his own efforts, and the innumerable public services which assured to him Henry Hammond the lasting approbation of posterity, constituted a composite whole which maintained and fostered not only the glory of Connecticut, but that of the United States. His own estimate of himself would undoubtedly center around his appreciation of one of the most luminous opportunities of the century, a chance for action created when the first insistent wail of the Southern slave began to fret and annoy the receptive consciousness of the North. The clear, strong, penetrating intellect of the manipulator of forge and bellows, whose education had been that of wintry leisure, of the candle and hearth light, and whose sympathetic and humanitarian nature advocated the rights of all, irrespective of race, color or condition, found in that mockery of freedom upon the cotton plantations a field whereon to array his talents and marshal his forces. Yet it is conceded that even the momentous question of slavery hardly met the requirements of so broad and forceful a nature, and that had he enjoyed greater advantages in his youth, he would have loomed above the horizon of his time and place with splendid daring and originality. Mr. Hammond was a native son of Windham county, and was born at Pomfret Landing, Oct. 15, 1813, his death occurring at his home in Danielson, April 3, 1895.

The ancestors of Mr. Hammond were prominent in the French and Indian wars and, whether as mechanics or farmers, fulfilled their destiny as able and conscientious members of their respective communities. His father, Eleazer Waterman Hammond, was born in Johnston, R. I., May 12, 1772, and was reared in the family of Simon Carpenter, relative living in North Killingly, now East Putnam. After leaving the Carpenter farm he learned the trade of printing and thereafter found employment in New York, Boston, and New London, many years being spent with Samuel Woodworth, famous as the author of "The Old Oaken Bucket." Mr. Hammond taught Mr. Woodworth how to print with a press, and it was he who set up for the first time the now time-honored verses. In after years Mr. Hammond was wont to relate how the sudden fame of the author made other and less successful printers envious, and how from another office emanated a parody entitled "The Old Greasy Swill Pail That Stood by the Door"; both the original and parody were often recited by Mr. Hammond with telling effect. After leaving the printing business he resided at Pomfret Landing for a few years, then at Webster, Mass., returning eventually to the Landing, where he died March 23, 1855. He was a man of sterling traits of character, of sound judgment and much natural enthusiasm, and he must needs have made an impression upon any locality. He had a fair knowledge of law and its usages, and made out many legal papers and settled many disputes. For many years of his life he suffered from rheumatism, but this did not seem to impair his usefulness or cloud his naturally clear intellect. At Thompson, Conn., he united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, and afterward transferred his membership to the M. E. Church of Danielson.

On March 24, 1805, Eleazer W. Hammond married Ann M. Brown, born in Pomfret, Nov. 6, 1783, who died June 21, 1847. Of this union there were eight children. Stephen W., born Feb. 12, 1806, married Grace Walker, was in early life a farmer and blacksmith, and in later life a Methodist preacher; he died in Danielson, June 8, 1884, leaving two sons and three daughters. Mary T., born April 18, 1808, died unmarried at the home of her brother Henry, in Danielson, July 7, 1901. Simon, born June 20, 1810, died Feb. 14, 1829. Henry was born Oct. 15, 1813. Amos, born May 25, 1816, married Emily Kingsley, and is a retired wagon maker, living in East Hartford, Conn. Ezra, born June 3, 1819, died April 27, 1897, married Mrs. Amanda Nichols, and lived on his farm at Waterford, Dakota Co., Minn., for thirty years. Mr. Hammond later returned to Pomfret Landing, lived there for several years and died at the home of his brother, April 27, 1897. He was a botanic physician, and had a very thorough knowledge of botany, being considered an authority on that subject. Lewis K., born April 29, 1822, died June 6, 1887. William Pool Hammond, the youngest of the children born to Eleazer Hammond and his wife, was born May 6, 1827, and after receiving the usual academic education, became a well known instructor of penmanship and bookkeeping. He conducted a commercial school for many years at Providence, R. I., later becoming an instructor in his specialties in the boys' school at Media, Pa. He was afterward an instructor in Pasadena, Cal., in which city he eventually retired, owing to poor health; he died there Sept. 20, 1901. He was cremated and his ashes interred in Westfield cemetery at Danielson. His first wife was Felicia Danforth, and his second, Anna S. Fry.

At the age of seven, Henry Hammond was withdrawn from the influences of his home and placed in the family of a farmer, with whom he remained for several years. While there his opportunities for acquiring an education were confined to a few weeks each winter, and he went from the farm to Brooklyn, Conn., where he worked at the blacksmiths' trade for very small wages but very long hours, filling an apprenticeship of three years in the same place. The knowledge of the world, of which he had but an inkling, seemed from his earliest youth the one desirable attainment toward which he ought to strive, and after his day's labor in the shop he would sit before the hearth and pore over some book which added to his information and opened vistas of possibility. His tastes were truly remarkable even in those days, and he found enjoyment and profit in such classics as Homer, Virgil and kindred works. His propensity for study attracted the attention of Judge Robinson, of Brooklyn, who gave him access to the treasures of his library, than which no more lasting or beneficent favor could have been granted. This unexpected opportunity bore rapid fruit, and Mr. Hammond sought to instill into the other youths of the neighborhood an appreciation for knowledge in all its phases. He thus established a lyceum among the young people, the effect of which was far reaching in its results.

After leaving Brooklyn, Mr. Hammond lived for a time with his family in Dudley, Mass., and in 1840 opened a blacksmith shop in Pomfret Landing, continuing the same until 1851. The same year he removed to Danielson, his family coming two years later, and he was for two years employed as a bookkeeper in the store of William Humes. This practically ended the business career of Mr. Hammond. He had been a successful and capable blacksmith for twenty years, but he possessed talents and capabilities not required at the forge, or appreciated in the counting-room, and a discerning fate beckoned to a less peaceful and more strenuous activity.

While still in his teens, Mr. Hammond began to take upon his own shoulders the cause of the oppressed Africans in the South, and he assisted in forming at Brooklyn, Conn., the first anti-slavery society in the State. After his removal to Dudley, Mass., he did not grow indifferent, but with his brother, Stephen W., founded another and very active anti-slavery society, in connection with which was maintained the best anti-slavery library obtainable at that time. During his stay in Dudley, himself and Rev. Joseph D. Merrill were sent as delegates to that memorable convention in Boston where was first agitated the question of a political anti-slavery plank; in this meeting all phases of the subject were exhaustively discussed, and such men as Rev. Mr. Phelps, who died in prison charged with assisting fugitive slaves to reach Canada, were among the forceful and impressive speakers. In 1840 Mr. Hammond organized the Windham County Liberty Association, the effect of whose undertakings is still discernable to some extent in that section, for anti-slavery became so firmly entrenched there that to politicians it was known as the "Black Corner."

In 1847 the first general National Anti-Slavery Convention was called at Buffalo, N. Y., to which

Mr. Hammond and Sherman M. Booth were sent as delegates from Connecticut. This convention, about to enter upon a political crusade against the spread of slavery and against its existence in the territories, was constitutionally controlled by Congress, and sought to secure for its committee on Resolutions the wisest councillors, to place before the American people its principles, plans, and purposes. Mr. Hammond was selected as one of the members of this committee, and was thus associated with Salmon P. Chase, of Ohio; Garrett Smith, of New York; Mr. Stevens, of Pennsylvania, and others who became prominent in the final struggle against the slave owner. The resolutions adopted by this convention became the memorable Buffalo Platform. In Pomfret, Mr. Hammond's residence became known as one of the hotels on the line of the "underground railroad," where the fleeing fugitives found aid and shelter. He often addressed public audiences in different parts of the State, and wrote stirring articles which found their way into the anti-slavery papers of the east.

After the formation of the Liberty party, Mr. Hammond became very active in its affairs, and from the platform advocated its measures with rapt enthusiasm. As a debater he was cool and collected, methodical and argumentative, and convinced because of his firmness and sincerity. He cast his first presidential vote for Hon. James G. Birney, of Michigan, the candidate for the Liberty party, and afterward for Hon. John P. Hale and Martin Van Buren, candidates respectively of the Free Soil and Free Democracy parties, both outgrowths of the original Liberty party. At the demise of the Whig party at its convention in Baltimore in 1852, the American party was born, and its Southern leaders and managers sought to make it tributary to the slavery system and expansion. Mr. Hammond and his political associates entered that organization for the purpose of controlling it in the interests of anti-slavery. The first State convention, held in Hartford, was attended by certain fraternal delegates from the South who attempted to resist the placing of an anti-slavery plank in the platform. Their vigorous protests came to naught at three o'clock in the morning, when the friends of freedom won their battle and placed the American party of Connecticut upon a pronounced anti-slavery platform, nominated Hon. William T. Minor, of Stamford, for governor, and elected their whole ticket by an overwhelming majority. Mr. Hammond was unusually active in bringing about this happy result and when the Free Soil and American parties were merged into the Republican party, with Gen. John C. Fremont as Presidential candidate, he began a career of hard work for the infant party, and was afterward one of the most prominent leaders of the State.

In 1854 Mr. Hammond was a member of the House of Representatives, and was appointed by Speaker Foster as chairman of the committee on

C. H. Allen

Federal Relations, filling a position requiring the most consummate tact, judgment and firmness. In 1865 he was again a member of the House and served on the Railroad committee. Subsequently, for three successive terms, he was elected general railroad commissioner for Connecticut, and in 1862 his friends in and out of the State presented his name to President Lincoln for the office of United States Marshal for the district of Connecticut. When advised of these preliminary steps, Mr. Hammond hurried to Washington to prevent the consummation of the plan, but he was eventually induced to re-consider his decision, his particular fitness, added to his unquestioned loyalty, making him an especially desirable candidate. During his incumbency of this responsible position his selection of deputies and his relations to the courts are best voiced in the following letter from Judge Shipman, of the District court of the United States, upon learning of the proposed resignation of Mr. Hammond: "Hartford, Sept. 29, 1864. My dear Sir: The more I think of your proposed step in resigning, the less I am reconciled to it. I shall be extremely sorry to part with you officially, and shall regret to do so both on public and personal grounds. My anxieties for our country are so constant and oppressive, that I am sensitive about every change. I have the utmost confidence in your capacity, discretion, and thorough integrity, and only regret that the tenure of your office is not for life, without the power of resigning. Very truly your friend and servant, [Signed] William D. Shipman."

Mr. Hammond represented the Sixteenth district in the Senate during 1881-2, and he held the office of county commissioner for some terms. He was appointed collector of internal revenue for the Third district of Connecticut, by President Johnson, and held many other prominent positions of trust. While serving the State and country with great vigor and unquestioned devotion during the Civil war, his services were often in demand for extremely confidential and delicate duties in direct connection with Washington, all of which he ennobled with his clear judgment, careful conservative methods and invariable allegiance to right and honor. In his own home district he fulfilled the greatest expectations of his townsmen, and was prominent as an active trustee of the Windham County Savings Bank, and he was for twenty-one years president of the First National Bank of Killingly. He was an active director of the Danielson Cotton Company, and was foremost in all attempts to improve the general tone of the community. In his morality, his business ability and his high personal character, he represented those attributes for which the leading citizens of Connecticut are distinguished both at home and abroad. He was a member of the Methodist Church, having joined that organization in Thompson when a young man. He was transferred by letter to the church at Danielson, where he was not only personally active, but by his generous contributions aided in the forwarding of the church interests of his town.

April 8, 1840, in Brooklyn, Mr. Hammond married Emma Dorrance, who was born in Brooklyn, April 4, 1813, a daughter of Samuel and Amy (Kenyon) Dorrance, and who died, Nov. 14, 1890. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Hammond were as follows: Charles Henry, born Dec. 12, 1841, who died Oct. 9, 1842; Harriet J., born Sept. 23, 1843, who cared for her parents with rare devotion up to the time of their deaths, and who lives in Danielson; and Ellen, born June 12, 1848, who died Jan. 28, 1875. The following estimate of Mr. Hammond, from the pen of his friend of many years' standing, J. Q. A. Stone, editor of the Windham County Transcript, sheds a personal light upon characteristics known only to those who were honored with his friendship and loyalty.

"The long, varied and useful life of Hon. Henry Hammond, a distinguished citizen of this town and county, ended on Wednesday, April 3, 1895. It would, perhaps, have borne the 'strain of toil and fret of care' that fall to the lot of the best favored in this world, if Mr. Hammond, in early manhood, had not too severely taxed, by hard manual labor, an exceptionally strong, robust body.

"In early life Mr. Hammond appreciated the value of a broad education, and improved every possible advantage within his reach, limited as they were, indeed, to boys who had to earn their own livelihood, to secure the intellectual culture and information that made him, in later years, a most interesting and instructive speaker and conversationalist. The writer esteemed it almost a liberal education to enjoy frequent interviews with Mr. Hammond, so full was his well stored mind of general facts and reminiscences of a public and general character. In discussing the social, political and moral problems that confront the people of America, and all other nationalities, his careful, well matured ideas were full of suggestion and inspiration, always arousing deep and earnest thinking in the minds of thoughtful listeners. This was especially the case when he entered upon the history of the crusade against slavery in this country, in which he was an aggressive co-laborer with Garrison, Phillips, Whittier, May and others.

"Had Mr. Hammond enjoyed the benefits afforded to young men of today in our schools and colleges, he would have been well equipped, by large and broad mental gifts, to have filled any elective office in this free country. Even with his limitations, all who knew him realized and conceded that he possessed special qualifications for much higher positions than he ever reached. Upon financial questions he had unquestionably clear and sound ideas, and was one of the few public men who seem to be able, in all of our bewildering difficulties, to grasp the situation and suggest wise and practical measures that would probably solve a question still challenging the hardest kind of thinking among the politicians and financiers of this great country.

"For half a century there has not been a wiser political manager in New England, if in the country, than Mr. Hammond. We can call to mind only one who could equal his generalship in conducting a political campaign. Reference is made to ex-Gov. Boutell of Massachusetts. It was our pleasure to listen to these two men, some twenty years ago, compare views about the best plans to compass victory for one's party in a hard political battle, and both agreed that one word covered the ground—ORGANIZATION, in every district, town and city.

"Mr. Hammond was courageous and true as steel in advocating and sacrificing for all moral reforms. He was always at the post of duty in the war against the saloon, which he always looked upon as a great danger to the prosperity and even existence of this free Republic. He gave more time, talent and money to compass the defeat of the merciless rum power in this State than even many of his nearest friends were aware of. In the darkest day he never displayed the white feather for retreat or surrender; but often deeply lamented the inexcusable failure of too many moral Christian citizens to present a bold, aggressive front to the well organized and unscrupulous enemies of humanity.

"There was one element in Mr. Hammond's strong character that is worthy of commendation and imitation. In all of his disagreements with his fellow citizens upon political, social, religious or local affairs, he never lost his temper, whatever the provocation might be, or however severe, and often unjust, were the criticisms made by persons who differed from his opinions and actions. To a political opponent after a hard fought campaign, and to a fellow townsman after a sharp disagreement on local or State interests, he was ever the courteous, accommodating and helpful neighbor and friend. 'Life is too short,' was his decision, 'to permit differences of opinion upon even important matters to disturb the flow of kind fellowship between the troubled and weary children of the one loving Father.'

"Mr. Hammond was an able writer; and though not possessing the graces and magnetism of an orator, he was an effective speaker, as all knew—he never spoke without having well-digested and important suggestions to offer to his hearers. He was a devoted lover of poetry, especially the best, and had the highest admiration for the beautiful in art and nature—elements in his character not generally known to others besides his family and intimate friends.

"Mr. Hammond has not been in good health for a dozen years, and since the death of his devoted and beloved wife, some five years ago, his gradual decline has been apparent to his family and friends. The home life of the deceased is too delicate and tender a subject for public remark, but it may not be inappropriate to say that after frequent absence his heart ever longed for the refreshing rest and devotion he found alone in his own home. A sacrificing daughter had the coveted privilege of ministering the last and tenderest offices of love to a wise, thoughtful and helpful father.

"We rejoice that our personal friendship has never been shaken or broken—and we say 'hail and farewell' with a sense of loss that is only brightened by the firm faith that in another land, and under pleasanter skies, there will be a reunion and acquaintance that will know no interruption."

GEORGE SYKES. The life of George Sykes, a manufacturer of Rockville, and at this time the president of three large manufacturing corporations of a city in which he has dwelt for upward of a third of a century, and which he has aided very materially in developing from a village into one of the busiest industrial centers in New England, furnishes to the ambitious youth of to-day an example of what can be accomplished in the line of energy, industry and integrity.

Born April 4, 1840, in Honley, near Huddersfield, Yorkshire, England, Mr. Sykes is a son of John Sykes (son of Joseph) and his wife Harriet Durrans (daughter of Thomas), who came to America about 1851. In his youth and early manhood John Sykes had been taught woolen manufacture in all its branches, a business in which he was employed, near Huddersfield, until he came to America. After coming to the United States, he entered the mills of E. S. Hall & Co., of Millville, Mass., a firm, which then and for many years afterward enjoyed the highest reputation as manufacturers of fancy cassimeres. After some years Mr. Sykes removed to North Adams, where he died at the age of eighty-seven years, his wife dying in that place at the age of seventy-six, both respected in the community. Their family of boys became citizens of the type that few parents are permitted to take pride in. The mechanical skill of the father was inherited, the pious teaching of the mother also bore fruit, and New England profited by the presence of this little English family whose members would have been a credit to any community. While Mr. Sykes supported the Republican party, he took no active part in politics, although he was much interested, a constant reader of the New York Tribune, and a great admirer of its noted editor, Horace Greeley, until the latter's unfortunate candidacy for the Presidency. Although he was well qualified, he would never accept political office, but could argue a point and enjoyed doing so for what he considered right. He was a mechanic, and a superior one, and his intellect was such as, under other circumstances, would have made of him a leader of men. Socially he was connected with the order of Foresters, and both he and his wife were devoted members of the Episcopal Church.

Mr. and Mrs. Sykes had children as follows:

Geo Sykes

(1) George, whose name opens these lines, was the eldest. Of the others, (2) Thomas W. married Miss Jennie Bond, of North Adams, and has three children, Carrie Bond, Bertha and Mattie (now Mrs. Herbert Lewis). (3) Elizabeth is a resident of North Adams, Mass. (4) James T., whose death occurred at Rockville on Nov. 19, 1894, at the early age of thirty-nine years, was from boyhood a resident of Rockville, where he was well and favorably known. Born in 1855, at Millville, he came to Rockville at the age of fourteen and entered the mill of the Hockanum Co., familiarizing himself with the work of every department until he was made superintendent, a position he had filled for ten years before his decease. His sturdy character and honesty of purpose in all things were greatly admired by the community. His widow, formerly Hattie L. Vibbert, and one son, Elmer H., survive. (5) David A.

Receiving a common school education, George Sykes at an early age entered, as a carding boy, the mill where his father was employed. Both his grandfathers had been skilled workmen, in the line of woolen manufacture, one in the weaving, the other in the finishing department, and the knowledge of this, and of his father's skill in the same line, in addition to the fact that his birth took place in a great manufacturing center, may have been something of an inspiration to the fourteen-year-old lad, creating the ambition that led to his great success in after years. As he planned how best to use his first wages, $13 per month, he probably could never have dreamed of the changes the years would bring, nor of how many ciphers he could add to those first dollars as time passed by.

Possessing a natural aptitude for mechanical work, and giving his duties diligent attention, young Sykes passed from one branch of the industry to another, becoming a weaver, then loom-fixer, and later overseer in the weave-room. Shortly after attaining his majority he went to Cavendish, Vt., to take charge of the weaving in the woolen mill at that point belonging to Frederick Fullerton & Co., and a year later, in 1864, was advanced to the superintendency of the mill. This position he held until he came to Rockville, Conn., on Oct. 1, 1866. Since that time Mr. Sykes has gradually widened his influence, steadily forging his way to the front rank of New England manufacturers and to a most enviable place among them. During all these years he has been closely identified with the growth of Rockville as a manufacturing center, and has been allied with some of the largest corporations. On coming to the village, in 1866, he became manager of the Hockanum Mill, and though he was but a young man of twenty-six, under his able conduct of the affairs of the company their goods became widely and favorably known in the market, and the name of the Hockanum Co. second to none in prominence among the manufacturers of New England. What was known as the Saxony Mill, at Rockville, was bought and equipped by the Hockanum Co. Mr. Sykes, in association with the late most highly esteemed George Maxwell, purchased the mill of the New England Manufacturing Co., whose business was established in 1836 by the late Allen Hammond and George Kellogg, re-organized it, and made it a joint-stock company, of which Mr. Maxwell was president until his death, in 1891. Prosperity attended his efforts, and in 1886, opportunity offering for the purchase of the stock of the Springfield Manufacturing Co., Mr. Sykes and his associates became the owners, the mill now being operated under the old charter. The old mill was removed and on its site was erected a new one, which is considered one of the best equipped and most successful woolen mills of its kind in this country. Of these three corporations Mr. Sykes is now president, having succeeded Mr. Maxwell as president of the New England Co. The products of all these mills are fancy cassimeres and worsted goods for men's wear.

The mills of the Hockanum Co. are the most extensive of the kind in Rockville. With ten sets of cards and 162 broad looms the output is enormous. The business was established in 1838, with two sets of woolen machinery for the manufacture of satinets, which were its product until 1858, when the manufacture of all-woolen fancy cassimeres was commenced, and from that time on the aim of the company has been to make high-grade cassimeres as regards material, style and finish, the finest to be produced, for this purpose selecting the very best native and imported wool. At the Vienna Exposition, in 1873, the company was awarded a medal for the superiority of its goods; in 1876, at the Centennial Exposition, an award was given the company; and at the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago, in 1892, the product of these mills was greatly admired by foreign experts and others, and an award was given on fancy cassimeres "for beautiful, fine and even spinning, excellent designs and beauty of finish," and on worsteds "for beautiful new designs, splendid colorings and excellent finish." Henry Latzko, the Imperial Commissioner of Austria, a successful worsted manufacturer at Brunn, and one of the judges on textile exhibits, pronounced the goods of this company equal in every respect to the best made in Europe. In the Paris Exposition of 1900 the three mills of which Mr. Sykes is president received three gold medals. As a proof of the popularity of their superior goods it may be noted that the inaugural suit of President McKinley in 1897 was made exclusively and expressly in their establishment.

The Hockanum Co. has a capital of $300,000 and gives employment to 400 hands. The New England Co. has a capital of $250,000, operates nine sets of cards and 114 broad looms, and was established in 1836, under the firm name of Hammond & Kellogg. In 1837 this company was incorporated with a capital stock of $31,000, for the manufacture of satinetts, but in 1842 the product of the mill was changed to fancy cassimeres, for which Crompton looms were put in, and in 1879 the manufacture of worsted goods was commenced, these fabrics ranking among the best in the country. This company gives employment to 350 people, and the mill has a capacity of 300,000 yards of material annually. The Springville Company has a capital of $250,000, operates eight sets of cards and 135 broad looms, and employs 350 skilled operatives. This company furnished the cloth for the inaugural suit of President Harrison, in 1889.

Mr. Sykes was married Sept. 2, 1864, to Sarah A. Fitton, a native of Northfield, Vt., born Nov. 6, 1844, daughter of James and Mary (Watson) Fitton, both of Lancashire, England, the former of whom was a manufacturer. Mr. Fitton's death occurred in England, but his body was brought to the United States and was buried at Cavendish, where his wife had died. Children as follows have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Sykes: Lizzie M., born at Cavendish, Vt., graduated from the Rockville high school, married Charles Bond, and they reside in Hartford. Eva L., born in Rockville, graduated from the Rockville high school, and spent two years at Mrs. Brown's School in New York; she married Everett J. Lake, and resides in Hartford, with two children, Harold Sykes and Marjorie Sykes. Elsie E., born in Rockville, graduated from the Rockville high school, and in 1900 married Hon. Charles Phelps, of Rockville. Bertha died at the age of eleven. George Edmund is a member of the class of 1903, Yale University.

Mr. Sykes is a director of the Rockville National and Savings Banks; the Rockville Aqueduct Water Co., the Rockville Railroad Co., and for years has been a member of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers, for an extended time having been one of the executive members of that organization, and in 1898 becoming its vice-president. In his political views he is a Republican, was a Presidential elector in 1892, and a delegate to the Republican convention at St. Louis in 1896, but has never accepted public office. He was one of the commissioners from Connecticut at the World's Fair in Chicago, 1893.

The family are all connected with the Union Congregational Church, where Mr. Sykes is most highly esteemed, and to the support of which he is a liberal contributor. In 1893 he built his elegant mansion on the corner of Ellington avenue and Prospect street, in Rockville, where hospitality is dispensed with good taste, and without ostentation. Socially Mr. Sykes is an interesting companion, his reading, experience and travel having given him a wide outlook over life. Nineteen times has he crossed the Atlantic, and foreign shores are almost as familiar to him as his own, and although business responsibilities press upon him at all times he is never too occupied to do a kind action or to extend the helping hand to a worthy but less fortunate brother.

JUDGE BENEZET HOUGH BILL, a prominent lawyer of Rockville, Tolland county, of nearly fifty years practice there, is a representative of one of the old and prominent families of New England. The Bill family is one of the oldest in all England, being directly traceable in a single county, that of Shropshire, for a period of about 500 years.

The first of the family in America was John Bill, from whom Judge B. H. Bill is a descendant in the eighth generation, the line of descent being as follows: John, Philip, John, John, Jonathan, Eleazer, Josiah Bissell, and Benezet Hough.

John Bill, born in the parish of Much Wenlock, appeared in London, England, in 1613, as a publisher to King James and as one of the firm of Bill & Barker, published the first London Gazette, in the time of Charles II. His first wife was Anne, the daughter of Thomas Mountford, D. D. Their son (I) John and his wife, Dorothy (Tuttle), arrived from England prior to 1635 and were the progenitors of the family in America.

(II) Philip Bill, the son of John, born in England about 1620, was but a lad at the time of his arrival in America. His residence was at Pulling Point, then a part of Boston, and later at Ipswich, but about 1668 he settled in the town of New London, Conn., on the east side of the Thames river, in that portion of the town that in 1705 was incorporated as the town of Groton. The death of Philip occurred in 1689, and his widow, who married Samuel Bucknall, died in 1709.

(III) John, son of Philip, born in 1667, in Massachusetts, married first, Mercy Fowler, and second, in 1726, Hannah Rist. In early life he removed from Groton to the town of Lebanon, where he seems to have spent the remainder of his life, his death occurring in 1739.

(IV) John (3), son of John (2), born in New London in 1696, removed to Lebanon with his father in 1703, residing there the remainder of his life. In 1725 he was admitted to the church in Lebanon, his wife, Mary, in 1733, and all their children were there baptized. He died in 1746, his widow surviving almost half a century.

(V) Jonathan Bill was born in Lebanon, Conn., Feb. 6, 1725-26. He was an extensive farmer in Exeter Society. He was twice married; his first wife was Mary, and the second was Phebe. His family consisted of four children, Lucy, Joseph, Jonathan, and Eleazer.

(VI) Eleazer, son of Jonathan, was born Feb. 24, 1758, in Lebanon. On May 27, 1790, he married for his first wife Elizabeth Cole, of Lebanon, who was the mother of his children. His second wife was Betsey Fitch, also of that town. They were married March 31, 1808. Eleazer Bill was a farmer, and always resided in Lebanon. He became a soldier in the Revolution, was wounded, and received a pension from the government, dying at the advanced age of ninety-two, his children being: Chester, who was born in 1791, and died in Columbia, Conn., where he kept a noted tavern; Josiah Bissell, the father of our subject; and David, born in 1797, who went to Snowville, Va., from Massachusetts, where he became a planter and extensive slave owner.

(VII) Josiah Bissell Bill, father of our subject, was born May 13, 1793, in Lebanon, and on March 27, 1816, was married to Harriet Tracy Hough, of Bozrah, born May 3, 1794. [The sketch of the prominent Hough family appears in the records of Middlesex county.] Immediately after marriage, the young couple removed to New Milford, Susquehanna Co., Pa., where for twenty years the husband followed the occupation of teaching. In 1835, or at the end of this period, he returned to Connecticut, settling in the town of Lebanon, with the intention of taking care of his aged father. The trip back to Connecticut was made with a covered wagon which carried their goods, while they drove the entire distance in a carriage, the magnitude of such a trip, in these days of rapid progress, scarcely being appreciated. Mr. Bill had no other preparation for the profession of teaching than that offered in the incomplete schools of his time, but for twenty-three years he acceptably filled the pedagogic chair and was always regarded as an intellectual man. A radical temperance advocate, he made many addresses on the subject. After his return from Pennsylvania, he lived with his old father for several years and then went into mercantile business in the town of Columbia, which was then quite a thriving locality. For about three years he remained in Columbia and then removed to the town of Vernon, where he bought a farm near Bolton Stone Quarry, in the south part of the town of Vernon, but as his health was poor, he gave up farming and after about six years of residence there removed to Lebanon, where his death occurred Nov. 16, 1846. The death of his wife occurred April 1, 1852, in Rockville, where she had been making her home with Judge Bill for several years. Both father and mother sleep in the old cemetery in Lebanon, Connecticut.

Josiah Bissell Bill was a staunch Whig, but not an office seeker, although he served as justice of the peace in Pennsylvania. His religious connection was with the Baptist Church. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Bill were: Joseph C., born in 1817, who died in 1839; Mary E., born in 1822, in Pennsylvania, who married Hon. Dwight Loomis, an ex-member of Congress and a Judge and prominent attorney of Rockville, now of Hartford, and who died in 1864; Edwin, born in 1827, who married Susan Corey and lives at Vernon Center, Conn.; and our subject.

(VIII) Benezet Hough Bill was born Feb. 26, 1829, in New Milford, Susquehanna Co., Pa., and received his primary education in the State of his birth. When but six years old he made the trip to Connecticut with his parents, and his first school teacher in Vernon was his father. Later he attended the Lebanon Academy, and from there went to Worcester, Mass., and to the Suffield Literary Institute, both of these being schools of note at that time, going thence to the Academy at Wilbraham, Mass. While still a young man he taught school at Lebanon, Conn., at Sandwich, Mass., and at the academy at Vernon, but in 1851 he entered the law office of Hon. Dwight Loomis, of Rockville, and was graduated from the Yale Law School at New Haven in the class of 1854, with the degree of B. L.

For three years, beginning in 1855, Mr. Bill was associated with his preceptor, Judge Loomis, in the practice of the law at Rockville. Possessing fine natural talent and superior qualifications adapted to the successful practice of his profession, he established, in a very brief period, not only a remunerative business, but a most excellent reputation as a citizen. Proving himself to be an honorable and public-spirited gentleman, as well as an able attorney, his townsmen were not slow to recognize his abilities and signify the confidence which they have ever since continued to repose in him. In 1869 he was appointed State's attorney for Tolland county and held the office for twenty-four years. He held the position of judge of the Rockville city court, for many years, resigning in 1899, owing to the age limit. For a number of years he was corporation counsel. He has been prosecuting attorney for some years.

For many years Judge Bill has occupied a leading position among the lawyers of Rockville, and indeed of all Tolland county, and no citizen of his section has won more honorable distinction in all the walks of public or private life. For many years he has been president of the Rockville Savings Bank, one of the old and prosperous institutions of that city. Judge Bill is connected with the Union Congregational Society at Rockville.

On Nov. 2, 1859, Judge Bill was married to Kate, daughter of Rev. Leverett Griggs, D. D., and Catherine (Stearns) Griggs, of Bristol, Conn., who died April 13, 1887. On July 10, 1890, Judge Bill was married to Lucinda R., daughter of Charles R. and Falla (Roberts) Bronson, of Waterbury, Conn., where she was born and reared. The children of Judge Bill were: Lila Loomis, born Aug. 16, 1861, who married Hon. Charles Phelps of Rockville, ex-Secretary of State, and ex-Attorney General, and who died in 1888; and Katie Elizabeth, born in 1864, who married Dr. Thomas F. Rockwell, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere. Mrs. Bill is a member of the D. A. R., a lady of refinement and culture, and is prominent in social circles. Her husband is one of the Librarian Rockville Library trustees. Since 1885 his residence has been on Park street. Coming of an old family which gave Westminster its first dean, Judge Bill fitly represents it in dignity and honor.

DARIUS CRANE, one of the best known and oldest citizens of Ellington, Tolland county, traces his ancestry to that Benjamin Crane who was in Wethersfield, Conn., as early as 1635 and is supposed to have come from Watertown, Mass., where he was born about 1630.

(I) Benjamin Crane conducted a tannery in Wethersfield and was made a freeman of the town, May 12, 1658. In May, 1682, he united with others in a petition to the General Court for liberty to "erect a plantation in the Wayhaynassit country," which is now Windham county. Mary Backus, his wife, was a daughter of William and Sarah (Charles) Backus. His tannery, which was located about a mile south of the present village center of Wethersfield, was known as "Old Crane's tannery place," and on his death, May 31, 1691, it passed to his son John. Mrs. Mary Crane died July 8, 1717, and was the mother of the following children: Benjamin, born March 1, 1656; Jonathan, born Dec. 1, 1658; Joseph, born April 1, 1661; John, born April 30, 1663; Elijah, born in 1665; Abraham, born in 1668; Jacob, born 1670; Israel born Nov. 1, 1671; and Mary, born 1673.

(II) Benjamin Crane, the oldest member of the above family of children, was chosen rate maker of the town in 1685. He was a farmer and tanner by occupation, and after a short but eventful life, his death occurred June 20, 1693, when he was drowned. He took a leading part in the Charter Oak episode, and was fearless and outspoken in his manner toward Sir Edmund Andros. A warrant was taken out for his arrest on account of his opposition to the revoking of the Charter, and Nov. 28, 1690, he was fined fifteen pounds; by forfeiting his bond, his brother John, who was his bondsman, was compelled to pay fifty pounds to the authorities. In 1655 Benjamin Crane wedded Mary Chapman. His second wife was Martha Boardman, who later became Mrs. Samuel Terry, of Enfield, by whom she had five sons and a daughter. Benjamin Crane was father to the following children: Benjamin, Isaac and Jonathan.

(II) Lieut. Jonathan Crane, mentioned above, was born in 1658, and in 1678 married Deborah, daughter of Francis Griswold, who was born in 1661 and died in 1704. Lieut. Crane was one of the early settlers of the old town of Windham, Conn., where it is said he built the first sawmill, and was a man of prominence. He belonged to the train band, was made a lieutenant in 1703 and was deputy to the General Court fifteen times between 1701 and 1722. He was one of the petitioners for the formation of the town and in 1691 was chosen first townsman. He died March 12, 1735. His children were as follows: Sarah, born Nov. 16, 1680; Jonathan, born Feb. 2, 1684; John; Mary, born Oct. 20, 1689, who married Jacob Simon; Hannah, born March 7, 1692; Isaac, born April 6, 1694; Joseph, born May 17, 1696; Elizabeth and Deborah, twins, who were born in February, 1698, and died the same year; Abigail, born Feb. 15, 1700, who married David Knight.

(III) John Crane, the third child in the above family, born in 1687, was a resident of the vicinity of Fort Hill, in the town of Windham, where he had his home on land given him by his father. Sarah Spencer became his wife Sept. 16, 1708, at Windham, where she died Sept. 15, 1715. Mr. Crane was married again, April 18, 1716, to Prudence Belding. To him were born the following children: John, born July 31, 1709; Abiah, born Oct. 12, 1710; Eunice, born May 13, 1712; Elisha, of whom mention will be made below; Sybil, born April 1, 1719; Hezekiah, born March 31, 1721; Prudence, born July 24, 1723; Lemuel, born July 12, 1725; Hannah, born March 15, 1727; Rhoda, born March 28, 1729; and Adonijah, born May 12, 1731.

(IV) Elisha (or Elisham) Crane, on Dec. 31, 1741, married Sarah Bissell, daughter of Jeremiah and Mehitable (White) Bissell, and a niece of Capt. Daniel White, of Hartford, Conn. Mr. and Mrs. Crane lived in East Windsor, Conn., and were the parents of the following children: Elisha (2), born in 1743, who is mentioned later; Anna, born March 12, 1747, who married Samuel Bartlett; Mehitable, who married Ephraim Ely, of East Windsor; and one daughter who married a Mr. Calender, of Wethersfield.

(V) Elisha Crane (2) married Lydia Owen, and settled in Bolton, Conn., removing shortly to Norwich, Vt., and then to Haverhill, N. H. Mr. Crane returned to this State for a time, and then removed to Albany, New York, where he was married a second time and had two children born. In the ill-fated Cuban expedition of 1762 he served as a clerk in the commissary department. At the time of the French and Indian war he was a merchant in Albany, and was long connected with the militia service. It is recorded that he was a private in Capt. Amos Rathbone's company, Col. Benjamin Simon's detachment, Berkshire county militia. He took an active part in the storming of Fort Ticonderoga in 1777, and died in 1821, full of years and honor. The children of Elisha Crane by his first wife were: William; Betsey, who married Darius Belknap, of East Windsor, Conn., a farmer living in what is now known as Broad Brook, and who upon his death removed to Ellington and lived with her brother William until her death, when she was buried at East Windsor; and Daniel, who lived in Haverhill, N. H. By his second marriage Elisha Crane had two children: Elisha, who lived in Albany, N. Y.; as did his sister, Elizabeth, who married John Mead.

(VI) William Crane, the father of Darius, was born in 1767, and about the year 1800 came to Ellington where he established himself in the western part of the town to engage in farming. On March 14, 1801, he married Hannah Hamilton, who died in 1861, having borne him seven children. (1) Rebecca, born Aug. 28, 1803, died unmarried in 1854. (2) Hannah, born in 1805, married Reuben Pease, and lived in Wilbraham, Mass., where she died, in 1864. Her husband was a shoemaker and also did some farming, and their two children were: George, who married Leronia Laird, and has had four children, William, Albert (who died in 1901), Mary and Martha; and Reuben Ransom, an unusually thoughtful and intelligent young man, a fine scholar for his years, and a graduate from Wesleyan Academy, at Wilbraham, who died in his seventeenth year. (3) Betsey, born in 1808, died in 1857 unmarried. (4) William, born in 1810, died in 1829. (5) Constance, born in 1812, died young. (6) Jesse, born in 1814, died in infancy. (7) Darius is our subject. William Crane, the father of the above family, died in 1838. His wife died in 1861, at the age of eighty-four years.

(VII) Darius Crane was born Aug. 19, 1816, in Ellington, on what is now a part of his home farm. His education was very largely obtained in the district school, though he was a student for a brief term at a select school in Windsorville, kept by Deacon Erastus Buckland, of Warehouse Point. At the age of seventeen years he began teaching school in the Dart district, in Wapping, Conn., for which he received ten dollars a month, and "boarded round." For twelve succeeding winters he taught in Somers and Ellington, and devoted himself to farm work during the season. When he was married he gave up teaching and devoted himself to farming, beginning with a small purchase of land, on which he erected his present home in 1845. This farm was largely paid for by the savings of the passing years, as he was deeply in debt for it when he began his career as an independent farmer. In later years he bought more land and built the various structures that house the family and advance the work of the farm. The land was soon brought to a high state of cultivation, for years being devoted to general farming and tobacco culture. Mr. Crane for some twenty years engaged in the cultivation of woad on an extensive scale. Woad was originally imported in seeds from England, and from the leaves a coloring matter was made. The Bucklands of Warehouse Point, Conn., became widely known in this connection as extensive woad importers. Mr. Crane was the only successful grower of the plant in Ellington; others tried it but did not succeed in properly curing it. When chemicals were devised to do this work, principally coal tar products, Mr. Crane gave up the woad culture. He had dealt extensively with the cloth makers at Rockville, Boston, Broad Brook and elsewhere.

Mr. Crane was actively engaged in the farm work until 1890, and the management of the farm since that time has passed to his son, William. Mr. Crane is a man of much more than ordinary intelligence, and is well posted on current events and historical facts. His knowledge of the old families and residents of Ellington is so thorough and comprehensive that he was requested to compile a work relating to the families of Ellington. This Mr. Crane consented to do, and in 1889 he prepared and published "Biographical Sketches of Ellington families," a neat little work of eighty pages, which the author stated he wrote largely from memory. The names mentioned—from "Allen to Wright"—are those very familiar on the head stones in the ancient burial grounds of Ellington and East Windsor. A hardworking and industrious man, of frugal habits and conceded integrity, he has won a very fair position in the community, and to a large extent has made his own fortune.

Mr. Crane is a Democrat, and cast his first vote for Martin Van Buren. In the General Assembly of 1850, he represented his town and served on the Finance committee. In 1853 he was a member of the State Senate from the old Twentieth district, and served on the committee on Sale of Lands. In 1854, 1855, 1856 and again in 1866, he served as a selectman of the town, and was school visitor many years. From 1850 until about 1870, when the limitations of the law compelled him to retire, he was justice of the peace. Mr. and Mrs. Crane are members of the Windsorville Methodist Church, as it was before its removal to its present location, which was accomplished against the protests of many members, not a few of whom afterward retired from the church, Mr. and Mrs. Crane being among the number.

On Nov. 23, 1845, Darius Crane was married to Parmelia Phillips, who was born Nov. 1, 1822, a daughter of Jonathan and Jane (Cummings) Phillips. To this union were born four children. (1) William. (2) Ellen B., born Nov. 14, 1849, and educated in the Ellington High School, is the widow of Sumner H. Sadd, and is now residing in Ellington. She is the mother of the following children: George G., living at Nashua, N. H., who married Lillian Wheeler (daughter of W. W. Wheeler, for fifteen years marshal of the city of Nashua, and his wife Anna E. Lane, of Wilton, N. H.), and has two children, Elaine B. and Roswell Wheeler; Helena M., who married Harry D. Abells, a professor in the University of Chicago, and has one child, Sumner D.; Leslie S.; and Charles S. (3) Josephine, born Feb. 8, 1853, married Monroe Bodurtha, son of Lyman B. and Caroline (Jackson) Bodurtha, of Rockville, and lives at Springfield, Mass., where her husband has been employed as a car inspector on the Boston and Maine Railroad for over twenty years. (4) Charles, born Feb. 23, 1861, died May 19, 1879.

Mrs. Josephine (Crane) Bodurtha was educated in the old Ellington high school, and early evinced a taste for art. She made a careful study of perspective, and made many sketches in oil and water color of familiar scenes in her native town, and then turned her attention to portrait work. Upon her removal to Springfield, she became the pupil of H.

Hammond Ahl, now a successful artist of Washington, D. C., devoting herself to work in oils. Later she opened a studio in Main street, and still later in North street, where she has successfully engaged in teaching and has had large classes year after year. Her work embraces landscapes and portraits, in both oil and water color, and many of the paintings are to be found in the collections of well known people in Springfield, Mass., Hartford, Conn., and Chicago, Illinois.

The Bodurtha family in America are all descended from Reic Bodurtha, who is on record in Springfield, Mass., in 1641. It is not known whence or when he came to America. Family tradition corroborates the theory of Welsh origin. In 1644 Reic Bodurtha, having satisfied the guardians of public peace of his honesty and good intentions, was granted a lease of land and a house lot, located on the west side of Main street "extending from ye streete fence to ye great river," Lombard street marking its boundary. Griffith Jones was his neighbor on the north, and Deacon Benjamin Cooley, on the south. To this new home Reic Bodurtha took his bride, Blanche Lewis, and there were born four sons, John, Joseph, Samuel and Joel. Additional grants of land were made to him in 1651, 1654, 1660 and 1661. House lots were granted to him and his neighbors, Miles Morgan and Francis Pepper, on the west side of "ye river in ye little plain" on the side of Chickabee plain, on condition that they would dwell there, or sell to those who would settle there.

(VIII) William Crane, son of Darius Crane, was born in the house he now occupies, Nov. 3, 1847, and was reared to agricultural pursuits. For many years he has been engaged in an agency work in which he handled farm tools, fertilizers and similar goods, in addition to his farm work. For several years he traveled in the interest of B. L. Bragg, an implement man of Springfield. Mr. Crane is an auctioneer of ability and has a wide acquaintance. A Democrat, he has taken a somewhat prominent part in public affairs, has served on the board of relief, and acted as assessor. In 1890-91, he represented Ellington in the famous deadlock session of the Legislature, serving on the committee on Agriculture.

On March 2, 1878, William Crane married Lillie Nietta Letitia Lee, who was born in Thompson, Conn., Aug. 21, 1859, a daughter of Abner and Betsey M. (Wright) Lee, and a granddaughter of the late Dr. Phineas Wright, of Keene, N. H. To this union were born four children. (1) Harry D., born July 3, 1879, married Miss Cassie Frazer, daughter of John Frazer, of Providence, R. I., was educated in Providence, and is an employee of the Boston and Maine Railroad, at Springfield, Mass. Their only child, Reginald A., died in infancy. (2) Hattie Lee, born June 18, 1881, a graduate of Huntsinger's Business College at Hartford, is a bookkeeper and stenographer. (3) Betsey Ellen, born Sept. 17, 1884, is a graduate of the Rockville high school, and the Normal School of New Britain. (4) Charles Mer-ton was born May 8, 1890.

Abner Lee, the father of Mrs. William Crane, was born in Danville, Vt., Jan. 5, 1828. A blacksmith by trade, he was a strong and sturdy man. He enlisted in Co. I, 1st C. V. I., was taken prisoner and died in Andersonville prison, Oct. 21, 1864. His widow received a pension and resided in Putnam Conn.; she died at the home of Mrs. Crane, whilst on a visit in 1895, and her remains were laid to rest in Putnam. Abner Lee and Betsey M. Wright were married in East Woodstock, where she was born in 1823, a daughter of Phineas and Sarah Wright. To them were born the following children: Sarah Jane Isabella, born Aug. 20, 1850, now the wife of Walter Snow, of Meriden; Betsey May Ardella, born Dec. 28, 1851, who died Oct. 14, 1860; Phineas W., born Sept. 8, 1853, who married and lives in Oakland, Cal., with a family of nineteen children; Susie Anna Maria, born April 25, 1855, who married Adelbert Flint, of New Haven, where she died May 30, 1886; Eva Floretta Eugenia, born Sept. 28, 1857, who died May 20, 1861; Lillie Nietta Letitia, born in Thompson, Aug. 21, 1859, Mrs. William Crane; Abner Philander, born Feb. 16, 1861, who died March 10, 1861; and Hattie Ida Louisa, born April 1, 1863, who died April 28, 1872.

Darius Crane traces his maternal ancestry to one of three brothers who came to this country from Scotland about 1650, and settled in Barnstable county, Mass. One of the original settlers must have been grandfather to that Daniel Hamilton who settled in Ellington in 1782. The mother of Daniel Hamilton was a Miss Atkins in her girlhood. His brothers were: Paul, who was drowned in early childhood; Benjamin, who was killed in a naval battle; John, who was taken prisoner by the English during the Revolution, and detained for a time in England, but was returned to this country, where he died; and Joseph, who was a Revolutionary soldier and died in Eastham, Massachusetts.

Daniel Hamilton married Hannah Sparrow, of Eastham, Mass., and by her became the father of nine children, as follows: Paul, who married Lydia Rogers, was a Methodist preacher, and served as a Revolutionary soldier at the battle of Monmouth; Benjamin, who married Jerusha Blodgett; Daniel, who married Mollie Braman; Theodore, married to Anna Cadwell; Richard, married to Huldah Hendrick; Constance, who married Samuel Derby; Hannah, the mother of Darius Crane; and Joseph and Uriah, who both died in infancy. Hannah, Joseph and Uriah were triplets.

HON. ALVAH NORTON BELDING. The Beldings of Tolland county, where reside the family of Alvah N. Belding, who for a third of a century has been one of the foremost citizens of Rockville, and whose name and fame, with that of his brothers, is so widely known in the industrial world in connection with silk manufacturing, are descendants of one of the old and historic families of New England.

Alvah Norton Biddings

William Belding was an early settler at Wethersfield, Conn. His name appears among the list of names given in the "Memorial History of Hartford County," edited by the late Dr. Trumbull, as coming there about 1645. Alvah N. Belding is in the seventh generation from this William Belding, of Wethersfield, the line being as follows: William, Daniel, Samuel, Samuel (2), John, Hiram, Alvah N.

(II) Daniel Belding, son of William, born in 1648, became a man of historic note in the annals of the town of Deerfield, Mass. In 1659 a settlement was begun at Norwottuck, now Hadley, Mass., and Wethersfield furnished about one-third of the settlers. Soon after 1661 Daniel Belding and Nathaniel Foote joined the new settlement, and Mr. Belding married, in 1670, Elizabeth, daughter of Nathaniel Foote. On Sept. 16, 1696, in Deerfield, Mass., during King William's war, the greater part of Daniel Belding's family were either killed or captured: Daniel, his son Nathaniel, aged twenty-two, and his daughter Esther, aged thirteen, were made prisoners by the Indians, who killed the wife and mother, son John, and daughter Thankful, and wounded and left for dead Samuel, who, however, recovered and escaped. Abigail, another daughter, was shot in the arm while running to the fort, and Sarah, still another daughter, escaped. The prisoners were taken to Canada and there held captive, on their release returning to Deerfield, in 1698. Daniel Belding again married, in 1699, Hepsibah, widow of Lieut. Thomas Wells, and daughter of William Buell. Mrs. Belding was also captured at Deerfield, on Feb. 20, 1704, and was carried a short distance en route to Canada, but her strength failed and she was killed. Daniel married, for his third wife, Sarah, daughter of John Hawkes, and widow of Philip Mattoon. She lived to reach the age of ninety-four, dying in 1751. Daniel Belding became one of the leading citizens of Deerfield. His death occurred in 1731.

(III) Samuel Belding, son of Daniel, born in 1687, who recovered from the wounds given him by the Indians, married in 1724 Anna Thomas, who died the same year. In 1726 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Nathaniel Ingram, of Hadley, and he died in 1750.

(IV) Samuel Belding (2), son of Samuel, born in 1729, removed to Ashfield, Mass., where he was one of the first settlers, and a leading man in town affairs. In 1753 he married Mary, daughter of Joseph Mitchell, of Deerfield.

(V) John Belding, son of Samuel (2), born Dec. 17, 1756, in Ashfield, Mass., married Priscilla Waite, and died in 1839. He was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, serving from the town of Deerfield, during 1776 and 1777, as a private in the company of Capt. Benjamin Phillips, brigade of Lieut. Timothy Robinson.

(VI) Hiram Belding, son of John, and the father of Alvah N., was born in 1802 at Ashfield, Mass., on the old Belding homestead—a farm that has been in the possession of the family from the earliest settlement of that town. He was the youngest son in a large family. His occupation through life was that of farmer and merchant, carrying on a store from which he sent out teams wholesaling notions. His store was located in the settlement known in early days as "Beldingville," in the town of Ashfield, Mass. In 1855 he removed to Otisco, Mich., purchasing a tract of wild unimproved land on the present site of Belding, which he cleared and put under cultivation, and was one of the founders of the city which has since borne the family name, with his sons assisting in the development of the place. When this family located in Michigan the section in which they settled was unimproved, and they were pioneers. They reached Kalamazoo by rail, going thence by stage to Grand Rapids, thence by conveyance twenty-eight miles to the land they had purchased. At that time it was no uncommon sight in what is now the principal street of Grand Rapids to see horses actually fast in the mud, from which they would be extricated with difficulty.

After locating in what is now Belding, Mr. Belding engaged in agriculture until his sons built a store in which the father conducted a mercantile business during the remainder of his active life, his death occurring in 1866. His wife survived him, living to be over eighty years of age, and both are buried in the Belding cemetery. In politics Mr. Belding was a staunch Republican, but he never accepted office, although he was deeply enough interested to keep himself well informed upon all matters of public interest. When a young man he had successfully followed school teaching, and more than once had taken charge of schools in which the unruly element had driven other teachers from the field. Both Mr. and Mrs. Belding were consistent members of the Baptist denomination, and Mrs. Belding was largely instrumental in the organization of the Baptist Church in Belding, Michigan.

The family life of the Beldings was an ideal one. Mr. Belding reared his sons to obedience, with rules not tyrannical, but made to be obeyed, while the mother was a kind, Christian woman. She was spared to see her beloved sons successful men. Hiram Belding married in Massachusetts Mary Wilson, who was born in Shelburne, Mass. Her brothers were Dr. Milo Wilson, a well known physician of Ashfield and Shelburne Falls, Mass.; David, who died in Shelburne; Samuel, who removed to Bristol, N. Y.; and Stephen, who located in Michigan. Her sister, Louisa, married Lewis Ellis, a son of Deacon Dinwiddie Ellis, and removed to Belding, Mich., where she died in 1900.

A number of children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Belding, among them four sons, David W., Milo M., Hiram H., and Alvah N., who have so indelibly stamped their impress upon the industrial life of this country in the line of silk manufacture. A brief record of the family is as follows: (1) David W., of Cincinnati, Ohio, now director and manager of the Belding Bros. branch store in that city, married Jeanette Cooper, of Paris, Maine. They have had children—Nettie, who married Thomas McGary, a prominent attorney of Grand Rapids, Mich.; Marion, Mrs. Black, of Chicago; Milo; Thomas; and David. (2) Milo M., of New York, who is president of Belding Bros. & Co., married Emily C. Leonard, of Ashfield, Mass., and has one son, Milo, who is treasurer of Belding Bros. & Co. (3) Hiram H., who died in 1890, in Chicago, was also one of the firm of the Belding Bros. Company. He married Elizabeth S. Squires, of Cleveland, Ohio, and left children—W. S., of Baltimore, Md., who is in charge of Belding Bros. store in that city (he is a lieutenant in the United States Navy); H. H., of Dayton, Ohio, a wholesale dealer in fancy groceries; and Mary, the wife of Col. Young, of Chicago, a graduate of West Point, who was colonel of the 1st Illinois Cavalry during the Spanish war. Col. Young is a director in Belding Bros. & Co. and connected with the Chicago store. (4) Alvah Norton was the next in the order of birth. (5) Mary Jane married J. B. Vincent, of Belding, Mich., and died there. (6) Frank H., also one of the Belding firm, died in New York, unmarried.

Alvah Norton Belding was born March 27, 1838, in Ashfield, Mass., and there received his elementary education in the public and high schools. Until seventeen years of age he remained at home and aided in the farm work, doing as did other lads in the locality, and after the family's removal to Michigan found plenty of that kind of exercise on the wild land. For the wages of eighty-seven cents per day he assisted in the building of the dam at what is now the city of Belding, and when the field of labor around the home became too restricted for his energies he looked about for something else. When but a lad of sixteen he had been a successful traveling salesman for one summer over western Massachusetts, selling jewelry for W. M. Root, of Pittsfield, Mass., who in those days had a number of men "on the road." Having a natural gift in this direction, and desirous of taking up other business than that of farming, Mr. Belding turned his attention to the business of selling silk. An elder brother, Milo M., was then located at Ashfield, Mass., engaged in a small way in the wholesale business of selling silk. Alvah N., and his brother H. H., live Western boys, conceived the idea of selling silks through the West, securing their stock from their brother Milo M. The venture was a success from the start, and soon afterward a partnership was formed, composed of A. N. and H. H. Belding, known as Belding Bros., this being the original firm of that name; it came into existence shortly before the breaking out of the Civil war. In those days the firm was represented on the road by the members, who traveled many hundred miles by team through the Western country, and practically laid the foundation for the great business of the future. The firm was thus composed during the first two or three years of its existence. The business began to assume proportions that in the minds of these young men warranted the opening of a store in Chicago. This move they were advised to abandon, but confidence in their own judgment caused them to go ahead, and the wisdom of their judgment was soon manifested. It was at this time that Milo M. Belding became a member of the firm. The business soon developed into a large jobbing concern and controlled that line in their section.

It was in 1863 that the store in Chicago was opened, and not long afterward, in association with E. K. Rose, the brothers engaged, in a small way, in a rented building, in the manufacture of silk at Rockville, Conn., the Belding Brothers having for some time previously bought the product of Mr. Rose's mill. This partnership was dissolved in 1866. Alvah N. Belding, who had resided in Chicago and later in New York when not on the road, in 1869 came to Rockville, to take charge of the manufacturing business, which was first established in the first floor of the Leeds mill, continuing there until the purchase of the present mills, in 1871. To this purchase Mr. Belding afterward made several additions, giving the plant three times the capacity of the original mill. The mills at Rockville are very substantial structures, the main building being brick, four stories in height, and 42 x 210 feet in dimensions. A bridge over the street connects this with another large building. About five hundred hands are employed in the manufacture of silk thread.

In time Mr. Belding bought a large brick mill in Northampton, Mass., and also commenced at that point the production of silk goods. Additions have also been made to this factory, which was originally 118 x 40 feet, and four stories high. The plant now consists of a main building 45 x 300 feet, four stories in height; an office 40 x 60, three stories high; an engine and boiler house, 42 x 60; and the dye house, 100 x 32—these structures all erected by Belding brothers, since the purchase of the original mill. The product there is principally silk thread and fabrics.

Early in the seventies the firm rented a mill in Montreal, Canada, and their success at that point induced them to purchase a mill there in 1880. Some idea of the growth of the business at that point may be had from a comparison of the size of the plant at that time with present dimensions. The original mill was a structure 130 x 40, four stories high, which is yet in use, while the new mill is 300 x 47, to which an L, 165 x 47, has been built, both four stories high. This plant is of strictly modern construction, and is one of the finest manufacturing plants in Montreal. There are manufactured the famous ribbons of the firm, and also silk thread.

In 1877 Mr. Belding planned, built and equipped a silk mill at Belding, Mich., which was sold to a syndicate in which he became one of the largest stockholders. Early in the eighties the firm built another large silk mill at Belding, and still later another, the structures being 325 x 45, three stories high, and 404 x 47, four stories high, respectively. Both are built of brick, and conform in every way to the plan of construction advocated by the Manufacturers Mutual Fire Insurance Company. The latter is one of the largest and finest mills in Michigan. These mills for the manufacture of silk fabrics and thread give employment to over one thousand people. In the improvement and development of the city of Belding this firm has taken a keen interest, stimulated no doubt by family pride. Numerous other industries, through their instrumentality and substantial encouragement, have been induced to locate there. One notable feature of their public spirit and interest in Belding's growth was the erection of the "Hotel Belding," a substantial and ornamental structure of stone, with all modern improvements, the management of which has been under the firm's direction ever since it was opened.

Another plant of the firm, located at Petaluma, Cal., some thirty miles from San Francisco, is thoroughly equipped for the manufacture of silk thread, its only product. Several of the mills owned by the firm were planned and equipped under the personal supervision and direction of Alvah N. Belding. Thus at the present time Belding Brothers have six large manufacturing establishments, giving employment to some three thousand hands, using more than a ton of raw silk daily, with an annual product valued at nearly $5,000,000.

In 1882 the entire business, in the East and in the West, was incorporated under the laws of Connecticut as Belding Bros. & Co., with a capital of $666,000, which has since been increased to $1,000,000, with a surplus of over $1,000,000. The concern has salesrooms in New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston, Baltimore, Cincinnati, St. Louis, St. Paul, San Francisco, and Montreal, Canada. The wonderful growth and development of this great industry, and its success, are to no small extent due to the untiring energy of Alvah N. Belding, who has proven himself a man of unusual capacity and rare business ability. To this brother, who is now vice-president and secretary of the company, the entire supervision of the manufacturing of all, as well as the management of the Rockville mills, has been left.

In addition to his interest in this vast enterprise, Mr. Belding is a director of the American Mills Company, in Rockville; the Rockville National Bank; the People's Savings Bank; the Belding Paul Company, Limited, of Montreal, Canada; and the Carlson Courier Company, of San Francisco. He is also president of the Belding Land & Improvement Company, of Belding, Mich., a town of considerable more than 4,000 inhabitants, the brothers owning some six hundred acres of land in and adjoining that city, and being actively associated with its interests. Alvah N. Belding is vice-president of the Belding Savings Bank, and a director of the Spencer Electric Light & Power Company, of the same city. In October, 1900, he sold a plot of ground to that city for $10,000 and made a standing offer to duplicate any sum or sums given to beautify this land for park purposes. The $10,000 he turned over to the city, to be used to induce factories to locate there. Mr. Belding has a large interest in 75,000 acres of timber land in the South, and is the owner of a beautiful farm at Ellington, Connecticut.

Alvah N. Belding has made his home in Rockville, Conn., continuously since 1869, and he has ever been ranked among the most enterprising, public-spirited and popular citizens of that place. A typical energetic New England business man, he is systematic and prompt in whatever he does. Taking a great interest in local affairs, he was elected on the Republican ticket to the Legislature in 1882, by the largest majority ever given in the city, and rendered valuable service on committees, but declined a renomination owing to the pressure of private business. One monument to his enterprise is his magnificent home, erected in 1895, built of St. Lawrence marble, which commands one of the finest views in the State, and is one of the finest private residences in the State of Connecticut. It has been named "Castle Sunset."

On Jan. 6, 1870, Mr. Belding was married to Lizzie S. Merrick, and two children have been born to this union: Florence May, who graduated from Miss Brown's School in New York; and Fred Norton, a student at St. Paul's School, Concord, N. H. Mrs. Belding was born in Orange, Mass., a daughter of H. A. and Elizabeth F. (Snow) Merrick. When she was but a child her parents removed to Shelburne Falls, Mass., where she was reared. Mrs. Belding occupies a high social position with dignity, and is prominent in all social functions and charitable work. In the D. A. R. organization she is a leading member, and her influence is continually felt in Sabra Trumbull Chapter. She is also a member of the National Society of New England Women, and a member of the Mayflower Society of Boston, Mass., and vice-president of the State branch of the International Sunshine Society of New York City.

PECKHAM. For upward of two hundred and fifty years this name has been identified with the annals of New England, and in the Old World it reaches back to the twelfth century. There were still in 1902 maintained in the beautiful and picturesque region on Putnam Heights the residences—the homes of their ancestors in that historic section—of three of the daughters of the late Dr. Fenner Harris Peckham, of Putnam, Conn., and Providence, R. I. These daughters are: Miss Katherine Fenner Peckham; Mrs. Rosa Frances Peckham Danielson, widow of the late George Whitman Danielson, a prominent journalist and citizen of Providence, R. I.; and Mrs. Dr. Grace Peckham Murray, wife of Hon. Charles H. Murray, a well known lawyer and public official of New York.

The name Peckham in England is applied to a large suburban hamlet of London, in the County of Surrey, four miles distant from the metropolis. John de Peckham attended Richard I into Palestine in 1191, and from that period on for hundreds of years the name was a conspicuous one in English annals.

(I) John Peckham, the American ancestor of the family, was admitted an inhabitant of the island of Aquidneck (Rhode Island) March 20, 1638. He was made a freeman of Newport, March 16, 1641. He was one of the ten male members in full communion of the First Baptist Church in 1648, and one of its founders in 1644. He was a resident of that part of Newport which became Middletown, where he was made a freeman in 1655. Mr. Peckham was first married to Mary Clarke, who died in 1648; the given name of his second wife was Eleanor. He was the father of twelve children, namely; John, William, Stephen, Thomas, James, Clement, Sarah, Rebecca, Deborah, Phebe, Elizabeth and Susannah. From this John Peckham of Newport and Middletown, R. I., the lineage of the late Dr. Fenner Harris Peckham, of Putnam and Providence, is through Stephen, Stephen (2), Stephen (3), Seth and Dr. Hazael Peckham.

(II) Stephen Peckham, son of John, was one of the earliest settlers of Dartmouth, Mass. He had a grant of land in Narragansett in 1679, but probably never went there except to speculate. He also purchased land in Dartmouth in 1679, and was a substantial farmer in that part of Dartmouth now included in the city of New Bedford. He died April 23, 1724. His estate in round numbers amounted to £1,807. His wife's name was Mary, and their children were: Stephen, born Feb. 23, 1683; Samuel, Aug. 17, 1684; Eleanor, Jan. 12, 1686; William, Oct. 27, 1688; Mary, Aug. 17, 1690; Hannah, Jan. 28, 1692; John, Jan. 15, 1697; Deborah, June, 1699, who married Jan. 19, 1727, Thomas Nye; Joseph, Feb. 2, 1701; Jean, Jan. 23, 1703, married April 4, 1729, to Thomas Delano; and Isaiah, Sept. 14, 1705, married April 19, 1736, to Ruth Morton.

(III) Stephen Peckham (2), born Feb. 23, 1683, was twice married. His father had left him in his will the northerly part of the homestead, which had been divided into four parts, one for each of his sons. The children of Stephen Peckham (2) and his wife Content were: James, born Oct. 4, 1716; Stephen, Sept. 14, 1718; Seth, Nov. 29, 1723, who probably died when young; Content, Feb. 16, 1729; and George, Oct. 25, 1732. The children by the second wife, Keturah Arthur, were: Elizabeth, born July 5, 1741; Eunice, Dec. 6, 1742; and Richard, Dec. 16, 1744. Mr. Peckham died in June, 1764. His estate in round numbers amounted to £512.

(IV) Stephen Peckham (3), born Sept. 14, 1718, married (first) about 1739, Sarah Boss, born July 5, 1724; she died Dec. 12, 1768, aged forty-four years. He married (second) Elizabeth White, born Dec. 22, 1740. Mr. Peckham inherited and bought from his father portions of the old homestead, so that he possessed one-half of the entire farm, his brother Richard inheriting the other part. His wife Elizabeth died April 12, 1791, in the fifty-first year of her age. His children by the first marriage were: Elizabeth, born Dec. 22, 1740; Peleg, Sept. 27, 1744, who died Aug. 12, 1771; Mercy, Feb. 23, 1746; Stephen, April 6, 1748; Seth, Oct. 31, 1750; Jonathan, Feb. 8, 1753, who married Widow Hannah Soute, a daughter of Peleg White, James, May 11, 1756; Sarah, June 9, 1758; Lydia, Jan. 9, 1761; Amy, Feb. 18, 1763; Joseph, Jan. 27, 1766. Of these Stephen and Seth moved to the town of Gloucester, Providence Co., Rhode Island.

(V) Seth Peckham, born Oct. 31, 1750, in Dartmouth, married, Jan. 26, 1775, Mercy Smith, daughter of Capt. John and Sarah (Hopkins) Smith, the latter a daughter of Thomas Hopkins, of a family quite famous in the history of Rhode Island. Mr. Peckham lived on a farm in Gloucester, and was probably occupied in agricultural pursuits. During the war of the Revolution, on one of the alarm calls (1777), he performed seven days' service as a member of Capt. Joseph Kimball's company, in which his (Mr. Peckham's) brother-in-law was a lieutenant. Mr. Peckham died in 1826. His children were: Hazael, born Nov. 16, 1777; Thomas, Jan. 10, 1780, married to Anna Sweet; Sarah, June 20, 1782, who married Chad Taylor; Seth, October, 1784, who married Deborah Keach, and lived in Gloucester; Mercy, in 1787, married in 1807 to Josiah Wescott, of Scituate, R. I., a son of Rev. John Wescott; and John, 1793, married in 1820 to Hannah, daughter of Gideon Smith of Scituate.

(VI) Dr. Hazael Peckham, son of Seth, born Nov. 16, 1777, married in 1797, Susannah Thornton, born Oct. 8, 1776, daughter of Jeremiah Thornton, of Burrillville, and his wife Esther Wright, of Providence. Their children were: Paris, born in 1798; Smith, 1800, who died in 1878; Amey, 1801, who married William Day; Susan, 1809, who married Dr. Justin Hammond; Hazael, 1810, who died in 1888; Pamela, 1816, who married Rhodes Hopkins and died in 1886; and Fenner Harris, Jan. 27, 1820. None are still living.

(VII) DR. FENNER HARRIS PECKHAM, son of Dr. Hazael, was born in the town of Killingly, Windham Co., Conn., Jan. 27, 1820. After pursuing a course of academic studies, he entered the office of Dr. Justin Hammond, a widely known physician of Windham county, where he studied medicine. He later continued his studies under Profs. Knight and Hooker of New Haven, and was graduated from Yale Medical College in 1842. He commenced the practice of his chosen profession in East Killingly, but soon removed to what is now known as Putnam Heights, where he continued until 1852, building up a successful practice. In the year last named he removed with his family to Providence, R. I., where he continued practice, and where he remained up to the time of his death. He was one of the best known physicians in the State, and took a deep interest in his profession. While in Connecticut he was a member of the State Medical Society, and when he removed to Providence he became a member of the Rhode Island Medical Society and was its president twice. For a number of years he was physician and surgeon of the Marine Hospital at Providence, and was a member of the medical board of the Economical Life Insurance Company. In addition to attending to his regular practice, he made reports and addresses on special subjects, and he also contributed to medical literature a monograph on "Hydrophobia," the first presented before the American Association, and on the "Topographical Geological Condition of the Second District of Rhode Island," found in the report of Dr. Baxter in "Statistics of Volunteer Service."

On the opening of the Civil war Dr. Peckham volunteered his services for the defense of the Union, and was commissioned Aug. 15, 1861, surgeon of the 3d Rhode Island Heavy Artillery. He had first been assigned to duty with the 2d R. I. V. at Washington, and afterward had charge of the medical department of Camp Sprague, after the first battle of Bull Run. He joined the 3d regiment after the command had reached and taken possession of Port Royal, S. C., but the enervating character of the climate, and his arduous duties, compelled him to resign his commission in February, 1862. In April, 1863, he was appointed surgeon of the board of enrollment of the second district of Rhode Island, and at the request of Gov. J. Y. Smith, officially visited Fortress Monroe, continuing his efficient services with the board until the termination of the Rebellion. He was noted for his upright character and gentlemanly demeanor, and was highly respected. He died Feb. 17, 1887, and was buried in Swan Point cemetery.

In 1840 Dr. Peckham was married to Catherine Davis, daughter of Capt. William Torrey, and the marriage was blessed with children as follows: Katherine Fenner, born in February, 1841; Rosa Frances, Oct. 28, 1842; Fenner H., Feb. 11, 1844; Ella Lois Torrey, Sept. 12, 1846; Grace, Oct. 16, 1848; and Mary Davis, Feb. 10, 1853, who died Nov. 11, 1895.

(VIII) Katherine Fenner Peckham graduated from Mt. Holyoke College, and from the Woman's Medical College, Philadelphia, with the degree of M. D. She practiced in Boston, but now makes her home at Putnam Heights. She is a member of Col. Timothy Bigelow Chapter, D. A. R., Worcester, Massachusetts.

(VIII) Rosa Frances Peckham Danielson received her elementary education in the schools of Providence, and was graduated in 1862 from the Providence high school. Subsequently she went abroad, and at Paris, France, passed ten years in the study of art and painting, in which line she became quite proficient. Her paintings have been exhibited in the Salon of the French capital, and called forth favorable comment. More recently she has worked in miniature painting. Her later years, however, have been chiefly given to the training of her children. On Jan. 25, 1881, she became the wife of George Whitman Danielson, of Providence, who died March 25, 1884. They had two children: Whitman, born Dec. 17, 1881, now a student at Harvard; and Rosamond, born Nov. 6, 1884, now a student at Bryn Mawr College, Pa. Mrs. Danielson is one of the founders and a charter member of the Providence Art Club, and also a member of Col. Timothy Bigelow Chapter, D. A. R., of Worcester, Massachusetts.

(VIII) Dr. Fenner Harris Peckham, Jr., only son of Dr. Fenner H. Peckham, was born in East Killingly, Windham Co., Conn., Feb. 11, 1844. He was educated in the schools of Providence, and read medicine under his father. After fitting himself for college he entered the medical department of Yale, whence he was graduated in 1866. He became associated with his father in the medical profession, and after the death of the latter continued alone in the practice of his profession up to a few years ago, when he practically retired, relinquishing his practice to his son, Charles F. Like his father, he served during the Rebellion, entering the service as hospital steward in December, 1861, upon leaving the high school; later he was lieutenant in the 12th R. I. V. The Doctor inherits his father's literary tastes, and has written for the public press on matters of interest.

On Oct. 29, 1867, in Providence, Dr. Peckham married Mary H. Olney, daughter of Elam and Helen (Fuller) Olney, and they have three children. Charles Fenner, the eldest, graduated from Columbia College, N. Y., in 1890, with the degree of M. D., and is now a popular young physician of Providence, R. I., having succeeded to his father's practice; he was a surgeon of the Rhode Island Naval Reserves, in the Spanish-American war, with the rank of lieutenant. Alice, the second, is at home. William Torrey graduated from Brown University in 1897; he married Alice Hetherington Dike, Oct. 22, 1901.

Dr. Fenner H. Peckham is a Republican in political faith. His religious connections, like those of his family, are with the Episcopal Church. He is a member of the A. F. & A. M., affiliating with Whatcheer Lodge, and also unites with the Loyal Legion, Massachusetts Commandery; Rodman Post, G. A. R.; the Squantum Club; the University Club; the West Side Club (former president); the Central Club; and the Agawam Hunt and Long Meadow Golf Clubs. He is State commissioner of birds from Providence county, R. I., and chairman of the commission and member of the Anawan Club. In professional circles he holds membership in the Rhode Island Medical Society and the American Medical Association, and is United States pension examining surgeon. Dr. Peckham is also prominently connected with the mercantile and banking interests of Providence. He is president of the Hope Webbing Company, vice-president of the Providence Telephone Company, director of the Narragansett Electric Lighting Company, Mechanics National Bank, Free Masons Hall Company, Providence & Springfield Railroad Company, and Wood River Branch Railroad Company, and trustee of the Mechanics' Savings Bank.

(VIII) Dr. Grace Peckham Murray, another daughter of Dr. Fenner Harris Peckham, attended the private and public schools of Providence and was graduated from Mount Holyoke College, South Hadley, Mass., in 1867. In 1882 she graduated from the Women's Medical College of the New York Infirmary. After having obtained her degree she was interne and resident physician of the New York Infirmary for Women and Children for three years, after which she commenced her private practice in New York City, in which she is at present engaged. For many years she was attending physician to the hospital, and was engaged in the College and dispensary work for that institution. In 1902 she received the appointment of Professor of Women's Diseases at the New York Post-graduate School, which position she now holds. For three years she was sent as a delegate to the New York State Medical Society by the New York County Medical Society, of which she is a member, which entitles her to life-membership in the State Medical Society. She also belongs to the New York Academy of Medicine; the New York Neurological; and the Women's Medical Association of New York, of which she was president for four years; she is vice-president of the National Social Science Association. She has been on the editorial staff of the New York Medical Record and contributed many medical articles to the current medical literature of the day, most of which have been widely copied and some of which have been incorporated into medical text books of this country and Europe. She is associate editor of the Woman's Medical Journal. She has a reputation as writer of popular articles relating to medical and hygienic subjects and is a regular contributor to the well known secular magazines. She is also a member of many social and literary clubs, among which are the National Arts, the Wednesday Afternoon, the Barnard Club, N. E. Society, and the Manhattan Chapter of the D. A. R.

In 1893 she was married to the Hon. Charles H. Murray, of New York, who is very prominent in legal and political circles of New York City and State.

(VIII) Ella Lois Torrey Peckham Baldwin, another daughter of Dr. Fenner Harris Peckham, like her sisters is a woman of broad culture and was educated in the public schools of Providence and in Mt. Holyoke College, South Hadley, Mass., where she was graduated in 1867. The following year she was married to Charles Clinton Baldwin, son of the late Hon. John D. and Lemira (Hathaway) Baldwin, who with his brother John was associated with his father as proprietor and conductor of the Worcester (Mass.) Spy. The children of this marriage were four in number. Katherine Torrey was educated in Worcester, studied art in Paris, France, and has exhibited her work in the Paris Salon; she married Lynde Sullivan, a prominent lawyer of Boston, and has a son, John Langdon Sullivan, born March 12, 1903. Edith Ella was also educated in Paris in art. Her work has been exhibited in the Champ de Mars Salon of Paris, and at the Society of American Artists in New York. Grace Peckham was educated at Bryn Mawr College, Pa., and also graduated at Drexel Institute Library School, Philadelphia. Rosa Danielson died in 1893, at the age of eleven years. Mrs. Baldwin and her family are all members of All Saints Episcopal Church, and she is active in church matters. She was organizer of the Worcester County Mt. Holyoke Alumni Association, and filled the office of president for twelve years; was the founder of the Fortnightly Club of Worcester; and is a very active member of the Woman's Club of that city, having been its president from 1896 to 1898; is also a member of the building committee of the club house, and a director of its corporation; has been vice-president and an active member of the Massachusetts State Federation of Women's Clubs, of the Worcester Art Society and Public School Art League, and has taken deep interest in club life; she has also shown an interest in the summer schools of Clark University; is a prominent member of the D. A. R., being a charter member of Col. Timothy Bigelow Chapter, Worcester, Mass., and in addition to her varied interests is a very devoted wife and mother.

BALDWIN. Richard Baldwin, of Dunbridge Manor, the first of this line of whom we have record, died in 1553; he was a near relative of Sir John Baldwin, the famous judge of the time of Henry VIII. The first of the family to leave the Old World for the New was (I) Sylvester Baldwin, who died July 21, 1638, on the passage. He had sailed in the ship "Martin," with his wife Sarah (Bryan) Baldwin, and their six living children, two sons and four daughters, among them, John Baldwin, who settled in Stonington. The eldest son, Richard, settled in Milford, Conn., and was the progenitor of a large number of descendants. John Baldwin, of Stonington, Conn., was born in Aston Clinton, Aylesbury, Buckinghamshire, England, in 1635, and was the youngest child of Sylvester Baldwin.

(II) John Baldwin married Rebecca, daughter of Walter Palmer and widow of Elisha Chesebrough, July 24, 1672, and settled in Stonington, where he died in 1683. Of his children, Rebecca, born in 1673, married Deacon Manasseh Miner; Mary, born in 1675, married John Randall; Sylvester, born in 1677, married Elizabeth Avery; and Theophilus, born in 1683, married Priscilla Mason.

(III) Theophilus Baldwin, son of John married in 1710 Priscilla Mason, daughter of Capt. Daniel Mason, granddaughter of the famous Major John Mason, and great-granddaughter of Rev. Peter Hobart, of Hingham. Theophilus Baldwin settled in North Stonington, where he was the first deacon of the church organized in 1727, and was also a representative to the General Court. His children were: John, born in 1711, who married Eunice Spaulding; Priscilla, born in 1713, who married Daniel Caulkins; Theophilus, born in 1716, who married Sarah Lamb; and Sylvester, born in 1719, who married Bridget Chesebrough.

(IV) John Baldwin, born in 1711, son of Deacon Theophilus, was of North Stonington, and had the title of captain. He married Eunice Spaulding, daughter of Thomas Spaulding, of Plainfield, and died in 1762, the father of five children: Mary, born in 1741, who married Stephen Frink; Priscilla, born in 1743, who married Hubbard Burroughs, Jr.; Elizabeth, born in 1745, married to Jesse Swan; John, born in 1752, married to Sarah Denison; and Ziba, born in 1755, who married Amy Brown, of Preston.

(V) John Baldwin, born in 1752, son of Capt. John, was of North Stonington, a prominent and influential man, and gained the title of major. He married in 1772 Sarah Denison, daughter of John Denison, and a descendant of the famous Col. George Denison, of early Colonial times. He died in 1814, the father of the following family: John, born in 1772, who married Abigail Boardman; Eunice, born in 1775, who married Stephen Tucker; Andrew, born in 1780, who married Mary Boardman; Daniel, born in 1783, who married Hannah Stanton; Polly, born in 1786, who married Stephen Frink; George Washington, born in 1788, who married Mary C. Kinney; Sarah, born in 1790, who married Thomas Holmes, of Fall River.

(VI) Daniel Baldwin, born in 1783, son of Major John, married in 1808 Hannah Stanton, daughter of Capt. Nathaniel Stanton, of Groton (who served as a privateer in the Revolutionary war, and was imprisoned two years in Canada), a lineal descendant of the first Thomas Stanton, of Stonington, the Indian interpreter, well known in Colonial times. Hannah Stanton's mother was Amy Avery, descended from the first Capt. James Avery, of Groton. Daniel Baldwin was a farmer of North Stonington, and died in 1855. His widow survived twenty-two years, dying in Worcester in 1877, aged ninety-one. Their children were: John Denison, born Sept. 28, 1809, mentioned below; Daniel Avery, born July 2, 1811, a shipmaster of New London, married (first) to Betsey Rogers, of Lyme, and (second) to Amanda Colgrove, of Voluntown; Nancy Adaline, born April 27, 1815, who married Frederick Frink, of Salisbury; Mary Ann, born May 18, 1818, who married Charles Dwight Smith, of Woodstock; and Amy Avery, born Sept. 9, 1825, married to James Boardman.

(VII) John Denison Baldwin, son of Daniel, born Sept. 28, 1809, in North Stonington, Conn., married April 3, 1832, Lemira Hathaway, daughter of Capt. Ebenezer and Betsey (Crane) Hathaway, of North Dighton, Mass. Capt. Hathaway was a son of Stephen and Hope (Pierce) Hathaway, and a descendant of the first John Hathaway, of Taunton. John D. Baldwin studied at New Haven, receiving the degree of A. M. from Yale College, and was graduated from the New Haven Theological Seminary (Yale Divinity School) in 1834. His first parish was that of West Woodstock, Conn., where he preached until July 25, 1837. Then he was settled at North Branford from January, 1838, to May, 1845, when he accepted a call to North Killingly. There he remained from April, 1846, until September, 1849. While settled there he served a term in the State Legislature, as representative for Killingly, and was the chief factor in procuring a State Normal School at New Britain, and in the selection of Prof. David N. Camp as its first principal. It was also in 1847 that he published his first volume, "The Story of Raymond Hill and other Poems." He now turned his attention to journalism, and conducted the Hartford Republican, as owner and editor, from 1849 to 1852, when he was called to Boston to assume control of the Daily and Weekly Commonwealth, an organ of the Free Soil party, continuing there five years; he was part owner of that journal. In 1859 he became the proprietor of the Worcester Spy, continuing as its manager until his death. For some years he was a citizen of Windham county, Conn. In 1862 he was elected to Congress, and continued a member through three terms, as representative from the Worcester District. In 1872 he published his work on archeological research. "Ancient America," following it with another volume, entitled "Prehistoric America," both successfully issued by Harper & Brothers. He was the author of several genealogical works. He died in Worcester, July 8, 1883, in his seventy-fourth year.

"Mr. Baldwin," says one who knew him, "was a man of imposing stature, of large frame and great muscular strength. In early manhood his massive head, erect figure and stalwart proportions, indicative of power, gave him an aspect of uncommon force and dignity. He knew human nature well, and could foresee with just accuracy the political effect of any measure or event. As a writer Mr. Baldwin was direct, clear and forcible. His style had no ornament. It was sometimes rugged, but always strong and sincere. His wide range of reading and retentive memory gave him a vast store of facts, and his knowledge of political history was especially large and accurate." It is stated that in the XXXIXth Congress Mr. Baldwin was the only one of its members, who could be called a literary man, a somewhat remarkable fact.

Mr. Baldwin's family consisted of four children: Ellen Frances, born June 19, 1833, died March 10, 1854: if she had lived she would have undoubtedly have made a brilliant reputation in literature, one of her poems, "The Old Sculptor and his Pupil," being published in Putnam's Magazine after her death. John Stanton, born in New Haven, Jan. 6, 1834, married Oct. 19, 1863, Emily Brown, daughter of Albert and Mary (Eaton) Brown, and had eight children; he served as captain of a Worcester company in the Civil war, and has been connected as a journalist with the Spy. Charles Clinton, born in West Woodstock, May 4, 1835, married Oct. 1, 1868, Ella L. T. Peckham, daughter of Dr. Fenner H. Peckham and his wife, Catherine (Davis) Torrey. He was for years connected with the Worcester Spy, and still lives in that city. Mary Jane, born in Woodstock, May 3, 1836, died in Hartford, Dec. 29, 1850, when a little more than fourteen years of age.

GEORGE WHITMAN DANIELSON (deceased), editor and publisher of Danielsonville. Windham Co., Conn., and of Providence, R. I., was a distinguished representative of a worthy name.

The Danielson family of Eastern Connecticut has been one of the substantial and wealthy families of that locality for over 200 years; and many of the families allied or connected with it by marriage have been those of position and influence, among them the Harrises, Peckhams, Whitmans and Torreys.

(I) James Danielson, the ancestor of the Killingly (Conn.) Danielsons, was among the early immigrants to what is now Block Island, R. I., where, according to the memorial of the subject of this notice, he was married, March 11, 1685, to Abigail Rose, who died in about five years. Mr. Danielson was again married Jan. 22, 1700, to Mary Ackers. Mr. Danielson purchased a number of tracts of land on Block Island between 1688 and 1705. At the May session of the General Assembly, 1696, he was admitted a freeman of the Colony of Rhode Island. In 1700 he was elected town sergeant of New Shoreham; in 1704-5 he was a member of its town council; and in August, 1705, he was chosen a deputy to the General Assembly. The family tradition is that he was of Scottish descent. In his youth and early manhood he fought in the wars against the Indians, and subsequently, at the time of the distribution of the land in eastern Connecticut, he received his share of the territory of the town of Voluntown, by grant from the General Court. At what particular time Mr. Danielson left the island for a permanent residence upon the mainland is not known. In the course of his campaigning he had been attracted by the aspect of the country and in 1706, then in his fifty-eighth year, he bought a tract of 800 acres of land on the Quinebaug river, with a mansion-house and barn, in what was afterward the town of Pomfret. In 1707 he purchased of Major Fitch, who seems to have been before hand with him in trading with the Indians, the neck of land between the Quinebaug and Assawaugua rivers, including about 2,000 acres. He is stated to have been the first settler south of Lake Mashapaug (now Alexander's) and it is said he "built a garrison-house at the southern extremity of his purchase and was soon known as one of the most prominent men in the new settlement," not long afterwards named Killingly. That he was a man of means is proved by the fact that for the former purchase he paid the sum of £155; for the latter, the sum of £170. He had a residence in each settlement. A portion of the property which he held in Killingly still remains in the possession of his descendants. He died Jan. 22, 1728, in the 80th year of his age. In his declining years he "laid out a burial ground between the rivers for the use of the inhabitants, and was the first to be interred in it." The headstone of his grave bore the inscription, "In memory of the well beloved Mr. James Danielson, who after he had served God and his generation faithfully many years in this life, sweetly fell asleep in the cradle of death." Mr. Danielson had a son James born to his wife Abigail, May 15, 1687, who afterward lived in Lebanon, Conn., but according to one tradition removed to western Massachusetts and according to another, returned to Block Island. Two sons born to the second marriage, Samuel and William, the first inheriting the homestead and much of the landed property, succeeded to the good name and carried it forward unblemished to subsequent years.

The family thus founded furnished representatives in all the stirring movements of colonial and national history. Samuel Danielson was moderator of Killingly in 1760 and selectman in 1785. William Danielson was constable, collector of taxes, and lieutenant in 1760; first major of Col. Williams' Eleventh Regiment in 1774; took 146 men from Killingly to Cambridge in 1775; became colonel in 1776, and, after the Revolution, general of militia; and in 1788 was a member of the State convention called to ratify the national constitution.

(II) Samuel Danielson, son of James of Block Island, R. I., and of Killingly, Conn., born in 1701, married March 26, 1725, Sarah Douglas, and lived in Killingly, Conn. He inherited, as stated in the foregoing, much of the estate accumulated by his father, and became an active and useful citizen of the town. The water power of Killingly was so good that in time manufactories sprang up along the banks of the Quinebaug river and so large a share belonged to the Danielson family that a portion of the town was incorporated as Danielsonville, where there are still busy mills employing many hands. Mr. and Mrs. Danielson had ten children, all born in Killingly between 1726 and 1745. Mr.

Danielson died in 1786, in his eighty-fifth year, and Mrs. Danielson passed away in 1774, in her seventieth year.

(III) Capt. Samuel Danielson, son of Samuel, born in 1741, married May 6, 1770, Hannah Whitman, born in Providence, R. I., Oct. 10, 1751, daughter of Jacob and Hannah (Hartshorn) Whitman, and a descendant of John Whitman, who came from England to Weymouth, Mass., before December, 1638, her line being through Zachariah, John and Jacob Whitman. Capt. Danielson was one of those men who marched to the relief of Boston at the Lexington alarm in April, 1775. He died June 13, 1817, and his wife passed away Oct. 3, 1787. Four children were born to their marriage, Elizabeth, Samuel, Martha and Susanna.

(IV) Samuel Danielson (3), born Dec. 30, 1772, married Sarah Beg, born June 13, 1773, daughter of Adam and Sarah (Robinson) Beg, and resided in Killingly, where he died July 24, 1845; his wife passed away Sept. 9, 1852. Their children were Adam B., Jacob Whitman, Jane and Samuel Sanford.

(V) Jacob Whitman Danielson, son of Samuel (3) born May 9, 1799, married Sept. 18, 1827, Lucy Maria Prince, born March 13, 1805, daughter of Abel and Lucy (Cady) Prince, and resided at Danielsonville. Mr. Danielson died Nov. 15, 1856 and Mrs. Danielson passed away April 19, 1847. Their five children were: George Whitman; Edward Prince, born Feb. 21, 1831, who married Jan. 24, 1861, Mary Etta Johnson, a native of Putnam, lived in Killingly and died July 8, 1902; Eliza M., born Aug. 26, 1833, who married Feb. 15, 1871, Dr. John Vedder; Lucy Jane, born March 26, 1838, unmarried and residing in Danielsonville; William J., born May 1, 1843, who married Nov. 1, 1871, Anna Russell Saunders, born May 9, 1843, and is a resident of Providence, Rhode Island.

(VI) George Whitman Danielson, son of Jacob W., and whose life work it is especially the design of this article to set forth, was born at Danielsonville, Conn., April 26, 1829. He attended the district school of the neighborhood and worked on his father's farm, doing a good share of the farm labor for a boy, while giving close attention to his lessons. From an early age he took a decided leaning to the printer's trade and, not liking the farm, left it at fourteen years of age, and in his fifteenth year entered the office of E. B. Carter, the village printer, at Danielson, there remaining for one year. During the first six months his compensation was $3 a month and board, and during the second six months, $10 a month and board. He rendered very efficient service, and, from being only an apprentice when he went into the office, soon proved himself capable of conducting the business, much of the burden of which fell upon him. In 1845 he went to Providence, R. I., where he worked as a journeyman printer. He also visited New York about that time, and set type on one of the morning papers there, and notwithstanding the temptations which surrounded printers on a morning newspaper he steadily adhered to his mother's parting injunction against the use of stimulants. After a brief period in New York Mr. Danielson, still a youth but full of ambition and energy, returned to Providence, where he readily obtained employment, and while still under twenty years of age published the Daily Sentinel, a paper which, though of brief existence, gave promise for the future. From the first the earnestness of the young man, and his determination to push forward to success attracted attention and aroused the jealousy of some, while enlisting the good will and friendly offices of others. He was for a time editor of the Daily Transcript, which he conducted with an ability that commanded the respect of older journals. On July 26, 1848, he became editor and publisher of the New England Arena, at West Killingly. The Salutatory was signed "G. Whitman Danielson" and the lines which headed the paper were indicative of the spirit of the man.

Thy spirit, Independence, let me share,
Lord of the lion heart and eagle eye;
Thy steps I'll follow with my bosom bare,
Nor heed the storm that howls along the sky.

The Arena continued in existence for more than a year, when George Whitman Danielson, now arrived at man's estate, went back to Providence to enter the ranks of journalism where he was already favorably known. In May, 1851, he occupied the position of reporter of marine news for the Daily Post of that city, and continued his connection with that paper for several years, acting also as foreman of the composing room and as assistant editor. He displayed on the Daily Post remarkable industry and journalistic capacity, and thoughtful men began to look toward him as one of who was certain to make his impress in journalism and in the State. On March 14, 1859, in company with Albert R. Cooke, he established the Evening Press. The new paper grew in value and in influence until it had achieved a prominent and honorable position, besides affording assurance of being largely profitable at no distant date. In September, 1862, Mr. Danielson sold his interest in the Press to Mr. Cooke, and in January, 1863, at the request of Senator Anthony and Joseph Knowles, entered the Journal office as business manager and managing editor. He soon gave a quickening impulse to the paper which sent its circulation upward, and the establishment of the Evening Bulletin, January 26, 1863, brought the news and editorial opinions of the Journal to the doors of the masses in the form of a cheap evening newspaper, which from a circulation of a few hundreds to begin with, had achieved in 1884 an average circulation of more than 22,000 daily, its circulation, combined with that of the Journal, making a total, as Mr. Danielson stated with just pride some months before his death, surpassed by but few newspapers in the world. The profits of the business, it needed hardly be said, increased proportionately, and the great establishment which he then built up is a more glorious monument than any that can be erected to his memory. But all this was not achieved without increasing and vigilant effort. For a number of years Mr. Danielson went to the Journal office about ten or half-past ten in the morning, and remained until after the Evening Bulletin went to press about 4 o'clock in the afternoon. Then he would go home to dine, and return to the office about seven o'clock in the evening, remaining until from half-past two to three o'clock in the morning. He controlled every detail of the establishment, whose employes numbered not less than 200.

As an employer Mr. Danielson was most generous and considerate, and he attracted to himself the loyal devotion of all who were around him. He was quick to respond to the appeal of distress and many a dollar was sent by him for the relief of cases of poverty called to his attention by the reporters, but this relief was given in such a way that none knew but the messenger of mercy. No man had a warmer heart for the afflicted, and he had a true Rhode Island sympathy for the downtrodden. Though tenacious in his opinions and principles, he was far from being irreconcilable to those who had treated him wrongfully. He was a true gentleman in his deportment, and would not permit anyone, however hostile to him personally, to be treated otherwise than with courtesy while under the roof of the Journal office, and he rarely appeared to display impatience even under the most annoying and irritating circumstances.

Mr. Danielson took a deep interest in the progress and welfare of his ancestral city, and was identified with many of its business enterprises. He was vice-president and director of the Oakland Beach Association, a director of the Phenix National Bank, of the Richmond Paper Company, of the Equitable Mutual Insurance Company and of the Rhode Island Telephone & Electric Co., and held stock in various other corporations. He was also for a number of years president of the New England Press Association. He was a charter member of What Cheer Lodge, F. & A. M. He was also up to the time of his death, a member of the Westfield Congregational Church in Danielsonville, which he joined in early youth, and was a generous contributor to Congregational churches in Providence.

On Jan. 25, 1881, Mr. Danielson was married to Rosa Frances Peckham, a native of Killingly, Conn., and daughter of Dr. Fenner Harris and Catherine Davis (Torrey) Peckham, and to the marriage came two children: Whitman, born Dec. 17, 1881; and Rosamond, born Nov. 6, 1884.

George Whitman Danielson died March 25, 1884. On the day following the funeral the Providence Journal had an appreciative notice of the occasion, closing with the following words:

"The assemblage of the public was large and notable, representing the weightiest influences in the State in public service and private life, and all the interests which contribute to its greatness and welfare. It was touching alike to see the citizens, venerable with grey hair and of honored names, taking a last farewell of the face and form of their associate in labor for the public welfare, and young men receiving a stimulus to it by the impression of the honor it brings. The feeling of respect and honor was universal, including all classes, friends and former opponents, associates and rivals in business, all uniting in paying the deserved tribute. Of the feelings of his employes and those most intimately associated with him, it is unnecessary to speak, and it was deeply manifest in their countenances and mien. In accordance with his wishes, the ship which he commanded was not checked in its course, but there was a pause in the full activity of the machinery for the hour of the solemn ceremonies of the burial of the dead captain. And when the time came to

Free the fettered engine
And speed the hurrying shaft, and for all the stress of strenuous and unceasing labor to be renewed, the officers and crew, in performing their duties through the long night, were compelled by irresistible feeling, as they will be for many nights and days to come, to pause often in their work, however engrossing, to wipe away the unbidden tears, starting at the countless familiar touches recalling his voice and hand, or emanations of his vanished spirit, intensifying the poignant grief and sense of irreparable loss.

Many high tributes were paid to the life and worth of Mr. Danielson by the journals of Rhode Island and neighboring States, by the General Assembly of Rhode Island, by various societies, clubs, etc., as well as personal tributes of friends and distinguished citizens. It is not within the province of this article to give these; however, brief extracts of some follow:

"The spontaneous and unanimous tribute of the General Assembly to his worth as a citizen only voiced the sentiment of the people of Rhode Island, to whom his name was a household word, and to whom he has for so many years daily sent, not merely the news of the world, but the utterances of reason, philanthropy and religion, whatever was best in current thought or highest in the realm of spiritual hope, promise, or attainment. Mr. Danielson possessed certain characteristics which were patent to everybody with whom he came in contact; his keen sagacity, his grasp of mind, his vigor of will, and his almost ever unerring judgment impressed the least capable observer."—The Providence Journal, March 28, 1884.

"The most eminent journalist of our State has departed. Heaven designated him for a journalist. With an acute intellect and sagacious judgment he noted the improvements that were making in journalism. It was his ambition to avail himself of every agency that promised to expedite the attainment of news, and of every invention which facilitated its publication."—The Pawtucket Gazette and Chronicle of March 28, 1884.

"Is it saying too much to assert that, by the death of Mr. Danielson, the State has lost its most influential citizen? I think not. Partly by virtue of his commanding position as conductor of a journal long recognized as a power in the community, partly because of rare union of innate common-sense qualities with that resolute courage which holds all considerations of self-interest in perpetual subordination, and somewhat doubtless, because joined to a pure patriotic, and lofty aim, there was in him a well defined sense of enjoyment in the possession of power, and a manly instinct of leadership—he had attained to an influence commanding in degree and surprisingly diverse and wide in its relations. I have known him more or less intimately for upwards of thirty years."—Hon. Henry Howard.

"I cannot leave the altar without expressing regret for the death of George W. Danielson. I utter these words of regret, not only for myself, but I speak for the 50,000 Catholics in the diocese. Mr. Danielson was among the first to introduce into his paper a department in which the interests and services of Catholics were especially considered, a feature which all the leading journals have since adopted. He never took any advantage in matters regarding the church or displayed any measures in his dealings with it. Though never personally acquainted with Mr. Danielson, I have received many favors from him for myself and for the Church. When the corner-stone of the Cathedral was laid, Mr. Danielson sent the generous contribution of $100. Many other churches have been the recipient of his generosity. He was exceptionally an able man. He was most gentlemanly in the use of his pen, from which no vulgar expression has ever been seen. He was above everything mean, just, as far as he could see, as far as he could be. As a man I hold a deep respect and regard for him, and in his death, the Journal, the city, and even the State sustain a great loss."—Right Rev. Thomas F. Hendricks, Bishop of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Rhode Island, March 30, 1884.

CHARLES D. MORSE, deceased. In every community there dwells some one man whose interests are identical with those of the town, whose philanthropy endears him to all classes, whose geniality is so infectious that every man is his friend. Not necessarily wealthy, but with the broad charity that sees in every human being a brother, he finds some way to aid his fellowmen, materially or spiritually, and he goes on his way modest and unassuming, hardly cognizant of his own worth.

On Feb. 12, 1895, in Millbury, there entered into rest Charles D. Morse, prominent as a manufacturer, public-spirited as a citizen, loyal as a friend, loving as a husband and father, honest and upright as a man. When the sad news was heralded about the town each one felt a personal loss in the death of this citizen-friend, and in the days that followed it was more fully realized to what a great extent he had been the leader and counsellor of all. No task had been too great, no service too trifling, to meet with a hearty response from him who had an almost miraculous way of finding ample time to do many things and to do all things well. Whether for himself or for others, he cheerfully labored with a diligence that masters, and with the care for detail that brings success.

Charles D. Morse was born in Woodstock, Windham county, Nov. 1, 1827, son of Leonard and Remember Morse, and was educated in the public schools and the academy there. Soon after attaining his majority, he came to Millbury, where he entered the employ of J. Coombs & Co., manufacturers of sash and blinds, beginning in humble capacity in a shop where now stand the glazing shops of his own immense concern. His industry and application won him favor at the factory, and his economy and right living enabled him to save a large part of his earnings, so that in 1852, when the company was reorganized, he was able to buy an interest, and the new firm of Fullom, Morse & Co. was launched on the sea of prosperity. Later the firm became Armsby & Morse, and so continued until 1871, when Mr. Morse purchased his partner's interest and the firm name became C. D. Morse & Co., so continuing to the end. On July 24, 1874, the shops were destroyed by fire, but in two months were rebuilt and running. Again in July, 1881, a disastrous fire partially destroyed them, but they were soon rebuilt and enlarged, with the added facilities of modern improvements. In 1893, a new department for the manufacture of street cars was added. In 1894 another addition was rendered necessary by the increased business of building cars. About seventy-five men were employed, and 2,000,000 feet of lumber were used annually. At the time of Mr. Morse's death, the shops were running full time on contract, and so continued under the management of Charles H. Morse, who had acted as manager for his father. To all this rapidly growing business Mr. Morse gave his personal supervision, and up to three weeks before his death he was giving it the same attention he had been for nearly two score years.

While attending to his own affairs carefully, Mr. Morse early entered public life and always afterward took a working interest in all things tending to the progress or well being of his town, county, State or nation. In 1861 he was a member of a special war committee, appointed May 7 of that year, to provide for the families of enlisted soldiers. In 1864 he was chairman of the board of selectmen, and through his efforts Millbury sent a full quota of soldiers to the front. In the service of his town he had filled many offices, elective and appointive, and whatever he attempted was ably done. He did especially difficult work on the board of assessors and board of fire engineers. As a stanch Republican he was active in his party's work and in the session of the Legislature in 1874 was the representative of his town. For years he served on the town committee, and he was many times sent as a delegate to conventions. In all measures for the advancement of Millbury, he took a keen interest. In 1878 when, after a long and heated controversy, it was decided to build a new town hall, he became chairman of the building committee. He was a member of the committee that brought about the legislation necessary to compel Worcester properly to treat its sewage before letting it pass into the Blackstone river. After months of hard work, without compensation, the committee was successful.

At the time of his death Mr. Morse was connected with many public institutions. He was, and had been for sixteen years, president of the Millbury National Bank; director in the Millbury Savings Bank; member and ex-president of the Worcester Builders' Exchange; president and founder of the Millbury Business Union; a member of the Millbury Social Union; a member of the Prospect Land Company; a member of the Home Market Club of Boston; a member of the Worcester Board of Trade; a director of the Millbury Water Company; director of the Worcester & Millbury Division, Worcester & Suburban Street Railway; a member of the standing committee of the Society of Mutual Aid in Detecting Thieves, of Millbury; and a member of the Millbury Temperance Union. He had been a leader in the water works scheme, and served as the first president of the Millbury Water Company. Fraternally he was a Mason, and was affiliated with Olive Branch Lodge, A. F. & A. M.; Tyrian Chapter, R. A. M.; and Worcester County Commandery, K. T.; he also belonged to the Millbury Y. M. C. A. In his religious views he was a Congregationalist, holding membership in the Second Church. His generosity was unstinted, and he assisted many an unfortunate one over the thorns on the path to success. The confidence reposed in Mr. Morse was never betrayed. To the performance of his duty he brought wisdom and judgment, coupled with rare executive ability, keen perception, indefatigable perseverance and persistence.

Mr. Morse was twice married. His first wife, whom he married May 22, 1855, was Lydia Ann Sawyer, of Millbury, who died Feb. 19, 1863. On Oct. 27, 1864, he married Anna Elizabeth Willard, daughter of Fitzroy and Frances G. (Blake) Willard, of Worcester, who survives him. Four children also survive. (1) Frances Willard, born in Millbury, Dec. 11, 1865, married Dec. 5, 1889, Dr. Jacob Read Lincoln, a leading physician of Millbury, and a son of Dr. William H. Lincoln. (2)

Charles Henry, born Jan. 5, 1868, continued his father's business for some time, and is now general correspondent for the Worcester Telegram. He married, Oct. 24, 1889, Miss Amy Mattoon, of Millbury, Mass., and has two children: Robert Mattoon, born Nov. 23, 1892, and Mildred, born July 16, 1896. (3) Anna Louise, born Aug. 22, 1870, is now librarian of the Free Public Library, at Youngstown, Ohio, after a service of three years as assistant librarian in the New York Library at Albany. (4) Mary Lincoln, born Jan. 17, 1873, is a director of kindergarten, also treasurer of the Kindergarten Institute of Chicago.

Mr. Morse was the last of a little group of men that made of Millbury a manufacturing center, and he was known the country over. When it became known that the end was near, messages of sympathy poured in from every side, and many tears were shed for the absent wife, who, accompanied by her daughter Mary, was seeking a restoration of her own frail health in the Bermudas, and was unable to reach home until too late to see the beloved husband and father in life. True to every trust, conscious of a duty well done, Charles D. Morse quietly passed away in the "glory of a life well spent."

HON. DAVID GREENSLIT. In every community, large or small, there are a few men, who, by their force of character, are intuitively recognized as leaders—men, who are successful in their business undertakings, generous and fair in their relations with others, and who warmly advocate all measures for the public well being; men, whose private lives are clean and pure, and whose public virtues give added lustre to their town, county and State. In the town of Hampton, Windham county, there is no one better known than the venerable gentleman whose name appears at the head of this sketch.

Possessed of a limited common school education, David Greenslit has, by energy and enterprise, directed by sound judgment, acquired a wide knowledge of men and affairs, and risen high from "the foot of the ladder" to an honored place in the legislative halls of his State, and to a high standing in the financial world. Mr. Greenslit is a grandson of John Greenslit, a farmer and hotel keeper, who resided in the south part of Hampton. Five children were born to John Greenslit, as follows: (1) David, father of our subject; (2) Elijah, a farmer and sheep raiser, who resided in Hampton, and there died; (3) Ebenezer, a farmer in Hampton; (4) Harry, a farmer and local preacher of the Christian Church, who died in Windham; and (5) Mary, who married Hezekiah Hammond, a wealthy and prominent resident of Hampton.

David Greenslit, Sr., the father of our subject, was born Feb. 26, 1778, in Hampton. He resided there, engaged at farming his entire life, and died of typhoid fever Oct. 15, 1834. He was a hard-working and highly esteemed and respected man, and of strict integrity. Professing the faith of the Christian Church, he endeavored to follow its teachings in his daily life, and to live in charity with all men. On Dec. 29, 1803, David Greenslit, Sr., was married to Nancy D. Foster, who was born in Canterbury, Jan. 29, 1783, a daughter of William Foster, a Revolutionary soldier, of whom our subject has a very distinct recollection. Mrs. Nancy (Foster) Greenslit died July 26, 1853, aged seventy years. She was the mother of nine children, of whom three lived to mature years: (1) Lucius, born April 21, 1806, became a farmer in Hampton, and married Catherine Thom. (2) William F. was born Jan. 25, 1813. (3) David is mentioned below.

Hon. David Greenslit was born in the town of Hampton June 2, 1817, and received such education as was afforded by the common schools. His summers were spent in assisting his father on the home farm. At the age of sixteen he taught one term of school at Clark's Corners, but the death of his father and the illness of his brother necessitated his return to the home farm. For two years he assumed its management, and then, his brother having recovered, he realized that the farm had no need for the services of both, and he resolved to secure an education, and fit himself for life's battles. With a grim determination to accomplish something, he went to Brooklyn Center to take a course in a select school. He was in attendance at this institution but three weeks when he was examined, and hired to teach a school there for one term, at $17 per month and board around—good wages for those times—and was so successful that he was retained for three terms. From there he went to Norwich, Conn., and was employed as a clerk in a grocery store at $12 per month. In this he remained but six months, as he did not like the idea of selling rum, which was a regular commodity in grocery stores in those days.

After leaving Norwich, Mr. Greenslit engaged in teaching in the North Bigelow District, in Hampton, for one term, and soon after purchased a farm, and followed the occupation of farmer until 1844, when he was appointed deputy sheriff by Sheriff Septimus Davison, of Brooklyn. This position he held for nine years, when he was appointed by the Legislature to fill the un-expired term of Sheriff Childs (deceased), of Woodstock, and he discharged his duties with such marked ability, that he was elected to the same office for two terms (six years). At the close of his term as sheriff, his services were procured by Provost Marshal Bromley, at Norwich, as assistant manager and United States Recruiting Agent for a period of two years or more during the Civil war. By this time he was an accepted authority on public questions, and had become so well known that he was, in 1866, chosen State Senator from the Thirteenth District, and became chairman of the Senate committee on State Prisons. The same year he was appointed by the Legislature a member of the Board of Equalization for the Thirteenth Senatorial District. In 1878 he was sent to the Connecticut House of Representatives, and made chairman of the committee on Prisons. He served several years on the Republican State Central committee, and had a wide experience in town, county and State political matters. In town matters Mr. Greenslit was selectman ten years, agent of the town many years, treasurer of the town deposit fund forty-four years, an active member of the board of education forty years or more, and visitor of schools for many years; and occupied many other positions.

Mr. Greenslit now is, and has been for about thirty years, a director of the Windham County Bank, formerly at Brooklyn, now at Danielson; and vice-president of Brooklyn Savings Bank, for a number of years. He has for about twenty years been president of the Windham County Mutual Fire Insurance Company, and has been the adjuster of all losses for that company, for said period of twenty years, in which capacity he has rendered material assistance in many important cases.

Although not a professional man, Mr. Greenslit has given much attention to the study of law, his interests requiring him to be well versed in legal rules and practice. His services have been, and are now, much sought in the settlement of estates, and in kindred affairs, involving great responsibility and well balanced judgment. Mr. Greenslit seems to be possessed of a natural legal mind. In his management of public and private affairs he has been confronted with legal questions on which he had formed opinions, but had desired advice from a lawyer before acting. On very numerous occasions when he was advised adversely to his opinions and ideas, he was so confident that he was right, that he has carried the questions through court, and has been sustained oftentimes in spite of opinions of noted lawyers. His legal knowledge has been entirely acquired in the school of experience, but as he was a close student and observer, he has become extremely well posted. He is careful and slow in making up his mind, but what he undertakes he does with all his might. During Mr. Greenslit's term of sheriff he met the duties of the office, handled the perplexing legal questions, and conducted the affairs in such a manner that he was never the defendant in a law suit for mismanagement, or mistakes, made liable by such a position. Mr. Greenslit has been sent on several occasions as an agent, to different parts of the West to look after the holdings for some parties. Several times he had but little information regarding same when he started, and he brought back more money than was expected, and the satisfaction of his constituents is easily imagined. Some of the estates he has settled were large.

On May 26, 1840, David Greenslit was married to Elizabeth, daughter of John Searl, of Brooklyn. Mrs. Greenslit passed away on March 2, 1898, leaving desolate the home she had graced for so many years. Their only daughter Charlotte E., the one precious jewel of a happy home, entered into rest in 1866, at the age of twenty-two.

Although past four score years, Mr. Greenslit has an elastic step, a clear mind and a vigorous body. He yet manages his extensive business interests in the prompt, systematic and methodical manner that characterized his methods a half century ago. Quiet and unostentatious, he pursues his course. The visitor finds in him a cultured gentleman, with a vast fund of information, and an engaging conversationalist with a kindly wit. His religion is best expressed in that broad charity that finds good in all. Many of his kind and generous acts have been hidden from the public, and those that did become known, have been told of by the recipient. Mr. Greenslit is very public-spirited and philanthropic, and, well-remembering the kindness shown him when he was in adversity, has found many occasions when he has, in turn, assisted the worthy. He has ever been a strict temperance man, and no man could hand down to posterity a cleaner and better record as a useful man, and one whose influence has always been for good. He is the last of a number of prominent men which Hampton has produced. In past years he has wielded a very powerful influence in town and county matters. He has ever had the good interests of Hampton at heart, and was ever watchful that the affairs of the town were properly managed. Liberal and public-spirited, he is Hampton's foremost citizen, and as an acquaintance once remarked, "When David Greenslit goes, there is none to take his place."

GEN. NATHANIEL LYON, soldier, and brigadier-general of volunteers in the Civil war, 1861-65, was born July 14, 1818, in the town of Ashford, Windham Co., Conn., a son of Amasa and Keziah (Knowlton) Lyon, and on both paternal and maternal sides descended from honorable lineage. From a brave and patriotic ancestry, the Knowlton brothers, Lieut. Daniel and Col. Thomas, of Revolutionary fame and conspicuous in the earlier Colonial wars, were his kinsmen, Daniel Knowlton being his grandfather and Thomas Knowlton his grand uncle. Both were residents of Ashford. The General's grandfather, Ephraim Lyon, was a soldier of the Revolution and afterward became a successful farmer and lawyer in Ashford, Conn. Amasa Lyon, the General's father, was a substantial farmer of Ashford.

The school teachers of General Lyon in his boyhood recalled and testified to the amiable and generous qualities, which even then made him a general favorite, and to his early proficiency, which gave abundant promise of success and honor for the man. When very young he formed the plan of going to West Point, and from that time worked with steady and unfaltering purpose.

General Lyon was graduated in 1841 at the United States Military Academy and was assigned to the 2d Infantry, and served in the Seminole war.

He was engaged in the Siege of Vera Cruz. He was promoted a 1st lieutenant while on the march to Mexico, and commanded his company throughout the subsequent campaign. He was breveted captain for gallantry at Contreras and Churubusco. He was wounded in the assault on the City of Mexico, at the Belan Gate.

On the close of the Mexican war, Lieut. Lyon was ordered to California and in 1850 conducted a successful expedition against the Indians of Clear Lake and Russian River in North California. He was promoted captain June 11, 1851, and in 1853 returned with his regiment to the East. He was sent to Fort Riley in 1854. Previously he had been a Democrat, but on hearing the debates over the Kansas and Nebraska Bill his sympathies were enlisted in behalf of the negro. In the height of the contest for possession of Kansas he manifested sympathy with the Free-State party and gave it his aid and support.

Subsequently Capt. Lyon was ordered to the Dakota frontier, but not long thereafter, in 1859, he was again on duty in Kansas. He was with Gen. William S. Harney in December, 1860, at the time the Governor of Missouri sent a brigade of militia to co-operate with the national troops in arresting James Montgomery. In February, 1861, Captain Lyon was ordered to St. Louis and was soon in close accord with Francis P. Blair, Jr., and the Unionist leaders. He had the entire charge of the arsenal, arms and stores in April, 1861. Before the bombardment of Fort Snider he had strengthened the fortifications and mounted heavy siege guns and mortars that commanded the city and its river approaches. He became commander of the department, was commissioned brigadier-general of volunteers, May 17, 1861, was appointed to command a brigade of German troops and relieved General Harney of the command of the Department of the West. Gen. Lyon was killed at the battle of Wilson's Creek, Mo., his horse was shot from under him and he himself was wounded, but soon on another he dashed to the front and was shot through the breast, expiring almost instantly, August 9, 1861.

JOHN WESLEY SUMNER (deceased). In contemplating the record of a life complete, it is difficult in a brief sketch to point out the salient events and characteristics that marked and controlled the whole. Especially is this true when we have been in daily contact with the man, and so by familiarity with his habits and his virtues, overlook and underestimate the possessor. In every community, large or small, there are a few men who by their force of character are intuitively recognized as leaders, men who are successful in their business undertakings, generous and fair in their relations with others, and who perceive and warmly advocate those measures which insure the public well being. In the town of Bolton there was no name better known than that of John Wesley Sumner, who was a distinguished representative of an honored family.

For two centuries in Bolton, Tolland county, have lived the direct line of his Sumner ancestors. Through Rev. Henry Peterson, Reuben, William, Clement, William (2) and William (1) he traces his lineage to (I) Roger Sumner, of Bicester, Oxfordshire, England, who married Nov. 2, 1601, Joane Franklin, and died Dec. 3, 1608. Their only child was

(II) William Sumner, born at Bicester in 1605, who married Oct. 22, 1625, Mary West. In 1636, he came to Dorchester, Mass. He was selectman for more than twenty years, and was deputy to the General Court in 1658-66-70-72-78-81-83-86. His wife died June 7, 1676, and he on Dec. 9, 1688. They were the parents of six children: William, Joane, Rogers, George, Samuel and Increase.

(III) William Sumner (2), son of William, was born at Bicester, and married Elizabeth, daughter of Augustine Clement, of Dorchester, Mass. He was a mariner, and moved to Boston, where he died in February, 1675. His wife died before 1687.

(IV) Clement Sumner, the next youngest in a family of ten children, was born at Boston Sept. 6, 1671, and married May 18, 1698, Margaret Harris. He lived at Boston.

(V) William Sumner, the eldest of seven children, born March 18, 1699, at Boston, Mass., married Oct. 11, 1721, Hannah, daughter of Thomas Hunt, of Lebanon, Conn. He was a physician and lived at Hebron, Conn. In 1767 he moved to Claremont, N. H., where he died March 4, 1778. His widow passed away April 2, 1781.

(VI) Reuben Sumner, the third of nine children, was born at Hebron, Conn., May 29, 1727, and married March 6, 1754, at Hebron, Elizabeth Mack. He died April 2, 1807, and she on July 10, 1805.

(VII) Rev. Henry Peterson Sumner, a Methodist preacher, the ninth in a family of eleven children, was born June 10, 1773, and married Oct. 11, 1796, Jerusha, daughter of Solomon Perrin, of Hebron, Conn. She died Feb. 4, 1798, and he married (second) Sept. 11, 1798, Mary S., daughter of Timothy Goslee, of Glastonbury, Conn. He died Jan. 18, 1838, and his widow died at Bolton, Conn., July 9, 1875.

(VIII) John Wesley Sumner, the eighth in a family of twelve children, was born at Hebron, Conn., Sept. 16, 1812. He resided at Bolton, of which town he was a representative in 1877-78. On Nov. 23, 1836, he married Mary, daughter of George Gleason. She was born Jan. 12, 1814, and still survives. To them were born three sons and two daughters: (1) Henry Peterson, born at Hebron, Jan. 21, 1838, died at Bolton, Aug. 29, 1873. (2) Mary Elizabeth, born May 23, 1839, died May 23, 1839. (3) George Gleason was born Jan. 14, 1841, in Hebron, Conn. (4) Ella Mary, born at Canton, Conn., April 24, 1848, married Feb.

8, 1871, Jabez L. White, of Bolton, and died Oct. 6, 1876. (5) Frank Chester, born at Canton, Conn., June 8, 1850, received his education at the public schools of Bolton, Conn., and the Hartford high school. At the age of seventeen years he entered the employ of the Hartford Trust Co., as messenger, and rose by degrees until reaching his present responsible position, that of secretary and treasurer. He is a director of the State prison, of the Pratt & Whitney Co., and of the Gray Telephone Pay Station; a trustee of the Mechanics Savings Bank; and has served as a jury commissioner; was a member of the board of health twelve years, up to 1900; and is now upon the Bridge commission. On June 17, 1896, he was married to Mary L., daughter of George S. and Adelaide L. (Catlin) Catlin, and a granddaughter of Hon. George S. Catlin.

Under date of Feb. 8, 1892, the Hartford Times says: "Mr. John W. Sumner, a well known citizen of the State, died at his home in Bolton, this morning, in the eightieth year of his age. Mr. Sumner had enjoyed exceptional health always, until about three years since, when it became impaired by heart trouble. Three weeks ago he was attacked very severely with the grip, resulting in his death. Mr. Sumner was cast in an unusually rugged mould, mentally and bodily. He was clear-sighted and positive in his ideas of right action, and in the advocacy of them as well, as in all relations of life he scarcely knew the feeling of fear. He was active and effective in the affairs of his town and section, and in politics. He represented Bolton in the Legislature in 1876. He will be missed in the community where he lived."

At the funeral of Mr. Sumner, Rev. Luther H. Barber, former pastor of the Congregational Church at Bolton, gave the following summing up of his life: "Mr. John W. Sumner had lived to fill up a full and useful life. His life covered a period of almost four-score years, a life longer than but few, compared to the whole, are permitted to spend here. The years of his life have been eventful ones in the history of our country. His birth was in 1812, in the year of the last war with Great Britain, and what scenes our country has passed through since that time! In the passing events during Mr. Sumner's life he has taken a deep and lively interest. He has occupied a prominent position in this community through a period of some forty years or more. The regard in which he has been held by his fellow townsmen is shown in the responsible positions of public trust in which he has been placed by them. From all we have known and learned of him we believe you who have known him would testify he had been faithful to trusts committed to him, that he has endeavored to act conscientiously in all matters intrusted to him. Were I to speak of the marked characteristics in our deceased friend, among these I should mention:

"First, his earnest convictions. Descending as he did from those who were possessed of the Puritan principles of character, we should have expected to find in him such fixedness of opinion that when his mind was once made up, in any direction, it would not be an easy matter to turn him from it. He meant there should be just grounds for his opinions, and, once formed, he would adhere to them. What he was one day, he was found to be the next.

"Second, he was one who might be called a wise counselor. I doubt whether there was a man in this town whose counsel was sought by so many as was his. Holding the office of magistrate as he did, it was natural his advice should be sought many times, but beyond and outside of this many took counsel with him. When those came to him with grievances such that they were inclined to resort to the civil law for redress, he would do all he could to dissuade from this, and use all his influence to have their grievances settled in some other way; and just here, in this connection, we might speak of him as a peace-maker.

"Third, he was a peace-maker. When there came up that which tended to mar the peace between neighbors, instead of saying or doing anything to widen the breach, he would do what he could to bring the parties together. Sometimes, when troubles arose between members of the same family, and aggrieved ones came to him, he would counsel for those things making peace, and many times his counsel, 'Be at peace among yourselves,' was so followed that harmony was restored when otherwise lasting alienation would have been the result.

"Fourth, he was emphatically a lover of good order. He would frown upon anything and everything that tended to destroy this or work against it. He earnestly desired to see propriety of conduct on the part of the young. He seemed greatly interested in the welfare of the young. He would have them take such courses as to render them valuable and useful members of society. He would have them avoid associates and places from which there would be danger, their morals would be corrupted or in any way suffer. Rarely do we find one in advanced life more interested in the young than he was, and he wanted they should be prepared to act well their part in life.

"Fifth, he had great kindness of heart. You who have known him longest and best have known him as a kind neighbor. Those kind, neighborly acts, which do so much to render neighborhoods what they should be, he was ready and wont to perform. Who, when they wanted some kind and neighborly act done, was not likely to think of Mr. Sumner, and who went to him for a favor who did not expect to get it, if in his power to grant it? When he knew there was want in a family, where poverty had entered, he would bestow unasked relief. How many of the poor and hungry have had food and shelter under his hospitable roof! I doubt if he ever turned a poor tramp away without food, when he asked for it, or shelter, when it was evident he needed it. Has it not been true in the community, when some poor wayfarer has sought a shelter on some cold, stormy night, when he had called at our dwellings for shelter he has been directed to Mr. Sumner with a feeling that he would be sure to care for him? When I speak of the kindness of heart of our departed friend I feel sure you will all agree with me. But, may I not here, in this presence, speak of his kindness as manifested to me and mine? When I came to be the pastor of the people thirteen years ago last June, coming up the hill east of us, Mr. Sumner was in his field just by the wall. As I halted for a moment, Mr. Sumner said, 'I have always been the friend of the minister and I shall always be your friend, as long as you are minister here.' That promise he redeemed all along in the eleven years of my ministry here, and it has not failed since I have been from you. In multitudes of instances have the kind acts of this friend been manifested to me and mine. I think of him to-day as I was wont to meet him in his home and elsewhere, the warm, kind grasp of his hand I seem to feel. I think of him as he was wont to sit in the seat just down there. I think of him as the attentive listener, never drowsy—hearing every word uttered."

GEORGE GLEASON SUMNER attended the district schools of his native town until fourteen years of age, and was then sent to the Bartlett high school at New London. After studying there a year and a half, he became teacher of the district school in Andover, after which he went to Williston Seminary, there to fit himself for a college course. Ill health, however, caused him to relinquish his plans for securing a university education, and the next four years he spent upon the farm in Bolton, working in the summer time and teaching in the winter. During this period he was town clerk for three years, probate clerk, and acting school visitor. In 1864 Mr. Sumner began the study of law with Hon. David S. Calhoun, in Manchester, afterward removing to Hartford, and entering the law office of Waldo & Hyde, and in 1866, he was admitted to the Bar. In 1867 he was elected a representative from the town of Bolton to the General Assembly. The same year he removed his residence to Hartford, and in 1868 was elected an alderman from the Fifth ward, and served four years. He was city attorney for one term, associate judge of the city court, police commissioner for three years, and recorder of the city court for four years. In 1873-74 he was chairman of the Democratic State Central Committee. In 1877 he was a candidate for the State Senate from the First District, and received a certificate of election, but was compelled to relinquish the position after a contest. In 1878 Mr. Sumner was elected mayor of Hartford. In 1883 he was elected lieutenant governor of the State. In 1887-88, he served as State Senator from the First district.

In October, 1870, Mr. Sumner married Julia E., daughter of Hon. David Gallup, of Plainfield, and two children came of this union: William Gallup, born Dec. 5, 1871, who died in January, 1873; and Ella Gallup, born in March, 1875, who died young. Mrs. Sumner was called from earth March 2, 1875.

Charles Cheyres

HON. CHARLES PHELPS, of Rockville, Tolland county, a lawyer of prominence, the first Attorney General of Connecticut, and ex-Secretary of State, is of a sturdy ancestry, whose emigration to the rockbound coast of New England reaches back to within a decade of the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers.

George Phelps, son of William, of Tewkesbury, England, born about 1605, emigrated to New England with his brother William and family in 1630. He came from Dorchester, Mass., to Windsor, Conn., probably with the first company in the fall of 1635. He married (first) at Windsor, in 1637, Phillury, daughter of Philip Randall. She died in 1648, and he married (second) Widow Frances Dewey. In about 1670 he moved to Westfield, Mass. He died in 1687.

Charles Phelps, of Rockville, is a descendant in the eighth generation from George Phelps, the line of his descent being through Jacob, Benjamin, Benjamin (2), Benjamin (3), Levi and Rev. Benjamin C. Phelps.

(II) Jacob Phelps, son of George, born in 1649, in Windsor, married, in 1672, Dorothy Ingersoll, and settled in Westfield, Mass., where he died in 1689.

(III) Benjamin Phelps, son of Jacob, born in 1683, in Westfield, married (first), in 1708, Deborah Temple, who died in 1719. He first settled in Lebanon, Conn., and in 1710 removed to Mansfield, Conn., where he died in 1731.

(IV) Benjamin Phelps (2), son of Benjamin, born in 1718, in Mansfield, Conn., married in 1747 Ruth Horton. Mr. Phelps resided in Mansfield, Conn., Westfield, Mass., and Somers, Conn., where he died in 1781.

(V) Benjamin Phelps (3), son of Benjamin (2), born in 1750, in Mansfield, married (first) Sarah Cook, of Andover, Conn., settled in Somers, Conn., and lived to an advanced age. He was for a long time a justice of the peace. In 1848 he was a delegate from Somers to the convention that adopted the Constitution of Connecticut.

(VI) Levi Phelps, son of Benjamin (3), born in 1786, in Somers, Conn., married in 1809, Fanny, daughter of Joseph Hall. Mr. Phelps settled at Sand Lake, N. Y., where he was in business with his father. Later in life he resided in Wethersfield, Conn., with his son, Benjamin C. He lived to the ripe old age of eighty-four years.

(VII) Rev. Benjamin C. Phelps, son of Levi, and the father of Hon. Charles Phelps, of Rockville, was born Dec. 4, 1810, at Sand Lake, N. Y., and on June 18, 1838, was married to Sarah Parker Humphrey, of Pelham, Mass., daughter of a farmer. She was a native of Littleton, Mass., and when twelve years of age went to Northfield, Mass., to live in the family of Mr. Moody, the latter an uncle of the noted Dwight L. Moody. To this marriage came children as follows: (1) George N., born Sept. 12, 1839, at Warehouse Point, Conn., was graduated from Wesleyan College in 1864, was in the chemical manufacturing business for a time in New York, and is now living retired at the old homestead at Vernon. He is married. (2) Sarah E., born Dec. 23, 1840, at Warehouse Point, Conn., married Prof. A. Williams, of Brown University, Providence, R. I., and died Nov. 15, 1891, in Leipsic, Germany, where she was buried. She left two children, Alonzo Roger (who is of the eighth generation in lineal descent from Roger Williams) and Helen Sarah. (3) John H., born July 16, 1842, at Mystic, Conn., enlisted at the first call for soldiers in the Civil war, in the 14th U. S. Regulars, and served three years; he was wounded at Antietam, Fredericksburg and Gettysburg. He is now a resident of Wethersfield, Conn., is married and has one daughter. (4) Mary B., born Aug. 29, 1844, at Thompson, Conn., died at Stafford, Conn., Feb. 24, 1876. She became the wife of Edwin S. Wolcott, and left two daughters, May E. and Gertrude. (5) Henry E., born Aug. 17, 1846, at Brooklyn, Conn., is a resident of Hartford, where for eighteen years he has been connected with the postal service. He is married and has one daughter; a son, Charles P., died at the age of twenty years. (6) William, born Nov. 2, 1848, at Manchester, Conn., died in 1849, at East Hartford. (7) Charles is referred to farther on.

Rev. Benjamin C. Phelps was a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and his active ministerial life covered a period of nearly forty years—from 1833 to 1871. During the greater part of this time he was in Connecticut. Among his appointments were the churches at South Hadley, Ludlow, and Chicopee, Mass., and Franklin, Mystic, Tolland, Warehouse Point, Manchester, East Hartford and Vernon, Conn. In 1836-37 he was missionary to whalers in the South Atlantic and Indian Oceans, and from 1859 to 1869 he was chaplain at the Connecticut State Prison. Rev. Mr. Phelps died Oct. 1, 1896, and his widow, who was born Oct. 23, 1812, passed away the same week; the aged couple were buried at Rockville. Rev. Mr. Phelps was a staunch Republican, attended elections always, and also the caucuses, but never aspired to office.

Charles Phelps, son of the late Rev. Benjamin C. Phelps, was born Aug. 10, 1852, in that section of East Hartford known as Hockanum. When five years of age his parents removed to Wethersfield, and in the north brick school house of that town he received his first schooling, his first teacher being a Miss Andrews; another of his early teachers there was a Miss Woodward. He next attended a private school in Wethersfield conducted by Miss Sarah Woodhouse, and later the East Greenwich Academy, subsequently entering Wesleyan College, at Middletown, from which he was graduated in 1875. During his last year in college he pursued studies which led up to the law. In college he was a member of the Psi Upsilon Fraternity. He studied law under the direction of the present Judge Benezet N. Bill, of Rockville, and was admitted to the Bar in Tolland county in 1877. Since that year, with the exception of a year's practice at Tolland after his admission, Mr. Phelps has been a resident and practitioner of Rockville, save when absent in his public official relations. He has been engaged in the conduct of some of the most important causes that have come up in court since his appearance at the Bar. He followed to a successful termination the Utah Copper Belt Mining Claim suits, and the suit of J. J. Regan against the New York & New England Railroad Company, in which he won the largest verdict granted by a Tolland court in twenty years. Among the cases in which he has successfully figured may be mentioned the celebrated Gleason case, and the Winderman litigation, in which latter he represented Jordan Marsh & Co. In 1902, while serving as Attorney-General of the State, he represented and won for the State before the United States Supreme Court, the noted case of Connecticut vs. the Travelers Insurance Company, of Hartford, conducting and arguing this case alone.

Mr. Phelps, through his force and ability, having received thorough early training, has come to the front among the lawyers and public men of the State. His public career has been somewhat varied, and most clean and successful. For years he has represented Tolland county on the State Board of Examiners of applicants for admission to the Bar, having received his appointment from the judges of the Superior and Supreme Courts. He has served as county coroner since the creation of that office in 1883, and was city attorney from the organization of Rockville as a municipality to 1891. He was prosecuting attorney from 1890 to 1896. In 1885 he was sent to the General Assembly from Vernon and made a good record, serving as a member of the Judiciary committee and as chairman of the Contested Elections committee. In 1892 he was elected to the State Senate, representing the Twenty-third district, was chairman of the Insurance committee, and there became one of the leaders of his party, being one of the only two lawyers of his party in that body, which was at that time evenly divided between the two parties. In November, 1896, Mr. Phelps was elected Secretary of the State, and served the people of Connecticut in the able and efficient manner that had previously characterized his official relations. His term of office as secretary of State expired on Jan. 4, 1899, at which time he was Attorney-General elect, and he was the first incumbent of that office. Mr. Phelps was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1902, representing the town of Vernon. As previously noted his great-grandfather, Benjamin Phelps, was a member of the First Constitutional convention in 1818, representing the town of Somers, Conn. In his political affiliations Mr. Phelps has always been a Republican.

Mr. Phelps is a genial and social gentleman, widely and popularly known throughout the State. Socially he is a member of the Psi Upsilon Club, of New York, and is identified with the I. O. O. F., holding membership in Rising Star Lodge, No. 49, at Rockville, and Midian Encampment, at Hartford. He is a director of the Rockville National Bank.

On Oct. 10, 1881, Mr. Phelps was married to Leila Loomis, daughter of Judge Benezet H. Bill, of Rockville, and a niece of Judge Dwight Loomis. Mrs. Phelps died Sept. 30, 1888, and on March 28, 1900, Mr. Phelps was again married, his second wife being Miss Felsie Edith Sykes, daughter of George Sykes, president of the Hockanum Company at Rockville.

HON. THOMAS O. ELLIOTT, whose long Civil war service and political achievements have proved him an able advocate of human liberties, has inherited his assertive powers through a long line of ancestors. Anciently the numerous Elliott (sometimes spelled Eliot and Elet) family on the borders of England and Scotland were notable fighters; their crest was a right arm with dart in hand about to be thrown, the Latin motto underneath signifying "There is no need of a bow to throw this dart;" in other words "I need no assistance. I am thoroughly competent to take care of myself."

(I) Francis Elliott, an ancestor of the Windham county Elliotts, and his brother Thomas, undoubted scions of this ancient stock, appear as mariners in the vicinity of Salem, Mass., about 1686. That they were industrious and thrifty is evident from their possessions. Thomas, who died childless in 1695, left to his widow and his brother a large estate, including coined money, several pounds worth of plate, and other valuables. Francis owned several farms in the towns joining Salem. He was a highly respected Christian, and was elected deacon in his church in 1653. On June 6, 1686, he married Abigail Nichols, daughter of John Nichols.

(II) Thomas Elliott, fourth son of Francis, married July 20, 1723, Lucy Flint, daughter of John and Elizabeth Flint, and resided in Middleton, Essex Co., Mass. Of this union there were three sons: Francis, born Feb. 14, 1724, who married May 26, 1749, Phebe Bary (or Bury); Thomas; and Joseph. In 1749 Mr. Elliott purchased a large tract along the French river, in Thompson parish, Conn., gave a farm to each of his two married sons, Francis and Joseph, and moved with them to that region. He was prominent in social functions, and his name appears in society records as "Old Mr. Elliott."

(III) Joseph Elliott, son of Thomas, born in 1729, lived through the stirring times preceding the Revolutionary struggle, for which he gave his life. When about twenty years old he settled on the farm which his father gave him, in Thompson parish, Conn., now occupied by Elliott Shumway, and there he spent the rest of his life. Possessing to a marked degree the self-reliant Elliott spirit, he was a man bound to come to the front in public affairs. When the question of laying out regular school districts was agitated in Thompson, he was the spokesman, and he took a strong hand with the committee in the accomplishment of that work. For many years he belonged to the Seventh Company, Eleventh Connecticut Regiment, was made its ensign in 1761, and in 1775, when it came to actual war, its captain. After the Lexington alarm, he with his company was placed at the head of the regiment on its march to Cambridge; and as this place by courtesy and custom belonged to a man of the town of Thompson instead of the parish, Capt. Elliott in receiving it was especially honored. Soon after an eleven days service, he was mustered in Captain of the Killingly Company, of the Connecticut Third, Putnam's famous body guard in the Cambridge engagement. With many of his regiment, Capt. Elliott served in the battle of Bunker Hill, where, for his valor, he was asked to perform the hazardous task of covering the retreat after the ammunition was exhausted. The excessive exertion, however, required in the performance of this deed, threw him into a fever, from which he never recovered. He died Aug. 12, 1775.

In 1749, shortly after he settled in Thompson parish, he married Jerusha Bary, a sister of Mrs. Francis Elliott. Mrs. Joseph Elliott died March 15, 1815. By her Mr. Elliott had nine children, the first three being married as follows: Rachel, born in 1751, to David Converse; Roger, born Feb. 18, 1752, to Betsey Prince; and Jerusha, born Jan. 20, 1754, to Alpheus Converse. Joseph, born Jan. 19, 1755, died young, and Thomas is mentioned below. Sarah, born May 9, 1761, was married to Capt. William Dwight; and Samuel, born July 4, 1762, married Esther Holmes. Keziah was born June 3, 1764. David was born in 1766.

(IV) Thomas Elliott, grandfather of Hon. Thomas O., born in Thompson, May 20, 1757, was a farmer in that town throughout his mature life. He was a man of ability and marked social powers. For a number of years he served in a military company organized near New York, of which Pain Converse was lieutenant. He was keenly interested in all good work and was a member of the Congregational Church. His death occurred in Thompson in 1843, in his eighty-fifth year. He was married thrice. His first wife, Sarah Holmes, of Pomfret, died Aug. 6, 1792, and his second wife, Chloe Bates, daughter of Issachar Bates, in 1815. By his first marriage there were four children: Aaron, born June 2, 1782, who married Betsey Carroll, and lived in West Thompson; Lucy, born Jan. 9, 1785, who died Jan. 9, 1802; Ebenezer H., born April 1, 1787, who married Esther Clough, and after her death, Harriet Kelly; Elijah, born Feb.

15, 1789, who married Molly Clough and settled in the West. By his second wife Mr. Elliott had five children: Thomas, born in 1793, who married Polly Jacobs, and after her death, Polly Dexter, and resided in Thompson; Issachar, who died in 1815; Sarah Holmes, who married S. E. Tefft; Chloe, married to Richard Chappell, of New London; Ira, mentioned below. By his third marriage, to Mrs. Eleanor Fiske, there were no children.

(V) Ira Elliott, a man of considerable attainments, who was never reluctant to take the initiative in any public work, was born in Thompson, Conn., in February, 1805. In the public schools of his town and in Dudley Academy, at Dudley, Mass., he acquired a sufficiently thorough education to start him in the various pursuits of life. Possessed, however, of a proper respect for agriculture, he returned to the home place, where he was at first assistant manager; after the death of his father he carried on the place alone for several years. In early manhood he married Elizabeth Scott, of Thompson, who died in young womanhood, soon after the birth of her only child, Reuben S., who was born March 28, 1826. Mr. Elliott afterward married Susannah Osgood, who was born in Pomfret, April 28, 1811, daughter of William and Persis (Hyde) Osgood; she died April 5, 1879. Of this union there were five children. (1) Susan E., born Aug. 24, 1838, now a resident of Pawtucket, R. I., married Jan. 8, 1862, George E. Young, a carpenter, and they have had three children, Freddie E., deceased, Alice E. and Evelyn M. (2) Maria L., born Aug. 18, 1840, now a resident of Marengo, Ill., married Jan. 8, 1862, Charles Averill, and they have ten children: Ida; Edward, who married Miss Emeley, and lives in Wisner, Neb.; Annie, who married Sylvester Emeley, and also lives in Wisner; Charles; William; Frederick, who served in the Spanish-American war; Mary, deceased; Maud; Howard; and Grace, deceased. (3) Thomas O. is mentioned later. (4) Catherine C., born Nov. 3, 1849, married April 6, 1882, Charles Martin, a merchant, now deceased, and they had two children, Clara E. and Abbie S. (5) Clarence S., a grocer at Neponset, Mass., born Dec. 9, 1859, married (first) Amelia Horton, and (second) Mrs. May Harvey.

Wise management of the homestead and frugality finally enabled Mr. Elliott to enlarge his agricultural business; in the spring of 1852 he purchased of his father-in-law, William Osgood, the magnificent 230 acre farm, in Pomfret, now owned by his son, Thomas O. There as an exceedingly well-to-do farmer he spent the rest of his life. In 1860 he erected the house which is now intact. He died Nov. 7, 1871, in his sixty-seventh year, and he is buried at Abington.

Mr. Elliott was widely known as a public-spirited man. In getting the railroad through the town of Pomfret he brought such a strong influence to bear, even giving land for the right of way and for a station in that town, that the Railway Company named a place along their line, Elliott Station, in his honor. He belonged to the State Militia. Religiously he was a member and regular attendant of the Congregational Church at Abington, and in politics affiliated first with the Whig and later with the Republican party. The prosperity which he enjoyed through life was largely due to his excellent business judgment and to his unlimited capacity for work.

(VI) Hon. Thomas O. Elliott, born in Thompson, Conn., July 26, 1842, when about ten years old moved with his parents to Pomfret, where he has since made his home. Beginning school at Thompson, continuing at Pomfret, and finishing, at the age of sixteen, in a select school at Abington taught by college students, he acquired a thorough fundamental education, after which he assisted his father for three years on the farm. Then the guns were fired upon Fort Sumter, and Sept. 12, 1861, he enlisted in Windham county, Co. K, 7th C. V. I., for three years' service in the Civil war. His company was commanded by Capt. Jerome Tourtellotte, of Putnam; and his regiment was in charge of Col. Alfred Terry, and Lieut. Col. Joseph R. Hawley, who succeeded Col. Terry, Jan. 20, 1862, and who is now United States Senator from Connecticut. This regiment went South in the Port Royal expedition, and, being one of the few armed with the effective Spencer breech-loading rifles, was especially singled out through the war for hard fights. After the capture of the forts near Port Royal, S. C., it was sent ashore and assigned to garrison duty. Later it fought in the seven months' siege of Fort Pulaski, upon the surrender of which it again did garrison duty. In 1863, after fighting at James Island and Pocotaligo, it went in Brannan's expedition to Fernandina, Fla., where it was stationed until April. Then it returned North, and from Morris Island, courageously did its best—though unsuccessfully—to help force Charleston into a surrender, four companies, including Co. K, leading the charge on Fort Wagner. Out of the 180 men in these four companies, 111 were killed. Its next battlefield was Florida again. There, in February, 1864, it fought nobly in the disastrous battle of Olustee, where the Union forces lost thirty-eight per cent of their men. In the following April it was sent to Virginia, and there, in Terry's division, Tenth Corps of the Army of the James, fought in the battles of Drury's Bluff, Deep Run, and Derbys-town road, in skirmishes near Bermuda Hundred, and Deep Bottom, and finally in the battles at Cold Harbor, and the siege of Petersburg. With the exception of five months spent in the hospital at Hilton Head, Mr. Elliott remained with his regiment throughout its service. His absence was the result of a broken leg, received by a shot in the ankle, July 11, 1863, during the heavy charge on Fort Wagner, near Charleston. After returning to his regiment, however, being unable to march, he was detailed exclusively to driving the ambulance wagon. During the siege of Petersburg his term of enlistment expired, and he, with his regiment was mustered out at New Haven. About a year later, Dec. 7, 1865, he married Mary L. Averill, of Pomfret, who was born Nov. 17, 1842, daughter of Lewis and Hannah (Burton) Averill. Mr. and Mrs. Elliott had four children. Hannah A., born Sept. 29, 1868, now a resident of Pomfret, married April 8, 1891, Edward Peal, and they have one child, John E., who was born Feb. 17, 1892. Mary, born Feb. 20, 1870, died March 10, 1870. Robert T., born June 16, 1874, graduated from the Putnam high school in 1893, and from Amherst College in 1897, and is now a teacher. His engagements have been in the Latin and Greek departments of the West Jersey Academy, at Bridgeton, N. J., (1897-99), and later, in the Latin and English departments of the Berkeley School at New London, where he still remains. As a college student he was exceedingly popular, being a member of the Delta Upsilon Society, and captain of the track team. Like most of the Elliott family he is a Republican in politics. Joseph H., born June 21, 1877, who assists his father at home, is a member of the Republican town committee, is serving as representative in the State Legislature this year (1903), and is master of Wolf Den Grange.

For the first six years after his marriage Mr. Elliott assisted in the management of the home farm. Then, upon the death of his father, he purchased the other heirs' interests in this large place, and has since carried it on by himself with success. Another profitable business which he has engaged in for some time is lumbering. As a disabled soldier he deservedly draws a pension.

The social status of Mr. Elliott and his family is very high in Pomfret. He is a member of A. G. Warner Post, No. 54, G. A. R., at Putnam; and as a charter member of the Wolf Den Grange, No. 61, of Pomfret, he has served as master. Of this lodge his wife is also a member. In local politics he has been exceedingly active. Besides holding many minor town offices he has represented Pomfret in the State Legislature four times, in 1881 and 1882, in succession, again in 1891, the year of the obstinate deadlock, and finally in 1893, serving with marked efficiency. In 1901 he was elected on the Independent ticket as a representative to the constitutional convention for 1902. The honors bestowed upon him have been the merited result of a forceful character, broad culture and marked integrity.

TALCOTT. The family bearing this name in New England is one whose history reaches back in Colonial days to within only a little more than a decade of the coming of the Pilgrim Fathers themselves, and among its numerous representatives have been many men and women conspicuous in the social, religious and business life of our country. It is designed here, however, to treat briefly of that branch of the family only whose members have linked its name so indelibly with the great manufacturing interests of the vicinity of Hartford and Rockville, and who, through their force of character, strong personalities and liberality, have made their influence for good felt in the community which has so long borne their name—Talcottville. Chief among these, of the deceased, were the Talcott Brothers, Horace Wells and Charles Denison.

In the southwest corner of the town of Vernon, Tolland county, ten miles east of Hartford, on the line of the New England railway, lies the village of Talcottville. Here a valuable water-power on the Tankeroosen, near its entry into the Hockanum, was brought into use early in the nineteenth century. John Warburton, a millwright by trade, came from England to America in 1792. Just ten years later, in company with Daniel Fuller, of Bolton, Conn., he purchased the privilege of which he became sole owner in 1804. From lack of means he progressed slowly in bringing it into use. Having at length put into operation two small mills and a woolen card on a separate fall about forty rods below, and built two brick houses, he sold the entire property in December, 1809, for $10,200 to Irad Fuller, Lebbeus P. Tinker, Alexander McLean and Francis McLean, all of Vernon. They developed the enterprise to such a degree that just after the close of the second war with Great Britain, when the country was suffering from severe financial depression, Thomas Bull, of Hartford, in July, 1816, bought their entire interests for $18,000. After operating the mill for five years, he sold to various parties 125-140ths of the plant. Henry Hudson, by purchase at different dates, became sole owner in January, 1833, when he in turn sold the property to the brothers George and Nathaniel Kellogg, George having bought the wool-carding mill in 1816. For the next twenty years the village was known as Kelloggsville. The purchasers put in new machinery and pushed the manufacture of satinetts, with which they were already familiar. In 1835, on the site of the old cotton factory a new mill, 90x34 feet, and three stories high, was built. Meanwhile Nathaniel O. Kellogg had become sole proprietor. He conducted the business with marked success until he passed away May 13, 1854, in the fifty-ninth year of his age.

The executors of his estate now entrusted the management of the factory to the brothers, Horace Wells Talcott and Charles Denison Talcott, who had been intimately associated with Mr. Kellogg for a number of years in the conduct of the enterprise. In July, 1856, they bought the property for $20,000, formed the firm since known as Talcott Brothers, and later changed the name of the village to Talcottville. With vigor, foresight and success the new owners continued to pursue the policy with which they had been identified as agents and employes. Little occurred for the next thirteen years to disturb the onward flow of prosperity. Then two calamities fell upon the enterprise in quick succession. On Sept. 20, 1869, the lower mill was burned to the ground, and on the 4th of the following month, a destructive flood having carried away a dam half a mile above, brought down a flood which also swept off the dam and part of the mill at the upper privilege. The firm now rebuilt on a new location about midway between the former sites, and so re-arranged the trench as to use at this point the entire fall of twenty-one feet. The structure with subsequent additions consists of a central part 160x34 feet, three stories high, flanked by two extensions of two stories each, one 80 feet, and the other 90 feet in length, with a picker room of 40 feet, giving a total frontage of 370 feet. New machinery embracing the latest improvements was introduced at the same time. In the main the mill produces union Cassimeres, and employs about one hundred hands.

The Talcott family of Connecticut, including the Vernon branch, sprang from John, the emigrant ancestor, who was born in Braintree, County of Essex, England, was married there to Dorothy, daughter of Mark Mott, and came in the ship "Lion" in 1632 with others of Rev. Thomas Hooker's company to Newtown, now Cambridge, Mass. Mr. Talcott, in 1636, moved to Hartford, having the previous year sent forward a carpenter to build a house for him. This was one of the first houses built in Hartford, and stood on the corner where the church made famous by the preaching of Rev. Horace Bushnell, D. D., was afterward erected. John Talcott was the grandfather of Joseph Talcott, governor of Connecticut from 1724 until 1741, and the first governor born on the soil of the Colony. John, the emigrant, was deputy to the General Court, continuously from its formation till 1654, when he was chosen assistant and also treasurer of the Colony. Both in public and private affairs his descendants have borne a conspicuous and honorable part during the Colonial period and onward.

From this immigrant ancestor, John Talcott, the lineage of the late Horace Wells and Charles Denison Talcott was through Capt. Samuel, Deacon Benjamin, Benjamin (2), Deacon Benjamin (3), Deacon Elijah and Elijah Talcott (2).

(II) Capt. Samuel Talcott was born probably in Newtown about 1634-35, married Hannah Holyoke, Nov. 7, 1661, and was settled by his father in Wethersfield. A graduate of Harvard in the class of 1658, he was a cultured and useful citizen, and took a prominent part in public affairs.

(III) Deacon Benjamin Talcott, son of Capt. Samuel, was born in Wethersfield, March 1, 1674, was married to Sarah Hollister, Jan. 5, 1699, and settled the year of his marriage in Glastonbury, where he died in 1727.

(IV) Benjamin Talcott (2), son of Deacon Benjamin, was born on June 27, 1702, and Aug. 26, 1724, was married to Esther, daughter of John Lyman, of Northampton, Mass. They were farming people, and lived on land inherited from his father in Bolton, Conn. There he died in 1785.

(V) Deacon Benjamin Talcott (3), son of Benjamin (2), was born in Bolton June 10, 1725, and March 15, 1753, was married to Elizabeth, daughter of John Lyman, of Coventry. Farming was Deacon Talcott's life occupation, and he settled on land given him by his father near the quarry, where he died in 1811.

(VI) Deacon Elijah Talcott, son of Deacon Benjamin (3), was born June 22, 1755, in Bolton, and on Nov. 17, 1779, married Rebecca, daughter of Nathaniel Olmsted; she died in 1801. In 1803, he was again married, this time to Wealthy, a daughter of David Strong, of Columbia. He died in Bolton in 1826, leaving his family in very comfortable circumstances.

(VII) Elijah Talcott, son of Deacon Elijah, was born May 5, 1784, and was married May 25, 1813, to Anna, daughter of Nathaniel Hubbard, who died Feb. 24, 1814, and the same year he was married to Florilla Hubbard. Mr. Talcott was a farmer, and a very successful school teacher. He led a long and useful life, and died Sept. 13, 1859. His children were: Martha, Elijah Hart, Florilla M., Horace Wells, Charles Denison, George S., Lyman P., Wealthy A., Martha J., Emerette Rebecca.

HORACE WELLS AND CHARLES DENISON TALCOTT, sons of Elijah, were born in Manchester, Conn., June 10, 1821, and Sept. 11, 1823, respectively.

Horace Wells Talcott entered the Kellogg mill referred to in the foregoing in April, 1838, and step by step acquired thorough mastery of all the details of the manufacturing department of which he had full charge several years before he became a purchaser. He died June 16, 1871, having spent two-thirds of an eminently busy and useful life in the care and development of this property.

Charles Denison Talcott received a common school education in his native town, and remained at home helping his parents and teaching school until twenty-seven years of age. He entered the Kellogg mill in 1850, and, after becoming familiar with the manufacturing department, it having been found that he had superior mercantile endowments, was transferred to the office. From the death of Mr. Kellogg he had charge of the finances and correspondence, and his brother of the manufacturing interests until 1856, when the firm of Talcott Brothers took the property from the heirs. At this time he threw his whole soul into the business, and did much to make it an assured success. When his brother Horace died in 1871, much responsibility was thrown upon him, and his faithful performance of every task and duty made a record almost unequalled in the history of the manufacturing interests of the State. Quick in thought, prompt in conclusions, and a man of much self-reliance, he was singularly powerful in execution, and the amount of business he could accomplish within a brief period was almost incredible. Plain and outspoken in his speech, there were times he towered above common men like a mighty rock. His career is a noble illustration of high moral and Christian character as a fructifying agent of life, and power in the business world. He was a deacon in the Congregational Church at Talcottville, and as an exemplary Christian, he inclined to what is termed the Old School in his theology. He was exceedingly powerful in prayer and conference meetings. He was a temperance man, both by precept and example. Believing strongly in the sanctity of the Sabbath, he felt that people in his service should neither work nor play on that day, but should wait on God in His house. From the beginning of the firm he had been a mercantile member, and his keen business sense and intuitive judgment had often guided its affairs successfully through troubled waters. The reconstruction of the mills in 1869 consequent on their practical destruction by fire and flood, that year, was largely done under his direction, and the thoroughness of the work attested his skill and foresight. He survived his brother thirteen years, and died July 17, 1882. Epithets of praise or blame can easily multiplied and are often misplaced. The men may best be judged by what they did, for between them during life there existed close unanimity of sympathy and aim, and they left behind an influence for good which has broadened with the passing years.

In 1866, for the use of the village and vicinity, at a cost of over $30,000, they built a brick church for the Congregational denomination. It seats easily about 450. Under the same roof are parlors for meetings of the ladies and an ample lecture-room. A part of the lower floor is used for the office of the company. In church and Sunday-school, both brothers were ardent workers.

In 1880 the firm built a brick school house sufficiently large to meet all local needs and sufficiently ornate to make it attractive. Charles D. projected a public library, but died before its completion. The firm at its own expense carried out the plans fully. Like the other buildings for general use, it is of brick and designed to unite utility with artistic effects. Its shelves now contain about 1,600 volumes. Thus, out of a moderate business, the proprietors have from time to time erected at their exclusive expense, at a cost of about $45,000, a church, a school house, and a library, and have given them to the public. By inheritance and conviction the brothers were Puritans, unsparing of themselves and uncompromising in the pursuit of what they believed to be a duty. It was their steadfast aim to make the little community a model of sobriety, truth and morality. No intoxicants were allowed to be sold on the premises. Men whose habits or character were likely to prove injurious to others could not find employment here.

"These brothers were of one mind and heart, and during their fifteen years of labor together, their harmony of plans and their exhausting exertions, and their careful management, and the favoring smile of God, accomplished what few men are permitted to achieve. In the consecration to such extent of the fruits of their labors to the interest of religion here, increasing the sanctuary and supporting the means of grace, these two brothers were always agreed."

Of Deacon Horace Wells Talcott one has written: "He was everybody's friend, was not hasty in judgment, took time for reflection in respect to almost everything that engaged his attention, was almost always serene, while his resolution and will to do his part made him a man of wonderful energy and perseverance. He was chosen deacon of Vernon Centre Church Oct. 31, 1848, when only twenty-seven years of age, and for several years stood at the head of the Centre Sunday-school, and in the organization of the Sunday-school at Talcottville was without a dissenting voice placed at its head, and he remained until he died."

The following references to Deacon Horace Wells Talcott are extracts from the sermon preached at his funeral: "Deacon Talcott was in very many respects a remarkable man, a remarkable Christian. As a Sabbath-school superintendent he had few equals and still fewer superiors. He was the children's man, understanding them, winning their love and confidence, while he had a singular power for their spiritual good over the youth of mature years. The school under his guidance was deeply interested in its pursuits and largely prosperous. As superintendent of the Sabbath-school he was completely master of the situation, yet never making many words and never resorting to anything strange and out of the way to accomplish his end."

"Deacon Talcott, by his consistent Christian life, his deep Christian sympathy, his large liberality—giving to the objects of benevolence according to his ability—his singular prudence and gentleness as a peace maker, and his eminent power in prayer, was peculiarly fitted in the estimation of every body, inside and outside the church, to serve his Master in the office to which his brethren called him. In this office he served continually for twenty-three years, almost one-half of his life on earth, and as a deacon was loved and honored by the pastors and churches throughout the county."

"Deacon Talcott was a remarkable man among the sick. He sympathized with them so deeply, did so many things for their comfort, and pointed them so surely to the cross of Jesus for succor. He always knew what to say to the sick, the dying, and the mourner, and what he said came from his heart filled with the love of the Savior and the Holy Ghost. In his business he was a great worker, was severely just and honorable, and presented an integrity of character that was ever above suspicion, that was never called in question. His success in business never made him proud, never made him overbearing, never spoiled him as a humble true man and Christian."

On Oct. 9, 1842, Horace Wells Talcott, was married to Jane M., daughter of Albert Gardner and Tacy (Greene), and to them were born: Rosa

J., now the widow of Samuel A. Talcott; and Horace G.

Charles Denison Talcott was married May 7, 1851, to Harriet, a daughter of Col. Francis and Roxey (McKinney) McLean, of Vernon. She died Sept. 25, 1874; and Nov. 15, 1876, he was married to H. Maria, daughter of Isaac D. Freeman, of Mansfield, Conn. To this second union was born a son, Charles Denison.

Intermarried with the Talcotts, and related to them, are many of the old families of Connecticut, among them the Freeman and Turner families. Edmund Freeman, the grandfather of Mrs. Charles D. Talcott, inherited the old homestead in Mansfield, where his life was spent. He owned some three hundred acres of land, and, besides being a thorough farmer, was a practical surveyor, and devoted considerable time to this work. An active man in local politics, he represented his town three times in the General Assembly, and his district in the State Senate one term. With his wife he belonged to the Congregational Church, where their interest was known and noted in the town. For forty years he led the choir. Isaac D. Freeman, his son, and the father of Mrs. Talcott, was born in Mansfield, where he acquired a very good education. In 1835 he married Amanda J. Turner, who was born in 1811, and died Sept. 10, 1880. She was a daughter of Jesse and Sally (Agard) Turner, and a granddaughter of Elijah Turner. Mr. Freeman was much esteemed in the community where his life was mainly spent, and was known as "Young Squire Freeman," to distinguish him from his father, who was called "Squire Freeman." He represented his town in the General Assembly two terms, and held several local positions. To him were born the following children: (1) Edmund, born in 1838, married Lydia Aurelia Noble, of Willington, by whom he had two children, who died in infancy, and three who lived to years of maturity. He died June 10, 1900. (2) H. Maria married Charles D. Talcott. Mrs. Talcott's great-grandfather, Elijah Turner, was born Oct. 28, 1754, and died in 1826. He married Hannah Dimmick (born in 1756, died in 1831), and their children were: Rachel, Achsah, Elijah, Jesse, Rufus and Huldah. Jesse Turner, the grandfather of Mrs. Talcott, married Sally Agard, and had the following children: Vilura; Achsah; Amanda Jane, the mother of Mrs. Talcott, who was born Dec. 22, 1811, and died Sept. 10, 1880.

With the exception of small legacies to collateral members of the family, the entire property is owned by the heirs of the two Talcott brothers. To the present representatives of the family have descended the firm name, management, traditions and policy with few changes, except, perhaps, that the latter generation has been more tolerant toward the frailties of the erring. Like the fathers, the present managers are closely identified with the financial, educational and religious movements of the vicinity.

As one of the fruits of local influences they have seen many boys and girls go out from the village to fill with credit important positions in a wider sphere.

On an eminence overlooking the village and the valley to the westward, Horace W. and Charles D., built two homes, which in exact resemblance to each other typify the strong fraternal bonds which united them. Here dwell their families in an Arcadia of peace, plenty and happiness, near to and yet remote from the turmoil of a world of strife.

On the death of Charles D. Talcott, the charge of the Mills fell on Horace Gardner Talcott, son of Horace Wells Talcott, who was well qualified from the experience gained while assisting his uncle during a period of thirteen years, to manage the business on account of the heirs of the two brothers. The firm interests have remained unchanged to the present time. The personnel of the management is as follows: Horace G. Talcott, the general manager, has the aid of Morris H. Talcott, associate general manager; John G. Talcott, grandson of Horace W.; and Lyman P. Talcott, the youngest brother of Horace W. and C. D. Talcott, who has charge of the farm belonging to the mill. Connected with the various departments of the mills are many who have long been in the service of the firm, and are counted among its oldest and most trustworthy employes. There are few, if any, manufacturing villages in New England that may with reason more truly be called a model manufacturing village than Talcottville.

HON. HORACE G. TALCOTT, son of the late Horace Wells Talcott, was born Nov. 14, 1847, in Vernon, Conn., and is the type of a citizen to maintain for the name of Talcott the same high standard set by his father, uncles, etc. On his maternal side he is a descendant of the Gardners, Greenes, and Hardings, all of whom are old New England families of repute; and a representative of the last named family, Capt. Stephen Harding, served with honor in the Revolutionary war.

Horace G. Talcott received his elementary and high school education in Rockville. In 1867 he was graduated from Phillips Academy at Andover, Mass., then under the administration of Dr. S. Taylor, and for a time he was connected with the class of 1871, at Yale, but ill-health compelled him to abandon his college work, and take up an active business life. At his father's death in 1871, he became the superintendent of the mill, and on the death of his uncle in 1882, he came into the general management of the business. By his unwearied industry, energy and ability, Mr. Talcott has carried the business forward successfully, and made it to-day one of the prominent mills of New England, engaged in making woollens and union cassimeres. Faithful to the morals of the family, Mr. Talcott has succeeded his uncle as superintendent of the Sunday-school, is a director of the Connecticut Home Missionary Society, is a member of the National Society in that work, and is president of the Tolland County Foreign Missionary Society. His sympathies are large and his impulses generous. In his political views Mr. Talcott is a Republican, and he represented Vernon in the General Assembly of 1895, where he served on the Banking committee. As a director in the First National Bank of Rockville, of the National Machine Co. of Hartford, and trustee of various funds, his name is familiar in commercial and financial circles.

HON. SAMUEL A. TALCOTT (deceased) was in his lifetime a worthy representative of the Talcott family, being descended from John Talcott, the emigrant through Capt. Samuel, Deacon Benjamin, Capt. Samuel, Gad and Samuel Talcott.

Samuel A. Talcott was born Aug. 30, 1838, at Gilead, in the town of Hebron, a son of Samuel and Asenath (Morgan) Talcott. His education was obtained in the Monson (Mass.) Academy, and in the New Britain Normal School. For a time he was occupied in teaching, and then engaged in mercantile business in Hartford. On the death of his mother he returned to the old homestead, and from 1871 to the time of his death in 1899, he was the postmaster at Talcottville, where he was also associated with the Talcott Brothers, having charge of the company store, and being otherwise interested in the firm's affairs. In his religion he was devoted member of the Congregational Church, and from Jan. 2, 1887, was a deacon of the church. In 1866 he was elected as a Republican to represent the town of Hebron in the State Legislature. Mr. Talcott was married Oct. 4, 1871, to Rosa J., the only daughter of Horace Wells Talcott, and to them were born two children: John G., born Jan. 27, 1873, mention of whom is made later; and Ruth M., born Aug. 28, 1880. Mr. Talcott, like all the others of that name, was an honored and useful member of the community. He was a man of public spirit, and intensely interested in everything that promised to improve the moral and intellectual conditions of the community.

JOHN G. TALCOTT, the only son of Hon. Samuel A. and Rosa J. (Talcott) Talcott, as well as the only grandson of Horace Wells Talcott, is of the third generation that has been connected with the firm of Talcott Bros. He was born Jan. 27, 1873, at Talcottville, where he was reared and first attended school. He fitted for college at the Collins Street Classical School in Hartford, attending under Rev. Marcellus Bowen, Prof. Chas. C. Stearns, and Dr. Lewis F. Reid; entered Yale and graduated with honors in the class of 1895. Following graduation he spent one year at Talcottville, getting practical knowledge of the mill business, preparatory to entering the Philadelphia Textile School, where he was the recipient of the first year prize. He left the Philadelphia Textile School after one year, and returned to Talcottville, where at once he took a prominent part in the affairs of Talcott Bros., with whose management he has ever since been closely identified. He succeeded his father as postmaster at Tal-ttville, being appointed postmaster April 1, 1899, and has since served. A Republican in politics, he however, takes only a voter's interest, not seeking honors. He is a member of the Congregational Church, in which work he takes no little interest, and at present is clerk of the church. He is regarded as one of the superior young men of his town, and of credit to even such honorable ancestors as are his. Most competent in business affairs and skilled in mechanical lines, he is a valuable adjunct to Talcott Bros. His high moral character, exemplary habits and excellent influence render him valuable to the community.

MORRIS HATHAWAY TALCOTT, at the present time assistant manager of Talcott Brothers, was born in Monroe county, N. Y., in 1853, a son of Elijah Hart Talcott, who was born in Manchester, Conn., April 10, 1817, and died Nov. 11, 1866. In early life Elijah H. Talcott was employed in the Ellogg Mills, and in 1847, removed himself and family to Monroe county, N. Y., where he purchased a farm of one hundred acres, and there he spent his last years. As a farmer he was quite successful, and died leaving his family a very fair estate. In political views he was a staunch Republican, and was a liberal and broad minded man. In his religious convictions he took strong ground in the Presbyterian Church, and while in New York was very active in the affairs of that communion. Mr. Talcott was married (first) April 27, 1841, to Ninetta West; (second) May 27, 1852, to Clarissa Hathaway, the mother of Morris H.; and (third) to Elizabeth Hitchcock. He was the father of the following children: Samuel H.; Mary N., who died young; Elijah H., born in 1847, who married Sarah A. Linkletter, and on her death, Phoebe Alvord; Alfred W., who died young; and Morris Hathaway.

Morris Hathaway Talcott came to Vernon in 1869, to make his home in the family of his uncle, Horace W., who was his guardian, as both his parents were dead. In Talcottville he had the most of his schooling, though he attended Williston Academy, Easthampton, Mass., for a short time. On the death of his uncle he entered the office as assistant bookkeeper, and very soon came into the entire charge of the books. From time to time he assumed additional responsibilities, until for some years he has been the assistant manager.

Mr. Talcott was married April 16, 1878, to Alice Louisa, daughter of George W. and Harriet Jerusha (Gear) Sparks, for many years farming people at Lebanon. The Sparks family came from Scotland, and has given some of the best citizens it has had to this part of the State. Lucy (Parker) Sparks, grandmother of Mrs. Talcott, was a daughter of Ephraim Parker, a native of Mansfield, who came to Vernon in 1822. In early life he was a goldsmith, and on coming to Vernon engaged in farming, keeping for a time a hotel and teaching singing school. He died in 1835, and was the father of ten children. Mr. and Mrs. Talcott were the parents of the following family: (1) Louis Hart, born March 27, 1879, graduated as the valedictorian of his class from the Rockville high school in 1898, was a member of Yale class of 1902, and is now learning the manufacturing part of the business. (2) Morris Gardner, born July 20, 1880, graduated as salutatorian from the Rockville high school, and took a course at Yale with the class of 1902, and is now taking post-graduate course in the same University. (3) Faith Harriet, born Jan. 1, 1882, graduated from the Rockville high school as valedictorian in 1900, and attends Wellesley as a member of the class of 1904.

Mr. Talcott is a staunch Republican, and takes an active interest in the affairs of his community, especially as regards its educational interests and activities, for the past dozen years serving on the board of education. The family are all members of the Talcottville Congregational Church, and on the death of Samuel A. Talcott, Mr. Talcott was made a deacon, and is still serving in the position. In 1868 he united with the church, and has always been an active worker in its various organizations. Mr. Talcott is in the ninth generation of his family on American soil, and takes a justifiable pride in his ancestral history.

Few can show a clearer line of honest and industrious people than this Talcott family, many of whom have been men of note, and all thoroughly upright and respectable. It is one of enlightenment and progress, its members all having been men and women of intelligent lives, large views and strong moral sense. The present wearers of the name feel the obligation of duty and honor, and are walking in the footsteps of their progenitors.

RICHARD HALE ROSE, who, in his lifetime, whether in the fields as an agriculturist, in the legislative halls as a representative of the people, or in the home as a loving husband and father, proved himself worthy of all honor and respect, was descended from long lines of honorable ancestry.

(I) Josiah Rose, an early progenitor of the family in paternal lines, was the father of five sons, all of whom became eminent physicians and ornaments to the medical profession.

(II) Dr. Samuel Rose, one of these five sons of Josiah, was born March 17, 1748, in Coventry, in what is now Tolland county, where he was reared to manhood, and where, Dec. 30, 1773, he was married to Elizabeth, daughter of Deacon Richard Hale, and sister of Capt. Nathan Hale, the hero and martyr of the Revolution. Dr. Rose practiced in his native town, and died while still a young man. His widow afterward became the wife of a Dr. Taylor. Dr. Rose and his wife were the parents of the following family: Nathan Hale; Joseph, who married Millie Sweetland; Fannie, who married Sanford Hunt, their son becoming Governor of New York.

(III) Nathan Hale Rose, son of Dr. Samuel, was born Nov. 18, 1776, and was reared in Coventry, where he engaged in farming, owning two hundred acres, and he exercised a large influence in the social, religious and political life of the community. In 1802 he was appointed lieutenant; in 1807 he was made lieutenant-colonel by Governor Trumbull; and in 1811 he was named as major by Gov. Roger Griswold. A man of much judgment and character, he held many offices of trust and responsibility in the town. On Dec. 9, 1830, he was chosen a deacon of the First Congregational Church of Coventry; Jan. 31, 1849, his son, Richard H., was named for a similar position in the same church, and also became deacon of the consolidated (First and Village) churches, Jan. 17, 1869. It has been said of these men, "that they were not only of the first families, but of the very first families of the town." Nathan Hale Rose married for his first wife, Eunice, daughter of Deacon Talcott, of North Coventry. For his second wife he wedded Mrs. Lydia F. Perkins, of Lisbon, by whom he had the following children: Samuel, who married Abigail Kellogg, and lived and died in Rockville; Levi Perkins, who married Ann R. Manning, and died at the age of thirty in Coventry; Richard Hale, the gentleman whose name begins this article; and Lucy, who married William Dorman, of Coventry, by whom she had two children, Lydia, deceased, and Joseph, living in Brooklyn, New York.

(IV) Richard Hale Rose, son of Nathan Hale Rose, was born in Coventry, Feb. 3, 1812, and he died April 17, 1878. He grew up on his father's farm, and in time became a farmer. Endowed by nature with unusual strength of mind and character, much of his knowledge was the result of observation and study through a long and useful life, and he was able to make his influence strongly felt in the community in which he lived. His earlier political associations were with the Whig party, but on the disintegration of that organization he became a Republican, and was actively interested in all movements to promote the public welfare. He was a representative in the General Assembly, and he served one term in the State Senate. In local affairs he was county commissioner two terms, judge of probate, selectman and town clerk. It may be said of him that the honors of senator and representative were secured by him without his spending a single penny for political favors. The old homestead of two hundred acres had come to him, but for some years prior to his death his home had been made on the Royal Manning place, which was originally owned by Dr. Frederick Rose, who built the house now standing. Mr. Rose was active in church affairs, and long served as deacon, his peaceful and beautiful life well illustrating the faith that ruled his heart.

Mr. Rose was twice married. On Oct. 28, 1839, he married Mary Amelia Dimock. He married, second, Sept. 12, 1849, Sarah Manning, daughter of Royal and Sally (Rose) Manning, and granddaughter of Dr. Frederick Rose, one of the first sons of Josiah who became physicians. Mrs. Sarah (Manning) Rose still survives, retaining her faculties to a remarkable degree. To Richard Hale Rose and his wife, Mary Amelia Dimock, were born two children: Richard Dimock, now deceased; and Mary Sophia, also deceased. By his marriage with Sarah Manning, Mr. Rose became the father of Frederick Perkins, who died at twenty-seven years of age; Royal Manning, who is unmarried, and now engaged in the cultivation of the home farm; and Fanny Hale.

The Mannings, to which family Mrs. Rose belongs, have long been established in this country. (I) William Manning, of Cambridge, Mass., is on record as early as 1638. The Christian name of his wife was Susanna.

(II) William Manning (2) was born in 1614, and died in Cambridge, in 1691; his wife Dorothy died 1692, at the age of eighty years.

(III) Samuel Manning, son of William (2), born July 21, 1644, married April 13, 1664, Elizabeth Stearns, daughter of Isaac Stearns. On his death he was married May 6, 1673, to Abigail Wright.

(IV) Samuel Manning (2), the son of Samuel and Elizabeth Manning, removed from Billerica, where his father had settled, to Cambridge about 1692, going from there to Windham, Conn., where his wife Deborah died Aug. 8, 1727, and where he passed away Feb. 20, 1755. In 1714 he had purchased 240 acres of land between Merricks and Beaver Brook.

(V) Samuel Manning (3) son of Samuel (2), was born in Billerica, Jan. 14, 1691, married Irene Ripley, daughter of Joshua Ripley, and both husband and wife died in 1727, he on June 3, and she on Jan. 20th.

(VI) Hezekiah Manning, son of Samuel (3), was born Aug. 8, 1721, and Sept. 22, 1745, he was married to Mary Webb.

(VII) Calvin Manning, son of Hezekiah, was born May 4, 1746, and married Sept. 22, 1774, Lydia Robertson. They became the parents of Royal Manning, father of Mrs. Rose.

(VIII) Royal Manning lived where Mrs. Rose now resides, and there he kept hotel, and had a general store across the street. A thrifty and energetic man, he attained a substantial success. The Green in front of his home was used as a training ground in the old militia days. At his death he was seventy years old. On March 21, 1820, Royal Manning was married to Sally Rose, daughter of Dr. Frederick Rose, and their children were: Sarah, born June 14, 1821, who became Mrs. Richard Hale Rose; Eliza, who died young; Charlotte G., deceased; Frederick R., who married first Fanny Arnold, and second, Sarah Atwater; Mary Jane, the wife of Van R. Bennett, of Coventry; Frances A. who married James P. Foster, and is now deceased; Emily R., deceased; Lydia Meacham, who died when four years old; and Augusta M., living in Hartford, Connecticut.

Dr. Frederick Rose, father of Mrs. Royal Manning, was twice married. His first wife, Sarah Post, who died in Coventry, was a member of the Lebron family of that name, whose ancestor came from England to Saybrook at the first opening of that settlement. Their children were: John and Josiah, who never married; Sally, born in January, 1795, who was the mother of Mrs. Richard Hale Rose; Eunice, the wife of James P. Foster, of Hartford; and Joseph, who died young. Dr. Rose espoused for his second wife Mrs. Elizabeth Lathrop.

The Hale family was early planted on American soil. (I) Robert Hale came from Kent, England, to Charlestown, Mass., in 1632, and was one of those set off from the Church in Boston to form the First Church of Charlestown, of which he was a deacon. He was a blacksmith by trade, and was appointed by the General Court as a surveyor of the New Plantation. He died July 19, 1659. The Christian name of his wife was Jane.

(II) Rev. John Hale, son of Robert, was born June 3, 1636, and was graduated from Harvard in 1657, becoming the first minister at Beverly, Mass. Sarah Noyes, of Newberry, Mass., was his second wife.

(III) Samuel Hale, son of Rev. John, was born Aug. 13, 1687, married Apphia Moody, lived in Newburyport, Mass., and died in Portsmouth, about 1724.

(IV) Deacon Richard Hale, son of Samuel, was born in Newburyport, Feb. 28, 1717. He was married May 27, 1746, to Elizabeth Strong, who was born Feb. 2, 1728, and was a descendant in the fifth generation from Elder John Strong, who came to the Colony of Massachusetts Bay in 1630, and in 1659 was of Northampton. Deacon Hale was a farmer of Coventry, and was a man of sterling worth, sound principles and marked industry. He served as a deacon in the church, a justice of the peace, and was sent to the General Assembly several terms. His death occurred June 1, 1802. His wife, who died April 21, 1767, was a lady of high moral worth and of strong Puritan faith, and out of such a home as theirs it was fitting that Nathan Hale should come.

(V) Elizabeth Hale, daughter of Deacon Richard, and sister of Capt. Nathan Hale, the martyr of the Revolution, was born Jan. 1, 1753, and Dec. 30, 1773, she became the bride of Dr. Samuel Rose, who was a surgeon in the Continental army in the war of the Revolution.

HON. EDGAR MORRIS WARNER, lawyer and former judge of the city court of Putnam, a substantial man himself, comes through several lines from a sturdy New England ancestry of the Colonial period and of the first comers to the old and historic county of Windham.

Born June 16, 1850, in Worcester, Mass., Judge

Warner is a son of Earl and Adaline (Lester) Warner, and on his paternal side is a descendant in the seventh generation from Andrew Warner, through Isaac, Ichabod, John, Ichabod (2), and Earl Warner.

(I) Andrew Warner, the American ancestor of the family, is of record at Cambridge, Mass., in 1632, and was admitted a freeman of the colony, May 14, 1634. He removed to Hartford with the body of original proprietors of that town, and thence with a new wife, Esther, widow of Thomas Selden, to Hadley, Mass., in the first settling of that point. Mr. Warner died Dec. 18, 1684, aged nearly ninety-three years and his widow, Esther, died in 1693. His nine children, all born to a former marriage, were: Andrew, Robert, Jacob, Daniel, Isaac, Ruth, a daughter whose name is not given, Mary and John. Of these Andrew and Robert died in Middletown, Conn., and John also resided in that town.

(II) Isaac Warner, born about 1645, married, May 31, 1666, Sarah, daughter of Robert Boltwood. In about 1686 Mr. Warner removed from Hadley to Northfield, and thence to Deerfield, where he died in 1691. His widow married in 1696 Deacon John Loomis, of Windsor, Conn. Mr. Warner's fourteen children were: Sarah, Isaac, Mary, Andrew (settled at Saybrook), Hannah, Ebenezer, Daniel, Samuel, Ruth, Mercy, Ichabod, Lydia, Thankful, and Mehitable.

(III) Ichabod Warner, born about 1687, married, March 15, 1712, Mary Metcalf, and seems to have lived in Lebanon, where the births of his children are recorded. The names and dates of birth of his children are: Ichabod, Dec. 10, 1712; Daniel, July 10, 1714; Isaac, Jan. 4, 1717; Ebenezer, March 20, 1719; Nathaniel, Feb. 18, 1722; Timothy, Dec. 21, 1724; Samuel, Aug. 21, 1726; Mary and Hannah (twins), Sept. 13, 1730; Ruth, Oct. 17, 1732; and John, May 22, 1734. An Ichabod Warner, of Lebanon, bought land in Windham of James Babcock, June 29, 1721, and there is recorded in Windham the death of Mary Warner (wife), April 26, 1747, and of Ensign Ichabod Warner, Jan. 18, 1767; there is likewise filed the inventory of Ichabod Warner, March 23, 1767; also a record of the deaths of children of Ichabod and Mary Warner, viz: Mary, died Jan. 29, 1747; Samuel, June 21, 1747; and Hannah, Sept. 28, 1750.

(IV) John Warner, born May 22, 1734, married, Feb. 28, 1762, Priscilla Wood. The inventory of John Warner was recorded Jan. 2, 1775.

(V) Ichabod Warner married Hannah Collins.

(VI) Earl Warner married first, Harriet Gilbert and second, Adaline Lester. His children by the second marriage were: Earl, of New London, who married Hattie Champlin, and had two children, Jewell and Harry; Louis B. Warner, of St. Joseph, Mo., unmarried; Adaline E., of Norwich, unmarried; Frances L., widow of George A. Robinson, now assistant librarian of Otis Library, Norwich, Conn., whose children are: Juliet W. and Frank T.; and Edgar M., the subject of this review. By the first marriage there was a daughter, Juliet, who married Edmond Perkins, now deceased; her own death occurred at Norwich. They had two children, Robert and Donald G.

(VII) Edgar Morris Warner, son of Earl, attended the common schools of the neighborhood in which his youth was passed, and the Bartlett high school, at New London, Conn. He taught school for several years and also sold books for a time, and for some two years clerked in a store at New London. He had a taste for the law and began its study in the office of Judge Hiram Willey, of New London, with whom he remained a couple of years, when for a time he again taught school to aid in the furtherance of his legal studies. Subsequently he entered the office of Hon. George Pratt, a leading lawyer of Norwich, Conn., and with him continued his law studies until June, 1871. He then entered Harvard Law School, from which institution he was graduated in June, 1872, after which he was in Mr. George Pratt's law office in Norwich. He was admitted to the Bar in New London county in September of that year and began the practice of the law at Norwich, remaining there for three years, then removing to Central Village, Plainfield, Conn. In 1885, ten years later, he opened an office in Putnam, his present place of residence, removing thither in 1887. During the decade between 1875 and 1885 it may be remarked that Mr. Warner passed one year, 1881-82, at Littleton, N. H., but the climate not agreeing with him he returned to Connecticut.

Mr. Warner was clerk of the Connecticut General Assembly in 1877-78-79, and clerk of the Senate in 1880. He represented the town of Putnam in the Legislature of 1895, and although serving his first term as a legislator, was a prominent candidate for speaker. However, he withdrew in favor of Samuel Fessenden. He served as chairman of the committee on Incorporations, and his legislative record was one of distinguished value. Early in the session he became prominent by introducing the resolutions, which were promptly passed, protesting against the course of the national administration toward Hawaii. He assisted in securing an appropriation of $50,000 for a State Reformatory, obtained the legal adoption of the State "three-vine flag" upon petition of the Daughters of the American Revolution, and introduced a resolution to buy the "Wolf Den," made famous by Gen. Israel Putnam. He also favored the bill removing the appointment of the prosecuting attorneys from the county commissioner, defended the rights of West Hartford water consumers and initiated the movement to have no flag but the American ever raised on the Capitol or any other public buildings. One of his chief achievements was the passage of the Law and Order League bill. He also conducted the bill giving certain powers to the reorganization committee of the New England Railroad, secured the appropriation for the Day-Kimball Hospital, located at Putnam, and was a valiant supporter of the Good Roads bill and the Anti-Pool bill. He originated the idea of regulating the Italian padrone system. Mr. Warner was frequently called to the chair during the absence of the speaker and in his capacity as presiding officer gave a fitting address of welcome upon the occasion of the visit of Gov. William McKinley, of Ohio. Yet perhaps the greatest service ever rendered to the public by Judge Warner occurred in 1895-96, during the prosecution of the Putnam liquor cases. He then acted as attorney for the Law and Order League of Connecticut, before the lower courts, and assisted States-Attorney Hunter in the Superior court, and though opposed by some of the brightest counsel in the State the prosecution succeeded in obtaining the conviction and imprisonment of the liquor dealers who had been selling without license. The severity of the sentence imposed, and the conviction for perjury of a leading witness, marked a distinct epoch in the trial of liquor cases in the county and has had a most beneficial influence throughout the State.

Mr. Warner took an active part in the incorporation of Putnam as a city, and was a member of the committee which framed a charter for presentation to the Legislature, and was appointed by the Legislature of 1895, to the position of first judge of the city court of Putnam, which position he held from Jan. 1, 1896, until September, 1901, resigning to assume the clerkship of the Supreme and Superior courts, to which office he was appointed June 4, 1901. Judge Warner also served for a number of years on the school board of Putnam, during which time he was acting school visitor. The Judge and his wife are members of the Second Congregational Church at Putnam, and the Judge for several years served as superintendent of the Sunday-school of the church. He is a member of a number of orders and societies, among them the Quinebang; is past master of Moosup Lodge, No. 113, of Plainfield, Conn.; a member of Gen. Israel Putnam Lodge, I. O. O. F., of Putnam; of Putnam Council, Royal Arcanum, and of the Connecticut Sons of the American Revolution.

Judge Warner is frequently called upon to deliver public speeches. In 1898 he delivered an address at the State convention of the Christian Endeavor Society on the subject of prison reform; to this he has given much time and study, and has agitated throughout the State reformatory work and the treatment of drunkenness in such a way as absolutely to prevent the offender from being at large. He was appointed superintendent of prison and jail work, and also by the Connecticut Temperance Union to appear before the Legislature in behalf of the cause of temperance. The Judge's influence for good is felt in all of the social and religious life of his adopted town. It may be added here that he was admitted to practice in the United States Supreme Court of Errors at the national capital on motion of Hon. Jeremiah Halsey, of Norwich, Conn., in January, 1891.

On Aug. 3, 1887, Judge Warner was married to Jane Elizabeth Carpenter, eldest daughter of Judge John A. Carpenter and Marcia (Chandler), both of old and prominent New England families, and the union has been blessed with children as follows, all born in Putnam: Frances Lester, born July 19, 1888; Gertrude Chandler, April 6, 1890; and John A. C., July 12, 1893.

Judge Warner justly takes pride in his ancestry and family connections. John Warner Barber, the Connecticut historian, was a member of this family. On his mother's side the Judge descends from Capt. John Avery of Groton, a patriot of the Revolution.

HON. CALVIN L. HARWOOD, ex-mayor of Norwich, New London county, and senior member of the firm of Harwood, Bishop & Bidwell, who do the largest wholesale grocery business in eastern Connecticut, has been prominent in that section of the State from early manhood, and comes from a family which has been established in New England from its earliest history. The name Harwood was well represented in all the early English settlements in America; several settled in Virginia, beginning as early as 1621; the family, too, was early in Maryland and in New England. One, George Harwood, was the first treasurer of the Massachusetts Company but did not himself come to New England.

The name of Harwood is of Saxon origin, and was anciently spelled Herward, Horwade and Whorwood. According to the Domesday Book, Hereward had lands in the counties of Lincoln and Warwick, previous to the Conquest. He was a son of Leofric, Earl of Mercia, and Lord of Bourne, in Lincolnshire and the marshes adjoining, and was chosen by the prelates and nobility who retired to the Isle of Ely after the Conqueror's invasion, to be the general of their forces. He was the last Earl of Mercia who resided at Bourne, and was buried in the Abbey there.

Sir Robert Herward is mentioned as bearing arms "d'azure a une fesse gabonne de goules et de vert iij hewtes de argent." This family continued in the county of Lincoln, and in the immediate vicinity of Bourne for many centuries. One of the last of this line was George Harwood, a merchant of London, who entered his pedigree in the visitation for Cornhill in 1634. He was a son of William Harwood of Thurlby, near Bourne, in the county of Lincoln, and was a brother of Sir Edward Harwood, Knight, of whom Fuller says—"His birth was gentle and from a root fit to engraft his future education and excellency." In the visitation of London in 1634, this George Harwood is recorded as bearing the same arms as were borne by the above Sir Robert Herward.

Families of this line were settled in the counties of Stafford and Oxford, spelling their names, Harewade, Whorwood and Harwood, and bore for their arms "arg. a chevron between three stags' heads cabashed sa.," and were of Compton, Sandwell and Stourton castle, in the former county, and of Holton in the latter. Of the Staffordshire family was Sir William Whorwood, Knight Attorney General to King Henry VIII. [For continuous and full information see Burke.]

Hon. Calvin L. Harwood is descended from (I) Henry Harwood, who came hither in the company of Gov. Winthrop in 1630, and for a short time was located in Boston, the following year making his home in Charlestown, where he died in 1635.

(II) John Harwood, son of Henry, was born in 1630, and soon after his father's death went to live in that part of Salem, Mass., now known as Peabody. He married, July 11, 1659, and he and his wife, Emma, also of Salem, had four children, John, Jonathan, Jonathan (2) and John (2). Nothing more is known of the father until Nov. 10, 1690, when his estate was inventoried.

(III) Jonathan Harwood, son of John, was born in Salem, June 18, 1666, and married Rebecca Twiss. On May 31, 1722, he sold his house and ten acres to his son Jonathan for £100, and removed to Sutton. On Jan. 28, 1723, he made a deed of gift to the same son, of a "corner-right" of land which his father had formerly owned.

(IV) Jonathan Harwood, great-grandfather of Calvin L., was born Sept. 19, 1748, in Sutton, Mass., and in 1785 removed from Sturbridge, Mass., to West Stafford, Conn., being the founder of the family in this State. He was a farmer by occupation and lived and died in West Stafford, and the house in which he lived is still standing. Jonathan Harwood married Mary Witt, and they had a family of thirteen children, the first seven born in Sturbridge, Mass., and the others in West Stafford, Conn. Of them we have the following record. (1) David, born Aug. 28, 1772, was a shoemaker by trade. He came to Connecticut very likely with his parents, about 1796 married Margaret Morse, and in about 1800 removed to Cazenovia, N. Y., and still later to Plainfield, N. J. He served in the war of 1812, and died in Sackett's Harbor in 1815. (2) Betsy, born Sept. 10, 1774, was married at Stafford to Amos Chaffee, and they went West. (3) Jonathan, born Sept. 4, 1776, died in childhood. (4) Henry, born Aug. 21, 1780, was a shoemaker by trade, married Lita Morse about 1800, and settled in Marcellus, N. Y. (5) Mary, born Sept. 1, 1781, was married April 1, 1804, in Stafford, to Francis Brown, and they settled in East Long Meadow, Mass., where their posterity is now to be found. (6) Asa, born March 11, 1783, was a shoemaker. On Jan. 10, 1805, he married Amanda Parsons. (7) Crispus, born Dec. 7, 1784, was a shoemaker, went West, settling in what was called the "Holland Purchase," and died about 1814. In 1808 at Stafford, he married Salina Morse. (8) Keziah, born Sept. 4, 1786, was married in West Stafford, Oct. 6, 1814, to Emory Chaffee, of Hampden, Mass. (9) Orrin, born Aug. 8, 1788, is mentioned below. (10) Samuel, born Nov. 20, 1791, married Miss Love Dimock. (11) Lura, born July 28, 1793, was married Dec. 6, 1821, to Emory Chaffee. (12) Margery, born Aug. 12, 1795, died in childhood. (13) Ebenezer, born June 7, 1797, was married about 1818 to Minerva Dimock; their daughter Adeline married Col. Thomas F. Burpee, and was the mother of Judge Lucien F. Burpee, of Waterbury, Conn. The father of this family was a member of the Methodist Church, and took a deep interest in religion and church work.

(V) Orrin Harwood, grandfather of Calvin L., was born Aug. 8, 1788, in West Stafford, and, though never robust, he almost reached the century mark. By trade he was a shoemaker, and he also carried on farming, but his poor health kept him back from attaining anything more than moderate success. When he was fifty years old a physician he called in told him that his end was not far off. Like his father he was a devout Methodist and a zealous church worker, was one of the founders of the church in Stafford, and was widely known in that connection, his house being the stopping place of the circuit riders, who spent only a short time in each location. Therefore the success of the work in a new neighborhood depended largely upon the efficiency of the class leader, who, to a great extent, did a pastor's work. Orrin Harwood was a class leader of great character and power, and as such his home was the center of Methodist influence in West Stafford, where his descendants have continued to be identified with the interests of that church to the present time. In 1811 Orrin Harwood married Charlotte Spellman, who was the grandmother of Calvin L. For his second wife he married, on Dec. 8, 1852, Mrs. Polly B. Bartlett, whom he survived for many years.

(VI) Francis Asbury Harwood, son of Orrin and Charlotte, was born May 12, 1817, in Ludlow, Mass., and died Jan. 24, 1884, in Stafford Springs, Conn. On April 7, 1841, he married Clarissa Luther, who was born Sept. 9, 1821, daughter of Calvin and Polly Belinda (Hutchinson) Luther, and died Dec. 13, 1898, in Stafford Springs. Two children blessed this union: Calvin L. and Charles Francis. The last named, born June 25, 1849, in West Stafford, is now treasurer of the Stafford Savings Bank, and a prominent citizen of that town. He married Ella L. Pember, of Stafford, and they have one daughter, Grace Emma.

For a number of years Francis A. Harwood was engaged in farming in West Stafford, but in 1842 he became a resident of Stafford Springs, and soon after began his mercantile career. At first he found but one competitor, L. W. Crane, who owned and conducted a store which was originally established by the Granite Mill Company, and stood near the site of the present "Central House." Mr. Har-wood's place of business was at the upper end of Main street, and both firms attracted a large trade. During the war of the Rebellion Mr. Harwood held the very onerous and responsible position of first selectman of the town, and upon him devolved largely the duty of providing for the extraordinary requirements of the time, in so far as they affected Stafford. It required a man of most excellent judgment and signal ability to carry the necessary measures through successfully to the satisfaction of everyone. In his political belief, like his father, he adhered to the principles of the Republican party. Several years prior to his death he sold his mercantile business, and lived retired. His devotion, not only to his mercantile interests, but to all lines of activity which promised progress and benefit to his town, was well known, and he enjoyed the confidence and esteem of his fellow citizens to a high degree. The Methodist Church was very dear to him, and he was an active worker in the same, and was one of its trustees at the time of his death.

(VII) Calvin L. Harwood was born in Stafford, June 24, 1844, and after attaining his primary education in the public schools of his native town, attended the academies at East Greenwich, R. I., and Wilbraham, Mass. At the age of twenty-four he came to Norwich, and after serving as bookkeeper for the wholesale boot and shoe house of Gurdon A. Jones, Jr., for two years, engaged in the wholesale grocery business for himself as a member of the firm of Lippett & Harwood. After ten years of successful business this firm was dissolved, and was immediately succeeded by that of Harwood & Co. Twelve years later, Jan. 1, 1893, the firm was again changed, taking the present style of Harwood, Bishop and Bidwell. This house is recognized as the largest wholesale grocery firm in eastern Connecticut, doing a prosperous business in supplying the trade in that section of the State. They occupy the whole building of three floors and a basement at No. 58 Water street. Mr. Harwood has from the outset demonstrated his eminent fitness for a business career, and his abundant success is the most practical evidence of his efficiency and ability. His standing has been won by the fairest methods, and his position is therefore unquestioned, for the greater part of his active life has been passed in the community in which he still makes his home.

Mr. Harwood is a staunch Republican, and in 1891 he was elected alderman; during his term he served as chairman of the committee on Public Grounds. In 1893 he was elected mayor of the city, served two terms—four years—overcoming a Democratic majority and receiving a gratifying plurality. He gave the city a good, business-like administration, in keeping with his personal characteristics and his success in his own affairs, and increasing the esteem in which his fellow citizens held him. Mr. Harwood is a thirty-second degree Mason, and is a member of Sphinx Temple, Mystic Shrine, at Hartford. He is also a member of the A. O. U. W., and belongs to the Arcanum Club.

On Sept. 26, 1865, Mr. Harwood married Nellie A. White, of Hinsdale, N. Y., daughter of John C. and Sarah B. (Potter) White, the former a native of Northfield, Mass. This union has been blessed with the following children: Clara E., born March 16, 1870, who married G. B. Dolbeare, a bookkeeper in the employ of the Norwich Savings Society, and has one child, Harwood Burrows, born May 11, 1899; Mary E., born May 29, 1877, who died at the age of fourteen months; Francis C. and Alice W., twins, born Aug. 27, 1879, of whom the former, a bookkeeper in the employ of the firm with which his father is connected, married Mary I. Griswold, of Norwich, and has one child, Percival Francis, born March 21, 1902; while the latter, Alice W., died at the age of fourteen months.

JOHN KINGSBURY UTLEY (deceased) was one of the most highly respected citizens of Chaplin, Windham county, where he spent his honorable life from his birth until his untimely death, and left behind him many friends and relatives to mourn his loss.

Thomas Utley, grandfather of John K., born April 20, 1754, was a farmer of Hampton, Conn., residing in the upper part of the town, where he farmed very successfully. He died July 28, 1822. On May 25, 1780, he was married to Abigail Hodgkins, of Hampton, who was born June 21, 1758, and died Aug. 2, 1844. Their family was as follows: James, the father of John Kingsbury, born Sept. 2, 1781; Thomas, Jr., born July 30, 1783, a farmer, who married (first) Dec. 5, 1815, Lydia Parish, and (second) April 5, 1826, Mary, a sister of his first wife, and who resided on the homestead in Hampton, where he died Aug. 26, 1826; Asenith, born July 2, 1785, deceased Dec. 12, 1813, who married, April 18, 1811, Isaac Bennett, a farmer who moved to New York State, married a second time, and there died; Sarah, born Feb. 27, 1787, who died April 30, 1820; Mary, born Jan. 30, 1789, who married April 2, 1807, Beriah Davidson, a blacksmith, residing in Brooklyn, Conn., and who died Jan. 31, 1879.

James Utley was born in Hampton, Conn., and was brought up to farm work, attending only the common district schools. When a young man he taught school in several towns, among which was a school in Ashford, Conn., and it was while teaching there that he met the lady who later became his wife. After his marriage he remained upon the home farm for several years, and then removed to what is now Chaplin, and purchased the "Elisha Martin" farm, and in 1826 erected the house which is still standing, owned by W. H. Phillips, of Chaplin. By calling he was a farmer and pursued his occupation actively and successfully until a few years previous to his death, when he was succeeded by his son, James R. Utley. On March 2, 1862, after an unusually long life, he died of cancer, leaving his family in comfortable circumstances. Early in life he was a Whig, but later became a Republican and held many of the town offices, and during the time he was selectman, the town's affairs were mostly ably managed and placed upon a solid basis. Mr. Utley was a very regular attendant of the Chaplin Congregational Church, of which he was a member and very liberal supporter, as were also his family.

In April, 1808, James Utley married Phoebe Clark, who was born in Ashford, Conn., a daughter of John and Phoebe (Russell) Clark; she died Oct. 1, 1852, aged sixty-eight years and six months. They were the parents of nine children. Lucius C., born April 20, 1809, married Sarah Marcy, was a farmer and lived upon the homestead in Hampton for many years, but later came to Chaplin and died at the home of his sister, Mrs. Jane M. Storrs, Sept. 16, 1893. Jaames Russell, born April 3, 1811, married (first) Elmira Holt, and (second) Mary Coleman, was a farmer and resided in Chaplin for many years, but later removed to Willimantic, where he lived retired and died Aug. 9, 1896; during his residence in Chaplin he was very active and prominent in town affairs, and held many offices of trust. Asenith, born July 1, 1813, married Daniel Griggs, who was a farmer and resided in Chaplin and Ashford; she died Aug. 30, 1842. John Kingsbury, our subject, was born Sept. 13, 1815. Sarah Ann, born June 26, 1817, married Enoch Pond, Jr., a cabinet-maker, who resided in Brooklyn, Conn., where they both died, her demise occurring Feb. 11, 1903. William, born March 19, 1819, married Christiana Foster, was a farmer and lived in Hampton, where he died Sept. 9, 1894. Mary Eliza, born March 1, 1823, died at the age of nineteen. Jane Maria, born Dec. 25, 1826, is mentioned below. Thomas, born in March, 1829, was killed at the age of three years by a cart body falling upon him.

MRS. JANE MARIA STORRS, of the above mentioned family, was married May 2, 1849, to Henry C. Storrs, who was born in August, 1825, a native of Chaplin, and a son of Frederick and Eliza (Chesebrough) Storrs. Henry C. Storrs as a young man learned the trade of bootmaker, and followed that occupation until his death, which occurred in Chaplin July 5, 1850, in his twenty-fifth year. Mr. Storrs was a member of the Congregational Church. To himself and wife one child was born, Henry Chesebrough, born Jan. 17, 1851, who attended the common schools of Chaplin and Brooklyn, Conn. When a boy of seventeen he went to Hartford and entered the employ of Pratt & Whitney, to learn the trade of machinist, which he followed until a few years ago, when he was placed in charge of the electrical department of that large factory. He now resides at No. 101 Oak street, Hartford. Henry Chesebrough Storrs married Harriet Russell, of Hartford, Dec. 25, 1877, and two children have been born of this marriage: Harry Utley, a graduate of Morse Business College and now a bookkeeper at the Pratt & Cady Co.; Howard Russell, a graduate of Huntsinger's Business College, and now a bookkeeper for a large business house. Mrs. Jane M. Storrs died in Chaplin, Dec. 19, 1902, the last but one of a large family.

John Kingsbury Utley was born in Chaplin on the home farm, and attended only the common schools of his native town. Before he had attained his majority, he began to learn the trade of boot-maker in Chaplin, and followed that trade the greater part of his life, always making his home in that town. For many years he was in company with Ephraim Day, engaged in bootmaking, but when machine made goods were placed on the market, the partnership was dissolved, and Mr. Utley retired from active business life about a dozen years prior to his death, although he devoted his attention to conducting a small farm, always having a deep interest in agricultural pursuits. His death occurred Sept. 1, 1899, and he is buried at Chaplin. During his long life he was a hard working man, and by industry, frugality and thrift, he amassed a considerable fortune. In politics he was a staunch Republican, and represented Chaplin in the State Legislature in 1863 and also held many of the town offices. While serving on the board of selectmen, his administration was marked by the careful and economical way in which the affairs of the town were managed. Early in life he joined the Congregational Church, of which he continued a consistent member; he served on the church committee for many years, and also brought into play his economical ideas with regard to its conduct. For many years he served voluntarily as janitor, in order to save the church the expense of hiring one. Being a man of the highest integrity and honor, when he felt he was in the right nothing could ever move him from his purpose, and he gained the highest respect of all who knew him.

In May, 1843, he was married to Caroline Burnham, of Chaplin, who died Dec. 9, 1879, aged fifty-seven years. One child was born of this marriage, but it died in infancy. The later years of his life he spent with his beloved sister, Mrs. Jane M. Storrs, and died at her home.

HON. JULIUS CONVERSE. The Converse family of the town of Stafford, Tolland county, in which town several generations have figured conspicuously from the very dawn of its settlement in the early part of the eighteenth century, is one of the oldest of New England families, and one of prominence. For the past one hundred years such men as Asa, Solvin, Capt. Solva, Capt. Parley, Eliab A., and Hon. Julius and others of the name, have been among the foremost citizens of Stafford, largely instrumental in founding, fostering and developing her great industries and building up her trade centers.

Away back in the misty past of bygone centuries, the titled family of De Coigniries held a distinguished place among the Norman nobles of that day, and were in possession of large estates around the Chateau of Coignir. Roger de Coigniries, a member of this family, who was born in Waverly, France, in 1010, accompanied William the Conqueror in his invasion of England in 1066, and was one of his trusted and able chieftains, and so distinguished himself at the battle of Hastings that his name was entered upon the roll of Battle Abbey.

After the Conquest, the family name was changed to Coniers or Conyers, and tracing the line on down to the present day, we find: Roger de Coniers, son of Roger; Roger (3), son of Roger (2), born in 1134, and died in 1174; Galfrid, son of Roger (3); John Conyers, son of Galfrid Conyers; Sir Humphrey, son of John; Sir John, son of Sir Humphrey; Roger, son of Sir John; Sir John, son of Roger; Robert, son of Sir John; John, son of Robert; Sir Christopher, son of John; Sir John, son of Sir Christopher; Sir John, son of Sir John; Sir Reginal, son of Sir John; Richard, son of Reginal; Christopher, son of Richard; Deacon Edward, son of Christopher, born in England in 1590, came to Woburn in 1630, where he died in 1663; Sergeant Samuel, son of Deacon Edward Conyers, was born in Woburn, Mass., in 1637, and died in 1669; Samuel, son of Sergeant Samuel, was born in Woburn, Mass., in 1662, and later settled in Thompson, Conn., where he died in 1732; Henry Converse, son of Samuel, was born in Woburn, Mass., in 1696, settled in Thompson, Conn., and died in 1784; Asa, son of Henry, was born in Thompson, Conn., in 1730, and came to Stafford; Solvin, son of Asa; Solva, son of Solvin; and Julius, son of Solva.

Edward Converse, given in the ancestral line as Deacon Edward, was the first American ancestor of the Stafford branch of the Converse family, the name changing from Conyers to Converse, and later to Converse, in this county. This Edward was born in 1590, and in 1630 he came with Winthrop to America, and with him settled in Charlestown, near Boston, where he was a man of considerable prominence, and was one of the founders of the first church, now known as the First Church of Boston, and also as the First Church of Charlestown. The town of Woburn, Mass., was incorporated in 1642, and he was one of the first settlers and became one of the founders of the first church in that town. With him from his English home, came his wife Sarah, after whose death he married Joanna Sprague, and died at Woburn, in 1663. His children were: Josiah, James, Samuel and Mary, from some of whom descended the Thompson, Conn., Converses. (The History of Windham County says that Samuel Converse, son of Samuel and Judith (Carter) Converse, and a grandson of Edward, the emigrant, settled in 1710, in Thompson Parish, town of Killingly, in which he was among the very first settlers). From this town came Asa Converse, the son of Henry, the head of the Converse family under consideration, in the town of Stafford.

Asa Converse, son of Henry Converse, of Thompson, Conn., married, and his children were: Solvin, James, Darius, Asa, Alpheus and Sybil.

Capt. Solvin Converse, son of Asa, was born in 1758, in Stafford, and in 1780 was married to Sarah, daughter of Josiah Holmes and granddaughter of Deacon David Holmes, who was a son of John Holmes, one of the first settlers of Woodstock, Conn. Deacon David Holmes was the great-grandfather of the famous Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes. The children born to Capt. Solvin and Sarah (Holmes) Converse were: Josiah; Sally, who married Olney Brown, of Union; Lucy, who married David Brown, of Union; Solva, who married Esther Blodgett; Parley, who married Sally Alden; Washington, who died Dec. 29, 1814, at the age of thirteen years; John, who married Wealthy Dimock and died July 5, 1845, at the age of thirty-one years; George, whose wife's Christian name was Mary; and Freeman, who married Emily Miller. Two of this family, Capt. Solva and Capt. Parley, became especially conspicuous characters in Stafford. Capt. Solvin died in Stafford May 13, 1813, at the age of fifty-five years, and his widow survived until July 5, 1845, when she had reached her eighty-fifth year.

Capt. Solva Converse, son of Capt. Solvin, was born on April 1, 1790, in Stafford, and received only limited educational advantages. Reared on a farm, he followed agricultural life only for a period as he saw a larger field of operation. In his young days there were no railroads, and freight of all kinds was brought to and from Hartford or other points, by teams, and in this business, in connection with his brother Parley, he engaged largely. For thirty or more years he was also extensively interested in the lumber business, and conducted a most successful meat business also, supplying the whole surrounding country with fresh meats.

Mr. Converse was one of the founders, and one of the largest holders of stock in, the Mineral Springs Manufacturing Company's first woolen mill, erected in the village of Stafford Springs, in 1839, and he became the company's first agent, a position he held for some time, later succeeding to the presidency of the company, holding that position for some years, and under his guidance a great and prosperous business was developed. Beginning life with very little, Mr. Converse through his great industry and good management, coupled with rare judgment and fine ability, forged his way to position and wealth, leaving at his death a good name, and probably the largest estate ever accumulated in this town. Mr. Converse possessed good sense, was far-seeing in business matters, and his counsel was often sought and his advice followed, as it was considered safe. In public matters in his town, he frequently served as selectman, and about 1840 he represented the town in the State Legislature. Always public-spirited, he did much for the town, and a large portion of the borough of Stafford Springs stands today as monuments to the name of Converse—to the names of Solva, Parley and Julius Converse, whose memory will long be cherished by those of the borough who are on the stage of action today, and by those who follow after them.

Capt. Converse, a title also acquired by his father, and two of his sons, from their service as commanders of companies in the old militia, was a member and a liberal supporter of the Methodist Church of Stafford Springs, and he was among the first to contribute to the building of the first edifice of that denomination in 1832, and again to the erection of the building in 1866, which replaced the former one.

In 1812 Capt. Solva Converse was married to Esther Blodgett, who was born Oct. 12, 1790, and died July 5, 1880. She was a daughter of Deacon Alden Blodgett, and a granddaughter of Joshua Blodgett, said to be the first white child born in Stafford, whose father and his brother were among the first settlers of the town, coming from Woburn, Mass. To this marriage were born: Adeline, who died in childhood; Almada, who married L. H. Whiton; Alden S., who died in young manhood; Orrin; Josiah; Julius, who married Mira C. Lord; Hannah B., who married M. H. Washburn; and Francis E., Henry S., Washington and Welcome, all died in infancy. Capt. Solva Converse, the father of these children, died Nov. 22, 1877, and the mother passed away in 1880.

Capt. Parley Converse, son of Capt. Solvin, and brother to Capt. Solva, was born May 6, 1792, in Stafford, and was reared among agricultural pursuits, receiving only such education as the neighborhood common schools afforded, and as was customary to the general farmers' sons. Like his brother, he was ambitious and saw a wider field of operation, and one that seemed more profitable than the farm, so he joined Capt. Solva in the business of teaming, and in the other enterprises, as previously noted, and he, too, was one of the founders and promoters of the Mineral Springs Manufacturing Company, soon after coming into possession of a large amount of the company's stock. It was but a short time after the company's organization, until the entire property passed into the hands of these two Converse brothers. In 1854 Capt. Parley sold his interest to his brother, and in association with his son-in-law, Benjamin Wells Patten, built what was known as the Converseville mill, in Stafford Springs, and in it was actively interested the remainder of his life.

Capt. Parley Converse was also a stockholder in various other enterprises, and was ever keenly alive to the interests of his native town, and did much to further its advancement. Public-spirited and enterprising, he left many monuments to his memory, not only in Stafford Springs, but at other points in the town. Like his brother, he began life poor, but with a good constitution, and an indomitable will power and energy that overcame all obstacles, rose to wealth and to the first rank of citizenship, and became a keen, sagacious and far-seeing business man. Industry was a watchword with him as a boy and man, and he worked hard and long even after he had progressed far beyond any necessity for it. Probably no larger estates were ever accumulated in the town than those left by Capt. Solva and Capt. Parley Converse. Each was a strictly self-made man. Parley was averse to holding public office, yet often served his town in the capacity of selectman, represented it in the General Assembly, and also his district in the State Senate. In any and every capacity he was faithful to duty, and his acts were characteristic of the man, performed with wisdom, judgment, and ability. In religious belief, he was a Methodist, ever steadfast and faithful, and he gave liberally to the Church and to all good causes. In 1866, he was made president of the Stafford National Bank, and he remained as such until the time of his death, in 1869. For many years he was president of the Stafford Springs Savings Bank, organized in 1855, and served as its first official in that position.

On Oct. 3, 1816, Capt. Parley Converse was married to Sally Alden, and to them were born these children: Judith B., deceased, married Henry Gay; Orrin is mentioned elsewhere; Emeline married Henry Thrall, and died in 1860; Washington died in 1830; Laura A. married Benjamin Wells; Phronema married Dwight Clark, now deceased; Louisa married Robbins Patten; Amanda died in 1860; Minerva married Henry Thrall; and Jennett D. died in 1834. Capt. Parley Converse died on Nov. 25, 1869.

Hon. Julius Converse, son of Capt. Solva Converse, was born March 1, 1827, in Stafford, in which town he was reared, and in its local schools received his elementary education, attending later the Ellington high school, and a private school in Brimfield, Mass. After his schooldays were over, he became identified with the Mineral Springs Manufacturing Company, in Stafford, entering the manufacturing department, and there obtained a practical knowledge of that branch of the business. Later he was taken into the office, where he soon became acquainted with the accounts and the financial affairs of the company. As the years passed, young Converse rose step by step, through his force and usefulness, until he became the company's treasurer, and in 1866 its agent also. Inheriting many of the characteristics of his father, and through his own good judgment, he was successful in managing the business and it continued to grow to large proportions with increasing success. Mr. Converse became a large stockholder, and finally, in 1885, the sole proprietor of the concern, continuing as the same until the time of his death, June 7, 1892. In other corporations he was largely interested also, among these being the woolen mills of Ellis & Converse, at Orcuttville, while in a number he was the controlling spirit.

Mr. Converse was one of the incorporators of the Savings Bank of Stafford Springs, and in 1872 became its first president, a position he held until 1874, in which year he succeeded Moses B. Harvey as president of the Stafford National Bank, serving until 1878, for many years having been a director in these banks. Mr. Converse was most active all his life, in advancing the town's interests, aiding all good measures, and he was zealous in his efforts in the upbuilding and beautifying of the borough of Stafford Springs.

In 1886 Mr. Converse purchased the Mineral Springs and the hotel property, which today is one of the attractive features of the borough, the hotel being modern, commodious and beautiful, and the pride of the town. To all worthy benevolences he had given freely of his wealth, his charities were large, and at the time of his death he had become one of the most popular citizens of this section of the country. An earnest and active Republican, Mr. Converse was a number of times elected by his fellow-citizens to fill public offices where his ability was always recognized, and his efficiency commended. In 1865-66, he represented the town of Stafford in the State Legislature; in 1872, he was a Presidential elector on the Republican National ticket, and cast his vote for Grant and Wilson. In 1877, he was elected from his district to the State Senate, and in that body served on the committee on Finance. In 1888, Mr. Converse was chosen a delegate to the Republican National Convention, at Chicago. Upon the incorporation of Stafford Springs as a borough, by the General Assembly, in May, 1873, in which Mr. Converse took a leading part, he was made the first warden of the borough. Although a very busy man, with many absorbing problems always demanding his attention, he was ever ready to assist in his town's welfare, although often, by doing so, he interfered with his personal interests. For a number of years Mr. Converse was also a director in the Hartford Life and Annuity Insurance Company.

On June 11, 1854, Julius Converse married Miss Mira Clark Lord, who was born April 13, 1835, a daughter of John Knight and Sally (Spellman) Lord, of Stafford, and to them were born eight children: Lilla Adelaide, born Dec. 15, 1856, married Oct. 13, 1880, William Lee, superintendent of a mill near Auburn, N. Y., and their children are, Eugenia Converse (born on Dec. 23, 1882, a student in the Poughkeepsie Female Preparatory school), Ralph William (born July 8, 1885), James Howard (born May 15, 1887), Arthur Julius (born July 3, 1890), Marian Susan (born Jan. 10, 1892), Jesse Edward (born Dec. 26, 1893) and Hattie Mira (born Sept. 30, 1895); Freeman, born Sept. 2, 1858, died Nov. 19, 1858; Byron Lord, born Feb. 23, 1860, died Oct. 12, 1863; Eugenia Hovey, born an. 2, 1861, married Alva Mathews, who is engaged in the real estate business in Chicago, and they have one child, Louise Mathews; Julius Carl, sketch elsewhere; Louis Seymour, born June 4, 1868, was formerly connected with his father's business, but now resides in Salem, Ohio, and is engaged in the mercantile business, as the head of the Converse Dry Goods Co. (he married Jean Russell, of Stafford, and has three children, Margaret R., Dorothy R. and Julius); Willie Worth, born June 1, 1870, died in September of the same year; and Eddie Gibbs, born Feb. 7, 1873, died April 20, 1873.

It may be stated that as a public-spirited man, Julius Converse had no superior and few equals. In all of the affairs of the town he was active and took a prominent position in every project for the betterment of either town or county. No other citizen of Stafford has contributed so much of influence, time and means to improve and beautify this locality. The spacious grounds leading to his late residence, "Woodlawn," which is one of the most beautiful and picturesque places in Connecticut, have been transformed from an unsightly alder swamp, and the elevated site of the residence, itself, was formerly covered with a heavy growth of wood. Woodlawn Terrace, an attractive street, was laid out and largely built by Mr. Converse.

The ecclesiastical societies, especially the Methodist, owe much to Mr. Converse's unbounded liberality. His death removed from the community one whose life had been spent, to a great extent, in helping others. To him selfishness was unknown; he delighted in benefactions, and many of those who were in the habit of benefiting by his quiet and unostentatious charity, have missed the generous hand and the friendly spirit. Hon. Julius Converse, not only so in name but in very truth honorable, passed to the Great Beyond June 7, 1892, survived by his bereaved widow and four children, who lost a loving husband and devoted father, a wise friend and counselor, and a worthy example.

HON. JAMES B. TATEM, the distinguished woodwork manufacturer of Putnam, who has risen to his present enviable position entirely through his own efforts, comes of notable and successful ancestors. His paternal grandfather, a native of Salem, Mass., was a noted shipbuilder and rigging manufacturer of that town. His wife was an eyewitness of thrilling historical scenes; so closely was she brought into contact with the depredations of English soldiers of the war of 1812 that she considered it necessary to bury her silverware in the back yard. She was a witness at the Crowninshield and White murder case (concerning which Daniel Webster made his famous plea), being the first woman in the house after the atrocious deed was committed. A woman of remarkable constitution, she lived to be nearly one hundred years old.

Rev. Henry Tatem, the father of James B., was born in Salem, Mass., Jan. 14, 1793, was a well-known Universalist minister and a prominent Abolitionist lecturer. As a boy he had not the best opportunities for education, but being naturally studious he improved every chance, and in time became very well informed and entered the ministry. On Aug. 18, 1816, he married Abbie Ann King, who was born in Evanston, R. I., Nov. 15, 1796, daughter of Joseph and Alice C. King, of old Rhode Island families. Mrs. Tatem died April 1, 1856, in Southbridge, Mass. By this union there were the following named children: Alice Ann, Sarah W., Mary King, Eliza Potter, Almira Waterman, Abby Frances, John Henry, James B. and Harriet B. Of these seven are now living, one having died in youth. The youngest of the other eight was over sixty years old when the eldest died.

After entering the ministry Mr. Tatem preached at Providence, R. I., and other places in the vicinity, at Charlton, Spencer, and Southbridge, Mass., and later made a tour through Ohio. Deeply religious and gifted with great oratorical powers, he was exceedingly popular. Whenever he preached at Cranston, R. I., Brown University students attended his services, and for dedicatory sermons he was greatly in demand. In belief he was even more liberal than the majority of preachers of the present day. During the Abolition movement he delivered a great many anti-slavery lectures. So forcible and thrilling were his arguments that, in the face of the great opposition with which he had to contend, he was often obliged to drive home from his lectures in a closed carriage. Near the close of his life he retired to a farm which he purchased in Ashford, Conn., and there after one year's residence he died, Aug. 31, 1852, at the age of fifty-nine years. Personally a fearless, outspoken man, Mr. Tatem possessed the quiet dignity of Wendell Phillips. Highly respected, he numbered among his warmest friends some of the greatest anti-slavery leaders, among them James G. Birney, the first Abolitionist candidate for President. After this famous man Mr. Tatem named the son who is mentioned below.

Alice C. (Matthewson) King, mother of Mrs. Henry Tatem, was a daughter of Nicholas Matthewson, who served as a Revolutionary soldier from the time of the Lexington alarm continuously until the close of the struggle. In recognition of these services his widow, Abigail, received a pension. His home was at Cranston, R. I. His wife was a daughter of Silas Cooke, whose wife was a daughter of Joseph Crawford, an eminent merchant of Providence, for whom a street in Providence is named. Joseph Crawford's wife was a daughter of Gabriel Bernon, by his second wife. Bernon was a Frenchman of high station in Rochelle, a zealous Protestant, who fled to this country at the time of the revocation of the Edict of Nantes. He founded the first three Episcopal Churches in Rhode Island, and is buried beneath St. John's Church, in Providence, where a tablet is placed in his memory. From Bernon the genealogy is traced back to the year 1300. The family in La Rochelle claim descent from the Dukes of Burgundy, thus connecting with the royal line of France.

James Birney Tatem, born April 9, 1836, in Phoenix, R. I., when six years of age moved with his parents to Charlton, Mass., and later to Brookfield in that State. In these places, and in Southbridge, Mass., he gained a thorough education, attending select as well as common schools. Though very young while at Phoenix, he remembers that school distinctly, it being impressed upon his mind by a vaccination visit from the local doctor. When he was sixteen years old his father died, and two years later the son was obliged to leave school. He learned shoemaking, a trade then much in vogue among farming people, and worked at this craft, also carrying on the Ashford homestead, until 1850, when he moved to Woodstock, Conn., and there engaged in the same occupations for a while. On Oct. 18, 1858, he married Mary Catherine Allen, daughter of Silas P. and Mary (Leonard) Allen, of Woodstock. After her death, which occurred in Woodstock, Jan. 13, 1868, Mr. Tatem married for his second wife, Jan. 1, 1873, Angie Sarah Kenyon, daughter of Eli and Sarah (Armitage) Kenyon, of Woodstock. By the first marriage there were two children. (1) John Melvin, the elder, born Jan. 17, 1860, in Woodstock, is a business man of Eastford, Conn., where he is now judge of probate. He married Minnie, daughter of Charles Deane, of an old Woodstock family. (2) Henry Allen, of the firm of J. B. Tatem & Sons, is mentioned below. By the second marriage there were also two children. (1) Mary Eden, who is a member of the faculty of the Emerson College of Oratory, Boston, graduated with honors from that institution, and later took a post-graduate course, when she became class orator. (2) James B., Jr., is associated with his father in business.

At the age of thirty Mr. Tatem started a new and profitable line of business, handle making. So successful was he that two years later, in 1868, he rented a factory and began woodturning, producing in addition to handles such articles as carriage poles and whipple-trees. From that time his advancement was rapid. He found ready sale for his articles, and was soon enabled to erect a factory of his own, located at Woodstock Valley. Each year brought larger demands for goods, and in 1884 he admitted his son, John Melvin, as partner, adopting the firm name of J. B. Tatem & Son. In 1887 the building burned, but, undismayed, they immediately purchased the Eastford mill, where they continued their business. So greatly in demand were their goods that, in 1897, they decided to conduct two separate establishments. The son purchased his father's share of the Eastford mill and began running it by himself. Mr. Tatem rented the West Thompson mill, admitted his sons, Henry A. and James B., Jr., as partners, and continued a similar business under the firm name of J. B. Tatem & Sons. They have all the latest machinery, and manufacture leather-capped chisel handles of every description, and other useful articles. Employing fifteen men, they are enabled to do a good business and find a large and increasing sale for their goods throughout the West and South. Their office is now, and has been since 1886, in Putnam, where Mr. Tatem moved in the year last named, and where he now owns a handsome residence. In addition to his regular business, Mr. Tatem has invested largely in real estate, and has purchased stock in many paying concerns in Putnam, materially increasing his income. Henry A. Tatem continued with this branch until 1902, when he established a similar business at Winston, N. C., in the conduct of which he is at present engaged.

A Republican, Mr. Tatem has been exceedingly prominent in politics. While living at Woodstock he filled many town offices and was deputy sheriff for ten years. During this time he had dealing with many desperate criminals, among them a North Ashford horse thief, the capture of whom redounded to Mr. Tatem's lasting credit. He followed the criminal through Massachusetts and New York to Buffalo, thence through the oil regions of Pennsylvania, a distance of nineteen hundred miles, and finally captured him and his partner with this horse, in the face of loaded revolvers, in a timberland, at eleven o'clock at night. The thief had traveled over eight hundred and fifty miles. He was brought to trial, and sentenced to five years in State's prison. For his capture Mr. Tatem received $250 from the State Legislature and several other large rewards. So notorious was the deed that a judge of the Supreme court wrote to a Woodstock man desiring specific information concerning the deputy, saying he was the most remarkable officer who had ever served in that section. Mr. Tatem still has this letter in his possession. In 1878 he represented his town in the State Legislature, serving on the Judiciary committee, and in 1885 and 1886 he served the sixteenth district in the State Senate. Recognized as a man of marked executive ability, he was, while a member of that body, appointed chairman of the committees on Cities and Boroughs, and on Forfeited Rights. In May, 1886, the office of State dairy commissioner was created, and to this place Gov. Henry B. Harrison appointed Mr. Tatem. Two years later he received a second appointment to the same office, through Gov. Phineas Lounsbury, serving altogether four years. Others have since filled the position, but Mr. Tatem is the only one who has made it pay. By a hard fight he secured the passage of the oleomargarine law, which he vigorously enforced. He brought to trial over one hundred cases of selling oleomargarine unlawfully, each of which he won. He also enforced the law concerning adulterated vinegar. The fines which he collected more than paid the expenses of his office. Since moving o Putnam, Mr. Tatem has withdrawn from politics, and in 1901 refused the nomination for mayor. He has served as president of the Putnam Light & Power Co. for a number of years, was first president of the Fair grounds and superintended the construction of the buildings; and he is now director and vice-president of the Putnam Water Company. He was chairman of the Building committee for the Israel Putnam school, which is a magnificent structure, costing about $40,000. Mr. Tatem is a natural money-maker; though starting in life as a poor boy, he has amassed considerable wealth; and this without the slightest assistance from others, not having had, as he vigorously asserts, a single dollar given him in the world. He is a regular attendant and liberal supporter of the Congregational Church, and fraternally affiliates with the Royal Arcanum of Putnam.

HENRY ALLEN TATEM, junior member of the manufacturing firm of J. B. Tatem & Sons, was born in the town of West Woodstock, Windham county, April 24, 1864, son of James B. and Mary C. (Allen) Tatem. He received his preparatory education in the public schools of Woodstock and in the Academy, and taught school in his native county for two seasons, in Pomfret and Eastford. At the age of eighteen years he went to Southbridge, Mass., and entered the Southbridge Optical Works, spending three years in that employ. Returning to Connecticut, he was engaged for a short time as bookkeeper at Putnam, and then took up the study of civil engineering under Wheeler & Parks, of Boston. Thence he went to New Hampshire, where he was connected with the Boston and Maine Railway Company, for a short time, after which he went to Iowa, locating at Creston. There he became an engineer on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy road, with which he remained eight years. At the end of that period he came back East and took up his residence in New Haven, where he obtained a position on the Northampton division of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, continuing with the same until his return to West Thompson in 1898. There he was connected with the business established by his father, and successfully conducted the branch at West Thompson until 1902. He is now operating a handle mill at Winston, N. C. Mr. Tatem has proved himself to be a worthy son of his father in that he has displayed business ability of a high order in this responsible connection, the business of the West Thompson mill under his management showing no shrinkage. His genial manners and pleasant address have won him many friends, and his uprightness and genuine worth as a man have gained for him the good-will and esteem of his business associates everywhere. Mr. Tatem joined Montgomery Lodge, No. 270, A. F. & A. M., at Villisca, Iowa; Montgomery Chapter, No. 57, R. A. M., of Red Oak, Iowa; and Bruce Commandery, No. 34, K. T., of Red Oak.

In 1889 Mr. Tatem was married at Villisca,

Iowa, to Bertha L. Moore, who was born in Sidney, Iowa, daughter of Elwood and Mary (Richards) Moore. Two children have blessed this union: Melvin Elwood, born Aug. 9, 1890, in Red Oak, Iowa; and Donald Moore, born March 20, 1899, in Eastford, Conn. Mrs. Tatem is a lady of many sterling and pleasing qualities, a devoted wife and mother. Both are members of the Presbyterian Church and Mr. Tatem is very liberal in religious matters; he considers the Golden Rule a sufficient guide. Politically he is a Republican.

GALLUP. One of the oldest and most numerous of the distinguished families of New England bears the name of Gallup. John Gallup, ancestor of the greater number of the families of the name in America, came hither from the parish of Mosterne, Dorsetshire, England, in 1630. He was a son of John Gallup, who married into a family by the name of Crabbe, and John was a son of Thomas and Agnes (Watkins) Gallup, of North Bowood and Strode, and whose descendants still own and occupy the manors of Strode. At the time of the Visitation of Dorset, in 1623, John Gallup (the ancestor in America) was thirty-three years of age.

John Gallup sailed from Plymouth, England, March 20, 1630, in the ship "Mary and John," arriving at Nantasket, now Hull, May 30, 1630, his wife and children following in 1633. First he went to Dorchester, but soon after became a resident of Boston, Mass., and was admitted to the First Church Jan. 6, 1634. He was made a freeman in the same year. His wife joined the church the same year. John Gallup owned Gallup's Island, where he had a snug farm, owned also other lands, and had a house in Boston. He was a skillful mariner, well acquainted with the harbor around Boston and after the settlement of Rhode Island and Connecticut his vessels furnished about the only means of communication between the two colonies. In September, 1633, he achieved great distinction by piloting the ship "Griffin," of 300 tons, through a newly-found channel, having on board at the time those distinguished citizens of New England, Rev. John Cotton, Rev. John Hooker, Rev. Mr. Stone, among some two hundred passengers. The death of Capt. Gallup occurred in Boston, Mass., Jan. 11, 1650. His wife, Christobel, also died in Boston, Sept. 27, 1655. John and Christobel Gallup had children: John, Joan, Samuel and Nathaniel, all born in England.

John Gallup (2), son of John, came with his mother from England to America in 1633, and ten years later, in Boston, Mass., was married to Hannah Lake, a daughter of John and Margaret Lake. In early life he gave evidence of the brave and courageous spirit which afterward distinguished him as an Indian warrior. With the Massachusetts forces, he, with his father, was engaged in the Pequot war, and bore himself so bravely that the General Court of Connecticut, in 1651, gave him a grant of 100 acres of land, and he located at New London, Conn., in 1650-51. In 1654, with his family, he removed to the east side of the Mystic river, now Stonington, where he had taken up the land granted him, and he was one of the early settlers of that town. Mr. Gallup represented the town at the General Court in 1665 and 1667, and although he was over sixty years old when King Philip's war broke out, age had not quenched his valor. New London county having contributed seventy men under Capt. John Mason, of Norwich, Capt. Gallup joined with him as the head of the Mohegans. These troops, forming a junction with those of the other colonies, were engaged in the fearful Swamp Fight, at Narragansett, Dec. 19, 1675. In storming this fort Capt. Gallup led his men bravely forward, and he was one of the six noted captains that fell on that memorable day. Capt. Gallup was valued as a brave and intrepid officer and was loved and respected by his men, and his death was a great blow to the colonists. His children were: Hannah, born at Boston, Sept. 14, 1644, who married Stephen Gifford, of Norwich, Conn., June 18, 1672; John; Esther, born in New London, Conn., March 24, 1653, who married Henry Hodges, of Taunton, Mass., Dec. 17, 1674; Benadam, born in Stonington in 1655; William, born in 1658; Samuel; Christobel, who married Peter Crary, of Groton, Dec. 31, 1677; Elizabeth, who married Henry Stevens, of Stonington; Mary, who married John Cole; and Margaret, who married Joseph Culver, of Groton.

John Gallup (3), son of John (2), was born in 1646, and married Elizabeth Harris, of Ipswich, Mass., in 1675. John settled in Stonington, where his father had large grants of land from the General Court, in consideration of his services to the country in the Indian wars. John became prominent and represented his town in the General Court in 1685, 1696, 1697 and 1698, served with his father in King Philip's war, and was probably at Narragansett. However, he became friendly with the Indians and often acted as their interpreter. In 1701 a committee was appointed to find out and renew the bounds of the Winthrop land purchase at Plainfield, Conn., consisting of prominent men of the town and a large number of Indians, who acted as guides, and on this occasion John Gallup acted as interpreter. Although he became possessed of lands in Plainfield, he never removed thither, but died at his old home April 14, 1735. The children born to John and Elizabeth (Harris) Gallup were: John, born in 1676, married Elizabeth Wheeler; Thomas, born in 1682, married Hannah French; Martha, born April 2, 1683, married John Gifford, of Norwich, Conn.; Samuel, born Oct. 9, 1687, married Mehitable Blount; Elizabeth was baptized July 14, 1689; Nathaniel is mentioned below; William, baptized May 26, 1695, died at Voluntown in August, 1735; and Benjamin, born Nov. 1, 1696, married Theody Parke.

Nathaniel Gallup, son of John (3), was born at Stonington, Conn., in 1692, and was married June 4, 1717, to Margaret Gallup, who was a daughter of Benadam and Esther (Prentice) Gallup, and both he and his wife were admitted to the First Church at Stonington July 20, 1718. He died April 3, 1739, and his wife died March 2, 1761. Their children were: Nathaniel, born April 29, 1718, married Hannah G. Burrows; John is the next in the line of descent; Thomas, born April 19, 1722, died young; Mercy, born April 7, 1725, married William Whipple; Thomas, born Aug. 26, 1727, married Hannah Dean; Margaret, born Oct. 12, 1730, married Isaac Gallup; Martha was born July 30, 1733; Benjamin, born July 26, 1736, married Amy Kinne.

John Gallup (4), known as Capt. Gallup, son of Nathaniel, was born at Stonington, Conn., Jan. 29, 1720, and was married Nov. 5, 1747, to Bridget Palmer, who was born April 8, 1721. By occupation he was a farmer, and he settled in Plainfield, Conn., where he died Nov. 1, 1801, his widow surviving until Sept. 2, 1809. Their children were: Jerusha, born in 1748, died in 1841; John, born in 1750, married Lydia Clark, and died in Plainfield, in 1835; Jonathan, born in 1752, married Elizabeth Dow, and died in Plainfield, in 1828; David was born in 1754; Margaret married Samuel Frink; and Esther died young.

David Gallup, son of Capt. John and Bridget (Palmer) Gallup, was born in 1754, in Plainfield, Conn., where he was reared to manhood. Several years prior to his marriage he located on a farm in Sterling, Conn., where he became an extensive farmer and grew prominent and prosperous. His death, on July 14, 1821, was very sudden. His political opinions were in sympathy with the Whig party, and his religious membership was with the Congregational Church. David Gallup married Nancy Jacques, a native of Coventry, R. I., a daughter of Amos Jacques, of that place, and their creditable family numbered five members, all of whom deserve more than a passing notice.

The eldest, John Gallup, the fifth of that name in the family, was born April 9, 1807, and resided in Sterling, Conn., until the age of twenty-one years. His education was obtained in the district schools. Coming to Brooklyn upon reaching his majority, he purchased a farm upon which he resided throughout life, his death occurring Dec. 16, 1881. In politics he was very active in the ranks of the Republican party, and soon after his location in Brooklyn he was appointed a deputy sheriff by High Sheriff Roger Coit, of Plainfield, and served under him four years, being re-appointed by Coit's successor and serving four years more. Then he was elected to the office of high sheriff of Windham county, serving efficiently for two terms. Mr. Gallup held many of the town offices, was judge of probate for several years, represented Brooklyn in the Legislature, and was also constantly engaged in the settlement of estates. For a long period he was resident of the Windham County National Bank, and he was one of the trustees of the Brooklyn Savings Bank, of which latter he was also cashier for some time. He married Maria C. Tyler, who was a lineal descendant of Gen. Israel Putnam; she died March 1, 1882.

David Gallup, the second son, is mentioned below.

Esther, the first daughter of David and Nancy (Jacques) Gallup, was born June 27, 1811, and married Dr. Henry Campbell, of Sterling, Conn., Sept. 6, 1831; she died in Providence, R. I., July 24, 1865.

Amos J. Gallup, the third son, was born Feb. 24, 1812, and was married to Martha Gallup, Nov. 26, 1838. She was a daughter of Joseph and Hannah (Smith) Gallup. Amos became a farmer, and settled on the homestead in Sterling, Conn., but he also was led into public life. An active and influential Republican, he was made a member of the State Senate in 1858, and again in 1867, and also served one term in the House of Representatives. For a period of fifteen years he was judge of probate in Sterling, Conn., the age limit curtailing his service. Mr. Gallup became a man of means. His death occurred Feb. 24, 1887, and he is buried in Moosup. His wife died Nov. 17, 1890.

Ruby, the second daughter, and the youngest and only surviving child of David and Nancy (Jacques) Gallup, was born Jan. 1, 1822. On Sept. 3, 1850, she married Dr. Horace Burgess, of Plainfield, Conn., who died Sept. 25, 1854, at the age of thirty years. On Nov. 15, 1865, she married (second) Charles G. Williams, of Brooklyn, whose death took place Jan. 22, 1896. Mrs. Williams is a resident of Brooklyn, where she is well known and highly esteemed socially.

HON. DAVID GALLUP, the second son, was born July 11, 1808, in Sterling, Conn. He was quite young when his father died, and his youth and early manhood were spent in a manner typical of the successful young New Englander, in agricultural pursuits and school teaching. After his marriage he settled down to an agricultural life in Plainfield, where he resided continuously until 1865, after which, with his family, he spent a portion of each year in Hartford, though retaining his legal residence in Plainfield. His aptitude for public affairs and general business ability led to his being early called from the field to serve the public in various capacities. He served successively in almost every local office in the town. Largely through his sound and firm management the town of Plainfield kept clear of debt and vexatious entanglements. Never during the period of the war did it allow a debt to accumulate, although every requirement of the town was promptly and abundantly furnished, and at all times, every public interest, the welfare of the schools, internal improvements, and the common prosperity were carefully guarded and cherished. For twenty-three years he was judge of probate for the Plainfield district, and administered with great fairness and justice the business of the office, and, being entirely familiar with the circumstances of the various estates which he settled, he rendered very valuable aid to all concerned.

Judge Gallup also rendered valuable services to his county and State. He represented Plainfield in the Lower House of the General Assembly in the years 1841, 1850, 1862, 1863, 1864, 1865, 1866 and 1867; was speaker of the House in 1866; and was chosen senator in 1869. In 1880 he was elected lieutenant governor, and for two years was president of the Senate, his nomination to that position coming as a partial recognition of his worth as a man, and his services in the ranks of his party. Throughout his long and active life he was an unswerving Whig and Republican, taking part in nominating conventions times without number. The five consecutive years of Judge Gallup's Legislative service were during the war period, and the year following, and during this time he served prominently on the Finance committee, being conspicuously the author of the financial system which furnished means to carry Connecticut successfully through the war crisis. This service was exceedingly valuable. It was to him also that credit was largely due for legislation in 1877 giving equal protection to the property rights of married women. For these services, in connection with his strong help in Eastern Connecticut in supplying pecuniary aid to equip soldiers during the war by advancing money in their behalf for their families, as well as supplying money to towns, he is entitled to honorable remembrance. His legislative action was highly useful to the State, as it was influential in the highest degree.

Judge Gallup was prudent in business affairs, and was successful in his many enterprises. He made no publication of his benefactions, yet he was exceedingly kind to deserving men who needed assistance, and his generousities were far greater than was ever known. He was interested in many of the largest business concerns in the State, in banking and in other affairs, and left a large property. For many years he was connected with banking interests at Norwich, Conn., for some twenty years being a director in the Norwich Savings Bank, of which he was vice-president. For several years he was president of the Quinebaug Bank, retiring when the National system was inaugurated. During the later years of his life he had considerable interests in Hartford, obliging him to spend much time at the capital, and his stately form became familiar to many of its inhabitants. This distinguished statesman died at the "United States Hotel," in Hartford, Aug. 18, 1883, his wife surviving him until Nov. 3, 1884.

In 1834 Mr. Gallup married Julia Ann Woodward, daughter of Capt. Lemuel Woodward, a leading citizen of Plainfield, and their children were: Julia Ella, born Jan. 5, 1847, married Hon. George G. Sumner, and died March 2, 1875. William Woodward, born Oct. 14, 1849, died Nov. 29, 1869. All of this family are buried in Cedar Hill cemetery, Hartford.

FRANK MORTIMER MESSENGER, of Thompson, Windham county, who for many years has been agent for the mills of the Grosvenor Dale Company, and who is an active worker and minister in the Holiness Church, is one of the substantial men and useful citizens of his community.

Born April 3, 1852, in Stoddard, N. H., Mr. Messenger is a son of Silas and grandson of Samuel Messenger, of Stoddard, N. H., and the vicinity of Wrentham, Mass., respectively. Samuel Messenger married Lavina Blake, of Wrentham, and to them came ten children—five sons and five daughters. Of these Silas, born in Stoddard, married Arvilla, daughter of Isaac Copeland, of the same town, and was engaged in farming and as a house carpenter in Stoddard, where he held the respect, confidence and esteem of his fellow townsmen. The children born to this marriage were: Mary, Alma, Erskine, Addison, Edson Winslow, Henry E., George B., Alice C., Frank M. and Helen A. Of these, Addison died while in the service of his country during the Civil war; George B. died in childhood; and Helen A. passed away at the age of nine.

The Messengers of the early Colonial period of Boston and Wrentham, Mass., descended from Henry and Sarah Messenger, who resided in Boston prior to 1640. Henry, a joiner by trade, was a member of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company there in 1659, a freeman in 1665, and died probably in 1681.

(I) Thomas Messenger, born March 22, 1661, married Elizabeth, daughter of John and Martha Mellows. Thomas was one of the fourteen men selected in 1693 from seven military companies, he from Major Savage's company.

(II) Henry Messenger, born Feb. 28, 1695, in Boston, married Jan. 5, 1720, Esther, daughter of Israel and Bridget Cheevers, of Cambridge. Mr. Messenger was graduated from Harvard College in 1717 or 1719, and was ordained minister of the First Congregational Church in Wrentham, Mass., Dec. 5, 1719, and so continued until his death, March 30, 1750, when in the thirty-second year of his ministry. "He was a gentleman of unblemished reputation, and was highly esteemed for his piety and virtue. He had the character of a plain, faithful, affable and profitable preacher." His twelve children were: Thomas, born in 1721, died the same year; Mary, born Aug. 28, 1722, married Rev. Elias Haven, who was settled over the church in what is now Franklin, Mass.; Esther, born Jan. 15, 1724, married Rev. Amariah Frost, of Mendon, Mass.; Sarah, born Nov. 27, 1725, married (first) Dr. Cornelius Kolluck, of Wrentham, and (second) Rev. Benjamin Caryl, of Dover, Mass.; Henry, born Nov. 18, 1727, died in 1729; Elizabeth, born Feb. 3, 1729, married Rev. Joseph Bean, of Wrentham; John, born Oct. 30, 1731, married (first) Mary Messenger, (second) Melatiah Corbet, and (third) Phebe Guild; Samuel, born Jan. 29, 1733, married and settled in Holliston, Mass.; Jerusha, born in September, 1734, married Ebenezer Fisher, Jr., of Wrentham; Daniel, born Oct. 11, 1735, married Mary Brostow and settled in Wrentham (parents of the late Col. Daniel, of Boston); James, born Dec. 4, 1737 (Harvard, 1762), married Elizabeth Fisher, and was the first minister of Ashford, Conn., in 1769; William, born March 3, 1739, died March 5, 1741.

(IV) Daniel Messenger, born Oct. 11, 1735, married Mary Brostow, and settled in Wrentham as a farmer. He died Jan. 11, 1812, and his widow passed away in February, 1836, aged ninety-four. Their twelve children were: Mary, born March 9, 1764; James, born Sept. 20, 1765, died in 1768; Daniel, born June 17, 1768, married May 26, 1793, Susanna Hinckley; Sally, born March 25, 1770, married Timothy Dexter; one born in 1771, died unnamed; Henry, born March 23, 1773, married (first) Frances Bowen, and (second) Esther Gould; William, born Feb. 24, 1775, married Diraxa Fales, of Wrentham; Reptima, born March 9, 1777, married Daniel Woodbury, of New London, N. H.; Esther, born April 19, 1779, married Capt. Robert Hinckley, of Milton; Horace, born Sept. 19, 1781, married Olive Hancock, of Wrentham; Elizabeth, born July 29, 1783, married Erasmus J. Purce, of Philadelphia; and Sampson, born in September, 1785, died unmarried, May 22, 1821.

Another of the Wrentham settlers was Ebenezer Messenger, of the third generation, a son of Thomas, born June 2, 1697. He married (first) Jan. 26, 1719, Rebecca Sweetser, and (second) Nov. 3, 1766, Hannah Metcalf. He had eight children by his first wife, one of whom, Sweetser, had a son Samuel, born May 12, 1761.

Frank M. Messenger remained upon his father's farm until fourteen years of age, meanwhile attending the neighboring school for two terms each year. Removing with his parents to Munsonville, N. H., he sought employment in a chair factory, and there continued until the age of sixteen, meanwhile pursuing his studies during intervals of leisure. He next found employment in a cotton factory, and later spent a year as clerk in Norway, Maine. After a second period of work in the chair factory he at nineteen accepted an engagement as card grinder in a cotton factory at Winchendon, Mass., and was soon promoted to second overseer in the same department. Mr. Messenger next removed to Manchester, N. H., in the employ of the Amoskeag Company, and on leaving the latter place returned to Munsonville in the capacity of overseer. He then located successively in Shirley, Waltham and Newton, Mass., as overseer, and finally settled in Manchaug, in the same State, remaining four years and receiving promotion while there to the position of overseer of the carding and spinning department. At the expiration of this time he returned to Shirley as superintendent of the Phoenix & Fredonia mills. In all of these years he was building better than he knew, for in November, 1883, he was tendered and accepted the position of superintendent of the Grosvenor Dale mills, in the town of Thompson, Conn., and in January, 1887, was made the agent of all the mills of that company. This was the reward for close application to his daily tasks—a true devotion to duty. This responsible position he has since continued to hold, and the mills under his successful management have been enlarged and their capacity increased some seventy per cent.

In his political views Mr. Messenger is a staunch Prohibitionist, but, while actively interested in affairs connected with both State and county, he has declined all tenders of office. He was at one time one of the board of directors of the Thompson National Bank of Putnam. He is secretary of the Portsmouth Campmeeting Association. His religious connections are with the Peniel Holiness Church, in which he is an ordained minister and a leader in its activities, and in this his wife is an active co-worker with him. Mr. Messenger is a forceful expounder of the Gospel, and his services are sought far and near. His work for the Master seems but history repeating itself, for it may be observed from the foregoing that a number of the Messenger family before him were devout workers in the vineyard. He is one of the greatly esteemed citizens of Thompson.

On Feb. 3, 1874, Mr. Messenger was married to Eliza J., daughter of John and Sarah Smith, of Winchendon, Mass. She died the following year, and he was married, second, May 13, 1879, to Mary A., daughter of John and Mary Young, of Newton, Mass. They have had children as follows: Frank M., Mabel W., Don E., Harry M., Marion and Helen. On June 22, 1902, Mr. and Mrs. Messenger were sadly bereaved in the death of their eldest son, a young man of great promise, of unusual intellect and high moral character. He was born May 7, 1881, at Manchaug, Mass., attended the village school, and, after his parents removed to Grosvenor Dale had the advantage of the local public schools, completing the course at the Webster high school. Wishing to further his studies, he entered the Worcester Academy, but was obliged to leave during the second year because of ill health. After recuperating he decided to take up the business his father had so long successfully followed, and asked permission to be allowed to work in the mills a few years, so that he might become familiar with the work in all its details. Almost two years were spent thus, and he then entered the Lowell Textile school, at Lowell, Mass., where he studied the technicalities of design. There, as elsewhere, his ambition exceeded his strength, and he was obliged to give up study and return home, where he passed away after a lingering illness. At the time of his death a local paper said: "In the death of Frank M. Messenger, Jr., the community loses a young man of exceptionally good character. He possessed a quiet even disposition, which won for him the friendship of all, and his untimely death cast a gloom of sadness over the entire community."

HON. ALFRED R. GOODRICH, M. D., of Vernon, Tolland county, ex-comptroller and State treasurer, who for fifty-five years has been actively engaged in the practice of medicine in and around Vernon, comes of Puritan stock and has a New England ancestry of which he and his posterity may be justly proud.

(I) Ensign William Goodrich, the first American ancestor of Dr. Goodrich, was born in the county of Suffolk, England, near Bury St. Edmunds, and was married Oct. 4, 1648, in Connecticut to Sarah Marvin. In 1656 he was made a freeman, and was deputy to the General Court in 1662. He was one of the grand jury, and ensign in the train band. William Goodrich died in 1676; his widow, who survived till 1702, married Capt. William Curtis. William and Sarah Goodrich had nine children: William, born Aug. 8, 1649, who died at birth; John, May 20, 1653; Elizabeth, 1658; William (2), Feb. 8, 1661; Ephraim, June 2, 1663; David, May 4, 1667; Sarah; Mary; Abigail. Dr. Goodrich is in the sixth generation, the line of descent from Ensign William Goodrich being through Ephraim, David, George and Alfred Goodrich.

(II) Ephraim Goodrich, son of Ensign William, married Sarah Treat, May 20, 1684, who died June 26, 1712. His second marriage, to Jerusha, the widow of Josiah Nettles, occurred Dec. 25, 1712. They made their home at Rocky Hill, where he died, Feb. 27, 1739. His wife died Jan. 15, 1754. The children of the first marriage were: Richard, born Feb. 27, 1685; Sarah, 1698; Ephraim, who married Hannah Steel, July 19, 1715; William, born in 1701, who married Rachel Savage, April 4, 1728; David; Thomas, who married Hannah Reynolds, Nov. 26, 1719; Gideon, who was married in 1718.

By the second wife there were two children: Oliver, born Dec. 27, 1714, who married Temperance Wright June 26, 1740; Gideon, born Dec. 29, 1717, who married Abigail Baldwin, June 7, 1739.

(III) David Goodrich, born in 1705, married Sarah, daughter of John Edwards, Feb. 13, 1729. Their home was in Glastonbury, where he died June 7, 1779, and she, May 11, 1799. They had eleven children: John, born June 16, 1730; David, May 22, 1732; Wait, Feb. 8, 1736; Lucy, Feb. 24, 1738; Rhoda, Dec. 17, 1739; Grace, May 2, 1743; Elizur, Aug. 8, 1745; Sarah, June 20, 1747; Honor, April 8, 1749; George, Aug. 13, 1751; Prudence, April 14, 1754.

(IV) George Goodrich married Lucinda Wells, March 9, 1782. Eleven children were born to them: George, Jr., born May 28, 1784, who died in the South in 1815; David, born Sept. 11, 1785, died March 22, 1857; Alfred, born April 27, 1787; Charles C. P., born Feb. 10, 1789, who died about 1812; John Taintor; William, born Feb. 29, 1793, died March 25, 1814; Lucinda Wells, born March 17, 1795, died Dec. 10, 1881; Laura W., born Feb. 18, 1797, died April 2, 1876; Mary W., born Jan. 23, 1799, died April 28, 1876; Ralph, born March 26, 1801, died Oct. 24, 1802; Ralph E., born Feb. 2, 1805, died March 30, 1814. Lucinda (Wells) Goodrich died April 14, 1814, and two years later Mr. Goodrich married Honor Wells. George Goodrich served in the war of the Revolution, and was in the battle at Saratoga when Gen. Burgoyne and his army surrendered to Gen. Gates, Oct. 17, 1777. He made his home after the conclusion of that struggle in Gill, Mass., where he died Aug. 16, 1843.

(V) Alfred Goodrich, the father of Dr. Goodrich, and the son of George Goodrich, was born April 27, 1787. Abigail Howland, his first wife, died Oct. 11, 1821, and in October, 1822, he was married to Lora Stebbins Day. The children were: Charles C. P., born Oct. 27, 1812, married to Sarah N. Porter, who died March 17, 1883; William E., born Feb. 27, 1816, who married Laura A. Smalley, and died Feb. 27, 1867; Alfred R., M. D.; Abigail J., the oldest child of the second marriage; Sarah E.; George; James E.; Ralph; Lora J. The father of this family resided at Gill, Mass., where he was an esteemed and respected citizen. In various official relations he served his town very acceptably. His death occurred March 29, 1866. Abigail (Howland) Goodrich, his first wife, was the daughter of Salmon and Wealthy (Wise) Howland, and a descendant in the seventh generation of John Howland, who came to these shores in the "Mayflower," the line of her descent being through, John (2), John (3), George G., and Salmon Howland, the latter being a resident of Montague, Massachusetts.

(VI) Dr. Alfred R. Goodrich, third son of Alfred and Abigail (Howland) Goodrich, was born Sept. 29, 1818, in Gill, Mass., where he spent his boyhood days. His academic education was received in Deerfield, Mass., and subsequently he was associate teacher, and still later principal of the academy from which he was graduated. He began the study of medicine in 1843 under the direction of Alden Skinner, M. D., and in 1846 was graduated with honor from the Berkshire Medical College. For a time he practiced medicine in the city of New York, where he passed through the terrible epidemic of ship fever, with which he himself was prostrated. When his health had regained its wonted tone, Dr. Goodrich removed to Vernon, and from that time to this he has been associated with the professional, social and commercial interests of that community. With the development of Rockville as a manufacturing center of much importance, he has been closely identified.

Outside of his professional duties Dr. Goodrich has been of service in public affairs. Although a Democrat, and hence of a party much in the minority in his county, Dr. Goodrich was elected to the General Assembly from Vernon in 1870, receiving a flattering vote from his political opponents and being the first Democrat elected from Vernon to the Legislature. In 1871 he was a candidate for Congress, but was unsuccessful in the election. For three successive elections, beginning with that in 1873, he was chosen State comptroller and performed the duties of that position in an able manner, the expenditures of the State being much reduced through his administration. In 1882 Dr. Goodrich was elected as State treasurer, serving two terms. His administration of his high position was characterized by fidelity and honor. Dr. Goodrich has frequently been elected president of the County Medical Society and in 1879 was elected president of the State Medical Society; he declined a second term. Since 1874 he has been president of the Mutual Life Insurance Company, of Hartford, and previously its vice president. He was one of the committee of five who built the beautiful Memorial Town Hall, and Rockville high school building, which occupy conspicuous places in Rockville, and are a credit to the town. The Doctor has been a member of the State Board of Agriculture, and a director of the Rockville Savings Bank, and has filled various offices in the gift of the town.

In his profession Dr. Goodrich has kept abreast of the times, and has led a long and useful life in Vernon. Dr. Goodrich was married Oct. 28, 1847, to Charlotte, the youngest daughter of Hon. Peter Dobson, by whom he had a son, George Dobson. This son was born Aug. 4, 1850, and was married May 24, 1876, to Marie A. Talcott, by whom he had the following children: Charlotte D., born Jan. 14, 1878, married Nov. 3, 1900, to Frank J. Follansbee, Jr.; George T., born Dec. 13, 1882; Emiline Strong, born July 16, 1887.

Hon. Peter Dobson, the father of Mrs. Charlotte Goodrich, came from Preston, England, in 1809, to introduce cotton manufacturing in Vernon. He was a man of scientific taste and attainment. In Prof. Silliman's "Journal of Art and Science," July, 1842, page 200, he is spoken of in the highest terms by Sir Robert Impay Murchison, president of the Geological Society of London, as the first proposer of the present universally accepted theory of the "wear of rocks and boulders by being suspended in ice, and carried over rocks and earth under water, and American science is congratulated in having possessed in him the original author of the best glacial theory yet known to the world."

In business and commercial relations, Mr. Dobson was a man of strict integrity and honor. He received from his neighbors many evidences of their esteem and trust. In political days he began as a Democrat, but supported Henry Clay. In many respects he was an uncommon man. Of an unusual mental endowment, he had also a physique of large and powerful proportions. A deep and original thinker, a close and independent reasoner, with a talent for practical mathematics and mechanics, he was a man of many parts.

Mr. Dobson was married to Betsy Chapman, of Ellington, and to this union were born William and Mary. The mother of these children died in 1816, and in March of the following year the father married Sophia, the daughter of John and Lydia (Sumner) Strong, of Windsor, Conn. To this union were born John, and Charlotte, Mrs. A. R. Goodrich, of Vernon, who died Jan. 20, 1902. Peter Dobson died March 18, 1878, in the ninety-fourth year of his age. His wife died Oct. 3, 1875.

John Dobson, mentioned above, was a prominent man, a leading representative of the Democratic party and known throughout the State. In 1852 he was elected State Senator, in 1876 was a presidential elector, and in 1877 was made State auditor of public institutions. Wherever he was found he showed himself a man of power. Mr. Dobson was married, Jan. 21, 1841, to Julia Woodbridge White, by whom he had one daughter, Emma S., the wife of R. E. Parker, and the mother of two sons and two daughters, John Dobson, Annie B., Lucius Rienzi and Julia White. Mr. Dobson died Dec. 16, 1882.

Dr. Goodrich was a post-graduate of the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York, in 1847, and has maintained an intimate association with that celebrated institution to the present time. When Dr. Goodrich was a member of the State Legislature in 1870, he served on the Educational committee and the committee on Women's Rights, and his casting vote gave the ladies a favorable report on the subject of Women Suffrage.

At the present time Dr. Goodrich is pension examiner for Tolland county, and in the city of Rockville has been president of the School Board for over thirty years, serving on the High School committee. In 1858 he was made a member of Fayette Lodge, F. & A. M., at Rockville. He is a member of the Board of Health, and one of the trustees of the public library. In 1864 and 1868 he was a presidential elector. At the dedication of the Rockville high school he gave the historical address. Dr. Goodrich attends the Congregational Church.

JOSEPH HENRY FULLER descends from Dr. Samuel Fuller of "Mayflower" fame, who landed here in 1620 and later settled at Ipswich, Mass. He had a son John, who continued the line of descent of which this sketch treats.

(II) John Fuller, born in Ipswich, Mass., in 1634, died June 4, 1666. By his wife Elizabeth (Emerson), he was the father of eight children: John, William, Thomas, Nathan, Joseph, Susannah, Sarah, and Elizabeth.

(III) Joseph Fuller, of the children just mentioned, was born at Ipswich, Mass., in 1660. In October, 1685, he married Mary Haywood, and of this union also there were eight children: Joseph, Thomas, William, John, the next in this line of descent, Daniel, Benjamin, Ebenezer, and Jacob.

(IV) John Fuller was born in Ipswich, Mass., April 22, 1701; and Jan. 1, 1727, he married Mary Howard, who died in November, 1728. He then married, Jan. 7, 1730, Hannah Lord. At an early date he settled in Hampton, and it was in that town that his children were born. They were Joseph, born Nov. 28, 1728; John, the great-grandfather of Joseph H. Fuller; Samuel, born Jan. 20, 1733, who married, Oct. 22, 1761, Sarah Reed; Daniel, born June 13, 1736; William, Jan. 25, 1740; and Hannah, June 12, 1743, who married, April 17, 1766, Elijah Fitch.

(V) John Fuller, born in Hampton, May 7, 1731, was a large landowner and wielded a wide influence in his vicinity. For some time he lived in the eastern part of Hampton near the Brooklyn line, but later moved to the farm now occupied by Abel Burdick, and there, in old age, he died. On Dec. 24, 1755, he married Hannah Kimball and they had nine children; John, Benjamin, Ebenezer, Daniel, Jesse, William, Mary, Hannah and Eliza.

(VI) Benjamin Fuller, the grandfather of Joseph Henry, was born June 16, 1758, and resided in Hampton, where he died in 1840, at the age of eighty-two. Agriculture was the business of his life. He was married (first) to Johanna Trowbridge, of Pomfret, who died Aug. 19, 1822; and (second) April 16, 1823, to Clarissa Utley, by whom he had eight children: Benjamin, a farmer, who married Lucy Hodgkins, and after her death, Sarah Goddard, and died in Hampton; Elisha, mentioned later; Daniel, a carpenter and later a hotel keeper at Mansfield Four Corners, who married Jeriah Hall, after her death, Betsey Neff, and later Lydia Jones, and who died in his hotel, at the age of ninety-seven; James, a farmer, who died in Hampton, married to Parmelia Warner; Florence, who died young; Thomas, also a farmer who died in Hampton, married to Peggy Preston; Lester, a physician at Vernon, Conn., where he died unmarried; Lewis, a farmer and carpenter, who married Eliza Holt, and after her death, Anna Holt, and died in Hampton.

Mr. Fuller was a great hunter, a wit, and a joker. No one in Hampton could tell a better story than he, and his tales were listened to far and near. His townsmen called him "Lying Ben."

(VII) Elisha Fuller, father of Joseph Henry, was born in Hampton, Jan. 26, 1783. Being reared to farm work, he naturally turned to agriculture for a living. He followed his vocation in Hampton and later in Ashford, Westford, Brooklyn, and Lisbon, where he resided for short periods. Finally returning to Hampton, he settled on a farm where he remained the rest of his life. Mr. Fuller was married twice. His first wife, Mary Spencer, daughter of Silas and Mary (Farnham) Spencer, was born in Hampton and died June 15, 1815, at the age of thirty-two. His second wife, whom he married in 1815, was Irene Francis, who was born in Mansfield, Conn., in 1798, daughter of Manning Francis; she died July 11, 1888, at the age of ninety. By his first wife Mr. Fuller had six children. The first ones were twins who died in infancy. Phylander, a farmer, who died in Mansfield, married Frances Church. Elisha S., a cooper, who is now in his ninety-first year, the oldest resident in Hampton, married Esther Eliza Chester. Edwin T., a carpenter and wagon maker, who died in Plainfield, Conn., married Louisa Snow, and after her death, Sarah Parsons. Lucien H., a marble cutter, who died in Mansfield, Conn., married a woman from St. Louis, Mo., and after her death, his cousin, Harriet Fuller. Elisha and his second wife, Irene (Francis) Fuller, had eleven children, whose record is as follows: Mary C. married John Cocking, a day-laborer, and Maria never married. Samuel C. died young. Francis D., a shoemaker, who died in Madison, Wis., married Fanny Clark. Theodore, a mechanic, who died in Hampton, was married twice; his second wife was Abbie Downing. Joseph Henry is mentioned later. Payson G. died young. Henrietta C. and Harriet C. were twins; the first never married, the second married Edwin Tanner, and after his death, Asher Hazen; she now resides at Montville, Conn. Alexander, a carpenter, who died in New London, Conn., married Susan Adams, the sister of Mrs. Joseph Henry Fuller. Leander was killed in early manhood by falling from a window of a building in St. Louis, Missouri.

As a farmer Mr. Fuller was thoroughly successful, and in spite of having to provide for a large family, he was always comfortably well off. He worked up to the last minute and died in Hampton, May 25, 1837, from the effects of an accident received while blasting a log. A forceful man, with marked disciplinary powers, he was made first lieutenant of a military company to which he belonged, composed of men from Ashford, Hampton, Mansfield, Windham, and Chaplin; and he held the honor for many years. In religious sentiment he was a Congregationalist, and he belonged to that church in Hampton. Though cut short in the midst of his career, he had shown by his works that he was a man possessed of great wisdom, frugality, and of exceptionally winning traits.

(VIII) Joseph Henry Fuller, the oldest active blacksmith in Hampton, has won the esteem of his townsmen entirely by his own efforts. Born Feb. 23, 1827, in Ashford, Conn., and when one month old taken by his parents to Hampton, he grew up in that town. At the tender age of nine he was ruthlessly taken from the district school and set to work in a cotton factory, which was located in the southern part of Hampton, employed about fifty hands, and was operated by Mr. Loderick Walcott. The boy's work was piecing ends of the cotton cloth. Though his wages were small, he dutifully gave them to his parents for the support of the family. After several years he left the factory and went to work on a farm. Early realizing the necessity of settling upon some trade for life, at the age of fifteen he hired out for three years as an apprentice for Harvey Smith, a blacksmith in Hampton. Though the inducement was not very attractive—his board, twenty-five dollars a year, and half of the month of July to himself—he unflinchingly fulfilled his contract, and at the end secured a position as journeyman with Roger S. Williams, also a blacksmith in Hampton. Proving a thoroughly competent workman, he remained there twenty years. In 1850 he married in her native town, Canterbury, Conn., Julia Adams, who was born in 1828, daughter of Moses Adams. She died Dec. 29, 1892, having been an efficient helpmate for forty-two years. Mr. and Mrs. Fuller had no children of their own, but reared from infancy Abbie E. Weeks, who has never married and still lives with her foster father.

Having finally left the blacksmith shop of Mr. Williams, Mr. Fuller erected a building of his own, on credit, and hung out his horseshoe in Hampton. His competitors boasted they would soon "nail him," but he continued to swing his hammer, and fire his furnace, and one by one they closed out. For thirty-five years he has been the leading blacksmith in Hampton, and so large has been his patronage that he has been obliged to employ a great deal of help, sometimes five men at a time. At present he only works himself when he feels like it. He often relates interesting experiences connected with his business, such incidents as his having shod one hundred and seventy-three oxen in one winter. Besides attending to his blacksmith's business, Mr. Fuller has engaged in general farming and dairying. For four years he carried the mail from the Hampton post office to the station, a distance of two miles. Altogether he has made a great deal of money, and he now owns a beautiful home and a good farm of sixty acres.

Mr. Fuller has an exceptionally strong constitution; though now in his seventy-seventh year, he is remarkably well-preserved and active. One day when he was seventy-three years old he shod thirteen horses; eight is a good day's work. In manner he is plain and outspoken, in religious sentiment a free thinker, and, though usually affiliating with the Republicans in politics, he always votes for the best man. The remarkable success of his career is mainly due to his salient characteristics, his industry, determination, ambition and sound judgment.

HON. ABIEL CONVERSE, a retired lawyer of Thompson, Windham county, venerable in years and full of honors, comes of an historic family, one ancient in the history of this as well as the Old World.

The Converse family of America dates back hundreds of years to Normandy, France, where it held a distinguished place among the Norman nobles of the day in the possession of large estates around the Chateau Coignir. Roger De Coigniries accompanied William the Conqueror in his invasion of England in 1066, was one of his trusted captains, and so distinguished himself at the battle of Hastings that his name was entered upon the roll of honor in the record of Battle Abbey. The name after the conquest was changed to Coniers or Conyers, and was transmitted with vast estates by lords and barons and nobles for more than five hundred years, as the records show. In that line was born in 1590 Edward Conyers, who came to America in the fleet with Winthrop in 1630, his wife Sarah accompanying him. Mr. Conyers, Conyers or Converse, as the name is variously spelled, settled first in Charlestown, where he was made a freeman in 1631, served as selectman in 1635 to 1640, was one of the founders of the church there (First Church, Boston) in 1630, and was dismissed in 1632 to form the First Church of Charlestown. He became one of the first settlers of Woburn, Mass., and one of the founders of the church there, being chosen one of the first deacons and continuing in office until his death in 1662. He was long a selectman of Woburn, from 1644 until his death.

From this emigrant settler Abiel Converse's lineage is through Samuel, Samuel (2), Ensign Edward, Jonathan, Elijah and Riel Converse.

(II) Samuel Converse, born in Charlestown (baptized March 12, 1637), married in 1660 Judith, daughter of Rev. Thomas Carter. He settled in Woburn, and was there made a freeman in 1666.

(III) Sergt. Samuel Converse (2) was born April 4, 1662. In 1710 he located in Thompson parish, in Killingly, Connecticut.

(IV) Ensign Edward Converse, born September 25, 1696, in Woburn, Mass., came to Thompson, with his parents when fourteen years old. On Aug. 6, 1717, married Elizabeth, daughter of John and Elizabeth Cooper. She died Feb. 19, 1774, and he died July 9, 1784.

(V) Jonathan Converse, born in Thompson, baptized April 28, 1723, married June 19, 1743, Keziah Hughes, daughter of Jonathan Hughes.

(VI) Elijah Converse, born June 20, 1745, died June 14, 1820. In 1790 he built a house in Wilsonville, where Albert Converse, his grandson, now resides. He was a soldier in the Revolutionary war. On Jan. 25, 1770, he married Experience Hibbard, who was born Sept. 5, 1746, daughter of Jonathan and Experience Hibbard. Their children: Sarah, born April 26, 1772, married Daniel Barrett; Lois was born March 4, 1775; Elijah, born April 10, 1777, died April 22, 1846; Riel was born February 24, 1782.

(VII) Riel Converse married (first) Ada Barnes, of Dudley, and for his second wife married Alice Bixby, daughter of Jacob and Eunice (Leavens) Bixby. His third wife was Sarah Pierce. By trade Mr. Converse was a house carpenter and joiner, which he followed throughout life in connection with farming. He was a well-known and well-liked citizen, doing what he thought right in every relation of life, and his death, which occurred Oct. 26, 1874, was deeply mourned; he is buried in Wilsonville cemetery. He was by his second wife the father of two children, Abiel and Albert, who now reside on the old homestead. Mr. Converse was a Democrat in politics.

(VIII) Abiel Converse, son of Riel, born Dec. 13, 1815, in Thompson, Conn., married Nov. 17, 1842, Matilda Sly, daughter of Nathan and Cynthia (Corbin) Sly, of Dudley, Mass., and to the marriage came two children, as follows: Mary Ellen, born July 17, 1847, died Nov. 19, 1884. Martha Anna, born Oct. 28, 1848, married Dec. 26, 1871, Major Charles C. McConnell, U. S. A.; she died at Fort Adams, Newport, R. I., Jan. 9, 1874.

Mr. Converse spent his early life and received his education among the primitive people, amid primitive scenes and in the most primitive schools. From childhood to manhood, in keeping with the conditions about him, and the circumstances of the times, he was subjected to exacting labor upon a rugged New England farm. The vigor of such a life, however, was not without its good side, for it strengthened his constitution and made it possible to live these nearly four score and ten years in the possession of good health and unimpaired faculties.

During his later youth Mr. Converse was accustomed to teach school through the winter months, but continued his work upon the farm through the rest of the year. At about nineteen years of age, he entered the Wesleyan Academy, at Wilbraham, Mass., where he was prepared for College. He next matriculated at Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn., from which institution he was graduated with the class of 1839. At intervals during his college course he taught school to aid in defraying his expenses. He commenced the study of law soon after his graduation, in the office and under the direction of Hon. Peter C. Bacon, at Worcester, Mass., pursuing his studies with this gentleman some two years, after which he became a student of Hon. L. F. S. Foster, of Norwich, Conn. In February, 1842, he was admitted to the Bar in New London county, Conn., and began the practice of law at Danielson, Conn. There he remained until 1854, in which year he located in New London, continuing some twenty years in active practice, when he retired and removed to the town of Thompson, his birthplace. There he has since lived, in the enjoyment of the fruits of a well-spent life.

Mr. Converse was born and bred a Democrat of the old school, and has been a party worker and leader through much of his active career. Of studious and industrious habits, he possessed the necessary ability and qualifications for useful citizenship, all of which made him a valued member of the community. A man of integrity and honor, he won and held the confidence of his fellow citizens. In 1844 he received the appointment of the court as attorney for the State and for Windham county, and by appointment held the office for a number of years. In 1845 he represented the town of Killingly in the General Assembly. He was appointed in 1848, and again in 1849, by the General Assembly, as judge of probate for the Killingly District, and after his removal to New London was clerk of the court of probate for that district, judge of the city police court and also of the city civil court. He was also city attorney for several years. Directly after the Civil war Mr. Converse was his party's candidate for Congress in his district, and though not elected polled the full party vote. Mr. Converse has also been active and ever deeply interested in educational matters, and has served on school boards in all of the places in which his lot has been cast. He is still quite active in public affairs, and is in full possession of his faculties.

ALBERT CONVERSE, retired farmer of Wiltonville, and one of the oldest citizens of that place, was born at Wiltonville, Feb. 15, 1818. His education was obtained in the district school, and he grew up on his father's farm, where he remained until young manhood. He then went to Oxford, Mass., and learned the shoe trade, at which he worked both at Oxford and Webster, until 1842, when he received the appointment of station agent at Fisherville, near North Grosvenor Dale, from the Norwich & Worcester Railway Company. There he remained for many years, later settling on the homestead farm with his father, and for a year and a half engaging in the grain business at Webster. Since then he has carried on farming and lumbering, having a tract of one hundred acres of land. In spite of his years he is still active. Like his brother he is a staunch Democrat, but no office seeker. Thrifty and industrious by nature, domestic in his tastes, temperate in his habits, and considerate in his conduct toward all, Mr. Converse is a citizen who may well be held up for the emulation of the rising generation. He and his brother have both carried the family name through their lives with honor.

On Feb. 10, 1840, Mr. Converse married, in Thompson, for his first wife, Rebecca T. Kelley, a native of Thompson, daughter of John Kelley, and six children have been born to them: Noel E., of Worcester, Mass.; Helen M., who married C. F. May, of Norwich, Conn.; Alice A., who married William Jack, of Wiltonville; Ann R., widow of R. E. Beville, of Willimantic, Conn.; Etta, Mrs. I. G. Bixby; and Ada B. The mother died on the farm in 1876, and the father married, for his second wife, in June, 1880, in Oxford, Ruth Ann Battey, who was born in Scituate, Mass., daughter of John and Sarah (Blackmore) Battey, and widow of Jonathan Randall, of Foster, R. I. She had one child by her first marriage, Jonathan, who is deceased. No children have been born to her union with Mr. Converse. She is a very active woman for one of her years, has no need for glasses, being able to sew with the finest needle, which she threads without difficulty. She is a woman of high character.

CHARLES D. TORREY. To be able to trace a direct line of ancestry as far back as the days of Queen Elizabeth, farther than the date of the settlement of St. Augustine, the oldest city in the New World, is not a possibility with very many persons, even after years in the study of genealogy. However, Mr. Charles D. Torrey, of Putnam, Windham Co., Conn., can follow his forefathers through one generation after the other until he reaches (I) William Torrey, a man of substance and authority, who passed out of life in June, 1557. His home was in Combe, St. Nicholas, Somersetshire, England. His will provides for his wife Thomasyne and unnamed children.

This far-away grandfather left all too few details of either occupation or family, but it is known that he was succeeded by a son Philip. (II) Philip appears also to have been a man of means and one careful for the welfare of his family, and his will is dated in 1604, mention being made in it of wife Jane, son William and daughter Dorothea.

(III) William, son of Philip Torrey and Jane, his wife, was known to be living in 1639, when his wife, Alice, died.

(IV) Philip, son of William Torrey, died in June, 1621, leaving a will dated April 21, of the year previous. He had four sons, all of whom came to America.

(V) Capt. William Torrey, son of Philip, was born in the old ancestral home at Combe, St. Nicholas, England, in 1608, and the church records show that he was baptized on Dec. 21, of that year. On March 17, 1629, he married Agnes Combe and she died in her native land. It can probably never be determined whether it was grief over her loss, religious persecution or love of adventure, that induced Capt. William to join his three brothers, James, Philip, and Joseph, in their immigration to America in 1640. It is possible that his second wife accompanied him from England, but it is certain that he brought his two sons, Samuel, born in 1632, and William, born in 1638, and that they settled and made their home at Weymouth, Mass. Six more children were born to Capt. William at this place, namely: Naomi, Mary, Micajah, Josiah, Judith and Angel. Capt. William became a magistrate and Captain of the train band of the colony. For a number of years he was the representative for Weymouth in the General Court, and it is said of him that he was called upon to act as clerk and secretary on account of his excellent penmanship. It is evident that he was a man of intelligence and a deep thinker, a work from his pen still existing which treated of a "Discourse Concerning Futurities, etc."

(VI) William Torrey, son of Capt. William, was born in 1638, in England, and as noted, came to America with his father in 1640.

(VII) Joseph Torrey, son of William, was born in Weymouth, where the family continued to make their home, and his business was that of trader, probably often negotiating with the Indians.

(VIII) Rev. Dr. Joseph Torrey, son of Joseph, was born in Weymouth, Mass., Oct. 8, 1707, and died Nov. 23, 1792, in Kingston, R. I. He was a physician, graduated from Harvard in 1728, and was ordained a minister May 17, 1732, taking charge of the church at Tower Hill, Kingston, R. I., in which pastorate he remained through life. He married Elizabeth Wilson for his first wife and they had seven children. Deacon Joseph, born Feb. 22, 1733, married in December, 1757, Hannah Fisk, born Sept. 12, 1728. He died Feb. 19, 1804, and she died Sept. 25, 1805. Dr. Samuel Holden, born in 1738, died Dec. 1, 1786. He married Anne Gould, a wealthy and fashionable lady of Boston, who as a part of her patrimony, brought her slaves to Killingly and when she went for an airing in her chaise, they trotted by its side. Oliver, died young. Elizabeth married Edward Adams of Killingly. Ann, born May 4, 1737, at Kingston, R. I., married Thomas Hawkins, who was born in 1738. Mary married A. B. Pollock of South Kingston, R. I. Lucy married Rev. Osgood, of Boston.

In 1748 Rev. Dr. Joseph Torrey contracted a second marriage, his wife being Elizabeth, daughter of Rev. John Fisk, who was the first pastor of the Killingly Congregational Church. He owned a large estate, containing 1,000 acres of land in that neighborhood. The children born to this second marriage were: John F., born in 1750, who died unmarried, July 1, 1816; Oliver; William, who married first Hannah Plank, and (second) Zilpah Davison, and who was the grandfather of William T. Harris, the present commissioner of Education; Abigail; Sarah; Elizabeth; and two children who died in infancy.

(IX) Oliver Torrey was born March 24, 1756, in South Kingston, R. I., and died March 7, 1843, in Putnam (then Killingly), Conn. On Sept. 23, 1784, he married Tama, daughter of Daniel Davis, who was one of the pioneers of Ohio, going thither in 1788, from Killingly, Conn. He was a captain in the State militia, and a deacon in the Congregational Church. The children of Oliver Torrey and his wife were: Elizabeth, born Aug. 10, 1785, in Killingly, who married Rufus Davison in 1813 and died in Putnam; Daniel D.; Sarah, born May 26, 1790, in Killingly, who married Asa Cutler of Killingly, in 1813, and died in Putnam; Lucy, born Aug. 30, 1792, in Killingly, who died unmarried, May 2, 1814; Susan, born Aug. 22, 1794, in Killingly, who married Jeremiah Dana, of Oxford, Mass., and died June 17, 1859, her husband dying in Killingly, Oct. 31, 1851; George, born Oct. 25, 1796, in Killingly, who died May 20, 1859, in Putnam, unmarried; Sophia, born Feb. 25, 1799, in Killingly, who died in Putnam, unmarried; Hannah Bishop, born March 30, 1801, died in Putnam unmarried; Mary, born Feb. 24, 1803, in Killingly, who married James Howe, of Killingly and died in Putnam; Elvira, born Feb. 11, 1805, in Killingly, who died unmarried; Almira, born Sept. 29, 1807, in Killingly, who married Benjamin Brayton, of Putnam, where she died; and Abigail, born March 29, 1811, in Killingly, who married Moses B. H. Bishop, of Medfield, Mass., where she died Nov. 28, 1852. Oliver Torrey was known as an excellent farmer and a man of Christian character.

(X) Daniel Davis Torrey was born Feb. 20, 1788, in Killingly and died Oct. 17, 1860, in Eau Claire, Wis. On Sept. 29, 1813, he married Olive Cutler, born May 14, 1791, in Killingly, who died Aug. 19, 1829, daughter of Benjamin and granddaughter of Asa Cutler, the latter a blacksmith of note, in Killingly. Their children were five in number. Erastus is mentioned at length later. Joseph Wilson, born Dec. 4, 1816, in Killingly, died in Putnam. On July 4, 1841, he married Isabella Perry and they had two children: Henry Davis, born April 17, 1842, in Oxford, Mass.; and Caroline Amelia, born July 5, 1844, at the same place. Joseph W. Torrey was a dresser tender, but later conducted a grocery business in Putnam. Rebecca Larned, the third child, born May 16, 1819, in Killingly, died there in 1830. Mary Cutler, born Nov. 3, 1821, in Killingly, died there Sept. 26, 1829. Walter Davis, born Oct. 27, 1825, in Killingly, died Oct. 20, 1851, in Manchester, Conn. In October, 1848, he married Mary Augusta Truesdell, of Killingly, and they had one child, George Burritt, who was born in 1850, and died Dec. 2, of the same year, in Killingly.

Daniel D. Torrey married for his second wife Susan Torrey Bishop, born March 4, 1790, in Killingly, daughter of Dr. Jonathan P. and Hannah (Torrey) Bishop, of Killingly, now Putnam. One son was born to this union, Daniel Davis, Jr., born March 27, 1832, who died in Killingly Sept. 27, 1849, aged seventeen years. Mrs. Torrey died May 16, 1859, and Daniel D. Torrey married for his third wife Mrs. Aliza A. (Bent) Davis, born in 1811.

Daniel Davis Torrey was a man of unusual stature, standing six feet, two inches in height and robust in proportion, an ideal farmer and blacksmith, which occupations he followed. He was a Whig in his early political life, and later became a Republican. In his community he was a man of reliability and was elected a justice of the peace, although he did not care enough for the office to qualify. For twenty years he was a deacon in the Congregational Church on Putnam Heights, and in every way was a worthy man. It is mentioned of him that although quiet and unassuming in manner, he dearly loved a good joke when it did not create any ill feeling.

(XI) Erastus Torrey, son of Daniel Davis, was born June 28, 1814, in Killingly, and died Dec. 23, 1885, in Putnam. On March 3, 1839, he married Sybil Allton, born May 29, 1812, in Pomfret, Conn., who died in Putnam, Oct. 29, 1886, daughter of Charles and Sybil (Wheaton) Allton. Their children were: Charles Davis; George Louis, born Sept. 21, 1843, in Putnam, who died Dec. 4, 1845, in Woodstock; and Olive Elizabeth, born June 5, 1847, in Putnam, who married June 3, 1866, Silas L. Babbitt, a carpenter at Putnam. Of this union there were two children: Eva Elizabeth who married Frank Blackmar and died in Danielson; and Silas Newton who married Mabel Rand, now deceased, and follows the trade of stone mason in Putnam.

Erastus Torrey in his early years of activity, worked in the cotton mills and became skilled in all the departments, adopting the trade of mule spinner. Endowed with good health and a robust constitution, he was capable of accomplishing a vast amount of work. In his latter years he confined his attention to the management of his land on Putnam Heights, where he was born, this property having come into the family in 1713. Mr. Torrey was a man in whom his neighbors placed confidence, and for twenty-five years he served as grand juror and for several years as assessor. In his early years he united with the Baptist Church and so continued, although his estimable wife was as closely attached to the Methodist faith. Those who knew him well could bear witness to his faithfulness to his community, church, friends and family, and his friendly and genial spirit made him many friends. In political sympathy he was identified with the Republican party.

(XII) Charles Davis Torrey, who is one of Putnam's leading farmers and representative citizens, was born in Pomfret, Conn., March 8, 1840, and for many years was closely identified with the educational interests of that vicinity. His early opportunities were superior to those of many others in the same rank of life. His parents secured his attendance at school in Putnam until he was prepared for an academic course, which he enjoyed during three years at Nichol's Academy, at Dudley, Mass. Thoroughly qualified, although only twenty years of age, Mr. Torrey then began teaching, following this profession both in Putnam and in Thompson, and he has never lost his interest in the work. For three years Mr. Torrey then operated the large home farm for his father, leaving there to enter upon a clerkship with S. M. Fenner, in Woodstock. One year later he returned to the farm, but the next year found him again in a clerical position with the firm of Wood & Thomas, at Dayville, with whom he continued a year. The four years succeeding 1867 were spent in agricultural life, and then he began a four years' engagement with M. & A. Wood, in a general store, going from this firm to the woolen manufacturing firm of S. L. & T. D. Sayles, where he continued for three and one-half years as book-keeper.

In 1879 Mr. Torrey returned to his valuable and attractive farm where he can easily enter into almost any competition in his locality, either in the amount and value of his products or in the excellence of his dairy output. His fine property comprises 250 acres of valuable Connecticut soil, the same farm which has belonged to the family since 1713. One of his yields during the past year was 900 bushels of potatoes. His dairy is supported by from fifteen to twenty cows, and his milk is shipped to Boston.

Mr. Torrey has long been a zealous and useful member of the Republican party. His convictions come to him both by will and inheritance, his forefathers believing in the same principles. As a public citizen, his services have been in demand upon many occasions. For three years he was first selectman, and was a reliable and valued member of the board for ten years, and clerk of the same for three years. During five years he was assessor, and for a number of years was on the old high school board. During 1886-7 Mr. Torrey was the honorable representative of his town in the General Assembly, his committee membership being very justly on Education and also Woman Suffrage, and he was clerk of the committee. In 1887 he served as chairman of the committee on Revision of Rules, and as clerk of the committee on Insurance, performing the duties incident to these positions with the thoroughness which has always marked his official life.

Fraternally Mr. Torrey is well known and popular in a number of organizations; is a charter member of Quinebaug Lodge, No. 106, A. F. & A. M., of Putnam of which he has served as senior deacon; of Warren Chapter, No. 12, R. A. M., of Danielson, and has served as Captain of the Hosts for three years; and of General Putnam Commandery, No. 348, United Order of the Golden Cross. For forty years he has been connected with the Masonic fraternity. In Grange work, Mr. Torrey has also been deeply interested and was a charter member of the Putnam Grange, was its first Master, and subsequently secretary and lecturer. At present since the disbanding of the order in Putnam, his membership is with the Quinatisset Grange of Thompson. Since October, 1892, he has been a deacon in the First Congregational Church of Putnam Heights.

On Sept. 8, 1861, Mr. Torrey was united in marriage to Martha Westcott Warren, born Aug. 22, 1840, in Killingly, daughter of William S. and Free-love U. (Page) Warren. To this union has been born a family of five children: (1) Charles Louis, the first, receives mention below. (2) Martha Louise, born Sept. 20, 1864, in Woodstock, Conn., married March 9, 1887, Irving P. Spencer, of Killingly. She married (second) Albert Wheelock, a farmer of Hardwick, Mass., and her two children were: Fred Warren Spencer, born Jan. 28, 1888; and Charles Albert Wheelock, born Dec. 22, 1890. (3) Ernest Ellsworth, born May 15, 1867, in Putnam, married Dec. 22, 1892, Bertha Hessie Jordan, f Killingly, and is a farmer in Putnam. His children number four, as follows: Harry Ellsworth, born Oct. 14, 1893; Robert Jordan, Dec. 19, 1894; Jessie Marguerite, Jan. 22, 1897; and Mildred Lybil, June 19, 1899. (4) Olin Westcott, born May 1, 1868, resides at home, unmarried. (5) The youngest of the family, Corinna Josepha, born Feb. 3, 1870, died in Putnam, June 30, 1872.

(XIII) Charles Louis Torrey, the eldest son of Charles D. and Martha W. (Warren) Torrey, was born in Putnam, Dec. 14, 1862. His early education was acquired in the public schools of Putnam, Killingly, and Sprague, Conn., where he fitted himself for admission to the high school in his native town, encouraged by both parents who, themselves, were persons of educational acquirements. The young member of the family possessed unusual intellectual ability which enabled him to fit himself for entrance into Yale College in three years and a half, instead of the four years usually required. His class consisted of two gentlemen and two ladies, which graduated in 1883. Mr. Torrey immediately took his examination for Yale, entering the historic old institution as one in a class of 250 pupils, and was graduated in 1887. The succeeding year he spent in teaching school in Putnam, in the meantime beginning the reading of law with Judge Edgar M. Warner. Three years later he was admitted to the Bar.

In January, 1891, upon his admission to the Windham county Bar, Mr. Torrey opened an office for the practice of his profession in the Court House block, in Putnam. His ability has brought him rapidly to the front and already his name is identified with public life in that locality. In politics a staunch Republican, he is now serving as a justice of the peace and has most efficiently held a number of other local offices; he was tax collector for three years, performing the duties of this office before his admission to the Bar; he has served as a member of the school board and acting school visitor for several years, also performing the duties of secretary of the board. For about the same time he served as a member of the high school board.

In fraternal circles Mr. Torrey has been connected with Gen. Putnam Commandery, No. 348, United Order Golden Cross; he is a charter member of Putnam Grange and officiated as assistant secretary of the State Grange at its annual meetings; is one of the charter members of Israel Putnam Lodge, No. 33, I. O. O. F.; and a member of Putnam Council, No. 340, Royal Arcanum, of Putnam.

On Oct. 23, 1897, Mr. Torrey was married to Miss Helen Martha Porter, daughter of George W. and Mary (Washburn) Porter, of Hebron, Connecticut.

JOHN PALMER. During the sixty-one years of his uninterrupted residence in Brooklyn, John Palmer has been recognized as a leader in mercantile, industrial and civic affairs, all of which have been dignified and ennobled by his rugged honesty, his intrepid courage and his broad and wholesome activity. He was born in Ashford, Windham Co., Conn., April 24, 1820, and upon the foundation of an average country experience erected the structure of a useful and unusually meritorious life.

The Palmers of the region of Stonington are descended from one Walter Palmer, who emigrated to New England with his brother, Abraham, a merchant of London, and nine associates, in 1628. With others in search of large opportunities they founded the town of Charlestown, Mass., in 1629, in which town Mr. Palmer engaged in farming and stock raising until his removal to the Plymouth colony in 1643. He was admitted a freeman of Massachusetts in 1631, and not only held several offices in the colony, but with others aided in the founding of the town of Rehoboth, of which settlement he was the first representative to the General Court. He was subsequently re-elected to the same responsibility, and was prominently connected with all of the important undertakings within the colony. In 1653 he became a property owner and resident of Stonington, Conn. His birth in England occurred in 1585, and he was first married long before coming to America, although the name of his wife is not known. He married Rebecca Short in 1633, and his death occurred in 1661.

Samuel and Jonah Palmer, sons of Jonah, and grandsons of Walter, the emigrant, removed from Rehoboth, Mass., to Windham, Conn., where the former purchased land in 1701, in what is now the town of Scotland. Samuel married Elizabeth Kingsbury and Jonah married Elizabeth Kendrick.

Benjamin and Esther Palmer, the great-grandparents of John Palmer, of Brooklyn, were probably residents of Ashford, and the births of their children were as follows: John, March 12, 1761; Eliza, Feb. 16, 1763; Nathan, Nov. 28, 1766; Elihu, Aug. 14, 1768; Ruth, May 17, 1770; and James, May 28, 1777.

Nathan Palmer, son of Benjamin, followed the occupation of farming during his active life in Ashford. He was a man of modest means and quiet demeanor, and though thoroughly unostentatious filled many prominent positions in the community. He was a staunch advocate of Methodism, as was also his wife, Mary (Brown) Palmer, whom he married Nov. 10, 1790. Of this union there were four children: James B., the father of John Palmer; Nathan, who married Miss Anthony, and removed from Providence to Pawtucket, R. I., where both died; Mary, the wife of Israel Lewis, a farmer, who died in Ashford; and Virgil, who married Harriet James and died at Pomfret Landing.

James B. Palmer, the father of John, of Brooklyn, was born in Ashford in 1796, and in his youth had but a limited education. While yet in his teens he went to Middletown, Conn. and learned the trade of watch making, and a few years later established himself in the watch making and gun repairing business in Ashford. In 1839 he removed his family and business to Brooklyn, where he retired from business a few years before his death, May 15, 1876. He was originally a Whig and later a Republican, and was very prominent and active in town affairs. He was judge of the probate court, and served a term in the Legislature, besides holding nearly all of the other town offices, including that of postmaster for several years. He possessed a strong and upright character, which elicited praise and appreciation from all classes of people with whom he had to do. March 26, 1817, he married Sally Lummis, born in Hampton, Jan. 5, 1794, a daughter of Jonathan Lummis, who had a large family. Mrs. Palmer, who died May 18, 1847, had two children, of whom James C., the youngest, was born Feb. 28, 1833, and is mentioned elsewhere in this work. For his second wife Mr. Palmer married Sept. 13, 1852, Rhoda Lummis, a sister, of his first wife, born May 11, 1807, who died June 26, 1884. Of this last union there was no issue.

John Palmer attended the public schools of his native town and received further instruction at that famous seat of learning known as Wilbraham Academy, from whose halls went forth so many distinguished men. During his minority he was employed as a clerk in an Eastford store for about a year, and in 1839 removed with the rest of the family to Brooklyn, where he clerked for Daniel C. Robinson. When Mr. Robinson sold out to his brother Edwin, Mr. Palmer remained in the employ of the latter for a couple of years, after which he purchased the interest of Mr. Robinson, going into debt therefor. He then engaged in the mercantile business with great success, and was soon able to discharge his indebtedness and build up a constantly increasing trade. In 1854 he disposed of his business to his successors, having for fifteen years catered to the most intelligent and exacting needs of his fellow townsmen. During a portion of that time he was postmaster of Brooklyn, under the administration of Postmaster-General Collamer.

Many of the foremost financial institutions in Brooklyn have profited by the executive and financial ability of Mr. Palmer, chief among these being the Windham County Mutual Fire Insurance Company, of which he was secretary and treasurer from 1857 until 1893, and from which responsibility he resigned because of poor health. From 1880 until 1893 he was president of the Windham County National Bank, and he was a trustee of the Brooklyn Savings Bank from its establishment in 1873 until his resignation in 1893, in favor of a younger man. He has been one of the staunch supporters of the Republican party in that part of the county, and was town clerk and treasurer of Brooklyn for five years. His entire career has been devoted to high and substantial undertakings, all of which have reflected credit upon Mr. Palmer and maintained the prestige of the town which has benefited by their proximity. He is a member of the Episcopal Church of Brooklyn, one of the very old religious societies, the membership roll of which contains many names distinguished in different walks of life.

On Sept. 15, 1850, Mr. Palmer married Frances M. Davison, born in Brooklyn, Aug. 23, 1828, a daughter of Septimus and Margaret (Holbrook) Davison. Of this union there have been born five children: Frances L., Charlotte H. and Helen M., all living with their parents; Charles Alfred, educated at the Norwich Free School, and Hannum's Business College, Hartford, in which latter institution he learned to be an expert stenographer, and practiced the same until his death at the age of twenty-four years; and John H., who died at the age of nine months. Mr. Palmer has led a very abstemious life, has been regular and systematic in his habits and work, and in consequence retains an alertness and activity unusual for one of his years. As becomes one of such diverse substantial interests he has accumulated large wealth, and is one of the reliable, conservative and humane influences of Brooklyn.

(I) Nicholas Davison, the father of the progenitor of the family in America, was born in the town of Dingwall, Scotland, in 1580, and removed to England where his son, (II) Nicholas, was born in 1611. The younger Nicholas came to America in 1630 as an agent for Governor Craddock, and settled in Charlestown, Mass., in 1639. He had two children.

(III) Daniel, son of the emigrant, was born in Charlestown, Mass., April 8, 1639, and April 8, 1657, married Margaret Law. He died in 1695.

(IV) Peter, son of Daniel, married Ann Morgan.

(V) Joseph, son of Peter, was born Jan. 20, 1703, and died July 21, 1757. Feb. 21, 1729, he married Mary Warner or Warren. In 1725, in company with two others, he purchased a tract of land comprising twelve hundred acres, in Pomfret Landing. He was a deacon in the church.

(VI) Joseph, son of Joseph, born Dec. 26, 1730, died Aug. 31, 1808. He was married, Jan. 5, 1757, to Lydia Goodell, and practiced his trade of joiner at Pomfret Landing, Conn. To him and his wife were born six children, the order of their birth being as follows: Joseph, born Sept. 3, 1757, who married Lydia Clark; Lydia, born July 16, 1760, who became the wife of Daniel Clark; Aaron, born October, 1764; Lucy, born April 16, 1767; Mehetable, born May 2, 1769; and Samuel, born July 27, 1774, who died Oct. 13, 1861.

(VII) Deacon Aaron Davison, grandfather of Mrs. Palmer, was born in Brooklyn, in October, 1764-5, and was a farmer residing in the northern part of the town. A few years before his death he removed to Brooklyn Center, where his death occurred in January, 1846. He was a member of the Unitarian Church, in which he was a deacon for many years. His wife was formerly Lodicy Morton, and bore him two children, Septimus and Clarissa, the latter born Oct. 11, 1795, who died unmarried in Brooklyn.

(VIII) Septimus Davison, the father of Mrs. Palmer, was born in Brooklyn, March 20, 1794, and was educated in the district schools of his native town. Further education was contemplated when he entered Plainfield Academy, his intentions, however, being interfered with by the breaking out of the war of 1812. He proved a gallant soldier all through the campaign, and as a private was at the defense of New London. After the war he located on his father's farm and for several winters taught school in Brooklyn, Abington and Pomfret, in the latter place meeting the woman who later became his wife. Immediately after his marriage he began housekeeping in the old hotel adjoining the court house at Brooklyn, which he ran for several years, or until his removal to a hotel in Coventry. After two years in Coventry he went to the "Mortlake House" in Brooklyn, which place remained under his management for nineteen years. After leaving the hotel business he took in boarders for the rest of his life, or until his death in Brooklyn, Jan. 10, 1877. He was a Republican in politics, and took a keen interest in the affairs of his party, filling many important offices. He was high sheriff of Windham county for two terms, or six years, was judge of probate until age exempted him from the office, and served several terms in the Legislature; for many years he was captain of the local militia, and he was very prominent in all town undertakings. He attended the Unitarian Church at Brooklyn. Mr. Davison married Margaret, daughter of Judge John Holbrook, of Abington, who was born Dec. 16, 1799, and died Dec. 14, 1886, leaving three children: Frances M., born Aug. 23, 1828, and her wife of John Palmer; Lucy, born June 3, 1830, living unmarried in Brooklyn; and Henry H., born Dec. 19, 1835. Henry H. Davison was a brilliant man, and was engaged in the mercantile business in both Brooklyn and Wauregan. During the Civil war he served in the commissary department of the First Connecticut Artillery, and after the service settled in Brooklyn. At the death of his father he took charge of the latter's small farm, and engaged in a market business, in addition to holding numerous political offices. He was probate judge and town clerk for a number of years, and died while discharging these combined duties, July 17, 1891, at the age of sixty-three years. He possessed great business ability, and his many admirable traits of character drew to him not only large responsibilities, but many distinguished friends.

DWIGHT CARY, one of the highly respected men of Scotland, Windham county, who has spent his entire life on the old homestead in the Pudding Hill District, and tilled soil that has been in the family for a number of generations, is a descendant of Lieut. Joseph Cary.

(I) Lieut. Joseph Cary, also styled Deacon Joseph, the first of the family of which we have record, married for a second time about 1692; his wife, Mercy, came from Windham, Conn., and their first child was born March 7, 1693. Lieut. Cary died Jan. 10, 1722, and Mercy died Jan. 23, 1741, aged about eighty-four years. Says Hinman, "Mr. Cary must have been a man of reputation, for he could not have held such offices in Connecticut in the early settlement of Windham unless of high standing in the colony."

(II) John Cary, son of Lieut. Joseph and Mercy, born June 25, 1695, married, May 15, 1716, Hannah Thurston. He died Jan. 11, 1776.

(III) Benajah Cary, son of John, born May 7, 1719, married Feb. 11, 1742, Deborah Perkins, and had only one son, James, and five daughters. Benajah Cary came to Scotland (then Windham), Conn., and purchased a large tract of land lying in the present towns of Hampton, Canterbury and Scotland, and engaged in lumbering and farming. There he died, and he is buried in the Scotland cemetery. In person he was a very large man, weighing over three hundred pounds, and it was a difficult matter to carry the body lying on a bier, as was the custom in those days, from the home to the cemetery, a distance of nearly three miles.

(IV) James Cary, grandfather of Dwight, was born on the home place, was a very successful farmer; and died possessed of considerable property, including nearly 800 acres of land. On Aug. 12, 1773, he married Abigail Kingsbury, a native of Pomfret. After her death he married Anna Bradford. To James and Abigail Cary came children as follows: Abigail, born Jan. 28, 1775, who married Parker Moss, of Canterbury; James (the grandfather of F. A. Cary, of Plainfield, Conn.), born Dec. 9, 1777, who was given a part of the homestead located in Canterbury, where he engaged in farming; Benajah, born Jan. 4, 1780, who died, aged twenty-two; Anna, born Feb. 21, 1782, who died in 1790; Sally, born Sept. 7, 1786, who married Thomas Moss, and lived in Woodstock, Conn.; Sanford, born July 14, 1784. Of this family Benajah Cary, though he died when but twenty-two years of age, gained considerable notoriety. For some time the timid folk of Scotland were frightened by the appearance of a ghost, and so many saw the white object flitting about that the subject became town talk, and caused considerable excitement. Several attempted to solve the mystery, but not until young Cary captured the ghost and proved him to be a town resident, was the affair cleared up. The evil doer was publicly whipped before the Scotland Hotel.

(V) Sanford Cary, father of Dwight, engaged principally in farming on the home place, and when the call came to defend New London from the British, he went to the front and served bravely. On May 16, 1811, he married Caroline Tracy, a native of Windham, and a daughter of Jabez and Hannah Tracy. Jabez Tracy was born Oct. 1, 1765, and died June 6, 1814, while his wife, Hannah, was born June 11, 1767, and died Sept. 5, 1855. Their children were: Caroline, wife of Sanford Cary, born March 19, 1787, who died May 3, 1861; Sylvester, born Feb. 22, 1792, who died Oct. 16, 1835; Lucretia, born Oct. 18, 1796, who married John F. Williams, of Woodstock, Conn., and died March 5, 1828.

In politics Sanford Cary was an uncompromising Whig, and took an active interest in town affairs. Both he and his wife were members of the Scotland Congregational Church. To Sanford Cary and his wife were born: Henry Hudson, born July 2, 1814, who followed farming in the town of Scotland, where he died, having served as selectman in 1857, when the town was organized; Dwight, our subject, born Feb. 24, 1817; Wolcott (mentioned elsewhere), born June 29, 1819, a resident of Hampton Hill, who married Lucy Ann Burnham; Jane, born Sept. 8, 1824, deceased, who married Nelson Moss, of Woodstock, Connecticut.

Dwight Cary was born on the old homestead, and attended the Pudding Hill District schools, and later had the advantage of two or three fall terms at the Hampton high school. All of his life Mr. Cary has lived upon the homestead, and successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits. At the time when ship-building was extensively carried on along the Sound, Mr. Cary, together with J. B. Ensworth, operated a sawmill, turning out ship timber of all kinds, and his venture proved very successful.

At another time sheep raising was one of the leading branches of farming, and Mr. Cary's flocks were among the best in the neighborhood. The present industry that is engaging the attention of the farmers in connection with the cultivation of the soil is that of dairying, and Mr. Cary has a fine herd, of from twenty to thirty cows. The entire farm is in first class condition; the buildings are well kept and the prosperity of the owner is written on every side.

In early life, Mr. Cary was a Whig, but when the Republican party came into existence in 1856, he united with it, and has been its staunch supporter ever since. Recognizing his worth to the party and community at large, his fellow townsmen have conferred upon him almost every honor within their gift, and he has held the offices of selectman and member of the board of relief, as well the minor ones, and represented the town in the legislature in 1868. In 1857, when the town was organized, Mr. Cary was a member of the board of relief, and rendered very efficient service. Mr. Cary and his entire family are consistent members of the Congregational Church of Scotland.

On Nov. 15, 1843, Mr. Cary was married to Susan Bass, a daughter of John and Susan Bass. John Bass had three wives, the first one being Eunice Tracy, the second Susan Smith and the third Maria (Safford) Tracy. To Mr. and Mrs. Cary have been born the following interesting family: Sarah Rocella, born Sept. 9, 1849, wife of Deacon Joseph W. Congdon, of Hampton; twin daughters, Marthyette and Margarette, born Jan. 9, 1846, of whom Marthyette died March 18, 1848, and Margarette, March 21, 1848; Ann, born Feb. 24, 1848, married George E. Wood, resided at Centerville, R. I., and died June 9, 1890; Frank Winslow, born June 9, 1850, a successful coal and wood dealer of Northampton, Mass., who married Effie Fuller, and has three sons, Irwin, connected with the Ætna Insurance Company of Hartford, Edwin T. (died April 18, 1901, aged twenty-two) and Fred; Sanford, born July 13, 1853, who died Sept. 16, 1858; Jane Lucretia, born Dec. 22, 1856, who married Arthur M. Clark, of the town of Scotland, and they have a family, George (now—1902—aged twenty-two), Edna (nineteen), Lila (eighteen), Carrie (fourteen), Flora (twelve), Anna (ten) and Lucretia (eight); George Sanford, born May 16, 1860, who married Kate B. Cook, of Windham, although a native of West Cornwall, Litchfield county; Susan Bass, born Aug. 16, 1864, who married Charles L. Willis, a native and present resident of the town of Scotland and who has no children.

George Sanford carries on the home farm, and is a young man active in the affairs of the town, has served as selectman, grand juror, and registrar of voters and represented the town in the Legislature in 1899, serving on the committee of Capitol and Grounds. He has one son, Dwight E., born Sept. 4, 1896.

GEORGE W. HOLT. The tracing of an ancestral line from a brave and worthy ancestor, through generations on down to an honored descendant, brings pleasure to the biographer and impresses upon the general reader the elements of character which have been instrumental in the progress and development of a section of country. One of the early settlers in New England, the head of a numerous and respected line, was Nicholas Holt, whose present representative is found in George W. Holt, one of the most prominent business men and esteemed citizens of Putnam, Connecticut.

The ancestral line of Mr. Holt is traced back through: George W., Josiah, Jonathan, Zebediah, George, Henry and Nicholas. The name of Holt has a meaning of its own, and is defined by an authority, Halliwell, as "a grove or small forest," while on the South Downs of England the name is applied to a kind of hanging bit of woodland, corresponding to the German word of "holz," while still another authority tells that the name is given to "a peaked hill, covered with wood."

Nicholas Holt, the founder of the family in America, as nearly as can be discovered, came from Romsey, England, where he was a tanner, and where he was probably born in 1602. The first definite information of this far-away fore-father was when he became a passenger on the ship "James," of London, William Cooper, Master, and sailed from the port of Southampton, England, Geo. W. Holt.

April 6, 1635. After a voyage of fifty-eight days the "James" reached Boston, Mass., June 3d, of the same year. The names of fifty-three male persons were on the ship roll, "besides the wives and children of dyvers of them." On this list is found the name of Nicholas Holt, and he was undoubtedly accompanied by his family, consisting of a wife, Elizabeth, and at least one child. Nicholas proceeded the same year to Newbury, Mass., as one of the first settlers, where he remained for ten years, becoming then a resident for the rest of his life, at Andover, Mass. His name appears on the Newbury records in various ways, one of these being the note that both he and wife belonged to the Church there. The first marriage of Nicholas, the settler, was to his wife Elizabeth, in England; she died at Andover, Mass., Nov. 9, 1656. On June 20, 1658, he married Hannah, widow of Daniel Rolfe, and daughter of Humphrey Bradstreet, and she died at Andover, June 20, 1665. His third marriage was on May 21, 1666, to Martha Preston, who lived to be eighty years old, dying March 21, 1703. His children were: Hannah, born in England; Elizabeth, Mary and Samuel, born in Newbury, Mass.; and Henry, Nicholas, James and Priscilla, born in Andover, Mass. Nicholas Holt lived to the age of eighty-three years, dying Jan. 30, 1685. It was given him to see his children grow to maturity, eight of whom married and had issue, one probably died single, and one other died in infancy. In early years he engaged in business as a tanner, later he turned his attention to agricultural pursuits, but it is probable that in his advanced age he satisfied his bodily activity with wood-working, as he mentions himself as a "dish-turner." He had accumulated property, and although he made no will, prior to his death he distributed his possessions among his children, who promised to give comfortable maintenance to his wife, should he survive him, which she did.

It is quite probable that the same motive which induced many of the other early settlers of America to leave their homes in other lands, had its influence in the case of Nicholas Holt. Religious persecution drove many a brave and conscientious man to dare the perils of an unknown land in order to have freedom of thought, and what makes this very probable is that Mr. Holt not only was connected prominently with the Church in Newbury, but that he was one of the original members in the Andover Church. That he took an active interest in the affairs of the growing town is proven by his appointment on important committees, which were given charge of the making of roads and other necessary improvements, foundations upon which Andover has risen to its present importance.

Henry Holt, son of Nicholas, the settler, was born in 1644, in Andover, Mass., and Feb. 24, 1669, he married Sarah, daughter of William Ballard. He died at Andover, Nov. 25, 1733, and he died Jan. 17, 1719, aged seventy-five years. On June 3, 1716, they united with the Andover Church. Their children were: Elizabeth, Oliver, Henry, James, George, Sarah, Josiah, Dinah, Paul, William, Zerviah, Keturah, Humphrey and Benjamin. Henry Holt was a prominent man in the town, and his name is frequently found on the records. In 1686 he received permission to erect a mill on Ladle Brook, his father having deeded him a portion of the estate in 1681.

George Holt, son of Henry, was born March 17, 1677, at Andover, Mass., and married (first) May 10, 1698, Elizabeth Farnum, who died Sept. 28, 1714. He married (second) Feb. 22, 1715, Priscilla Preston, who died Jan. 29, 1716. His third marriage was on June 7, 1717, to Mary Bixbee. The children of his first wife were: Zebediah; Elizabeth, who died in infancy; Elizabeth (2), Dinah and George. Elias, who died in infancy, was born to his second marriage. The children of his third union were: Mary, Jonathan, Josiah, Nehemiah, Priscilla, Hannah, Sarah and Nahtaniel. Mr. Holt died in Windham, Conn., in 1748, and left a will proved June 29, 1748. On Feb. 22, 1726, with his brother Paul, he removed from Andover, Mass., and settled in Canada Society, Windham, Conn., where he purchased a farm of Ebenezer Abbee. His land, deed dated Feb. 22, 1726, laid across Little River, south-east of the Meeting House.

Zebediah Holt, son of George, was born Jan. 25, 1700, at Andover, Mass., and in 1726 he removed with his parents to Windham. On Aug. 14, 1732, he married Sarah, daughter of Joshua and Deborah (Ingalls) Fliat, born June 21, 1716. Their children, all born in Windham, Conn., were: Eunice, Zebediah, Sarah, Elizabeth, Mercy, Josiah, Jonathan and Abigail. Zebediah Holt died in 1754. Both he and wife belonged to the Hampton Church.

Jonathan Holt, son of Zebediah, was born Jan. 3, 1758, in Windham, Conn., and was married Oct. 19, 1780, to Anna Faulkner, who was born Nov. 23, 1761, and who died Aug. 31, 1842, aged eighty-one years. They had a family of eleven children, namely: (1) Nathaniel, born April 24, 1782, in Windham, Conn., about 1800, married Mary Farnham, and removed, in 1803, to St. Lawrence county, N. Y., where she died March 7, 1845; he died Sept. 23, 1860, aged seventy-eight years. (2) Josiah, born April 10, 1784, became the grandfather of George W. Holt of Putnam. (3) James, born Feb. 17, 1786, in Hampton, Conn., married Nov. 28, 1809, Nabby Ashley. In his latter days he became a helpless paralytic, and died Dec. 23, 1864. (4) Lucy, born April 17, 1788, in Hampton, Conn., married Mason Kingsbury, and died Dec. 31, 1864. (5) Samuel, born April 26, 1790, in Hampton, Conn., married Clarissa Jennings, and removed to Springfield, Mass., where he died Jan. 31, 1855. (6) Anna, born April 26, 1790, twin sister to Samuel, died on the day of birth. (7) Mary (or Polly) born Dec. 4, 1792, in Hampton, Conn., married Caleb Faulkner, and died Oct. 23, 1878. (8) Dilly, born April 29, 1795, died Aug. 14, 1795, in Hampton. (9) Maximille, born Feb. 11, 1797, in Hampton, became the wife of Ezra Darius Beers, and died Nov. 10, 1868. (10) Caleb Faulkner, born Jan. 7, 1801, died in Hampton, Aug. 22, 1806. (11) Julia, born Jan. 8, 1803, in Hampton, married Jedediah W. Morse, and died Dec. 17, 1889. Jonathan Holt died Aug. 10, 1833, aged seventy-five years. He served loyally in the Revolutionary war and drew a pension. In his childhood he was adopted by his uncle, Jonathan Holt.

Josiah Holt, son of Jonathan, was born April 10, 1784, in Hampton, Conn., and died Nov. 14, 1846, in Plainfield, Conn. On March 11, 1804, he was married, by Rev. Joel Benedict, to Mary Prior, of Plainfield, Conn., and their children, born in Hampton, were as follows: (1) Eunice P., born Nov. 8, 1804, died Dec. 22, 1813. (2) Betsey Maria, born March 15, 1806, became Mrs. Stephen A. Northrup, and died June 15, 1827. (3) William Leavens, born Oct. 3, 1807, in Hampton, Conn., died March 17, 1885, in Manchester, Va., where he had been engaged for a period of thirty-seven years as agent for the James River Manufacturing Co., having built and started their mills and continued in their management until within a few years of his death, when he retired. He was well known as a mill manager for over forty years, in his native State, in Rhode Island and Virginia. He was among the first in this country to start self-operating heads attached to hand mules, in 1830-31, at Natick, R. I. About 1842, the original Masonville (now Grosvenor Dale) mill was doubled in capacity under his direction. In 1843 Mr. Holt went to Slatersville, R. I., and rebuilt and started the No. 3 mill, which had been burned early that year. From there, about 1845, he went to Jewett City, Conn., where a new mill was built and started under his direction. It was at both these mills of the Messrs. Slater that Mr. Holt arranged the machinery upon a different plan than had formerly been followed, namely, to take the cotton in at one end of the mill, and have the different kinds of machinery arranged in sections across the mill, so that the stock in going through the different machines also passed to the other end of the mill. By the old plan the stock was taken in at the back of the mill, and the machines for each process were placed in rows the whole length of the building, so that in passing through them the cotton went from the back to the front of the mill. The late John F. Slater of Norwich, gave Mr. Holt the credit of originating the new plan. Mr. Holt married (first) Rosanna, a daughter of Capt. Edward Studley, of Valley Falls, R. I., and (second) Miss Clarissa, daughter of Edward Burleson, of Plainfield, Conn. (4) Joseph Hutchins, born Feb. 5, 1809, married Nancy Haradon, and died May 13, 1887. (5) Susan Porter, born Dec. 10, 1810, married James Madison Webb, of Waterbury, and died Jan. 5, 1889. (6) Frederick Faulkner, born Oct. 29, 1812, married Abigail West. (7) Mary married John Humes, and died in February, 1827. (8) George Washington was born March 15, 1816, in Plainfield, Conn. (9) Jared Fuller, born March 24, 1818, supposed to have been lost at sea about 1836. (10) Lucy Ann, born Feb. 3, 1820, married Albert M. Ry, and died Sept. 23, 1842.

During his active life Josiah Holt followed the trade of a machinist. In 1821 the family removed to Natick, R. I., lived in Valley Falls from 1823 to 1830, and in 1831 removed to Slatersville. In old age Mr. Holt made his home with his sister in Plainfield, Connecticut.

George Washington Holt was born March 15, 1816, in Plainfield, Conn., where his education was acquired. In 1831, he went with the family to Slatersville, R. I., where his father was employed as a machinist. Here the youth entered the saw mill and passed through the successive stages, from the lowest position to the manager. For a number of years Mr. Holt was the valued manager of the mill for Amos D. Lockwood & Co., at Slatersville. After 1853, in the reorganization of the mill in this vicinity, he became the superintendent for J. & W. Slater until 1860, when, in company with that firm, also with Henry S. Mansfield and Esau Lamb, he became a partner in the original Forestdale Manufacturing Co., of which he was the last one to survive.

The Forestdale mill was built and planned under Mr. Holt's direction; he managed same until 1860, when he disposed of his interest and removed to Providence, R. I. Then next year, with Esau Lamb, he formed a co-partnership which was afterward incorporated as the Monohansett Manufacturing Co., at Putnam, Conn., of which he became president (succeeding Mr. Lamb), and holding that honorable position until his death. In 1878 George Van Zandt, of Rhode Island, appointed Mr. Holt a member of a commission to examine and report upon the Reservoirs and Mill Dams on the Woonsocket river, then considered a possible source of danger to the city of Providence, but on account of his advancing years the appointment was declined.

Few men took a deeper interest in everything which contributed to the making of a good citizen than did Mr. Holt. He was held in universal esteem wherever he lived, and was regarded as an expert mill man in all its branches, thoroughly reliable as to the soul of integrity. In his religious life he was a member of and devoted to the Congregational Church, and one of its liberal supporters. He believed its influence for good of the greatest value, and for him it was always both a duty and a pleasure to assist in the church enterprises. One of the last and most satisfactory acts of his life in Slatersville was to assist in the organization of the Slatersville Cemetery Association, and to provide a fund for the future care and beautifying of the grounds.

this beautiful spot he was laid to rest, near the end of his labors of nearly forty years. His residence in Providence, R. I., was of twenty-three years' duration during which time he was prominently identified with Republican politics. He served in the State Legislature in 1864-66, representing North Smithfield. In 1887 he accepted the office of president of the Monohansett Manufacturing Co., although otherwise retired from connection with business affairs. His death occurred at Providence, R. I., Nov. 16, 1893.

On Sept. 3, 1839, Mr. Holt was united in marriage with Miss Lucy Dodge, born Jan. 14, 1815, North Smithfield, R. I., who died Oct. 21, 1880. She was a daughter of Barney and Mary (Mann) Dodge, of Smithfield. Two children were born to this union, namely: George W., of Putnam; and Miss Ellen Porter, who still resides in Providence.

George W. Holt was born July 21, 1840, in Watersville, R. I., where his early education was obtained in the village school. In 1857 the admirable advantages of Phillips Academy, at Andover, Mass., were offered him, and one year later he entered the Scientific Department of Brown University, where he completed a two-years' course of study. At that time his father was manager of the Slatersville mills, and was engaged also in the great enterprise of starting the Forestdale mills, and then young George became assistant superintendent of the latter, his thorough education peculiarly fitting him for his position, which he retained for ten years. After one year spent in Providence, on Oct. 1, 1871, Mr. Holt came to Putnam, as superintendent of the Monohansett Manufacturing Co., which had become lessee of certain manufacturing property and water power at this point. This business had been a partnership concern under his father and Estus Lamb, of Providence, and in 1882 had been incorporated under the title above named.

When Mr. Holt came to Putnam he assumed full charge of the property, placed the machinery, and acted as superintendent until 1888. Since the date of incorporation he has had an interest in the business, and in 1888 became agent, continuing in that capacity until the time of his father's death, when he succeeded him as president of the company. He still, however, acted as superintendent until 1899, when his son, William F., became superintendent. The Monohansett Manufacturing Co. has gained name and fame far beyond New England limits, the plain sheetings and shirtings finding ready market in New York City. It employs about 15 hands, and the annual output is more than two and three-fourths million yards.

Since 1873 Mr. Holt has been a member of the board of trustees of the Putnam Savings Bank. In 1896 he was made president of the Bank, and his wise and conservative course in this position has met with universal approval. Since becoming a resident of Putnam he has identified himself closely with various enterprises tending to advance the growth and importance of the place. Through his efforts as chairman of a committee the town enjoys its fine system of electric lighting. In politics Mr. Holt is a very active Republican, and in 1889 he represented his town in the General Assembly and served as House Chairman of the important committee on Manufactures. He has been prominent in educational and business associations, serving for more than ten years as secretary of the high school board, and is a member of the Putnam Business Men's Association, of which he was one of its first vice-presidents, and has consented to serve in that capacity since. He was the efficient chairman of the town's Electric Light Committee in 1886, and served several years until the town was made a city. Mr. Holt was also active in the formation of "The Putnam Library Association," and has served since as one of the directors. As might be inferred, he was one of the original incorporators, in 1894, of the Day-Kimball Hospital, located at Putnam, and has ever since served as a director and one of the executive committee. For two years he served the city as alderman at large, and in every way, through every avenue, has done his best to promote the prosperity of Putnam. He is a member of the Ecclesiastical Society of the Second Congregational Church of Putnam, and at various times has been a member of the Society's committee.

Mr. Holt was married (first) Nov. 6, 1865, to Marion Augusta, daughter of Estes and Abby (Warfield) Burdon, of Blackstone, Mass. She died Nov. 30th, of the same year, in Blackstone (Chestnut Hill). The second marriage of Mr. Holt, on April 27, 1872, was to Rosalie F., daughter of Samuel F. and Sally (Austin) Dyer, of North Kingstown, R. I. Two children were born to this union, namely: William Franklin, born Oct. 4, 1873, in Putnam, Conn., passed through the Putnam high school, and took an academic course at Greenwich, Conn., immediately after which he worked a few years in "going through the mill" to get the details of cotton manufacturing, and then became his father's superintendent in 1899. He also served as the quartermaster sergeant of the 3d Conn. Vol. Inf. through its nine months' service in the Spanish-American war. Mary Florence, born Feb. 25, 1875, in Putnam, Conn., attended the Putnam high school and Woodside Seminary, at Hartford, where she graduated in 1894. Possessing great musical talent, she became a pupil under Dr. Jedliczka, in Berlin, Germany, who had received his instruction from the great Rubenstein. Miss Holt devotes herself to her profession of instrumental music teaching. She is not only a lady of rare talent, but also of education and culture.

In business life Mr. Holt has been a very important factor in Putnam, while in private life his influence has been no less felt. A contributor to every refining influence, a social magnate if desired, Mr. Holt has chosen the quiet, unassuming way that has best brought out the admirable traits of his character. His charities are without ostentation, and it may be truly said that he has not only helped to make Putnam, but has quietly helped to make many who have thus been able to carry out various enterprises. In every relation of life Mr. Holt is regarded by those who know him best as a truly representative citizen.

TROWBRIDGE. The Trowbridge family is one of the oldest in America. (I) Thomas Trowbridge, the progenitor, came from Taunton, England, with two sons, Thomas, born 1632, and William, born 1634, and located in Dorchester, Mass., where a son (II) James, was born in 1636, and baptized in 1638. From these have sprung all by that name in America, while in England the line is traced as far back as William the Conqueror.

Lieutenant, or Deacon, James Trowbridge had a son (III) James Jr., whose son (IV) Daniel came to Pomfret when quite young, with his stepfather, Joseph Bowman. After a time he purchased a tract of land. On Oct. 8, 1733, Daniel Trowbridge married (first) Hannah Spring, daughter of Ensign John Spring of Newton, Mass., by whom he had eleven children. He married (second) Mrs. Jerusha Bowen, of Newton, Mass., April 16, 1767. They had no children. Some of the children died in infancy and early life, while the five following sons married and left families: (V) Daniel, who died in Revolutionary service; (V) James, who settled in Eastford; and (V) John, William and Caleb, who located in Pomfret. William lived and died on the homestead. He was in the war of the Revolution.

(VI) Dr. Amasa Trowbridge, of Watertown, N. Y., a distinguished surgeon in the war of 1812, at Lake Erie, was a son of William. Caleb had three sons and two daughters, all of whom lived to advanced ages, and all of the sons left families; (VII) Artemus and George settled in Camden, New York; (VII) Charles, in Kewanee, Illinois; one daughter, Maria, stayed on the home farm in Pomfret, and married Jerome Pike. She left no children. Susanna died at the age of eleven years.

(VIII) CHARLES EDWARD TROWBRIDGE, of Whitinsville, Mass., a noted machinist and inventor, is a son of George. Other children of George were Julia, Henry, Elizabeth and Frederick, who died in 1871.

John Trowbridge, mentioned above as a son of Daniel, married Anne Kinne, of Preston, Conn., a daughter of Lieut. Amos and Sarah (Palmer) Kinne. He was a man of great good sense and judgment, of strong will and firm and decided opinions. In politics he was a Democrat. At the age of eighty years he was baptized and received into the Baptist Church in Hampton. Of his four children, the only son died in infancy; Sarah married Samuel Hartshorn; Hannah married Abishi Sharp; and Chloe married Benjamin H. Grosvenor, of Pomfret, and their daughter, Emily Adaline, married Col. Horace Sabin.

SABIN. This family, of which the late Col. Horace Sabin was a distinguished member, is one of the oldest in Pomfret, Windham county.

William Sabin, the progenitor in America, appeared in the town of Rehoboth, Mass., at its organization, in 1643. When he came to America is not known, but tradition says he came from Walsingham or the south of England, where he had found refuge in flight from France. He was a Huguenot, a man of considerable culture, and possessed wealth, as is shown in the account of his estate and gifts for the relief of the wants of those who suffered from the ravages of the Indians. He was one of the leading spirits of Rehoboth in school and church matters and in the affairs at Plymouth. The name of his first wife, who died shortly after 1660, is not known. For his second, he married, on Dec. 22, 1663, Martha Allen, born Dec. 11, 1641 (twin sister to Mary), daughter of James and Anna Allen, of Medfield. Martha Allen was a sister of Nathaniel and Joseph Allen, who married daughters of William Sabin by his former wife. Mr. Sabin died about 1687. His will was made June 4, 1685, and probated in Boston July 17, 1687, during the administration of Gov. Andros. In the original will, on file in Boston, are mentioned sixteen of his twenty children. His children by the first wife, all born in Rehoboth except the two eldest, whose place of birth is unknown, were as follows: The date of birth of the oldest, Samuel, is not known. Elizabeth, born in 1642, married (first) Robert Millard (Nov. 24, 1663), and (second) Samuel Howard; she died Feb. 7, 1717. Joseph was born May 24, 1645. Benjamin, born May 3, 1646, is mentioned below. Nehemiah, born May 28, 1647, was slain by the Indians in June, 1776. Experience, born June 8, 1648, married Samuel Bullin Aug. 20, 1672, and died without issue, June 14, 1728. Mary (or Mercy), born May 23, 1652, married Nathaniel Allen, and died Feb. 27, 1674, leaving a son Samuel, Abigail, born Sept. 8, 1653, married Joseph Bullin March 15, 1675, and died without issue, May 1, 1721. Hannah, born Oct. 22, 1654, married Joseph Allen, of Medfield, Mass., Nov. 10, 1673, and removed to Pomfret, Conn.; she was the mother of twelve children. Patience was born in December, 1655. Jeremiah was born Jan. 24, 1657; perhaps this name should be Jonathan, as a Jonathan is mentioned as being in the Narragansett expedition of 1676 [Bliss' History of Rehoboth, page 117]. Sarah was born July 27, 1660. Children by the second wife: James, born January 1, 1665; John, Aug. 27, 1666; Hezekiah, April 3, 1669 (died in 1693); Noah, March 1, 1671 (died in 1694); Mehitable, May 15, 1673 (married Joseph Bucklin July 30, 1691, and died Sept. 27, 1751; he died July 28, 1729); Mary, Sept. 8, 1675 (married Nathaniel Cooper Dec. 8, 1696); Sarah, Feb. 16, 1677; Margaret, April 30, 1680 (died July 10, 1697).

(II) Benjamin Sabin, son of William, resided in Rehoboth until 1675, when he removed to Roxury, Mass., and in 1686 he was one of the thirteen pioneers who settled Woodstock, Conn. He joined the same year in purchasing a large tract of land lying just south of Woodstock, Mashamoquoit, the present town of Pomfret. He lived in Woodstock until 1705, when he removed to his new purchase. The town of Pomfret was not incorporated until 1713, nor the church organized until 1715, which counts for his continuing his church relations in Woodstock after his removal. He died in Pomfret July 21, 1725, in his eightieth year. He married first Sarah, daughter of John and Rebecca Pollock of Roxbury, who was born June 2, 1650 (a twin Mary). He married (second), July 5, 1678, Sarah Parker who died Jan. 22, 1717-18. The will of John Polly provides that the four motherless children of his daughter Sarah are to have their mother's part of his estate. Benjamin Sabin's children by his first wife were: (1) Josiah, born in Rehoboth Oct. 11, 1669, married Rebecca Cheney, of Roxbury, Mass., June 18, 1706. They resided in Roxbury in 1730, and had two daughters. He died in Pomfret Feb. 22, 1745. (2) Ebenezer was born in Rehoboth Dec. 10, 1671. (3) Benjamin was born in Rehoboth Dec. 2, 1673. (4) Mehitabel was born in Roxbury Sept. 7, 1677. Children by second wife: Sarah, born in Roxbury Aug. 1, 1679 (married Samuel Adams Jan. 6, 1705); Nehemiah, born in Roxbury Jan. 10, 1681; Patience, born in Roxbury May 3, 1682; Jeremiah, born in Roxbury March 11, 1684; Experience, born in Roxbury February, 1686 (married David Morse, of Medfield, Aug. 22, 1705); Stephen, born in Woodstock May 30, 1689; and Timothy, born in Woodstock in 1694.

(III) Ebenezer Sabin, son of Benjamin, lived in Woodstock in early life but moved to Pomfret. His wife's name was Susanna. A Susanna Sabin was admitted to "full communion" in Roxbury in June, 1696 [Rec. Com. Rep. Roxbury Records, page 102]. Ebenezer Sabin was ensign in 1700 in the expedition against Canada. He died Sept. 18, 1739. His children were: Ebenezer, born July 8, 1696; Joseph, Jan. 23, 1701; Susanna, April 5, 1704; Joshua, May 26, 1706; Mehitabel, July 21, 1711 (died May 10, 1739); and Seth, Oct. 21, 1714.

(IV) Joshua Sabin, son of Ebenezer, resided in Pomfret, and there married Mary Sabin (his cousin), Jan. 22, 1734. She was the mother of his children: Abishai, a clergyman, was born Sept. 10, 1735, and died Feb. 4, 1782. Susanna was born Aug. 25, 1737. Joshua, born June 6, 1740, married Ruth Wiswall, daughter of Samuel and Elizabeth (Franklin) Wiswall, and niece of Benjamin Franklin. Mary, born May 6, 1742, died Oct. 24, 1754. Alvanus, born Jan. 14, 1744, married Lucy Wiswall, sister of Ruth. Phethena, born Jan. 6, 1747, died May 12, 1754. Lucy, born Aug. 9, 1749, died March 17, 1752. Walter, born Feb. 12, 1752, died Sept. 28, 1774. Alice, born April 20, 1754, died Oct. 13, 1754. Elizabeth was born Sept. 6, 1756.

(V) Joshua Sabin (2), son of Joshua, served in the Revolution. On June 3, 1766, he married Ruth Wiswall, daughter of Samuel and Elizabeth (Franklin) Wiswall, the latter a sister of Benjamin Franklin. Joshua Sabin died in March, 1825, and his wife died Feb. 1, 1813. Children: Joshua, born Jan. 4, 1768, died April 27, 1770; Erepta, July 18, 1769, July 5, 1848; Clarissa, May 15, 1771, Dec. 25, 1825; Joshua, July 15, 1773, Sept. 20, 1778; Lucinda, March 15, 1776, Aug. 27, 1777; Horatio, April 25, 1778, March 19, 1835; Mary, Sept. 16, 1781, Feb. 7, 1844.

(VI) Horatio Sabin, son of Joshua, married Elizabeth, daughter of Stephen and Judith (Paine) Williams, Jan. 4, 1809. She was born Jan. 4, 1777. They had two children: Horace, born March 11, 1810, and William Henry, born Nov. 29, 1812.

(VII) COL. HORACE SABIN was born at Pomfret, and received the education afforded by the district schools of his day and generation. He grew up on his father's farm, and was a lifelong tiller of the soil, largely interested in dairying in addition to farming, and also engaged in the lumber business. He was a man of very generous disposition, well liked, and was frequently called upon to serve the public in various capacities. He was justice of the peace, postmaster, and member of the school board of Pomfret; represented the town in the State Legislature, and was for many years prominent in the militia of the State; he was offered a commission in the Mexican war. In politics he was a Democrat of the old school. Fraternally he was a member of Putnam Lodge, No. 46, F. & A. M.

On March 24, 1836, Col. Sabin married Emily A., daughter of Benjamin and Chloe (Trowbridge) Grosvenor, and eight children were born of this union: Mary Ann, born Jan. 6, 1837, died March 11, 1854. Harriet Ely, born July 29, 1838, lives on the homestead. Henry, born Oct. 9, 1839, died March 31, 1896. A son, born Aug. 18, 1841, died the following day, Aug. 19, 1841. Ralph James, born Sept. 9, 1842, served in the Civil war as a soldier of the 43d Mass. Regt., known as the "Tiger Regiment;" he is now a civil engineer, and resides on the home farm; he is a member of Putnam Lodge, F. & A. M., of which he has been master five years, and is a Royal Arch Mason. Horatio, born June 24, 1844, also lives on the farm. Chloe Grosvenor, born Nov. 6, 1846, died Jan. 12, 1871. Emily Adaline, born April 28, 1850, is at home. The Misses Sabin are ladies of education and refinement, and highly respected, and during the lives of their parents were much devoted to them. Referring to the death of Miss Chloe G. Sabin, which occurred Jan. 12, 1871, it was said: "In the death of this lovely young lady society, as well as kindred, has sustained a heavy loss. 'Death loves a shining mark,' and here he has taken the brightest and best. She early chose the ways of wisdom, and they have been to her paths of pleasantness and peace, but she has gone from us leaving her childhood's hearth and home desolate. Yet will her rare beauty, her gentle nature, her unconscious purity of character, remain in our memory with a fragrance which time cannot destroy."

Col. Sabin died in his eighty-fifth year, and the Putnam Patriot of Nov. 16, 1894, spoke of him as follows: "The familiar face and stalwart form of Col. Horace Sabin, who died at his home in Pomfret Oct. 30, will be missed by a wide circle of friends and acquaintances. He was a man of great mental and physical energy. He has long been identified with many of the prominent enterprises of his time and State.

"As an agriculturist he was perhaps most widely known, and upon branches of this calling, especially in dairying, he was competent authority. For over fifty years he was a member of the board of education, where he made his influence for good felt in the public schools.

"When he was eighteen years of age he entered the State militia, rising gradually from one command to another until he attained the rank of colonel, the title by which he has been affectionately known to the people with whom he has so heartily mingled. He was chief marshal at the burial of Gen. Nathaniel Lyon, in September, 1861. He came within one vote of being chosen general of the State troops.

"Col. Sabin will be widely missed. He was in the eighty-fifth year of his age, and until within a year of his death he had always been a very active man in business and society."

In the resolutions of Putnam Lodge, F. & A. M., of South Woodstock, passed at the time of Col. Sabin's death, it was said that he was with one exception the oldest member of Putnam Lodge. "He has been an active and consistent member of this lodge for thirty-three years, a man of exceptionally good judgment, whose wise counsels were often sought, and we shall miss his genial face.

"Resolved, That while we humbly submit to our loss, his family mourn the departure of a kind husband and indulgent father, and in their hour of grief and sorrow they have the sympathy of Putnam Lodge."

Mrs. Sabin died at her residence Feb. 21, 1898, at the advanced age of eighty-nine years. She had lived in Pomfret all her life, having been born on the place where she lived and died, and was for years one of Pomfret's most prominent ladies.

Henry Sabin, previously mentioned as third in the family of Col. Horace Sabin, enlisted during the Civil war in the 1st Conn. Cavalry, and was discharged on account of ill health. Like his father, he was a member of Putnam Lodge, F. & A. M. On Jan. 9, 1864, he married Mary E. Burton, who died Dec. 17, 1870, the mother of three children: Harry Burton, who died in infancy, Feb. 21, 1865; John Grosvenor, born Dec. 1, 1865, who is now married and resides in Worcester, Mass.; and Everett Chandler, born Sept. 9, 1867, who is married and lives in Ayer, Mass. For his second wife Henry Sabin married, Nov. 19, 1873, Myra Leavenworth Harvey, and they had two children: Ralph Harvey, born in Meriden, Conn., June 19, 1877, and another son, born Nov. 27, 1878, who died Nov. 29th, same year. The former is a graduate of Woodstock Academy, studied civil engineering at Maine University, and has been engaged in Mexico and the West; his home is at Pomfret, Conn. Mrs. Myra L. Sabin died Dec. 2, 1878, and in 1886 Mrs. Sabin married Bertha I. Ely, who survives him.

EDWARD DEXTER, one of the highly respected citizens and retired merchants of Danielson, Windham Co., Conn., descends from one of the oldest families of New England.

(I) Rev. Gregory Dexter was born in 1601 in Olney, in the county of Northampton, England, and while still a young man went to London where he became a printer, and in connection with a man named Coleman, carried on a stationer's business. Mr. Dexter was connected with the Baptist ministry in London. He was also the friend and transatlantic correspondent of Roger Williams, this friendship being responsible for Mr. Dexter's immigration to America and his later association with Roger Williams. He became a distinguished character in the colony. Mr. Dexter was one of the parties named in the charter in 1663, and for a number of years was one of the town clerks of Providence and was useful on account of his excellent education. He was the fourth pastor of the First Baptist Church in Providence, having been called to succeed Rev. Mr. Wickenden about 1650.

Rev. Gregory Dexter lived to be about ninety years old. He married Abigail Fuller and their children were; Stephen, James, John, Abigail and Peleg.

(II) Stephen Dexter, son of Rev. Gregory, born in 1647, married Mary Arnold and had one son, John. Stephen lived in Smithfield, R. I., and died in 1676.

(III) John Dexter, only son of Stephen, was born in 1670, married Mary Field, and they had these children: Naomi, Mary, John, Stephen, Jeremiah, Sarah, Lydia, William, Jonathan and Abigail.

(IV) John Dexter (2), son of John, was born in 1701 and married Mary Browne, their children being: Anna, Andrew, Gideon, Mary, Lydia, William, Phoebe, Waitstill, Jonathan and Sarah.

(V) Jonathan Dexter, son of John (2), was born in 1739, in Smithfield, R. I., and married Alice, daughter of Col. Stephen Lowe, of Warwick, R. I., and their children were: Mary, Joseph, Philip, Elizabeth, Christopher, Abigail, Alice, Sarah, Lydia, John and Anna. Joseph and Philip Dexter located in Killingly, Conn. The latter was born in 1766 in Smithfield, R. I., and married (first) Catherine Greene, and (second) Judith Williams, of Pomfret; he had two sons, George, born in 1802, and William, born in 1806. George married Cynthia Aldrich, had one son, Benjamin G., lived in Killingly and was a farmer. William married Eunice Park, of Thompson, Conn., and lived in Danielson and Pomfret. His children were Charles and John, the former a resident of Gilbertville, Mass.; the latter deceased, leaving two sons, William C., of Middletown, Conn., and Dr. Fred F., of Springfield, Massachusetts.

(VI) Joseph Dexter, grandfather of Edward Dexter, was born April 5, 1764, in Smithfield, R. I., and Nov. 3, 1785, he married Mary Allen, born April 18, 1763, a native of Cumberland, R. I., who died July 8, 1832. About 1785 Joseph and his brother came to Killingly, the first of the family, although his father in that year had purchased a tract of land there. This land is described in the deed which is still in the possession of Mr. Dexter of Danielson, and was located in the neighborhood familiarly known as Elmville; it consisted of two portions, one of 135 acres and the other of 225 acres. Both the brothers located on these lands, and the house of Joseph Dexter stood opposite the present brick mill. In 1802 he built a large house and in addition to being a thrifty farmer kept a tavern. The sign for this public house was placed on a shed directly across the street, and on one side of it was depicted a well-dressed man on horse-back, with the inscription, "I'm going to Law;" on the opposite of the sign appeared the picture of an old man in rags, under which was explained, "I've been to law and got my case." No explanation is given as to the attitude of the legal profession, on its horse-back journeyings, when this sign made its appearance.

Joseph Dexter discontinued tavern-keeping many years prior to his death, which occurred April 7, 1845, his wife having passed away July 8, 1832. Both are buried in the Westfield cemetery. In politics he was a Whig. The children born to them were nine in number. (1) Celia, born March 10, 1787, died Feb. 11, 1871; she married Ezekiel Spaulding, of Killingly, and had five children, Elvira, Joseph, Adeline, Eliza and Celia. (2) Abigail, born April 1, 1789, who died July 26, 1862, married Leban Fisher and lived in Killingly; their children were; Vaternan, Erastus, Emily and Abbie, all deceased. (3) Alce, born July 19, 1791, who died Dec. 19, 1880, married (first) James Bates and had a son Joseph, deceased, and married (second) Seth Chase. Her son, Joseph, had a son, George, of Hartford, and a daughter, Mrs. Ella Champlain, of Hartford. (4) Sarah A., who was born Oct. 18, 1793, and died March 14, 1848, married John Day, after whose father the village of Dayville was named. Their children, all deceased, were; Willard, Albert, Eliza, Herbert and Ann. (5) Mary, who was born Sept. 1, 1795, and died Jan. 11, 1866, married Thomas Elliott, of Thompson and their children were; Horace, Sally, Marvin D., Henry and Jane. (6) Jonathan, born June 16, 1797, died Oct. 18, 1872. (7) Eliza, born May 18, 1799, who died April 20, 1861, married David B. Carroll and in the latter years of their lives lived in Colchester, Conn. Their children, both deceased, were Jane and George. (8) Hasty, born March 26, 1802, who died Oct. 26, 1880, married George Danielson, after whose father the borough was named. Their two children died young. (9) Marvin, born Oct. 26, 1805, died June 1, 1879; he married Mary Ann Allen and their two children were: Abbie, who married Martin Crosby of Brooklyn, and had Henry and Mary; and John, married to Mary A. Clark, whose daughter Clara married Abner Young.

(VII) Jonathan Dexter, the father of Edward Dexter, of Danielson, grew up on the home place, as did his brother and sisters. His education was such as was afforded by the schools of that day. His house, built a little north of the one in which he was born, was on a part of the original purchase, and there he engaged in farming until within about ten years of his death, when he moved to the borough.

About 1841 Jonathan Dexter, in company with his brother Marvin, built the first cotton mill at Elmville. It was located on Whitstone Brook. Various parties engaged in manufacturing there, cotton twine was manufactured, the plant was in time enlarged by an addition of thirty-two feet and a widening of fifteen feet, and for a time woolen goods were made also. In 1874 the mill was burned. It was then nominally owned by others, but as no money had been paid, the insurance was turned over to the original owners. In politics Jonathan Dexter was originally a Whig and later a Republican and served the town of Killingly as clerk. He was highly esteemed as a man of strong Christian character, upright and honest in the best sense of the term.

Jonathan Dexter was married Jan. 13, 1827, to Sophia Foote, a native of Glastonbury, Conn., born Nov. 9, 1800, who died March 6, 1875. Both belonged to the Westfield Congregational Church. To this union were born two children, namely: Mary, born Sept. 9, 1828, a resident of Danielson; and Edward, born Aug. 22, 1831.

(VIII) Edward Dexter, only son of Jonathan Dexter, was born on the home place at Elmville. His early education was acquired in the district school, and later he spent five years at Westfield Academy, at a time when at least seventy pupils were in attendance. Until he was eighteen years old Mr. Dexter passed every winter in school, but after that time he entered upon the regular operation of the farm, continuing until he was thirty-seven years of age. In 1869 he came to Danielson and engaged in teaming for two years, during the first year erecting the first residence on Reynolds street.

In April, 1871, Mr. Dexter bought the furniture and house furnishing business of George D. Bates; in 1873 the furniture business of H. M. Danielson & Co.; in 1876 he added undertaking, at that time buying out Oliver W. Bowen. The store first occupied was located near the depot and there he remained for five years. In the spring of 1877 he moved into the Music Hall building where he remained five years, but in 1881 he erected the handsome and substantial "Dexter Block," with dimensions 56x85 feet, two stories and basement, and upon its completion, the Library Association gave such a "house-warming" that the sum of $312 was added to that fund. In the spring of 1882 Mr. Dexter moved into his new quarters, occupying the ground floor and basement, two-thirds of the second and all of the third floor. Mr. Dexter latterly added a carpet department, and continued successfully in business until Dec. 5, 1896. Deciding at this time to limit his activity, he sold the business to Walter H. Twitchell, who ten months later disposed of it to its present proprietor, John F. Bennett.

During his twenty-seven years of business life in Danielson, Mr. Dexter has met with well deserved success, for his methods were those of an upright dealer and his judgment such as to recognize and cater to the demands of his trade. In the esteem of his fellow-citizens he stands very high and his services have been in demand as administrator of a large number of estates and at the present time he is trustee and conservator of several persons. Since 1886 he has been president of the Westfield Cemetery Association, and was the first president of the Danielson branch of the Co-operative Savings Society of Connecticut. In politics he is a Republican, but has never mingled in political work. He served as one of the directors of the Davis Park Association before it was turned over to the borough. For the past three years he has been a director of the public library and is now secretary of the building committee of the Edwin H. Bugbee Memorial Building, that gentleman having bequeathed $15,000 in his will, which was to be used for a memorial building for a public library, and the structure is now in course of erection.

In 1864 Mr. Dexter married Margaret Clark, of Colchester, daughter of George and Sophia (Taylor) Clark, the former of whom was a son of Ezra Clark. Both Mr. and Mrs. Dexter are members of the Westfield Congregational Church, and for a number of years he belonged to the Society committee.

Mr. Dexter has been public-spirited and ever anxious for the progress and advancement of his community. In addition to his other business interests he has been active in the sale of real estate, and has done much attractive building in his locality, serving to enhance the value of much property.

ATWOOD. John Atwood, the great-great-grandfather of J. Arthur Atwood and J. Walter Atwood, of Wauregan, Windham county, Conn., was a resident of Scituate, R. I., where is recorded his marriage to Roby Kimball, of Scituate. John Atwood served as sergeant in Capt. Joseph Kimball's Company, his name appearing on the rolls of that company, dated March 8, 1777. This company marched from Scituate Feb. 7, 1777, and was in service thirty days. Later John Atwood was sergeant in Capt. Perk's Company, of the First Division, Col. John Matthewson's Regiment, in the expedition against Rhode Island. [See Rev. Rolls of R. I., Vol. III, page 82.] John Atwood died in October, 1802. His children were as follows: Kimball, born Dec. 5, 1781; Lydia, who married George B. Hutchins; Dorcas, who married Waterman Field; Abigail, who married Joseph Butler; Rhoda, who married a Randall; Roby, who married James Andrews; and Levina, who married Wilbur Fisk.

Kimball Atwood, son of John, was through life a resident of Scituate, R. I., and both he and his wife were buried in a family graveyard in that place. On April 4, 1802, he married Salinda Colgrove, born April 20, 1786, and they had a family of seven children, as follows: Dorcas, born June 10, 1803, who died young; John, born Feb. 16, 1805; William C., born March 19, 1807, who died Sept. 29, 1895, (he married Juliana Andrews, born Nov. 5, 1806, who died March 24, 1861); Sally, born June 22, 1809, who died young; Sylindia, born Sept. 25, 1811, who died young; Kimball T., born Dec. 2, 1819; and Joanna Fisk, born Aug. 24, 1826.

John Atwood, son of Kimball, and grandfather of J. Arthur and J. Walter Atwood, of Wauregan, was born Feb. 16, 1805, and died July 31, 1865, aged sixty years, five months. His wife was Julia A. Battey, born Feb. 24, 1805, who died Aug. 31, 1872, aged sixty-seven years, six months, seven days. Their children were: James S., born March 17, 1832, who died Feb. 20, 1885; William Allen, born Aug. 4, 1833, who died June 26, 1881; Henry C., who died Oct. 11, 1836, aged fifteen months; and Mary Elizabeth, who died June 25, 1843, aged five years.

Grandfather John Atwood came to Killingly, Conn., shortly after his marriage, and entered the Williamsville mill, which was then owned by Caleb Williams, who had erected it in 1827. This mill afterward came into the possession of S. and W. Foster. In 1849 John Atwood, who had been identified with the business ever since locating in Killingly, became a part owner, and continued active in the same until his death. His grandchildren, Henry C. Atwood, W. E. Atwood (of Williamsville) and J. Arthur Atwood and J. Walter Atwood (of Wauregan), are still the owners of this mill.

JAMES S. ATWOOD, son of John, and father of J. Arthur and J. Walter, was born in Scituate, R. I., March 17, 1832, and died Feb. 20, 1885, at Wauregan, Conn. After receiving a liberal education, at Smithville Seminary, in Scituate, and Woodstock Academy, in Woodstock, he entered his father's cotton mill in Williamsville, town of Killingly, and there mastered every detail of cotton manufacturing, serving in the various positions from bobbin-boy to general manager, and thus making himself perfectly familiar with the construction and working of every machine in the mill.

J. G. Atwood

On Sept. 17, 1855, Mr. Atwood married Julia A. M. Haskell, of Cumberland, R. I., a daughter of Willard Haskell, extended mention of whose family is made below. The family born to this marriage consisted of three sons, namely: William Hamilton, who was born Nov. 8, 1859, and died Jan. 18, 1862; and James Arthur and John Walter, twins, born May 18, 1864.

In 1853 James S. Atwood became connected with the mill interests at Wauregan, Conn. The mill privilege at this point was purchased by A. D. Lockwood and others, and in 1853-54 a structure 253 feet in length and 49 feet in width, three stories in height, was erected for the manufacture of plain and fancy cotton cloth. Business became so prosperous that in 1858-59 the length of the building was doubled, and in 1866-67 a new building, 500 feet in length, and four stories high, was built on the other side of the trench, and the two parallel buildings were connected in the middle by a building 167 feet long, extending across from one to the other. This made a total length in three parts of about 1,250 feet. This great factory is built of rough stone, quarried in the vicinity. Water from the Quinebaug is carried through five turbine wheels, giving what is estimated as equal to 1,050 horse-power. In addition the building contains two steam engines of 750 horse-power, which are made use of as occasion requires.

At the opening of the mills Mr. Lockwood was agent, but he soon afterward disposed of his interests, and Mr. Atwood, who had been superintendent from the start, was made agent, and remained in that position until his death. The financial success of this great industry can be directly traced to the supervision of James S. Atwood, who was there when the first machine was put in place, and witnessed the business expand to its present magnitude. Although Mr. Atwood was financially interested in mills at Williamsville and at Taftville, he always made his home in Wauregan. He took great pride in the village which he saw, under the fostering care and ownership of the company, develop into one of the model hamlets of the vicinity, where the employes could find attractive and comfortable homes near their daily tasks, and lived to see the newly planted trees expand their limbs and foliage until they almost screened the great mill from sight.

The large concern known as the Ponemah Mills, at Taftville, Conn., was an enterprise in which he also took pride, and in which his managing hand was very evident. It was built after his own plan and under his direct supervision, and, like the business at Wauregan, enjoyed phenomenal success. At his time the manufacture of the fine goods turned out by these mills was in the nature of an experiment, and it was largely owing to Mr. Atwood's good judgment, careful oversight and ability to adapt means to the desired ends that success crowned the work. Of these mills he was agent from the beginning until his death. His judgment was reliable, and he was not one to risk the money of the corporations he represented in any foolish experiments. During one of the changes which are liable to occur in business enterprises in this country, it became necessary for him to assume control of the mills at Williamsville, in which he and his brother William A. were largely interested, and his financial credit and wise judgment carried them through difficulties that might have proven disastrous in less careful hands. Few men have the ability wisely to direct so many large and separate interests.

In political life Mr. Atwood was identified with the Republican party, and he was a useful member of the State Legislature in 1862 and again in 1868, and a Presidential elector (on the Republican ticket) in the campaign of 1884. While Mr. Atwood was acknowledged to be the peer of practical manufacturers and the possessor of large means, he was a man of most simple tastes, without the shadow of a desire for display, on the other hand always hiding his ability, with a modesty which was as rare as it was commendable. While he despised shams and hollow pretense, he was kind in judgment, tolerant of the imperfections of others, ready to overlook mistakes, and ever ready to see in every man a friend and brother. Upon his open countenance he bore the stamp of true worth, and no one feared to trust him implicitly. The poorest and humblest member of the community could always approach James S. Atwood with the assurance that he would receive the same respectful attention which would be accorded one possessing high position or great wealth. His heart throbbed in sympathy with the sorrowing and the suffering, and his hand was ever open in relief. No one will ever know the extent of his benevolences. Irreproachable in character, gentlemanly in bearing toward every individual, it was no wonder that every one with whom he came into contact felt that he could say, "He is my friend." Even prior to his confession of religious faith he took the deepest interest in all that pertained to the moral and spiritual welfare of the community, and was foremost in sustaining the institutions of the Gospel at home and abroad.

It was through Mr. Atwood's efforts that the Congregational Church in Wauregan was erected, a structure which is a gem of architectural beauty and a fitting memorial of one who sought not alone his own but also his neighbor's welfare and happiness. In his ripe manhood, with the simplicity and faith of a little child, he laid all his varied endowments, his honors, his possessions, at the feet of the Savior of mankind, and putting his hand into that of the Divine Leader said, "I will follow thee wherever thou goest." In this work he found joy and contentment. It was in January, 1878, that he came into the church by open confession of faith, and from that time to the end he gave to its spiritual interests his thoughtful sympathy and unstinted help. Such a life—so pure, so genial, so intensely loyal to truth and duty—is a benediction everywhere, and the world is poorer when it departs.

JAMES ARTHUR ATWOOD, son of James S., was born May 18, 1864, at Wauregan, Conn., and began his educational life in the village schools. As a student later at Phillips Academy, Andover, he displayed unusual ability, and graduated from that famous institution in 1881, at the head of his class. His next scholastic experience was a course in the Sheffield Scientific School, New Haven, from which he graduated in 1885, prepared with trained faculties to become a valuable assistant to his father. Like the latter, he familiarized himself with the practical working of the mill, and then entered the office, taking charge. In 1889 he was appointed agent, and still occupies that responsible position, having since March, 1897, held the same relation to the Quinebaug Mills, an institution which employs 700 hands. The two mills (the latter at Danielson), located, as they are, within a few miles of each other, are given his personal supervision, the results of which may be seen in the continued prosperity of both great industries. Mr. Atwood has been identified with various other important concerns: The Williamsville Mfg. Co., of which he has been president; the Wauregan Co., of Wauregan, Conn., of which he has been a director since 1889; the Samoset Co., of Valley Falls, R. I., of which he is a director; the Ponemah Mills at Taftville, of which he was a director for many years; and the Sterling Dyeing & Finishing Co., of Sterling, of which he was also a director, and which in 1901 was sold to the United States Finishing Co.

While Mr. Atwood is fitted, by natural gifts, education and social and business prominence, not only to adorn high public office but to also become a very useful member of a legislative body, he prefers a business life free from political cares. He is a staunch Republican, and interested in local affairs, but not to the extent of holding office. The only secret order to which he is attached is his college fraternity, Delta Psi.

On Dec. 11, 1888, Mr. Atwood was married to Miss Helen Louise, daughter of Philip and Helen (Fenner) Mathewson. To this union have come two children, namely: J. Arthur, Jr., born May 5, 1890; and Dorothy, born March 27, 1893.

GEN. JOHN WALTER ATWOOD, son of James S. Atwood, was born at Wauregan, Conn., May 18, 1864. Completing the public school course at Wauregan, he entered Phillips Academy at Andover, Mass., and later the Sheffield Scientific School of Yale College. Like his twin brother, he then entered the Wauregan Mills, in order to thoroughly learn the details of cotton manufacturing. In 1888 he was made superintendent of the mills, which position he efficiently fills at the present time. Mr. Atwood also owns other large manufacturing interests and has done much toward making Wauregan one of the most prosperous and attractive manufacturing villages in the State.

Prior to his election to the State Legislature, in 1899, Gen. Atwood, although an active Republican, and a leader in the councils of his party, had always declined office, choosing to be known as a great manufacturer rather than a public official. However, he was a valuable member of the important committee on Appropriations while in the Legislature, and won a large circle of firm friends at the Capitol. He was commissioned commissary general on the staff of Gov. Lounsbury until July 1, 1899, when, on the resignation of H. O. Averill, he was made paymaster general, to which office he was re-appointed by Gov. McLean. Gen. Atwood is one of the most popular citizens of his section of the State, his high personal character, pure statesmanship and business ability commanding the confidence and esteem of all who know him.

On June 1, 1887, Gen. Atwood was united in marriage with Miss Ethel Alexander, daughter of Luther D. and Amelia (Young) Alexander. The two children born to Gen. and Mrs. Atwood are: Helen Estelle and Beatrice.

THE HASKELL FAMILY. The maternal line of J. Arthur and Gen. J. Walter Atwood, of Plainfield, reaches far back in the settlement of New England. Roger and William Haskell, brothers, were among the early immigrants to these shores. Roger, born about 1613, was of Salem, Mass., coming as early as 1637, and was later a resident in what became Beverly, where he died in 1667.

(I) William Haskell, born about 1617, was at Gloucester, Mass., in 1642. On Nov. 16, 1643, he married Mary, daughter of Walter Tybbot, and both of them died in August, 1693. William Haskell was a distinguished citizen of Gloucester, Mass., and left a numerous posterity in that town. He was a selectman several years, and representative in the General Assembly six times in the course of twenty years, and also held military office, being lieutenant and captain. He was also a deacon in the church.

(II) William Haskell (2), son of William, born Aug. 26, 1644, married, July 3, 1667, Mary Brown Walker, daughter of William Brown; she took the name of her stepfather, Henry Walker. Mr. Haskell died June 5, 1708, and his widow passed away in 1715. Of Mr. Haskell's twelve children, four sons, William, Joseph, Henry and Jacob, survived the father.

(III) Jacob Haskell, son of William (2), born Jan. 15, 1691, married, Dec. 31, 1716, Abigail Marcy. He became a deacon in the Second Church at Gloucester, and died Aug. 6, 1756, his wife dying April 10, 1778. Six sons survived the father, namely: Jacob, Abner, Alexander, Israel and Amos, twins, and Zebulon, all of whom, with the exception of Abner, married in Gloucester. Of these, Alexander and his wife were dismissed to Attleboro Church in 1756.

J. A. Woodward

(IV) Abner Haskell, son of Jacob, was born in Gloucester, Mass., but evidently did not remain in his native town. We have not succeeded in finding a record of his marriage, though in the records of Cumberland, R. I., we find John Haskell, son of Abner, of Gloucester, thus showing that he married and that his descendants located in Cumberland, R. I. He also had sons Samuel and Comfort, who located in Cumberland.

(V) John Haskell, the great-grandfather of Messrs. Atwood, of Wauregan, married, Oct. 1, 1780 (recorded in Cumberland, R. I.), Mary, daughter of John Darling, of Bellingham. Their issue (recorded in Cumberland) was as follows: Olive, born April 10, 1781; Lydia, born June 2, 1783; Abner, born Jan. 8, 1785; John, born Aug. 23, 1787; Hannah, born Jan. 20, 1790; Willard, born Oct. 14, 1792; and Mary. Willard died Feb. 27, 1865.

(VI) Willard Haskell was married May 28, 1817, to Lydia Fretter, born Oct. 15, 1798, daughter of Morris and Sarah (Tingley) Fretter, and their children were: Willard, born July 28, 1819, died Aug. 31, 1822; Mary Ann Marsylvia, born May 13, 1821, died July 19, 1825; Lydia Lamira, born Dec. 12, 1822, died July 23, 1825; Sarah Samantha, born Aug. 4, 1824; Willard (2), born Oct. 9, 1826, died July 11, 1829; Emelia Alamanza, born Oct. 17, 1828, died June 13, 1830; Julia Ann Marie, born May 8, 1830; Lydia Fretter, born July 3, 1833; and Bradford, born Aug. 28, 1838, died May 27, 1840.

LYMAN WALBRIDGE CRANE (deceased) through a long, honorable and useful life was an important and prominent resident of Stafford, Tolland county. His birth took place Dec. 18, 1818, in Bound Brook, N. J., and his death Nov. 10, 1890, at Stafford Springs, Conn. The family is one of the early established ones of the State, its record reaching to 1655 when (I) Benjamin Crane, the fourth great-grandfather, was a resident of Wethersfield, Conn. Benjamin Crane was born in 1630 and was made a freeman at Wethersfield, May 12, 1658, but in the following year he removed to Hadley, Mass., where he erected his residence and tanneries and became a prominent citizen.

The record reads that on April 23, 1655, Benjamin Crane married Mary Backus, daughter of William and Sarah (Charles) Backus, and to this union were born these children: Benjamin, Jonathan, Joseph, John, Elijah, Abraham, Jacob, Israel and Mary. The wife died July 8, 1717, while Benjamin had passed away May 31, 1691. He carried on a tanning business about one mile below the village, on the Middletown road on the way to Rocky Hill, on the Connecticut River, and the spot has long been known as "Old Cranes Tannery Place." Benjamin was succeeded in the business by his son John.

(II) Lieut. Jonathan Crane, son of Benjamin, was born Dec. 1, 1658, at Wethersfield, Conn., and Dec. 19, 1678, married Deborah Griswold, daughter of Francis Griswold, born in May, 1661, who died in 1704. Her father, Francis Griswold, was in Windsor in 1649 and he was one of the first settlers at Windham, erecting the first sawmill in the town. By trade he was a blacksmith. The children born to Lieut. Jonathan Crane and his wife were, Sarah, Jonathan, John, Mary, Hannah, Isaac, Joseph, Elizabeth and Deborah, twins, and Abigail. Lieut. Jonathan obtained his rank in the militia and was always known by his military title.

(III) John Crane, son of Lieut. Jonathan, was born Oct. 1, 1687, at Windham, Conn., and married (first) Sarah Spencer, Sept. 16, 1708, who died Sept. 15, 1715, and (second) Prudence Belding, April 18, 1716. His children were John, Abiah, Eunice, Elisham, Sybil, Hezekiah, Prudence, Lemuel, Hannah, Rhoda and Adonijah. John lived near the place called Fort Hill, where his father gave him land Jan. 18, 1710-11.

(IV) Hezekiah Crane, son of John Crane, was born March 31, 1721, at Windham, Conn., and was married April 2, 1746, to Mary Rockwell. She died Oct. 7, 1809, aged eighty-three years, while he died Jan. 3, 1805, aged eighty-four years. Although a native of Windham, Hezekiah purchased land in Bolton, Conn., where he was living in 1754. On Jan. 7, 1778, he enlisted in Capt. Roswell Grant's company of volunteers, in Johnson's regiment, serving a few months and participating in an engagement at Providence, R. I. On Feb. 1, 1805, his will was probated at East Windsor, Conn. His children were Hezekiah, David, Rachel, Rhoda, Rufus, Aaron and Anna.

(V) Aaron Crane, son of Hezekiah, was born May 8, 1756, at East Windsor, Conn., and died July 3, 1826, in Long Meadow, Mass., aged seventy years, having served in the War of the Revolution. He was a private in Capt. Jonathan Johnson's company, Col. Philip B. Bradley's battalion, and Wadsworth's brigade, enlisting June 22, 1776, and was honorably discharged Dec. 28, 1776. On June 16, 1778, he married Mary, born Aug. 14, 1754, daughter of Thomas and Jane Barber. She died April 17, 1817. He married (second) Mrs. Dorcas Munn, of Springfield and they resided at Long Meadow. His children were Polly, Aaron, Timothy, Ziba, Eli, Eli (2), Jane, Elihu, Hezekiah and Almira.

(VI) Timothy Crane, son of Aaron Crane and father of Lyman Walbridge Crane, late of Stafford, was born Jan. 28, 1783, at East Windsor, Conn., and died Nov. 27, 1830, at Russell, Mass. On May 5, 1814, he purchased land on which stood the carding mill of Jesse Bliss, and in association with his brother Eli, he engaged in what was then styled the "clothier" business, and he was also a wool dyer. On March 10, 1813, he married Matilda Needham, born Nov. 20, 1790, a daughter of Capt. Robert Needham, of Stafford, who married a Miss Wood. Matilda N. Crane died Dec. 11, 1863, at Windsor Locks, Conn. The children born to these parents were: Matilda Amelia, born Aug. 22, 1814, who married William P. Mowry of Windsor Locks, and died March 17, 1903, in Mechanicsville, N. Y.; Edwin Timothy, who died Sept. 1, 1852; Lyman W., of this sketch; Mary Jane F., who died Oct. 6, 1846; and Catherine C., who now resides at No. 56 Florence street, Springfield, Mass., and who never married.

(VII) The late Lyman W. Crane, son of Timothy, was the seventh in the line of American ancestry. As stated, his birth was in the State of New Jersey, but while he was still a lad, his parents removed to Wilbraham, Mass., and there he had good educational advantages. At the age of fourteen years he went to Long Meadow, Mass., and worked at farming for a time, but in 1838 he came to Stafford, Conn. Here he was employed in the store of Col. William A. Foster, with whom he remained for one year and then returned to Wilbraham in order to take an academic course.

In 1843, in company with Major Freeman M. Brown, now of Hartford, he opened a store at Stafford Hollow for the sale of merchandise, and continued there until 1846, when he suffered from a robbery which deprived him of almost his whole stock of goods. Following this disaster, he removed to Windsor Locks, Conn., and there conducted for some years a very successful mercantile business. In 1850 he returned to Stafford Springs and in partnership with Jeremiah Kingsbury, purchased the mercantile business of Andrew W. Porter, and the firm name became Crane & Kingsbury. In 1853 Mr. Crane purchased the interest of Mr. Kingsbury, continued to carry on the business and was very successful. The location was on Main street on the site of the present "Central House." The flood of 1877, which was a memorable occasion for many of the business firms of the locality, carried away his store and entire stock, by which he sustained a loss of $10,000. Mr. Crane was a man not easily discouraged, and when the debris of the flood had been cleared away, he at once opened a store in the New National Bank building where he yearly became more prosperous until the close of his life.

Early in life Mr. Crane was a Whig, but upon the formation of the Republican party he became connected with it and supported its principles until his death. His tastes were never in the direction of political honors and he was emphatic in his refusals to accept various positions of public trust, urged for his acceptance. A thorough business man, he gave it his attention and never permitted outside matters to interfere with what he regarded his duty to himself, his family and the community. He was identified with a number of the financial institutions of Stafford. In 1854 he was one of the incorporators of the Stafford National Bank, and in 1855, of the Stafford Springs Savings Bank, was a director in both, and continued to serve as such on the board of the latter until the repeal of the old law. In 1858 on the organization of the Savings Bank of Stafford Springs, he became a director, the stock and deposits of the old bank having been turned over to the new one. When the Stafford Savings Bank was incorporated in 1872, he became one of the incorporators and served as a director until 1877, when he was elected president, and served in that capacity until 1885.

Mr. Crane was very active in promoting the interests of Grace Protestant Episcopal Church, and was a large donator to and liberal supporter of the same, generously giving the lot on Grant avenue upon which now stands the pleasant rectory. Mrs. Crane donated the pipe organ which stands as a monument to the memory of one of the most devoted of churchmen.

On Nov. 3, 1846, Mr. Crane married Harriet Swift, third daughter of Billings Grant, Esq., of Ellington, Conn. Mrs. Crane survived her husband five years, and died, leaving no issue.

While Lyman W. Crane was essentially a business man, he was much more. Conspicuous as was his ability in that line, it did not overshadow his influence in public movements or his hearty participation in the things which worked for the improvement of his community. Mr. Crane was always actively concerned in all charitable and humane enterprises and was ever ready to contribute both time and money. He was a good citizen and an upright man, estimable in all relations of life.

FRANCIS B. SKINNER, the town clerk, treasurer and registrar of Vital Statistics in the town of Vernon, Tolland county, is the only male representative of this branch of the Skinner family. He is a popular and estimable gentleman, and the associations of many years have endeared him to a host of friends. Dr. Alden Skinner, his father, in his time occupied a prominent position as a practitioner in Vernon.

The Skinner and Nash families, both of which claim Mr. Skinner as a descendant, were old families in New England. The maternal grandfather of Mr. Skinner was Ebenezer Nash, Jr., the first manufacturer of satinet in Rockville. Francis B. Skinner is in the eighth generation of the Nash family, and his line is as follows: Thomas Nash, Lieut. Timothy, Lieut. John, Timothy, Ebenezer, Ebenezer, Jr., Almira and F. B. Skinner.

Elijah Skinner, Jr., the paternal grandfather of F. B. Skinner, was a farmer, and his house is yet standing in Vernon. In 1797 he was married to Miss Mary Hunt, of Vernon, and became the father of three children: Alden; Warren, of whom all trace was lost in his early manhood; and Mary, who married Dr. Horatio Dow.

Alden Skinner was born in Vernon, in 1799, received his education in the home schools, and early displayed a notable spirit of push and energy. He studied medicine with Dr. Horatio Dow, and later with Dr. Gurdon Thompson, of Tolland, attending medical lectures in New Haven, and receiving his license to practice in 1822. The beginning of his medical career was made in Willington, which was his home for seventeen years. In September, 1839, he purchased the location of Dr. Talcott, of Vernon Centre, where he had an extensive practice for twenty-two years in and around the town. In 1855 he moved to Rockville to spend his declining years. He was indeed a doctor of the "old school," believing in strong remedies, such as blood letting, cathartics, antimony, mercury, quinine and arsenic, which he held had their place in the healing art. His reputation as a skilled physician and surgeon was good. In 1854 he was given the honorary degree of M. D., from the Pittsfield Medical College. Dr. Skinner was a member of the Tolland County Medical Society, and was one of its Fellows, serving as its president several years. He frequently represented this society in the American Medical Association. Dr. Skinner had a strong and vigorous intellect, with a tenacious memory, reading the best books of his profession and consulting the best literature of the times. As a preceptor of students of medicine he was especially successful and from time to time had many under his instruction; Dr. Goodrich, of Vernon, Dr. Fisk, of Broad Brook, Dr. Tuttle, who went into the West, Dr. Hammond and Dr. Lewis were among the number.

Dr. Skinner represented the town of Vernon in the General Assembly in 1850, and in 1862 he was sent to New Orleans as surgeon of the 25th C. V. I., and died at Baton Rouge, March 30, 1863, as the result of a severe attack of malarial-typhoid fever, after a sickness of but a few days. This disease was the result of exposure at night in one of the bayous, while on his way to the assault on Port Hudson. His remains now rest in Grove Hill cemetery at Rockville. In early life he was a Whig, and then became a member of the American, or "Know-Nothing," party. In 1820 he joined the Masonic order. The Alden Skinner Camp at Rockville bears his name, and attests the honor in which it is held in the order of Sons of Veterans.

Dr. Skinner was married, Dec. 9, 1824, to Miss Almira Nash, who was born June 3, 1802, in Ellington, a daughter of Ebenezer, Jr., and Persis (Brigham) Nash. She was the sixth in a family of twelve children. Her father was born in 1770 in Ellington, and in his time was a prominent and respected citizen of what is now Rockville. During the war of 1812, he made wood screens, but this was unprofitable, and in 1814 he introduced the making of satinets into the town of Vernon, and began the manufacture of satinet with two cards and a few hand looms. Some machinery was placed in the "L" part of his dwelling which stood near the bridge, at Spring street. This mill was destroyed by fire, and a new company was formed, consisting of Mr. Nash, John Mather and Lebbeus B. Tinker. This was the whole woolen interest in Rockville until 1821. Mr. Nash was an acting magistrate of the county in after years. He died June 28, 1822, and his widow lived to be over ninety years of age, dying at St. Albans, Vt., at the home of one of her daughters. Mrs. Skinner was buried in Grove Hill cemetery, Rockville, in 1887. She was a member of the Congregational Church, and her home was a favored resort of the young people.

The remote ancestor of the Nash family was Thomas Nash, who came to Boston in 1637, and the following year removed to New Haven. The Nash family in Ellington traces its descent from Timothy Nash, who was born in 1699 in Hadley, Mass., and in 1722 was married to Prudence Smith. They lived at Long Meadow, Mass., where their children were born; Elizabeth, Phineas, Prudence, Judah, Joel, Abigail, Timothy, Jr., and Ebenezer. In 1744 this family removed to Ellington, settling on what is now known as the Dr. Steele place. There Mr. Nash was a deacon in the Congregational Church, and died in 1756. His widow married Deacon Ichabod Hinkley, and died in Somers, Connecticut.

Ebenezer Nash, born in 1744 at Long Meadow, Mass., married Susan Hill, of North Bolton, Conn., born in East Hartford in 1749; they settled in Ellington and became the parents of seven sons and four daughters, of whom Ebenezer, Jr., was the oldest child. Ebenezer, Jr., was a man of integrity and force of character, holding many town offices, and was a member of the convention which ratified the constitution of the United States. He died in Ellington in 1823, and his widow in 1834. He was the maternal grandfather of F. B. Skinner, and was born June 4, 1770, in Ellington.

The children of Dr. Alden and Almira Skinner were five in number. (1) Benjamin Smith Barton, born July 7, 1826, had just begun the study of medicine when the disease which was then called lung fever attacked him, and he died March 28, 1843. (2) Sarah Sophia, born Dec. 11, 1828, died Nov. 20, 1854. (3) Harlin Nash, born Jan. 21, 1831, was sutler of the famous 25th Conn. Volunteers. After the war he went South, and was the silent partner of L. B. Plimpton, of Hartford, in the cotton growing business, and was overseer of the old Joe Davis plantation in Mississippi, along the river; he died Nov. 16, 1866, in Bolivar, Miss., on the plantation of Gov. Humphrey. His remains now rest in the Grove Hill cemetery at Rockville. (4) Alden DeWitt, born July 21, 1833, at Amboy, Ill., was employed as a clerk in a dry goods store, and died there in 1856. (5) Francis B.

Francis Burdett Skinner was born Sept. 4, 1835, in Willington, Conn., and was but a child when his parents removed to Vernon, Conn., where he was reared, and received his education in the common schools. He attended school a year at Clarenceville, Canada, and two terms at Phillips Academy, Exeter, N. H., which ended his schooling.

When he was twenty years old he entered the drug store of J. H. Woodward, of Hartford, where he remained two and a half years. For several years he was engaged in Boston, worked for Henry White at Roxbury, Mass., and came to Rockville in the fall of 1859. There he engaged in the drug business on the corner which is now the site of the Henry block, doing business there for nine years, and being succeeded by H. Townsend. For a number of years he was out of regular business, and then took a place as bookkeeper for L. E. Thompson. Subsequently he was assistant town clerk under G. W. West, succeeding him when a vacancy was created by his death. In 1890 he was elected town clerk, treasurer and registrar. In 1860 he cast his first presidential vote for Abraham Lincoln, having been prevented by sickness from voting in 1856.

Mr. Skinner is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and has reached the Adoniram Chapter. He resides in the old home, which came into his father's possession in 1858. He takes much delight in the outdoor world, and is quite fond of fishing and hunting.

MANSFIELD. This is a well-known and highly respected New England family, representatives of which we find in Putnam, Windham Co., in the large grocery firm of W. H. Mansfield & Co., among the city's most successful and substantial business men.

(I) Benjamin Mansfield, the great-great-grandfather of the present generation, is the first one of the family of whom there is authentic record the only information concerning him being that he lived in Dudley, Mass., and married Eunice Fitts, who died Aug. 10, 1832, aged 94 years. (II) Their son Daniel was a farmer in the same town, familiarly known as "Deputy" Mansfield, and was a prominent and influential man in his day. He married and became the father of nine children, and died April 15, 1853, aged eighty-two years.

(III) Asahel Mansfield was born in Dudley, March 6, 1797, and died in Webster, Mass., March 2, 1865. His wife's name was Caroline Blodgett, who was born Oct. 28, 1804, in Vermont, and died March 9, 1868, in Webster. She was the daughter of Benjamin and Mary (Raddle) Blodgett, and she became the mother of the following children: Mary Ann, born April 1, 1825, in Webster (as were all the children), who married Asa W. Rice, a merchant of Millbury, Mass., and died May 5, 1849; William Henry, mentioned below; Constantine B., born March 14, 1829, who married Maria Johnson of Chelsea, Mass., was a clerk in a wholesale establishment in Boston for years, finally removing to California, where he died; Caroline Amelia, born Sept. 25, 1832, who married Nelson Towne, a native of Southbridge, Mass., and is now a widow in San Francisco; Evelina G., born June 26, 1835, who married May 13, 1858, Charles Francis Barnes, a sole leather sorter in Webster, Mass.; Lucius E., born March 1, 1838, who married Edna Walters, of Sutton, Mass., and is a shoe stitcher in Webster.

Asahel Mansfield was in early life a painter and also followed other occupations. He was a natural mechanic. He was a man of fine character, held many offices in Webster and was selectman a number of times. In politics he was a Democrat.

(IV) William Henry Mansfield was born May 2, 1827, in Dudley, Mass., and died March 21, 1886, in Putnam, Conn. On June 14, 1849, he married Julia M. White, who was born June 14, 1829, in Webster, Mass., and died June 30, 1896, in Putnam. This lady was the daughter of Esbon and Esther White, of Webster, and was the mother of the following children, all of whom were born in Webster: Edith M., born Sept. 24, 1850, who died May 24, 1852; William H.; Edward, born March 1, 1860, who died Dec. 7, 1862; Albert Luther, mentioned below. The father had attended the public schools of his native town during boyhood, and then went to Webster and entered a shoe factory as cutter, and later a clothing store as salesman for James Rawson. On June 1, 1874, he removed to Putnam and purchased the grocery store of Asbury Nichols, which he successfully conducted until his death, in 1886. He was a staunch supporter of the policies favored by the Republican party, and in religious matters affiliated with the Methodist Church.

(V) WILLIAM H. MANSFIELD. This gentleman is the eldest son of the above parents, born Nov. 14, 1852. He was given an excellent education, being grounded in the preliminary branches in the public schools of his native village. In the high school he prepared for Wilbraham Academy, where he attended two years and then finished with a business course at Howe's Business College, in Worcester. He began his career as a bookkeeper, and later officiated as clerk at the "Joslin House" in Webster. A desire to see the West led him to Chicago in 1872, where he spent a year and a half engaged as a cashier for the Chicago, Danville & Vincennes Railroad. This experience brought him promotion and the next three years were spent in the service of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy as head clerk of the general passenger department.

It was at this time that Mr. Mansfield began his married life, being joined in marriage in Chicago, May 9, 1876, to Anna Adele Hale. She was a daughter of Benjamin E. and Martha A. (Davis) Hale, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and was born July 8, 1848, her death occurring in Putnam, June 30, 1895; there were no children. She was a descendant of the old New England family of Hale, of whom the progenitors were Thomas and Samuel Hale, who settled in Hartford in 1637.

The day after his marriage Mr. Mansfield started back east where in Putnam he entered the grocery store of his father, in which business he has since been engaged. On his father's death in 1886, he and his brother, Albert L., continued the business under the firm name of Wm. H. Mansfield & Co.; the firm name is still retained, although Albert is not now an active partner, as he went into other business in 1901.

While not a public man in the sense of an office seeker, Mr. Mansfield has entered into the life of his adopted city with zest and has borne his share of the unpaid service which attaches to any municipality. For a number of years he has been one of Putnam's "ever ready" firemen, and was foreman of No. 3 for six years. Later he was selected first assistant engineer, a position which he held for three years; and Jan. 1, 1898, he was made chief of the fire department of the city, a position at once arduous and responsible, and which he is filling to the satisfaction of all his townsmen. Socially he is a member of two of the best fraternal organizations of the city, Quinebaug Lodge, No. 106, A. F. & A. M., and Putnam Lodge, No. 19, A. O. U. W. He votes the Republican ticket, and he and his wife are attendants of the Congregational Church.

Mr. Mansfield is a gentleman of refined tastes and an intelligent conception of what makes life of value, and while devoting himself assiduously to business, he has yet taken time to see some of his own country. Of one of these trips he has a very pleasant remembrance. In 1889, his health being rather poor, he took a trip to California, going west overland and returning by way of the Pacific Mail Steamship line and the Panama railroad. The trip consumed eleven weeks in all and he returned not only improved in health, but with an increased feeling of loyalty and admiration for his native land. The lady who now presides over the beautiful home of Mr. Mansfield, and whom he married Nov. 28, 1899, was Helen Augusta, the accomplished daughter of Abner C. and Anna D. (Willis) Winslow, of Putnam. A sturdy baby boy, William Herman, Jr., has come to bless their home, born March 3, 1901. It will be of interest to note somewhat fully in this connection the Winslow family, of which Mrs. Mansfield is a lineal descendant.

As a Daughter of the Revolution Mrs. Mansfield reads her "title clear" to membership in that noble organization, and traces her lineage much further back than that sanguinary struggle. Her father, Abner Clinton Winslow, born Sept. 19, 1848, in Putnam, married, Jan. 24, 1872, Anna D. Willis, of Block Island, R. I. The two children were Helen A., born Aug. 29, 1873, and Frank Hannett, Nov. 3, 1879. These children are of the eighth generation in descent from Kenelm Winslow, through Job, John, Abner, Philip, Abner and Abner Clinton. (I) Kenelm, a brother of Gov. Edward Winslow, was the third son of Edward Winslow and was born April 30, 1599. He came to Plymouth about 1629, was admitted freeman, Jan. 1, 1632-3, removed to Marshfield about 1641 and received a grant of land in that township, called "Green's Harbor." He held many offices, and was deputy to the General Court eight years. He married in June, 1634, Ellen, widow of John Adams, of Plymouth. Their children were: Kenelm, Ellen, Nathaniel and Job. (II) Job Winslow was born in 1641, in Droitwich, Worcestershire, England, and was an early resident of Swansea, Mass., and later of Freetown. At the breaking out of King Philip's war his house, with many others in that vicinity, was burned to the ground. He then went to reside in Rochester. He was a selectman, town clerk and representative to the General Court in 1692. He died July 14, 1720, his wife Ruth surviving him. The children of this union were; William, Richard, James, Mary, George, Jonathan, Joseph, John and Elizabeth. (III) John Winslow was born Feb. 20, 1694, and resided in Freetown. He married, Oct. 9, 1729, Betsey Hathaway, by whom he had eleven children: Huldah, Abner, Sylvia, Lucy, Andrew, Lemuel, Lois, Eunice, Oliver, William and Joseph. The father of these children was a prominent man in his time, a representative to the General Court for five years. The date of his death is not given, but letters of administration were granted to his wife, Oct. 7, 1781.

(IV) Abner Winslow was the next in line, born in Freetown, May 17, 1732. He was selectman of that village in 1777-8 and 1780, and one of the committee of Correspondence and Safety during the Revolution. He married Rebecca Hathaway, Aug. 16, 1759, (V) Philip being his only son. This son was born March 20, 1776, and was married Nov. 17, 1799, to Lucy Chase. Their family was the following; Rebecca, Mary, Betsey, Lucy, Philip, Joseph, Nelson, John, Abner, Ruth and David.

(VI) Abner Winslow, born July 1, 1813, in April, 1832, married Susan Philips, whose birth occurred March 22, 1812. There were twelve children: Israel, Lucy, Mary Ann, William, Julia, Caroline, Amey, Abner Clinton, Susan Jane, Albert Henry, Ella and Ida.

The motto of the Winslow Family was the Latin "Decoptus Florio," the meaning of which is "Truth crushed to earth shall rise again."

ALBERT LUTHER MANSFIELD. This worthy member of the Mansfield family is a familiar and popular figure in Putnam circles, where he is held in the highest repute for the genial quality of his citizenship. His birth occurred in Webster, June 7, 1866, where he received his early education and training. After removal to Putnam he continued his studies till he had finished the high school. In 1881 he entered the store of his father as a clerk and contributed much to the development of the business by his energy and good business qualifications. In 1886 he became junior member of the present firm, as related above. Upon ceasing active connection with the store, Mr. Mansfield became foreman of construction of the Worcester and Connecticut Eastern Railway Company, a position which he has held since that date and in which he has a fine opportunity to display the excellent qualities of management which he developed in earlier life. He is as helpful in matters of public interest as his brother William, and has used his talent for organization and executive work to the good of the city in different lines. He served six years as clerk of Company No. 3, in the fire department, was foreman of the company for several years, and six years assistant engineer of the department. He is somewhat more active in politics than his brother; his Republicanism is of the stalwart kind and he is a worker in the ranks of the party. In 1896-7 he served as a member of the board of selectmen and in the legislative campaign of 1900 was elected to represent Putnam in the State Legislature, where he was an influential and valued member of the committee on Railroads. He was four times chairman of the Republican town committee.

In social life Mr. Mansfield's genial companionship is felt in several of the fraternal organizations. He is a member of Israel Putnam Lodge, No. 33, I. O. O. F., has been Noble Grand two terms and has served as financial secretary five years. He is a member of Wolf Den Encampment, No. 33, of the same order, and has served as chief patriarch several terms. He is a member of the Grand Lodge of the State and has served it as Grand Guardian. In General Putnam Lodge, No. 295, N. E. O. P., he has been secretary a number of years. Mr. Mansfield and his wife are faithful attendants and liberal supporters of the Congregational Church.

On Sept. 24, 1887, Mr. Mansfield married Ida, daughter of Dr. Charles H. and Mrs. Catherine (Arnold) Mack of Walla Walla, Wash. Two children have come to brighten their home, Marguerite, born Nov. 27, 1888, and William Nelson, Oct. 28, 1891. Mr. Mansfield and his family live in a delightful home on one of the most beautiful residence streets of the city, where they entertain their large circle of friends without stint.

A word should be said before closing concerning the enterprise of the firm of Wm. H. Mansfield & Co. Upon the death of the father the duties and responsibilities fell somewhat unexpectedly upon the shoulders of the sons. They took hold bravely, however, and decided to remove the store to its present location, fitting it up as a first class establishment. The wisdom of their course was soon demonstrated, as their business increased rapidly and they now have to use four floors and employ three order teams and four clerks in addition to the proprietors. Their motto has ever been "only first-class goods" and it is safe to say that they yield the palm to none in being the leading purveyors in Putnam.

HON. WILLIAM SUMNER, deceased. The Sumner family is an old and honored one in New England, and though few of its members have attained unusual prominence, the average among its various generations has been uniformly high. Some of its representatives have been men of wide fame, such as Gov. Increase Sumner, Gen. Edwin V. Sumner and Senator Charles Sumner. Deacons and soldiers abound in its annals. It was well represented in the disastrous expedition to Canada in 1690; its heroic roll of Revolutionary warriors and statesmen is part of the glory of the Republic; and among those who fought for the Union in the days of 1861-65 its representatives were still conspicuous.

The principal family of the name in this country is traced back to Roger Sumner, a farmer, of Bicester, Oxfordshire, England, who was married in 1601, in his native community, to Joane Franklin. He died in 1608, and his widow was married three years later to Marcus Brian, of the neighboring parish of Merton.

William Sumner, the only child of Roger and Joane Sumner, was born at Bicester in 1605, and when twenty years of age was married to Mary West. In 1636 he came to New England and settled at Dorchester, Mass., continuing, however, to hold his land in his native town until 1650, as appears from documents still in the hands of his descendants. In 1637 he was made a freeman of the Colony, and held at various times positions of importance, being selectman for more than twenty years, and for seventeen years feoffee of the school land; for several years he was a commissioner to try petty cases, and he was deputy to the General Court from Dorchester in 1658, 1666, 1670, 1672, 1678-1681, and 1685. His wife died at Dorchester in 1676, and he passed away in 1688. William Joane, Roger and George, the first four of their children, were born in Bicester; Samuel and Increase Sumner were born in Dorchester.

William Sumner, son of William, married Elizabeth, daughter of Augustine Clement, of Dorchester. He followed a seafaring life. He removed to Boston, where his death occurred in 1675, and there his widow died ten years later. Of their children the two eldest were born in Dorchester, the others in Boston. Their children were: (1) Elizabeth, born in 1652, died in Dorchester in 1728. (2) Mary, born in 1654, died in Newport, R. I., in 1706. (3) William, born in 1656, is mentioned again. (4) Hannah was born in 1659. (5) Sarah, born in 1662, died in 1736. (6) Experience was born in 1664. (7) Ebenezer, born in 1666, was lost in the Canadian expedition of 1690. (8) Deliverance was born in 1669. (9) Clement was born in 1671. (10) Mercy, born in 1675, died young.

Clement Sumner, son of William, was born at Boston, Sept. 6, 1671, and was married there, May 18, 1698, to Margaret Harris. Their children, all born at Boston, were: William, born March 18, 1699; Ebenezer, born Sept. 1, 1701; Margaret, born Dec. 7, 1702, died the same day; Margaret, born July 18, 1705, married, May 19, 1726, William Jepson, of Boston, and died Dec. 29, 1783; Elizabeth, born Oct. 8, 1707, married, Oct. 20, 1726, John Bennett, of Boston; Samuel, born Aug. 31, 1709; and Benjamin, born May 28, 1711.

William Sumner, son of Clement, was born March 18, 1699, and on Oct. 11, 1721, was wedded to Hannah, daughter of Thomas Hunt, of Lebanon

Mr. Sumner

Conn. He was a physician, and moved to Hebron, Conn., where he afterward resided. His children, all of whom but the eldest were born at Hebron, were: William, born Feb. 6, 1723; Mary, born Feb. 1725; Reuben, born May 29, 1727; Hannah, born April 23, 1730; Clement, born July 15, 1731; Thomas, born May 7, 1733; Thomas (2), born May 1, 1734; Jonathan, born March 15, 1735; Benjamin, born Feb. 5, 1737; Elizabeth, born May 22, 1742; and Sarah, born May 22, 1749.

Reuben Sumner, son of William, was born in Hebron, May 29, 1727, and made his home in his native town. On March 6, 1754, he married Elizabeth Mack, who died July 10, 1805. He died April 2, 1807. Their children, all born at Hebron, were: Hannah, born Dec. 29, 1754; Elizabeth, born Jan. 29, 1757; Lydia, born Aug. 25, 1759; William, born Sept. 22, 1761; Reuben, born March 19, 1764; Sibyl, born June 15, 1766; Abigail, born Sept. 8, 1768; Mary, born April 21, 1771; Henry Peterson, born June 10, 1773; Abigail (2), born Nov. 26, 1775; and Mary, born May 24, 1778.

William Sumner, son of Reuben, was born Sept. 22, 1761, and made his home in Hebron, where he became prominent and where he was a deacon in the church. On June 3, 1784, he married Jemima Tarbox, who died April 1, 1837. He died May 7, 1838. Their children were: Jemima, born June 11, 1785; Elizabeth, born June 15, 1787; Deborah, born Jan. 1, 1790; William Augustus, born May 16, 1792; Laura, born Feb. 17, 1795; Mary, born Sept. 16, 1797; George O., born Sept. 26, 1800; Cynthia, born March 26, 1803; Benjamin, born Nov. 8, 1805; and Florilla, born June 27, 1808.

William Augustus Sumner, son of William, was born in Hebron, Conn., May 16, 1792, and on June 3, 1815, was married to Anna, daughter of Levi Ashburn, of Marlboro, Conn. Mr. Sumner went to Tolland when young, and about 1860 removed to the village, where he died in 1868. To him and his good wife came the following children: (1) Abigail Porter, born April 6, 1817, married O. N. Lull, of Chambersburg, Pa., in September, 1838. (2) Maria Anna, born March 26, 1819, married, May 3, 1846, Ransel Hall Agard, of Stafford. (3) Jemima, born July 8, 1821, died July 1, 1844. (4) Laura, born Feb. 8, 1824, was twice married, first to Hartwell Sheldon and after his death to Marvin Clark, whom she married April 2, 1861; she died in Coventry June 8, 1891. (5) William, whose name introduces this article, was born April 3, 1826. (6) Augustus, born March 26, 1828, as married Nov. 30, 1847, to Abigail Davis, of Westport, Mass.; on Feb. 10, 1857, he wedded Harriet A. Brobstom, of Louisville, Ky.; his third wife was Louise. Mr. Sumner lived in St. Louis, Mo., where he died in 1883. (7) Edwin George, born May 15, 1830, married, Nov. 13, 1854, Mary S. Hinckley, of Mansfield, Conn., where he has become prominent physician; he graduated from Yale Medical School in 1855. His first wife died in 1859, and he married Ellen M. Hinckley, her sister, April 12, 1860. (8) Ellen Frances, born April 26, 1832, married William E. Hungerford in June, 1852, and lives in Hadlyme, Conn. (9) Elliot Benjamin, born Aug. 22, 1834, married Sarah Farnham, of Willimantic, Oct. 3, 1861, and after her death married her sister, Mary Farnham. He became prominent in that city, representing his district in the State Senate in 1871. He died in 1900.

William Sumner, the subject proper of this article, was born in Tolland, where he was married Dec. 10, 1857, to Miss Juliette Cordelia Bishop, daughter of Joseph Bishop, of Tolland. To this union came the following children, all of whom were natives of Cincinnati, Ohio: (1) William, born April 9, 1867, died in infancy. (2) Annie Mariva, born in 1868, died in 1875. (3) Edith Bishop, born May 30, 1871, married, Nov. 17, 1898, Rev. Samuel Simpson, of Centerville, Mich., born Nov. 24, 1868. He is a Congregational clergyman, and has traveled extensively in foreign countries. He is the father of William Sumner Simpson, born Feb. 18, 1900, in Chardon, Ohio.

William Sumner gained his education in the Tolland schools, and became a lawyer, practicing at the Tolland county Bar for two years but retiring from the profession because he desired a more active life. He moved to Cincinnati, Ohio, where he was in business for a number of years, meeting with large success. In 1856 he became the general agent of the Wheeler & Wilson Sewing Machine Company in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, West Virginia, Pennsylvania and Kentucky. A factory was set up by him in Cincinnati for the making of machine cases and the various wooden parts of machines, employing several hundred hands; it was conducted under the name of William Sumner & Co. John R. Wright was his partner. This business was sold out in 1874, at a very handsome figure, to the Wheeler & Wilson Company, and Mr. Sumner then organized the Capital City Gas Company, at Des Moines, serving as its president for about five years, when he disposed of his interest. On returning from Des Moines he built a large flouring-mill on Staten Island, which was considered the most perfect in all its appointments at that time. Returning to Tolland to take an active interest in the Underwood Belting Company, this concern under his management became the William Sumner Belting Company, with Mr. Sumner as its president until his death, which occurred Dec. 23, 1897, in Hartford. His last winters were spent in that city and his summers in Tolland.

As the reader might well suppose, Mr. Sumner was a very successful man, and though self-made, was broad and liberal in his views. In politics he was an active and earnest Republican, and served as judge of probate and justice of the peace a number of years. In 1895 and the following year he was a member of the General Assembly, where he served on the committee on New Counties and County Seats. While in Cincinnati he became a stockholder in the Ohio Valley National Bank, and was on its directorate several years. In church matters Mr. Sumner was an earnest worker, having been deacon of the Vine Street Congregational Church in Cincinnati, as well as its clerk and treasurer for many years. He was one of the trustees of Oberlin College for many years, and much interested in its prosperity. Mr. Sumner was a kind husband and father, a true and loyal friend and a citizen who acted on the principle of the greatest good to the greatest number in his public life. Thus Tolland became his debtor for numerous benefactions, and on his death she lost one of her most public-spirited citizens.

Joseph Bishop, the father of Mrs. Sumner, was a prominent man in his day in Tolland. In his earlier manhood he was a shoe dealer. He became clerk of the Superior court, a position he held for many years, and in which he was serving at the time of his death, in January, 1876. His wife, Mariva, was a daughter of Col. Eliakim Chapman. She died in July, 1875.

MOSES GAGE LEONARD, one of the most respected and best-known citizens of Putnam, Windham county, descends from an honorable family, which bore a reputable and useful part in all the early history of New England and is still prominent in many walks of life.

James Leonard, son of Thomas, of Great Britain, was at Lynn, Mass., in 1651, at Braintree, in 1642, and in that same year at Taunton, Raynham and Norton, the latter places being formerly included in Taunton. James and a brother were identified with iron furnaces at Lynn and Braintree and finally removed to Raynham, where they built the first iron works in the old colony. There was still another brother, Philip, perhaps the Philip of Marshfield and later of Duxbury. Dr. Forbes, allied to this family by marriage, who early wrote of them, says they were from Pontypool, county of Monmouth, Wales, a place celebrated for the working of iron. There are evidences of the family connection with iron works at Bilston, county of Stafford, England.

"It has been said that this Taunton family of Leonards are of the family of Lennard Dacre, one of the most distinguished families of the nobility in the United Kingdom, and descended in two lines from Edward III, and two of his sons, John, of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, and Thomas Plantagenet, Duke of Gloucester; and the statement has evidence of plausibility. When Daniel Leonard, of Taunton, late Chief Justice of Bermuda, first went to England to reside, he was introduced to Lord Dacre, then a Lennard, 'who acknowledged the affinity;' and Rev. William McKinstry, a descendant of the Leonards who settled in England, 'was noticed as a relative by Lady Dacre.'" [See Leonard Family, by William R. Deane, 1851.]

The coat of arms of Leonard and Lennard is the same. On the death of the last Lord Dacre bearing the name of Lennard, it was supposed that Judge Leonard, of Norton, Mass., who died in 1711, could have claimed the title, and, at the time, there was talk among the Norton Leonards of the propriety of it. [See Clark's History of Norton, 1859.]

Of the Leonard brothers, Henry, born about 1618, was of Lynn in 1642, Braintree in 1652, and probably earlier, also Taunton, in 1652; again Lynn in 1655, and of Rowley Village in 1674, and he went in the latter year to New Jersey, where he established iron works and became the founder of the family in that State. In April, 1684, three of his sons, Samuel, Nathan and Thomas, contracted to carry on the works at Rowley Village, but later followed the father to New Jersey, where for generations and generations the descendants of Henry were workers of iron. His other children were Henry, Sarah and Mary.

(I) James Leonard, the ancestor of the Taunton Leonards, died in 1691, and was survived by his widow, Margaret, who was the "mother-in-law" (stepmother presumably) to all his children, and who died in 1701. His children were:

(II) Thomas, born about 1641, married, Aug. 21, 1662, Mary Watson, who died Dec. 1, 1723; he died Nov. 24, 1713. Thomas Leonard was a distinguished character and for generations men of note were among his posterity. He was a physician, major, a justice of the peace, deacon in the church, and Judge of the court of Common Pleas. His children were Mary; Thomas, born Jan. 22, 1665-66, whose wife's name was Joanna; John, born May 18, 1668, who married Mary, daughter of Philip King; George, born April 18, 1671, who is mentioned below; Samuel, born Feb. 6, 1673-74, and who, April 17, 1701, married Catherine, daughter of Thomas Deane, of Taunton; Elkanah, born May 15, 1677, who resided in Middleborough, and died Dec. 29, 1714; James, born Dec. 17, 1679, who died May 8, 1682; a daughter, who died unnamed; Seth, born April 28, 1682, who died same year; Phebe, born in 1684, who died in 1685; and Elizabeth, born July 15, 1686, who married Jonathan Williams. Of these,

(III) George Leonard married, July 4, 1695, Anna Tisdale, born Jan. 27, 1672-73, daughter of John and Hannah (Rogers) Tisdale, of Taunton. George Leonard removed about 1690 to Norton, then a part of Taunton, where he became the proprietor of a very large tract of land, and, as it were, the founder of that town and the progenitor of the Norton Leonards. There his family, as the possessors of great wealth, of the largest landed estate probably of any in New England, have lived for over 200 years. George Leonard was judge of the court of common pleas in 1716; his eldest son (IV) George (2) held the rank of colonel and was also a judge of the court of common pleas; and the latter's son George (3), born July 4, 1729, was graduated from Harvard College in 1748, was speak-of the Massachusetts House of Representatives at the time of the Stamp Act, and his circular, issued as speaker, called together the first Congress which assembled in New York, in October, 1765, and he was a representative in the first Congress of the United States under the constitution.

(IV) Rev. Nathaniel Leonard, a brother of George (2), born in Norton, March 9, 1700, was graduated from Harvard in 1719, and in 1724 married Priscilla Rogers, of Ipswich, and had sixteen children. Rev. Nathaniel was minister at Plymouth for thirty years following his ordination, July 29, 1724.

(V) Rev. Obiel Leonard, son of Rev. Nathaniel, born Nov. 5, 1740, was graduated from Harvard in 1759, and June 23, 1763, was installed pastor of the church in Woodstock, Conn. On the breaking out of the Revolution in 1775, he was made chaplain of the Third regiment at the request of the commander, then Col. Israel Putnam, and later both Putnam and Gen. Washington wrote letters to the church requesting that the leave of absence of Rev. Leonard be extended, and in their letters they highly raised Mr. Leonard's services. "He is employed in the glorious work of attending to the morals of brave people who are fighting for their liberties—the liberties of the people of Woodstock—the liberties of all America."

(IV) Col. Ephraim Leonard, a brother of Rev. Nathaniel, was the wealthiest and most influential man in Mansfield, then part of Norton, Mass., was colonel, judge of the court of common pleas, and held other offices of responsibility. His son Daniel was graduated from Harvard in 1760 and bred to the law, was before the Revolution a member of the General Court, and also an able political writer, and, according to President Adams, supported the Whig cause with great diligence and energy. Later he became a loyalist, and in 1776 he accompanied the British to Halifax, and later went to England to reside, where he received the appointment of chief justice of Bermuda.

(II) James Leonard, second son of James of Taunton, was born about 1643; his first wife, named Hannah, died Feb. 25, 1674, and for his second wife married, Oct. 29, 1675, Lydia, daughter of Anthony Gulliver, of Milton, Mass. His children were: Eunice, who married Richard Burt; Prudence, who married Samuel Lewis; Hannah, who married John Deane; James, born Feb. 1, 1672-73, who died Dec. 1, 1674; James (2), born May 11, 1677, whose first wife, by name Hannah, died in 1725, and who married (second) Lydia Gulliver, daughter of Jonathan, and widow of John, and (third) Mercy, and died Jan. 16, 1764; Lydia, who married a Mr. Britton; Stephen, born Dec. 14, 1680; Abigail, who married Dr. Ezra Deane, of Taunton; Nathaniel, born March 18, 1685, who died in the same year; Seth, born April 3, 1686; Sarah, married to Henry Hodges; Mehetable, born in 1691, who died in 1695;

Elizabeth, who married Capt. Joseph Hall; and Ebenezer, who died unmarried.

(II) Abigail Leonard, daughter of James, married John Kingsley.

(II) Rebecca Leonard married Isaac Chapman.

(II) Joseph Leonard, born about 1655, married Dec. 15, 1679, Mary Black, of Milton, and died Oct. 17 or 18, 1692. His children were: Mary, who died young; Experience, who married Samuel Hodges; Joseph, born in 1683, who died unmarried in 1705; Mehetable; Edward, born in 1688; William, born in 1690; and Silence.

(II) Benjamin Leonard, the sixth child of James of Taunton, was married, Jan. 15, 1678-79, to Sarah Thresher, and their children were: Sarah, born May 21, 1680, who married a Mr. Eddy; Benjamin, born Jan. 25, 1682; Hannah, born in 1685, who died in infancy; Jerusha, born June 25, 1689; Hannah, born Dec. 8, 1691; Joseph, born Jan. 22, 1692-93; and Henry, born Nov. 8, 1695.

(II) Hannah Leonard, third daughter of James, married Isaac Deane.

(II) Uriah Leonard, son of James, born July 10, 1662, married, Jan. 1, 1685, Elizabeth Caswell, born in January, 1664, daughter of Thomas C. Caswell, of Taunton, and their children were: Uriah, born April 10, 1686; and William; James; Seth; Jonathan and Margaret.

Jacob Leonard, the great-grandfather of Moses G. Leonard of Putnam, was a farmer at Stafford, Conn., where his life was passed.

Daniel Leonard, Sr., son of Jacob, was born March 28, 1773, in Taunton, Mass., and died in Union, Conn., March 28, 1842. He married Mehetable Hicks, born in Rehoboth, Mass., Feb. 11, 1771. Their oldest son, Halsey, born in 1795 in Woodstock, was for many years a deacon there in the Baptist Church. He died in Michigan at the age of ninety-two years. On Aug. 17, 1823, he married Lavina Corbin, daughter of Joseph Corbin, of Woodstock, and their only daughter, Lavina, married William Preston, of Eastford, and became the mother of six children. The second son, George, born April 9, 1798, in Woodstock, moved to Woodstock Valley in 1873, and died Dec. 15, 1882. He was an intellectual man, owned a large library and took an interest in educational matters. He married first Deborah Stewart, who died Feb. 6, 1836, and (second) Nancy Dewing. His children by his first wife were: Halsey, who died at the age of twenty-four years; Olive, who married Charles Dean; Isaac Newton, who died at the age of twenty-four years; Jane, who married (first) Rev. Percival Mathewson, and (second) Julius Lyon; and Joseph, who died at the age of four years. The children of his second marriage were: George Chapin; Thomas Jefferson; Zenas, who died in infancy; Susanna, who died at the age of thirteen; Newton G., who died at the age of eleven; and Jessie E., who died at the age of five years. Daniel, Jr., the third child of Daniel, and Olive Mary. Frank Childs, the second, born July 22, 1874, in Putnam, is a resident of Bridgeport, and is a member of the firm of Leonard & Doane, manufacturers of Saratoga chips, their business being both wholesale and retail. They also are confectioners. On July 8, 1901, he was married to Emma Pickford of Brooklyn, N. Y. On Sept. 22, 1885, Mr. Leonard was married (third) to Mrs. Jennie A. Tillinghast, of Providence, R. I., daughter of Daniel and Alma (Waite) Tillinghast, and widow of James A. Tillinghast.

The old Leonard homestead, which stood a few miles from the forge, in Taunton, was pulled down only a few years prior to 1851. A part of it was built as early as 1670 and had been occupied by six or seven generations of the family. At the time of its demolition it was probably the oldest house in New England.

James Leonard, the far-away ancestor and family founder, with his sons, often traded with the Indians, and it is said that his treatment of the savages had been so fair and friendly that when the war of King Philip broke out, that chief gave strict orders to his warriors that they never injure the Leonards. King Philip made his home during the summers within a mile of the old Leonard forge.

OREN POMEROY, who was born in Somers, spent all of his life there, and died there, was a fine example of the sturdy Puritan stock which has given so much of strength to the American character. He was a deacon of the church, colonel in the militia and a representative in the Legislature. He was such a man as has been spoken of as the "conscience of the community," and, while contributing his full share to the guidance and maintenance of church and state, he reared and educated a large family, making the rocky hills of a mountain farm support him and them in a way that seems scarcely credible in these days of abandoned farms.

So far as they have been traced, all of Oren Pomeroy's ancestors were of English or Welsh stock. The earliest known of them was Ralph de Pomeroy, one of the company of William the Conqueror, who went to England with him from Normandy and shared in the distribution of the conquered lands. He is first mentioned as having taken part in the battle of Hastings, 1066. Upon his estates he built the castle of Berry Pomeroy, which is still standing. The name Pomeroy (king apple) comes, according to tradition, from an apple produced in Normandy, which was a favorite of the Conqueror. The Pomeroy family crest is "a lion rampant, gules, holding in the dexter paw an apple proper." The arms also contain the lion and apple, as in the crest, but "within a bordure engrailed sable," on a gold background. The motto is "Vir-tutis fortuna comes" ("Fortune the companion of valor").

The first American Pomeroy was Eltweed, who was born in England about 1595, and came to America with one of Gov. Winthrop's colonies the "Mary and John," arriving at Nantasket, Massachusetts Bay in March, 1630, and settled at Dorchester, now a part of Boston. The old records show him to have been a man of considerable means, a good social position, matters greatly esteemed those simple (?) times. When the first local government was established, Oct. 23, 1633, Eltweed was member, and, according to one of the accounts, was chairman of the body, which is believed to have been the first town government in any of the New England colonies. He was for several years a member of the town of Dorchester. He was a member of the Congregational Church, at that time the State church, and it is an interesting fact that this articular church came to America as a complete organization, with membership, church records, deacons and other officers, and a pastor, John Maverick; and, as he was an old man, the church also brought a younger man, John Wareham, as assistant pastor. Maverick street and Wareham street, Boston, were named for these early ministers. Eltweed Pomeroy removed in 1638 to Windsor, Conn., with a large number of his neighbors. He died in Northampton, Mass., in 1673.

Joseph Pomeroy, twelfth child of Eltweed, was born in Windsor, June 20, 1652, and died Sept. 22, 1739. He married Hannah, daughter of Richard and Hepzibah (Ford) Lyman, of Northampton. He was a farmer and a builder, and was one of the eight men who owned the original town of Colchester (then comprising parts of several other towns), which they held under grant of the Crown.

Noah Pomeroy, twelfth child of Joseph, was born in Windsor May 19, 1700, and died in Somers Feb. 16, 1779. He married Elisabeth, daughter of Capt. Daniel and Mary (Marvin) Sterling, of Lyme, Conn. Noah went to Somers from Coventry (it is believed) in 1752, and settled on what is now known as the Capt. Samuel Pomeroy place, a quarter of a mile west of the Deacon Oren Pomeroy homestead. The present house, on the original foundation, was built by Oren's father-in-law, Capt. Samuel Pomeroy, in 1796. Noah took with him to Somers his four sons, Noah, Daniel, John and Joshua, each of whom has had a large number of descendants in New England, the Middle States and the West.

In Colchester records is found mention of marriage, Dec. 16, 1724, of Noah Pomeroy and Elisabeth Sterling; and of Noah Pomeroy, born Oct. 8, 1725, and Daniel Pomeroy, born Oct. 13, 1727, supposedly their children. Altogether they had seven children, of whom the fourth, John Pomeroy, born Aug. 12, 1733, died at Somers Sept. 21, 1810. He married Esther, daughter of Edward and Rebecca (Cooley) Kibbe. He was a farmer, and lived at what is now known as the Deacon Oren Pomeroy homestead. There was a curious incident connected with the pulling down of the old house to make room for the present one. The place had been inherited by Oren's bachelor uncle, Elijah Pomeroy, who had consented that Oren, his heir, should build a new house. When the day came, however, and the neighbors with their forty or fifty yoke of oxen and many chains for the razing bee, the old man's courage gave out and he took to his bed. No persuasion failed to get him out of the house. Oren was reluctant, but would not use force; so he ordered the door of the doorway chopped away, and four men tied out the bed with the protesting old uncle. He was gently deposited, bed and all, out of harm's way, and the old house came down. The new one was as ready just in time for Oren to occupy it with his bride. John had nine children. The eighth was Hiram Pomeroy, born Nov. 1, 1773, who died at Somers Oct. 27, 1841. He married Ruby, daughter of Aaron and Mary (Fisk) Parsons. He was a farmer, a distiller (a business of high respectability in those times), a barrel manufacturer and an officer of both town and church. For years he enjoyed the distinction of owning the only pleasure vehicle in the town, a buckboard which was in great demand for special occasions, especially wedding journeys. Hiram had thirteen children, twelve of whom lived to maturity and eleven of whom were married.

Oren Pomeroy, the second son and the subject proper of this sketch, was born in Somers Feb. 17, 1799. On Dec. 31, 1822, he married Lucinda Pomeroy, of Somers, his second cousin, born in Somers in 1801, who died in Somers May 15, 1887. She was a daughter of Capt. Samuel and Catherine (Day) Pomeroy, and granddaughter of Joshua and Mary (Davis) Pomeroy. The building of the house in which he spent his married life, and in which he died (Feb. 4, 1882), has been referred to. He early took an interest in military affairs, and finally attained the rank of colonel in the State militia. On the death of Deacon Cady he was elected one of the two deacons in the Congregational Church, a position which he held most worthily to the end of his life. For about forty years he was a member of the church choir, with which he sang bass, having a rich voice and a musical ear. Among the objects of family interest at the homestead is an old-fashioned hymn book from which he used to sing the old standard sacred music. This book was compiled by a friend of Oren Pomeroy and in his honor two tunes were named. They stand on opposite pages, the left-hand one being named "Oren" and the right-hand one "Pomeroy." He was a strict Sabbatarian and always attended all the regular services of the church, including the Sunday-school, of which he was for a time superintendent. The religious sentiment of the town and the church-going habit of the time are illustrated by the fact that at one session of the Sunday-school, during his superintendency, there were by actual count 410 present—this in a town of about 1,600 inhabitants and supporting other churches. Deacon Pomeroy was a farmer. This was a more inclusive term than now, and his activities were more than usually varied. He had large interests in lumbering, stock raising, wine-making, etc. For many years he supplied a large share of the grape wine used in New England for communion and medicinal purposes, but would never sell it for a beverage. He was a man of strict integrity and sensitive scrupulousness in matters of bargain and trade, but it did not prevent him from prospering in worldly affairs: whatever the season, or however the market might be, he always made a good income, which he used with equal generosity in the cause of religion, education, missions and the many interests incident to a large family and good citizenship. He was fond of children and society, and was the life of almost any social group of which he happened to be a member; yet in the councils of town or church he was singularly reticent, often scarcely uttering a word so long as the meeting moved along harmoniously, yet as often pouring oil on the troubled waters by a few words of sanctified common sense which settled the vexed question to the satisfaction of all. He filled a number of town offices, including that of representative to the Legislature. Deacon Pomeroy in appearance, as well as in fact, was a gentleman of the Old School and a man to be noted, whether in the high hat and careful black dress of the prominent citizen or the blue and red uniform of the military officer.

Lucinda Pomeroy, wife of Oren, was the second of the five children of Capt. Samuel and Catherine (Day) Pomeroy, and was born at Somers May 19, 1801. Her father was a teacher of local celebrity, and she early acquired a fondness for study and a profound regard for education. She was for a short time a teacher. She was of a deeply religious nature, and became an active member of the church when about twelve years old. It was through her influence that her friend Mary Reynolds, afterward the wife of the well-known missionary Schaffler, came to be interested in religion and missions. This friendship was kept up through the whole of her life, and it was doubtless owing in part to the correspondence with the Schafflers that Mrs. Pomeroy was, for many years, the leader in missionary information and activity in Somers. She joined the Sunday-school the year that it was born as a feature of New England church life, and she was a member of it sixty-nine years, from the age of seventeen to her death, at eighty-six. It was her habit to commit all the lesson, text and references, to memory, and few were so well versed in the Scriptures as she. For many years she taught the class of adult women in the same school, and when, at the age of eighty, she became too blind to longer fill the position, she still attended the class and was its inspiration. She was always greatly interested in the cause of temperance, and she accomplished an especially notable achievement in its behalf when she was eighty years old. Becoming alarmed at the amount of liquor being sold in Somers in that year, she undertook to stem the tide of intemperance. She prepared and circulated an appeal to the voters, to which she secured 200 signatures, and at the next election the sale of liquor was made illegal. A local newspaper referred to it as the most notable event of the kind in twenty years. On other occasions also Mrs. Pomeroy worked hard and effectually against the forces of reaction and decline, always at work, here and there, even in a Puritan community.

On Dec. 31, 1872, Deacon Pomeroy and his wife celebrated their Golden Wedding. Although on account of the snow the roads were almost impassable, and most of the guests had to drive miles, a very large attendance and many and expensive gifts testified to the great respect and love of their fellow townspeople.

To Oren and Lucinda Pomeroy were born two children, eight of whom lived to be men and women. Lucinda, Sarah Catherine, Harriet Strong, Oren Day, Emily, Ruby Louisa, Cyrus Newton and Hiram Sterling.

Lucinda Pomeroy, the eldest, early became the object of her mother's educational beliefs and enthusiasms. At the age of four she read the Bible readily, and at seven she was enrolled as a student at the select school in the Center. She was a graduate in the third class of Mount Holyoke Seminary, which had been established a few years before by Mary Lyon. She died July 17, 1895.

Sarah Catherine Pomeroy also entered Mount Holyoke Seminary, but left before the end of the course on account of failing health. She married Henry B. Kirkland, a New York merchant, and for many years a member of the wholesale grocery firm of H. K. & F. B. Thurber & Co. He died September 6, 1892. Their son, Henry Sterling Kirkland, follows his father's career in New York City. He married Josephine, daughter of Nathaniel Hooker of New York, and they have two sons, Nathaniel Hooker and Henry Purnham.

Harriet Strong Pomeroy graduated at Mount Holyoke Seminary in one of the earlier classes. She was always an enthusiastic student and was especially fond of mathematics and the classics. She was a successful teacher for many years, and was for a time a member of the school committee in Somers. She died April 25, 1900.

OREN DAY POMEROY graduated at the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York City, and making a specialty of surgery of the eye and ear, was for many years a lecturer in that college. He was at different times president of the American Ophthalmological Society, the American Otological Society, and the New York Academy of Medicine. At one time he had the largest otological clinic in the world. He was the author of a well-known work on diseases of the ear. He was one of the eight charter surgeons of the Manhattan Eye and Ear Hospital, and was president of the staff of that hospital at the time of his death, March 19, 1900. He married Hannah Maria, daughter of Abner Miles, Brooklyn, N. Y. Their four living children are: Esther; Ruth, widow of Frank B. Newton, M. D., of Stafford Springs, Conn.; Mary, wife of Frank Balch, of New York City; and Oren. Mr. Newton has a daughter, Frances Dorothy, and Mrs. Balch have a daughter, Mildred. Mr. Newton died Feb. 19, 1903.

Emily Pomeroy entered Mount Holyoke Seminary, but left before the end of the course. She married Edwin Cone Bissell, of Rockville, Conn. The year of their marriage, 1859, he was ordained Congregational minister at Westhampton, Mass., and installed there as pastor. He afterward h pastorates at San Francisco, Cal., and Winchester, Mass., and also supplied a pulpit for ten months in 1869-70 at Honolulu, H. I. He spent several years in Germany and Austria, five years as a missionary of the American Board and remained afterward for one year of special study in preparation for his work as a theologian. He became widely known as a painstaking and accurate scholar, and was the author of several works of authority on the conservative side of contemporary theological discussion, besides a Hebrew grammar used in school. He was for several years professor of Hebrew in the Hartford Theological Seminary, and at the time of his death, April 10, 1894, he occupied a similar chair in the McCormick Theological Seminary (Presbyterian), Chicago. He graduated at Amherst College in 1855, and at Union Theological Seminary in 1859. Amherst College gave him the degrees of M. A. and D. D., and Lake Forest University the degree of LL. D. While pastor at Westhampton Mr. Bissell was elected captain of Company K, 52d Massachusetts Volunteers, with which he served in the Civil war in 1862 and 1863.

Ruby Louisa Pomeroy graduated at Brooklyn Heights Seminary, Brooklyn, N. Y., her brother Oren's future wife being one of her classmates. She married Simon Brooks, a native of West Springfield, Mass., who was for six years (1887-1892) sheriff of Hampden county, Mass. He died Sept. 29, 1898. Mrs. Brooks is president of the Springfield Women's Club. Of their three living children, Benjamin is a lawyer in Holyoke, Simon Pomeroy is a practicing physician in New York City, and Richard Sterling is a newspaper man, on the staff of the Springfield Republican. All three are graduates of Amherst College.

CYRUS NEWTON POMEROY began a business career at the age of sixteen, first in Springfield, Mass., and later in New York City. At one time he was head of the firm of Pomeroy, Fitch & Co., wholesale produce commission merchants of New York. Failing in health, and preferring a country life, of which he was always fond, he returned to his native town, and now occupies the homestead. He has held various town offices, and has been deputy sheriff of Tolland county. His wife is Frances Louise, daughter of Jacob B. Croxon, of Brooklyn, N. Y. Of their three living children Maud, the widow of S. Thompson Kimball, of Ellington, Conn., is president of the Ellington Women's Club; Blanche is an active worker in the First Congregational Church in Springfield, Mass.; and Chester Wood lives with his parents in Somers.

HIRAM STERLING POMEROY, the twelfth child born to Oren and Lucinda Pomeroy, studied at Yale College and afterward in Germany and Austria. Yale gave him the degree of M. A., and Leipsic, Germany, the degree of M. D. He is a practicing physician in Boston and a deacon in Central Congregational Church in that city. While studying in Europe he was connected with the missionary work of the American Board. He is the author of books bearing on the Malthusian controversy. In 1872 he married Elizabeth F. Blake, of New Haven, who died in 1875. In 1882 he married Mary E. Shepardson, daughter of Rev. Daniel Shepardson, D. D., LL. D., of Granville, Ohio. They have four living children. The eldest, Faith, is a student at Shepardson College, Granville, Ohio, an institution founded by and named for her maternal grandfather. The other three children are Kenneth, Norman and Dorothy.

NOAH POMEROY (deceased) was born in Somers, Conn., Dec. 20, 1819, and died in San Francisco, Cal., June 9, 1896, but "To live in hearts we leave behind is not to die," and such a man was Noah Pomeroy, whose well-spent life and manly character of themselves erected to his memory a monument of love perpetual.

Mr. Pomeroy descended from a line of ancestry equal in every respect to that of any family in New England, and was of the sixth generation from Eltweed Pomeroy, who came from England to America, in 1630, under the auspices of Gov. Winthrop, and landed at Nantasket, Mass., in March, but soon removed to Dorchester, where he at once took part in public affairs. On Oct. 22, 1633, when the town government was established, he was selected chairman of the board. In 1638, with his family and many others from England, Eltweed Pomeroy removed to Windsor, Conn., where he owned two houses—one on the Palisade and one on the Sandbank road.

Joseph Pomeroy, born in 1652, the twelfth child of Eltweed, and great-great-grandfather of Noah, was one of the eight original owners of Colchester, Conn., under grant from the Crown. He was a farmer, contractor and builder, and a man of affairs generally. He married Hannah Lyman, daughter of Richard Lyman, of Northampton, Massachusetts.

Noah Pomeroy, great-grandfather of Noah, was the twelfth child born to Joseph, had his first residence in Coventry, Conn., and moved to Somers in 1752, when he was fifty-two years old. He was a farmer, and owned much land in the eastern part of the town, most of which is still in the possession of the Pomeroy family. He married Elisabeth Sterling, of Lyme, Conn., and the remains of both lie interred in the old Center (or North) cemetery at Somers.

John Pomeroy, grandfather of Noah, was a farmer in Somers.

Hiram Pomeroy, father of Noah, was also a farmer of Somers, a distiller, and a manufacturer of barrels, and did a very large business, as is shown by his voluminous account books. He owned the first pleasure carriage in Somers, and was regarded as a man of substance and of excellent judgment, but of few words.

Noah Pomeroy was the twelfth in a family of thirteen children—seven sons and six daughters—twelve of whom reached years of maturity. He located in Bristol, Conn., early in the 'forties, and for a while worked for his brother, Chauncey Pomeroy, in Forestville, and afterward in different shops in Bristol. In 1849 he purchased the Chauncey Ives property, in Bristol, commenced business for himself, and continued therein until Nov. 20, 1878, when he sold out to H. C. Thompson, and in 1889 disposed of all his Bristol property to the same gentleman. He had already purchased a residence in the city of Hartford, in 1865, and made his home there that year. In 1844 he married Jane Parker, who survives him, and they had a happy married life of fifty-two years.

Levi Parker, Mrs. Pomeroy's father, was a native of the town of Wolcott, New Haven county, and spent his entire life in that county and Hartford, being a merchant by occupation. He died about 1836, at the age of about forty years. Mr. Parker married Miss Polly Peck, a native of the town of Burlington, Hartford county, and she survived him many years, dying in 1894, at the home of her daughter, in Hartford, aged ninety years. They had but two children, Jane (Mrs. Pomeroy) and George H. The father was a Freemason. George H. Parker became a manufacturer, and for a few years was a partner of Noah Pomeroy in the manufacture of clocks in Bristol. But after a few years he retired, and later moved to California, where he died in 1894, a man of wealth. His death was the result of an injury.

Mr. Pomeroy's home was his refuge and his haven of rest. He did not care to leave it for public duties or for the applause of his fellow citizens, but was well informed on all public affairs, and performed the duties of citizenship with the conscientious feeling which pervaded all his actions. His name was a synonym of honesty, well known to all men with whom he had dealings. He regarded his word as sacred as his bond, and, with the same exaction that he demanded that which was his, he freely accorded what belonged to others. His kindness toward his employes was most marked, and the tributes of those who were associated with him as fellow laborers and employes through many years are freely given. He valued his good name and that of his wife, and, rather to defend this than to obtain financial results from a lawsuit into which he was cruelly drawn, he conscientiously crossed the continent to remove the wicked aspersions thrown against him.

Mr. Pomeroy was a generous giver, which fact was known only to those who were the recipients of his many favors, excepting through other sources than himself. His name never headed subscription lists, nor was it quoted among those who were public givers. In his giving it could be well said that "his right hand knew not what his left hand did." No impecunious and worthy relative who needed his aid, or faithful employe, or meriting servant, or deserving friend, or suffering unfortunate one, appealed to him in vain, and many were his benefactions to those of which the world at large knew not. His domestic life was the highest type of marital relation. After a half century of association with his faithful wife his interest in her health and happiness was most manifest on every occasion, and the little courtesies of life, so frequently overlooked in the advanced years of manhood, were as ever present in him as in the lover. His love was fully reciprocated by his devoted helpmate, whose ministrations to his comfort knew no lagging, and her watchfulness of his health, enfeebled through many years, ceased only when human hands could do no more. He bore his ill health uncomplainingly, and died as he lived, a quiet and peaceful man, and his life drifted out as the candle sinks dimly and slowly in the socket.

A strange Providence took Mr. Pomeroy far from home, to die amid strangers, and even among them, during his brief sickness, his gentle and uncomplaining ways attracted friends to him. His remains, borne back across the continent to the home of his boyhood, manhood and old age, were placed at rest in the beautiful city of the dead at Hartford covered with flowers of affection, contributed by kind friends and neighbors and those who knew him best, and in a quiet and simple manner, congenial to his tastes.

In politics Noah Pomeroy was a strong Republican, and much interested in the success of his party. Educational matters absorbed much of his attention, particularly the educating of the colored people of the South. He was an unusually thoughtful man, and, like his father, a "man of excellent judgment and few words." It was a favorite saying with him that one would never be sorry "for what he had not said," and he measured the full force and effect of his every utterance. He was a great lover of books, especially biographical and historical works, and an admirer of the artistic, which he was capable of appreciating in all things. Thus lived and died a devoted husband and exemplary citizen, and a man who made the world better for having lived in it.

Since her husband's death Mrs. Pomeroy has continued to make her home in Hartford. She is a woman remarkably well preserved, both mentally and physically, and manages all her own business affairs with a skill and shrewdness not excelled by a man. She is generous, hospitable and sociable, and enjoys the highest esteem of her many friends.

WHITON. No records of the early settlements of the New England States would be complete without careful and comprehensive mention of the Whiton family, which for years has been a leading one in the development of this section and which at present is represented by prominent citizens.

(I) James Whiton was born (supposedly) in the county of Norfolk, England, and died at Hingham, Mass., April 26, 1710. On Dec. 30, 1647, he married Mary, daughter of John and Nazareth (Hobart) Beale, born in 1622 at Hingham, England, who died Dec. 12, 1696, at Hingham, Massachusetts.

The name of James Whiton first appears on Hingham records in 1647, and lands there were granted to him in 1657 and at subsequent dates; he was made a freeman in 1660. He is described as a farmer and planter, and his home was at Liberty Plain, South Hingham. At his decease he possessed much landed property in Scituate, Abington and Hanover, as well as in Hingham, and in his will he provides liberally for his children and grandchildren. Nine children were born to him, of whom but five outlived childhood.

(II) James Whiton (2), eldest son of James, was baptized at Hingham, Mass., July 13, 1651, and died Feb. 20, 1724-25. His wife, Abigail, born in 1655-56, died in Hingham, Mass., May 4, 1740. James Whiton (2) was also a farmer, and resided near the paternal homestead at Liberty Plain; was a soldier in King Philip's war; and left a will dated Oct. 15, 1724. James and Abigail Whiton had three daughters and seven sons.

(III) Joseph Whiton, sixth child and fifth son of James Whiton (2), was born March 23, 1687, at Hingham, Mass., and died at Ashford, Conn., in 1777. Joseph Whiton married (first) at Hingham, Mass., Dec. 10, 1713, Martha, daughter of Samuel and Silence (Damon) Tower, born July 20, 1693, at Hingham, Mass., who died at Rehoboth, Sept. 9, 1719. He married (second) in 1720, at Rehoboth, Rebecca Willson, who died March 17, 1776, at Ashford, Conn. Joseph Whiton in his youth earned the trade of cooper, which he combined with farming. Soon after the birth of his third child, in 1719, he removed from Hingham to Rehoboth, and his first wife died there the same year. Early in 1720 he married his second wife, and two children were born to them in Rehoboth. About 1726-27 he settled in Ashford, Conn.; the church records there show the admission to membership, early in 1727, of "Joseph Whiton and wife." In 1734 he was one of the committee appointed "to lay out a quarter-acre of land for a burying place" (now a part of Westford cemetery), "at ye west end of ye town," and in this plat rests the body of Joseph Whiton, who died at the advanced age of ninety years. The inscription on his tombstone reads: "They that live longest die at last."

(IV) Elijah Whiton, the eldest of the ten children of Joseph Whiton, was born in Hingham, Mass., July 7, 1714, and died Aug. 20, 1784, in Westford, Conn. He married in 1741 Priscilla Russ, who died in 1755; his second wife was Hannah Crocker. Elijah Whiton came to Ashford with his parents when a lad, acquired a fair education, and learned his father's trade of coopering. In 1739 he was a school master, receiving "thirteen pounds for two months' schooling and boarding himself." Elijah Whiton seems to have been prominent in Ashford for many years, his name occurring frequently in records of church and town, and he is often referred to as "Esquire Whiton." For a time he was deacon in the church at Ashford, but at the organization of the church in Westford was dismissed to join that church. In 1764 it was voted that he should procure a minister, and he was also made church treasurer. When the new parish of Westford was set off from Ashford, Elijah Whiton, his brother James and their father, Joseph Whiton, were among the first signers of the Church Covenant, Feb. 11, 1768. When the pews in the new church were assigned the first pew was given to "Elijah Whiton and Benjamin Walker." On Dec. 14, 1769, Ashford held a meeting and appointed a committee, of which one member was Elijah Whiton, Esq., "to correspond with other committees in the county and elsewhere, to encourage and help forward manufactures and a spirit of industry in this government." In 1777-78-79, Elijah Whiton acted as one of the justices for Windham county by appointment of the General Assembly. He had eighteen children, nine by the first wife and nine by the second.

(V) Joseph Whiton, one of the older sons of Elijah Whiton, was born in Ashford, Conn., in 1745-46, and died in the same place June 6, 1817. He married Joanna, daughter of David and Martha (Walker) Chaffee, who was born in 1748, and died Aug. 11, 1820. Joseph Whiton was a farmer, but also practiced the trade of carpenter. He was one of the early signers of the Westford Church Covenant, and held occasional town offices. Of his ten children the seventh child and fifth son was Heber Whiton, the father of David E. Whiton, of New London.

(VI) Heber Whiton, son of Joseph, was born in Ashford, Conn., Feb. 11, 1782, and died May 11, 1828, at Stafford, Conn. On May 5, 1808, he married Marcia Gay, born Nov. 15, 1784, at West Stafford, Conn., daughter of Col. Ebenezer and Elizabeth (Leavens) Gay. He then settled in Stafford, where he spent the remainder of his life, combining his trade of coopering with farming. After the death of Heber Whiton his widow removed, with her children, to Monson, Mass., where, in 1830, she became the wife of Spencer Keep. She died in Monson, June 13, 1848.

The children of Heber and Marcia (Gay) Whiton were seven in number. (1) Lucius Heber, born Feb. 26, 1809, is Stafford, is mentioned later. (2) Julius Royal, born Oct. 4, 1810, died Jan. 2, 1882, in Stafford. Jan. 23, 1833, he married Nancy Cooly, born April 23, 1810, in Brookfield, Mass., who died Aug. 30, 1840; in 1844 he married (second) Eliza Chandler, born Jan. 1, 1826, in Woodstock, Conn., and died May 16, 1883. (3) Ebenezer Gay, born Oct. 5, 1813, in Stafford, died there June 9, 1890; he married Thankful Yeomans, of Willington, Conn., who was born May 14, 1814, and died Nov. 15, 1896. (4) Joseph Leander, born April 16, 1816, in Stafford, died in Monson, Mass., Feb. 14, 1875. He married Sept. 29, 1841, Ann Anderson, born Oct. 8, 1824, who was daughter of Bostwick Anderson. (5) Edward Franklin, born Aug. 29, 1818, in Stafford, died Feb. 16, 1893, in Stafford. On May 21, 1843, he married Aurelia Eaton, born Aug. 13, 1819, who died Jan. 14, 1897, daughter of Luther and Araminta (Herrington) Eaton, of Stafford. (6) Hannah Cady, born Aug. 18, 1821, in Stafford, married Nov. 10, 1844, Penuel Eddy, who was a cabinet-maker in Stafford, and who served his country in the Civil war. Mrs. Eddy died in New London, Conn., Nov. 28, 1901. (7) David Erskine, born Oct. 15, 1825, in Stafford.

(VII) DAVID ERSKINE WHITON, who is an inventor and prominent manufacturer of New London, Conn., was born in Stafford, Tolland county, Oct. 15, 1825. His early education was limited to that acquired in the district schools of Monson, Mass., until he was fourteen years of age, when he went to Stafford and became apprenticed to his brother, Lucius Heber, until he was twenty-one years of age. During this time he attended the district schools of Stafford during the winter months until he was about nineteen years of age, and working at his trade of carpentering in the summer months. Before the expiration of his apprenticeship he bought up his remaining time with earnings made by working overtime, and in various other ways, and for several years worked at his trade as a journeyman in various places, among them Coventry, Willimantic and Hartford, Conn., and in Brimfield and other points in Massachusetts. In 1849 he spent some time in travel in the West, beyond Chicago, and in Wisconsin, then almost a wilderness, where he did some work at his trade and where he expected to locate. After spending about a year in the West he returned to Stafford and worked at his trade. In 1852 he started in business in West Stafford, Conn., as a millwright, also building turbine water-wheels, and other mill machinery, shafting, etc., building water privilege and a mill, which still stands and is operated by Charles W. Bradley. In 1856 he extended his business by adding machinery and appliances for the manufacture of a patent centering machine for use in machine shops. He continued occasionally to add other machinery specialties, and in 1865 he started the manufacture of a line of lathe chucks, having purchased the machinery and business of John R. Washburn, combining the business all in one plant, and employing twenty to twenty-five men. His business continued to increase in this line of mechanical specialties, largely through the inventive and mechanical skill of the proprietor, until in 1886, when, owing to the increasing business and that he might have better shipping facilities, the plant was removed to New London, Conn., where it has been growing steadily ever since.

Mr. Whiton has given most of his time to mechanical matters, and had made many valuable and important inventions and improvements in the special lines referred to, which come into general use. He has invented improvements on gear cutting machines, lathes and chucks. Coming to New London Mr. Whiton incorporated the plant under the name of D. E. Whiton Machine Co., with a capital stock of $50,000. Several new brick buildings were erected, including machine shops and foundry. They now employ about one hundred hands. Upon the incorporation of the company Mr. Whiton was made president, in which capacity he has since served.

Mr. Whiton has, however, been active in town affairs, and during his long residence in Stafford was ever mindful of his duties as a citizen. While a resident there he served at various times as constable and collector of taxes, assessor for several years, member of the board of relief, selectman and representative to the General Assembly of the State. In politics Mr. Whiton was an old line Whig until the formation of the Republican party, with which he has ever since been identified. He has never held any political State office except that of representative, to which he was elected twice, in 1867 and 1879. He was a member of the first Legislature (1879) to occupy the new Capitol at Hartford. In the Legislature he served on several committees of importance.

Mr. Whiton has always been a prominent and active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and during his residence in Stafford was for many years trustee of the Church Society and superintendent of the Sunday-school. Since coming to New London he has served as trustee of the church of the same denomination in that city.

Mr. Whiton was married Nov. 13, 1856, to Asenath Francis, born June 12, 1833, in Stafford, Conn., daughter of James and Achsah (Howe) Francis, the former a farmer. She died Sept. 25, 1902, in New London. Their first child, Rosella Lenett, was born Nov. 2, 1860, in Stafford, and died the Feb. 15, 1865, aged four years. (2) Lucius Erskine, born Dec. 25, 1862, in Stafford, married Oct. 1, 1887, Viola E. King, of Lowell, Mass., and has had four children: Helen King, born Nov. 4, 1888; Dorothy, born April 20, 1891; David Erskine, born Nov. 5, 1895, who died Oct. 5, 1896; and Winifred Gardiner, born Aug. 22, 1899. Lucius E. Whiton is associated with his father, being secretary and treasurer and manager of the D. E. Whiton Machine Co. (3) Mary Francis, born July 21, 1867, in Stafford, married April 23, 1890, Leander Kenney Shipman, M. D., of New London.

(VII) LUCIUS HEBER WHITON, eldest son of Heber Whiton, was married March 20, 1836, to Amanda Converse, who was born April 3, 1813, in Stafford, and died Feb. 15, 1893, a daughter of Captain Solva and Esther (Blodgett) Converse, of Stafford Springs. Mr. Whiton was a carpenter and builder and erected many of the buildings in Stafford, continuing until he was about forty years of age. In stature Mr. Whiton was only of medium size, and did not possess the physical strength necessary for hard labor. Nevertheless he operated a large farm in the west part of the town, near the present location of the Fair grounds, and became possessed of ample means. For many years he was connected with the official board of the Methodist Church, serving as clerk and steward and was long an active and consistent member. He was a man of sterling personal and political integrity, a strong Whig and later an active and zealous Abolitionist, one of the first in the town. His children were: Adeline F., born July 9, 1837, died May 29, 1892, who married May 27, 1863, E. N. Washburn, of Stafford, born Nov. 28, 1835, died July 3, 1900; Andrew, a prominent citizen of Stafford; Hannah, born Sept. 10, 1845, who became the wife of James M. Lord, Oct. 19, 1871; and Esther, born August 24, 1848, who married Albert C. Eaton, Nov. 23, 1870.

(VII) EDWARD F. WHITON is a name which belongs to the past but is still cherished in Stafford, where during life its bearer was a valued and representative citizen. In early manhood he became a machinist, but later embarked in mercantile pursuits. His tastes and abilities lay in the direction of politics, and after efficiently filling many of the local offices, his fellow citizens honored him by electing him to the Legislature. For over twenty years from 1866 to 1890, he was the popular postmaster of Stafford Springs, his service being so eminently satisfactory that changes of administration made no change in the office. Among the representative men in this county the name of Edward F. Whiton stands high.

(VIII) ANDREW WHITON, son of Lucius Heber Whiton, was born in Stafford, Conn., where he acquired an excellent common school education. At the age of fifteen years he took charge of his father's farm, and continued its management and operation until October, 1873, when he purchased an interest in the W. N. Thompson grocery store, which was located under the Congregational Church, where it suffered disaster in the flood of 1877. After the complete washing away of their possessions, the Thompson Company resumed business on East Main street, removing to the Baker Block when it was finished in 1879. In 1883 Mr. Whiton purchased the entire business and has most successfully conducted it ever since. In politics Mr. Whiton is prominently identified with the Republican party, and has been called upon to serve in many of the local offices. For several terms he was a member of the board of selectmen, has been assessor, has served on the board of relief, and has been a Burgess for two terms. For several years Mr. Whiton has been president of the Stafford Springs Cemetery Association, and also one of the directors, and is interested in many local enterprises which promise to be of benefit to the community.

On Jan. 1, 1864, Mr. Whiton married Ruth Waldo, who was born June 13, 1837, a daughter of Dwight Waldo, of Tolland. Her death occurred Nov. 26, 1894. On May 20, 1896, Mr. Whiton married Hannah Allen, daughter of Charles Allen, of North Kingston, R. I. Mrs. Whiton is a member of the Episcopal Church, but Mr. Whiton was reared in the Methodist Church, and still takes an active interest in it.

EDWIN REYNOLDS, Mansfield, Conn. Edwin Reynolds, who spends his summers at the home of his youth, Mansfield, Tolland county, is most highly esteemed there as a worthy descendant of an old and honorable family of New England.

William Reynolds, the remote ancestor, came from Plymouth, Mass., to Providence, R. I., in 1637, one year later than Roger Williams, and was one of the original purchasers of the land from the Narragansett Indians. He married Alice Kitson, in the Open Court, of Massachusetts.

James Reynolds, son of William, died in Kingston, R. I., in 1700.

Joseph Reynolds, son of James, was born Nov. 27, 1652, and died in 1722, in North Kingston, R. I. His wife's name was Susannah.

Samuel Reynolds, son of Joseph, was married Dec. 31, 1732, to Ann, daughter of Samuel Gardiner.

Thomas Reynolds, son of Samuel, was married Sept. 22, 1749, to Elizabeth Hopkins, born Sept. 22, 1729, daughter of William and Mary (Tibbitts) Hopkins.

Samuel Reynolds, son of Thomas, and grandfather of Edwin Reynolds, was born Feb. 12, 1752, and lived in Frenchtown, R. I., and migrated to Eaton, N. Y., where he died. On Dec. 4, 1777, he married Amy Weaver, born Nov. 18, 1759, who died near Buffalo. Their children were: Sally, Thomas, Betsey, Peleg, Selah, Christopher, Samuel, Jonathan, John H., Eleanor and William (twins) and Eunice. Of these, Sally married Andrew Moredock, a farmer who died in Killingly; she died in South Coventry, Conn. Thomas died in Kingston, R. I.; in early life he was a seafaring man. Peleg married Mary Wells, and died in Mansfield, Conn. Samuel, a farmer and merchant, was the first agent at Danielsonville (now Danielson), Conn., of the old Norwich & Worcester Railroad, and was killed by the cars, at the age of ninety years and two days. Jonathan was a farmer in Ashford, Conn., and died there. John H. was a tailor, and died in Beloit, Wisconsin.

Christopher Reynolds, the father of Edwin, was born July 11, 1790, at Frenchtown, R. I., and spent his boyhood there. He was reared to farming. In 1810 he located in Mansfield, where he was employed by Mr. Tillinghast (who resided at the farm now owned by Stephen C. Gardnier, between Mansfield Depot and Eagleville), until his marriage. During the war of 1812 he was a member of the Mansfield militia, and he was one of the few men drafted from his company to go to New London to assist against a threatened invasion by the British.

After his marriage Mr. Reynolds moved to the fulling mill, a short distance south of the Tillinghast farm, on land now owned by his son Edwin, the old dam still remaining, although the mill structure has been removed. There Mr. Reynolds engaged in cloth dressing, and also operated a small farm, and on this place ten of his twelve children were born. He continued the business until it ceased to be profitable, and then moved to Eagleville, where he assisted in the building of the first dam across the Willimantic river at that point. In time his former farm was purchased by his two sons, George H. and Edwin, and the parents returned and passed the remainder of their lives there, the mother dying Sept. 24, 1860, the father on July 21, 1871.

On Sept. 26, 1813, in Mansfield, Christopher Reynolds was united in marriage with Charissa Huntington, who was born in Mansfield March 5, 1794, daughter of Jonas and Rhoda (Baldwin) Huntington, both members of families prominent in Mansfield. Children were born to this marriage as follows: Adaline, born May 2, 1814, married Jacob S. Eaton, and died in Indian Orchard, Mass. Melissa, born March 14, 1816, married Charles Shumway, and died in Mansfield. Elizabeth, born March 14, 1818, married (first) Asa Sanders, a clergyman, and (second) Benajah Gurnsey Roots, a civil engineer, who assisted in the construction of the Illinois Central Railroad and became prominent in State school affairs in Illinois; she was killed in a runaway accident. Sarah H., born Jan. 31, 1820, married Fayette Barrows, and died in Mansfield. Julia, born Oct. 8, 1821, married Leander Derby, a comb manufacturer, who died in San Andreas, Cal.; she is now living in Brooklyn, N. Y. Glenn H., born Nov. 25, 1823, married Elizabeth F. Eaton; he remained at home until of age, when he moved to Providence; spent ten years at Danielson, Conn., two years at Cranston, R. I., twenty years at Providence, engaged in the mill supply business, and returned to Mansfield in 1886; later he became a resident of Danielson. Jane, born July 9, 1826, died when a little over one year old. John D., born July 28, 1827, married Martha Slater for his first wife, and Mrs. White for his second; he is now postmaster at Andover, N. J. George H., born Feb. 8, 1829, is mentioned elsewhere. Edwin, born March 23, 1831, is mentioned below. Benjamin Franklin, born Jan. 29, 1833, married Amanda Hawkins; he has been chief engineer of the Omaha Water Works for the past seventeen years, and resides at Florence, Neb. Albert W., born Dec. 11, 1835, married Rebecca Runion, and died in New York.

Edwin Reynolds, who for so many years has occupied a prominent position in the business world, especially in the field of mechanics, is a native of Mansfield. His literary education was acquired in the common schools, and, as the family was large he began work early, commencing as a farm hand. In the spring of 1847 he was asked by the owner of a machine shop, who had heard favorable reports of the boy's industry, to serve an apprenticeship at the trade in his shop. He was plowing a field when the man came to him with the proposition. It was entirely unlooked for, but with the promptness which has been characteristic of him throughout life, your Reynolds at once accepted, and he began his new work within a very short time. His remuneration was $30 per year and board. Displaying remarkable aptitude, he was foreman of the shop before the expiration of his three years' apprenticeship. Mr. Reynolds's apprenticeship was served with Arson P. Kinney, who made and repaired the machinery of the different textile mills in the locality (his widow, Mrs. Kinney, now resides in Tolland street), and after leaving him he entered the employ of Smith, Winchester & Co., at South Windham, who manufactured papermaking machinery, remaining with them a year. At the age of twenty-one he was at the head of the stone-dressing machinery department of the Woodruff & Beach Iron Works, at Hartford, erecting as well as building the machinery for quarrymen and stone contractors. He found employment in various shops in Connecticut, Massachusetts and Ohio, up to 1857, at which time he moved to Aurora, Ind., and became superintendent of the shops at that place, conducted by Stedman & Co. The principal work carried on in these shops was the building of engines, sawmills and drainage pumps for Mississippi river plantations. His work in these positions, though it may have appeared of no special importance at the time, had much to do with the broadening of his ideas, and provided a variety of experience which has had a noticeable bearing on his subsequent success. He was interested in steam engineering from the beginning, but not until he became connected with the Corliss works did he have scope for the display of his ability in that line.

The outbreak of the Civil war materially interfered with the business, and in the spring of 1861 Mr. Reynolds returned to Connecticut and until 1867 was engaged in various kinds of work—mechanical and engineering—in New York and Boston. In those days progress was slow, if sure, and it was not until the year last named that Mr. Reynolds made his first important step forward. In that year he became an engineer and salesman for George H. Corliss, the famous engine-maker, and so well did he demonstrate his ability in this wide field that by 1871 he had won promotion to the position of superintendent in general of the great Corliss Engine Works, at Providence, a position he retained until July 1, 1877, when he moved to Milwaukee, Wis. There he accepted the position of general manager and superintendent of the Reliance Works, of Edward P. Allis & Co., though this concern has since been consolidated with a number of other large establishments, being now known as the Allis-Chalmers Co., Mr. Reynolds holding the position of consulting engineer. Perhaps there could be no better evidence of Mr. Reynolds's ability as a mechanical engineer, and no less as a manager, than the remarkable growth and prosperity of the Reliance Works under his management. In the period that has elapsed since his connection therewith, the size of the works, the number of men employed and the value of the annual output have been more than quadrupled. From being an industry of mere local importance, the works have become one of the leading engineering establishments of the United States, enjoying, both at home and abroad, a well-deserved and enviable reputation for the high grade and superior excellence of their products. Mr. Reynolds has become known as the builder and designer of the largest stationary steam engines in the world, and he has supplied most of the large stationary steam engines in this country, especially where enormous horse power is required. One pump which he built still holds the record, the one installed in Milwaukee some fourteen years ago, and which handles 500,000,000 gallons of water daily. Recently his establishment turned out engines for the new electric works of the New York elevated railway system (eight, each of twelve thousand horse power), New York elevated road, subway, surface roads in New York, and in England, Russia and all European countries.

Mr. Reynolds has accomplished many remarkable things in steam engineering, one of the most important branches of modern engineering, in which he ranks among the foremost of the world's experts. He has demonstrated, what was before his successful attempt considered impossible, that it is feasible to build high-grade engines and introduce the very best mechanical work, and to make the venture commercially successful and financially gratifying in the West. His "Reynolds-Corliss" engine was the first of the kind to win success in the West, and the large number which are now in use, not only in the West, on the far Pacific coast, from Lake Superior to the Gulf of Mexico, but also in the East, through Massachusetts and Connecticut, as well as about 200 shipped to foreign countries, six being used to furnish power for the Central London Underground Railway, prove conclusively his high mechanical standing. Lack of space forbids an enumeration of his many successful engines; it is enough to say that those in use at the water works in Milwaukee, St. Paul, Omaha, Allegheny City and other places give perfect satisfaction, and to the last will soon be added the triple expansion engines for the cities of Albany and Chicago. The many large engines in the steam flour and saw mills, Western factories and Eastern cotton mills, the large hoisting engines and steam stamps in the Lake Superior and Montana mining regions; the blowing and rolling mill engines in Pittsburg, Birmingham and other iron-making centers, are all regarded as standards of high mechanical performance, unexcelled by any and rarely equalled.

One mechanical feat performed by Mr. Reynolds merits special attention. When he first entered the Corliss Works their engines, though then considered wonderful, were, compared with the products of the present day, very simple. Forty or fifty revolutions per minute, was the average speed; eighty was exceptionally high. During his time of service with the Corliss Company, he was called to Trenton, N. J., to arrange for gearing an engine to a train of rolls which were required to run 160 revolutions per minute. In looking the matter over, he came to the conclusion that the correct thing to do was to build an engine and couple it to the train direct without gears of any kind, and closed the contract for an engine to be coupled in this way, guaranteeing the same to work satisfactorily at 160 revolutions per minute. On his return to Providence, he reported what he had done to Mr. Corliss who exclaimed, "Why Mr. Reynolds, you are not going to undertake to run that engine at 160 revolutions per minute," to which Mr. Reynolds replied, "Yes, I have agreed to do this. It is better by far to run an engine in this way than to use the gears." Mr. Corliss then said, "You can have all the credit that goes with that kind of engineering. I want none of it." And it was for that engine that Mr. Reynolds designed the valve-gear which proved entirely successful at 160 revolutions per minute, and which he has so successfully used since that time on all engines of his design.

One piece of work of which Mr. Reynolds may be mentioned as superintendent, was the engine installed at the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia, in 1876, which was started in motion by President Grant, after a speech by Gen. Hawley, chairman of the Exposition. Great as was this engine then regarded, it may be mentioned that the Manhattan L. engines now drive a load twelve times as great.

Mr. Reynolds has ever proved himself equal to emergencies, in fact, limitations apparently only spur him to increased effort. The blowing engines which he designed and built for the Joliet (Ill.) Steel Works early in his Western experience, winning the contract in competition with first-class engineers from both home and abroad, widened the horizon perceptibly for the Allis Works. His last proof of this special faculty, however, probably surpasses all others—the construction of the electrical engines for the Manhattan "L" road. Many times during his connection with the Allis Works he had to overcome difficulties in construction, hampered in the earlier days by want of machinery of suitable size or make, and in this great problem, though he was in competition with the foremost engineers of the world, men who had every opportunity and ambition to study and learn the highest achievements in their profession, he proved that his mind is as fresh and as prompt to act as in his younger days. There were many requirements which a man who had handled lesser enterprises would have deemed it impossible to meet; indeed, even those who had experience in that special line were not altogether certain that they could be met. Mr. Reynolds's plans not only met with such approval from the "L" Company as to secure the Allis-Chalmers Company their contract, but also engaged the attention of interested parties to such an extent that large orders have come in to the firm as a result—a most substantial form of admiration and a genuine tribute to the worth of the machines and the confidence placed in their builder. In the building of the "L" electrical engines there were restrictions of space for the required 96,000 horse power not readily to be overcome. This difficulty Mr. Reynolds solved by dividing the area into eight equal parts, and then proceeded to build eight engines of 8,000 (minimum) horse power each; these engines have since developed energy to drive a load of 13,000 horse power each. The first was installed on New Year's Day, 1902.

As an acknowledgment of superiority Mr. Reynolds could not have received a higher compliment than the one paid him last spring, on the occasion of the visit of Prince Henry of Prussia to America—his selection as one of the hundred men who have done most for the commercial progress of the country, who dined with the Prince in New York. In addition to the duties of his position, he finds time for various other interests, and is a stockholder and director in various manufacturing enterprises, is president of the German-American Bank, the Milwaukee Boiler Co., the Central Improvement Co., the Badger State Long-Distance Telephone Co., the National Metal Trade Association, the West Allis Malleable Iron and Chain Belt Company, and the Northwestern Casualty Company. In political connection he has always adhered to the Republican party.

To his high standing as a mechanical engineer Edwin Reynolds adds a character for honesty and integrity, and he is regarded by all who have the honor of his acquaintance as in every sense a high-minded, thorough and representative selfmade man, worthy of universal esteem in every relation of life.

It is a matter of congratulation to the residents of Mansfield that, in all his material success, Mr. Reynolds has retained an affection for his boyhood home and a desire to pass his declining years among the friends and scenes of his youth. He purchased a farm of 200 acres in the town of Mansfield, located one-half mile from Mansfield Depot, on which he has expended large sums in improvements, making it a most attractive home. He has since increased the area to over 600 acres, in the town of Mansfield. When he resigns the reins he has held so long, and shifts his great responsibilities to other shoulders, he will find a warm welcome awaiting him in the home of his boyhood.

On Sept. 28, 1853, Mr. Reynolds married Miss Mary A. Spencer, daughter of Christopher N. Spencer, of Mansfield, and to this union were born two children, both of whom died in infancy. They adopted a daughter (who came into their home at the age of eighteen months), who is now the wife of

C. C. Robinson, of Mansfield Depot. Mrs. Reynolds's father was born in Greenwich, R. I., came to Connecticut at the age of twenty-one years, and died in Mansfield. His wife was a native of Mansfield, and died there.

Some years ago the University of Wisconsin conferred on Mr. Reynolds the honorary degree LL. D., and more recently honored him by placing his name in the frieze of their new engineering building—the only living engineer whose name there appears. These honors have all been fairly won, but their tender was highly appreciated by all his friends, as well as by himself. He was recently elected president of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, a position which he honors. Personally, Mr. Reynolds is a man of very regular and simple habits; he rises at seven in the morning, drives to the works at eight, and retires early.

JAMES DIXON McKNIGHT, a successful farmer and highly respected citizen of Ellington Tolland county, was born Aug. 9, 1826, in Enfield Hartford Co., Conn., and traces his ancestry to John McKnight, the emigrant, through Horace and John (2).

John McKnight was born about the year 1711 in Scotland, whence, when nineteen years of age, he came to this country, first locating in New Haven Conn., where he became a merchant, later moving to Hartford, and finally to Ellington, where he resided on a farm in the northwest part of the town until his death, in 1785. While on a trip to England for a cargo of goods he married Jerusha Crane, an Englishwoman, and by her he had a family of children: Thomas, John, Mary, Jerusha, Esther and Sarah. The father died March 16, 1785; the mother in September, 1783.

John McKnight, the grandfather of James D. McKnight, born June 18, 1739, was quite young when his father moved to Ellington. He was reared as a farmer boy, and followed agricultural pursuits on the home stead all his life. He erected the house which still stands there, planting also two elms which grew to immense proportions, and one of which is now standing in the yard of the old home. His first marriage was to Charity Abbe, born Nov. 20, 1762, who died in 1798; and his second marriage was to Jerusha Kent, May 27, 1799. She was born May 25, 1772, and died Aug. 11, 1842, and he passed away Nov. 12, 1837. He was the father of thirteen children: By his first marriage—Roxie, born Sept. 8, 1788, married Parley Chapman; Timothy, twin of Roxie, died Oct. 30, 1788; Horace, the father of James D., was born Oct. 23, 1790; Harvey, twin of Horace, died March 10, 1806; Polly, born May 23, 1792, married Flavel Whiton, and died June 30, 1860; Chauncey, born Jan. 21, 1796, and Betsey, born Sept. 12, 1798, both died young. By the second marriage—Charity, born April 15, 1800, married Jabez Chapman; Jerusha, born June 24, 1802, married Deacon Simon C. Chapman, and died

James D. McKnight

Aug. 11, 1842, in Wisconsin; Miranda, born Oct. 4, 1804, became Mrs. Harvey White, and died Feb. 4, 1843, in Vermont; John, born March 2, 1807, married Sarah M. Abbe, and lived and died in Ellington; Sarah, born Jan. 14, 1810, lived and died in Enfield, and married Helms Terry, who was also from Enfield; and Gilbert, born Nov. 16, 1812, married Roxianna Abbe, and died in Worcester, Massachusetts.

Horace McKnight, the father of James D., was born on the old homestead; the present house was erected when he was about two years old. His education was received partly in the common schools, and he also enjoyed the privilege of private instruction from Judge Asa Willey, who was a well-known lawyer of Ellington of that day. In the summers he was employed at farm work, but during the winters, for about twenty-five years, he was engaged in teaching, through Ellington, Enfield and East Windsor, and was a successful instructor as well as a capable disciplinarian. Twenty-five years of his life he spent in Enfield. During a part of this time he farmed, taught school and also kept a hotel during the winters, and during almost the entire time of his residence there he served as a constable. For several years prior to living in Enfield he conducted a hotel in the house now occupied by John Beasley, in Ellington, and then he purchased the farm on which he lived for eleven years, in the southern part of Enfield. When Mr. McKnight came to Ellington he bought the farm now occupied by his son James, where he resided for a number of years, and then moved to a location a short distance west of that place, where he lived until his death, which occurred Dec. 27, 1856. His political sympathies were with the Whig party, and he served his town in that term in the Legislature, was also a selectman, a trustee of the peace, and for many years a school visitor. His was a legal mind, and he was fond of performing such duties as the office of constable demanded. He was a member of the Ecclesiastical Society of the Congregational Church.

Horace McKnight was married Nov. 26, 1817, to Asenath Kimball, who was born Sept. 27, 1795, daughter of Daniel and Miriam (Alworth) Kimball, and died Jan. 17, 1857. They became the parents of seven children: Horace Kimball, born Oct. 20, 1818, died June 1, 1828; Alanson Abbe, born March 25, 1821, died Oct. 28, 1822; Henry, born Oct. 20, 1823, married Olivia P. Chapman, and died Dec. 5, 1896, in Springfield, Mass. (he was a farmer); James Dixon was born Aug. 9, 1826; Louisa Asenath, born Jan. 20, 1829, died March 10, 1852; Frances Roselle, born May 14, 1832, married Joseph Woods, a banker, of New Haven, and died July 17, 1865, in that city; Adrian Kimball, born Nov. 29, 1836, died Oct. 1, 1841.

James Dixon McKnight was born in Enfield, Conn., attended the schools of his native place, and after the removal of the family to Ellington became pupil in the famous Ellington high school, succeeding well in his studies and preparing himself for teaching, which profession he followed for several terms, in Ellington and in Enfield. For a time, in company with a partner, he conducted a grist, saw and shingle mill, later purchasing the property and engaging in the operation of same for several years. But failing health induced him to sell and go upon a farm, purchasing part of the farm of his father, which was then occupied by his parents, and where he erected his home in 1850—the home he still occupies. He added to the acreage, and has ever since successfully carried on farming, having made of his place one of the finest in the county by the use of the improved machinery and modern methods of agriculture. In past times he has raised considerable tobacco, but is now interested in his large dairy enterprise, which at present is carried on by his son, Howard, who is president of the Ellington Creamery Co.

Mr. McKnight was married Oct. 10, 1850, to Mary Fidelia Thompson, who was born May 22, 1827, in East Windsor, and whose parents moved to Ellington when she was but seven months old. She is a daughter of John and Ann (Ellsworth) Thompson, the latter of whom was a daughter of Benjamin Ellsworth, of East Windsor, a Revolutionary soldier who was present at the execution of Major Andre. In her youth Mrs. McKnight was a teacher in Ellington, and she was one of a large family: Sabra Ann, born in 1824, married Fitch Stoughton, of Vernon; Mary Fidelia is Mrs. McKnight; Julia Salina, born in March, 1829, married G. Newton Booth, of East Windsor, and died July 4, 1880; Edwin Franklin, born in August, 1831, married Amelia B. Morell; Martha Aurelia, born in August, 1833, married Joseph Allen Pascoe, of East Windsor, and died May 27, 1877; Sophronia, born in December, 1835, died Dec. 18, 1876; Emily Eleanor, born in January, 1838, married James B. Stiles, of East Windsor; John, born Jan. 11, 1840, married Amanda Bancroft, of East Windsor; and Elizabeth Mabel, born in March, 1842, married Samuel Newell, of Farmington, Ill., and died in 1871.

The children born to Mr. McKnight and his estimable wife numbered five: (1) Mary Louisa, born Aug. 31, 1852, married Deacon Gaius N. Booth, a farmer of Enfield, and died Feb. 13, 1902. (2) Everett James is mentioned below. (3) John Thompson, born May 29, 1860, who was educated in the Rockville high school and graduated at Williston Seminary, East Hampton, Mass., lives in Ellington, and is city engineer of Rockville, and has been secretary of the Ellington Creamery Association since its organization, in 1884. He married Julia Kimball, and has had three children—Mary Kimball, born Aug. 28, 1886; Alice Thompson, born Jan. 9, 1890, deceased; and Grace Ellsworth, Nov. 13, 1892, deceased. (4) Nellie Elizabeth, born Sept. 29, 1863, died Aug. 20, 1890. (5) Howard Horace, born Aug. 13, 1865, who was educated at the Wesleyan Academy, Wilbraham, Mass., is an enterprising and successful farmer, and manages the farm of his father. He is a director in the Ellington Creamery Association, of which he is president, owns much modern agricultural machinery—as a hay baler, a portable sawmill, etc. He married Clara S. Sikes, and is the father of five children—Emily Allen, born May 27, 1893; Nellie Elizabeth, July 22, 1894; Dorothy Clare, Jan. 6, 1896; Frances, Feb. 12, 1898; and Horace Sikes, Nov. 14, 1901.

EVERETT JAMES MCKNIGHT, M. D., received his earlier education at Hall's family school, in his native town, Ellington, Conn., and his preparation for college was made at the Hopkins Grammar School, in New Haven. From there he went to Yale, entering the class of 1876, in which among others were Arthur Twining Hadley (now president of Yale) and William Waldo Hyde. While in Yale Dr. McKnight took great interest in athletics, and during his course had much to do with developing interest in football, being one of its early advocates. He was connected with the club in an official capacity during almost his entire course, being treasurer of the organization in his Sophomore year, secretary in his Junior year, and president in his Senior year, personally making most of the arrangements for the first game between Harvard and Yale. After his graduation from the regular course at Yale Dr. McKnight took one year at Yale Medical School, and then at once proceeded to New York in order to further prepare himself for the medical profession. After two more years of painstaking study at the College of Physicians and Surgeons he received his degree of M. D., in 1879. At once locating at East Hartford, he for fourteen and one-half years practiced his profession with much acceptance to the people; indeed, it has been truthfully said of him that his success was that of a painstaking physician, who drew to himself the patronage of the very best families as well as that of the great masses of the community. His practice having increased so largely in East Hartford, Dr. McKnight opened an office in the Batterson building, on Asylum street, at the corner of High street, Hartford. For several years he remained in that location, and in July, 1897, he came to his present quarters, No. 110 High street, where he has a very convenient office.

On Feb. 8, 1881, Dr. McKnight was united in marriage with Miss Aletha T. Linsley, of New Haven, Conn. They have one daughter, Rachel, born Aug. 9, 1889. The Doctor has filled and is now filling a large number of responsible professional positions in the societies, and with railroads and life insurance companies. He is a member of the City, County and State Medical Societies; of the American Medical Association and of the International Association of Railway Surgeons. In 1898, by virtue of his long service as railroad surgeon for the New England Railway Co., he was chosen a vice-president of the International Association of Railroad Surgeons. In 1899 he became attached to the Hartford Hospital as orthopedic surgeon, and was later first assistant surgeon in that institution, of which on the death of Dr. M. Storck, June 9, 1900, he was appointed visiting surgeon. He is also consulting surgeon to the Hartford Phelan Asylum. In November, 1899, Dr. McKnight became medical director of the Hartford Life Insurance Co., under its new management, a position which he fills with the utmost satisfaction to the company and its policy holders.

Dr. McKnight represented the town of East Hartford in the General Assembly during the session of 1893, and was House chairman of the committee on Fisheries and of the committee on Public Health. His professional cares of necessity restrain him from actively participating in affairs of a political character, but he nevertheless has the welfare of the city in mind. He is a man of social leaning, but has been too busy to connect himself to any secret organizations.

Dr. McKnight is a member of the Yale Alumni Association of the City of Hartford, the Hartford Club, the Twentieth Century Club and the Hartford Scientific Society. He is a great admirer of the ceramic art, and has one of the finest collections in the city.

NATHAN WASHBURN. The subject of this biography, Nathan Washburn, was born April 1818, in Stafford, Tolland Co., Conn., and was many years one of its most prominent citizens, connected with some of its largest industries.

The Washburn family is a very old one in New England. Its early records tell that (I) John Washburn came from Worcestershire, England, to Duxbury, Mass., where as early as 1631 he was perhaps the first secretary of the Massachusetts Colony Company. His wife Margerie, then about forty-nine years of age, and his two sons, John, aged fourteen and Philip, aged eleven, came in 1635. John, with his son John, became early proprietors of the town of Bridgewater and there he died prior to 1670, having been one of the first freemen of the town of Duxbury. Philip never married and his ancestral line descended from John.

(II) John Washburn, son of the settler, was born in England in 1621 and married Elizabeth, daughter of Experience and Jane (Cook) Mitchell, the latter of whom was a daughter of Francis Cook, who was one of the 100 who signed the compact on board of the "Mayflower," before the company landed on Plymouth Rock. The children of John were: John, Thomas, Joseph, Samuel, Jonathan, Benjamin, Elizabeth, Jane, James and Sarah. The will of John (2) was probated in 1686.

(III) Jonathan Washburn, fifth son of John (2), was married in 1683 to Mary Vaughn, a daughter of George Vaughn, of Middleboro, and they reared a family of nine children.

(IV) Benjamin Washburn, third son of Jonathan, was born in 1688 and in 1714 married Bethiah, daughter of Henry Kingman, and he also reared a large family.

(V) Ezra Washburn, the fifth son of Benjamin, was married in 1742 to Susannah Leach, a daughter of Benjamin Leach, later moved to Middleboro, Mass., and there reared a family.

(VI) William Washburn, son of Ezra, was married Sept. 26, 1783, to Lurana Darling, of Oakham, Mass. She died Jan. 12, 1844, at the age of eighty-four years. Mr. Washburn moved to Stafford and there he died, Nov. 11, 1846, aged eighty-even years. There were three children. Zeruah died unmarried. William, who was born Feb. 11, 1785, died Jan. 9, 1832. He was born in Oakham, Mass., and his first two children were born in the same place. He was known as "Master Bill" on account of having charge of the old Stafford Hollow furnace. Seth, who was born March 10, 1787, died March 10, 1875, at the age of eighty-eight years. His home was in Stafford, near the Massachusetts line, where he owned a farm and he also owned a foundry and operated furnaces in Stafford Hollow and in Colchester.

(VII) Seth Washburn was married in 1807 to Catherine Washburn, who was born Oct. 3, 1786, and died March 3, 1874. She was a daughter of Solomon and Mary (Warner) Washburn. They reared a large family. (1) Zenas Darling, who was born Sept. 11, 1808, died Sept. 4, 1881. On May 3, 1832, he was married to Phebe Cushman, who was a daughter of James and Susannah (Nelson) Cushman, and they had seven children: Edwin Nelson, Susan Cushman, Ellen Simms, Martin Van Buren, Emigene A., Mary Emigene, and Horatio Martin.

(2) Libbeus was born May 30, 1810, and died Feb. 7, 1885. He was married April 3, 1834, to Laura A. Howe, who was born Nov. 27, 1814, and died Dec. 3, 1899. She was a daughter of Asa and Mildah (Converse) Howe, and they had seven children: Mary Ann, Henry B., Albert, Dwight R., Melia M., Narcissus S. and Nellie E.

(3) Alanson was born Dec. 17, 1811, and died Dec. 14, 1894. He was first married in 1835, to Milra Nelson, who was a daughter of George and Hannah (Davis) Nelson, was born in 1807 and died March 22, 1852. Their children were: Owen, who died in the Civil war; and Hortense. The second marriage of Alanson took place Nov. 17, 1852, to Laura A. White, who was born Jan. 25, 1821, and died Nov. 20, 1884. She was a daughter of Montmery and Sallie (Colman) White, and the children of this union were: Frederick, who died young; Frederick Alanson; Henry Kirk; Julia; Howland, who married Hannah Warner and moved to Franklinville, N. Y.; Roswell, who married Betsey Rogers, a daughter of Robert and Hulda (Orcutt) Rogers; Dinah, who married Thomas Hoar; and Cephas, who died July 15, 1841, unmarried.

(4) Seth Billings, born Oct. 23, 1816, died March 7, 1896. His first marriage was to Marcia Washburn, who died July 7, 1847, a daughter of Roswell and Betsey (Rogers) Washburn, and their children were Lucien and Agnes. The second marriage of Seth Billings was in 1846, to Ruby Bradway, and their children were: Adin; Junius Brutus and Julius, twins.

(5) Nathan Washburn, the subject of this sketch, was born April 22, 1818, and married Eliza Young, who was a daughter of John and Hannah (Converse) Young, the latter of whom was a daughter of Dr. Josiah Converse. Two daughters, Clara and Addie, were born to this union. Mrs. Washburn died March 31, 1900, having been born April 5, 1819.

(6) Mary and (7) Solomon, twins, were born Jan. 10, 1820. Mary was first married in January, 1841, to Horatio Spellman, who died Aug. 19, 1866; and second, Sept. 10, 1867, to Duncan Ferguson, Sr., who was mayor of Rockford, Ill., where he died in 1882, her death occurring May 30, 1880. She had two children by her first marriage, Horatio Adelbert and Frederick. Solomon was married Oct. 12, 1848, to Olive Merilda Vinton, who was born Feb. 15, 1829, and who was a daughter of Deacon David Vinton, of Eagleville. Their children were Ella and Arthur Eugene. Solomon died Jan. 10, 1820.

(8) Martha Ann was born July 17, 1822, and died Aug. 22, 1896. On Dec. 9, 1846, she married Luman Orcutt, who was a son of John and Minerva (Bradley) Orcutt, was born Aug. 18, 1822, and died July 15, 1896; there was no issue of this union.

(9) Marcius Howland Washburn, born April 22, 1824, died on Jan. 17, 1892, in Stafford, where he was a car wheel manufacturer and a moulder by trade. With his brother Nathan he was associated in car wheel manufacturing in Jersey City, later in Allston, Mass., near Boston. His first marriage occurred Jan. 9, 1845, to Mary Ann Davis, who was born in 1823, and who died Nov. 8, 1852. She was a daughter of Pardon and Candace (Wood) Davis, and their children were Annette Davis and Mary Ida Stratton Davis. The second marriage of Mr. Washburn took place June 7, 1854, to Hannah Blodgett Converse, who was born Jan. 12, 1829, and is still surviving. She was a daughter of Capt. Solva and Esther (Blodgett) Converse, of Stafford, and their six children were: Erlon Solva, Lucius Whiton, George Converse, George Alfred, Draper and Georgiana Almeda.

(10) Sumner died in infancy.

(11) Thomas Sumner Washburn, who was born Oct. 31, 1829, resides in Fitchburg, Mass. His first marriage was to Sarah Dyer.

(12) The youngest son of Seth and Catherine Washburn was Julius Palmer, who was born April 6, 1832, and died Nov. 26, 1864. In 1863 he was united in marriage with Susan Davis; from this union there was no issue.

Nathan Washburn of this biography, by his inventions, has made the place of his birth known in many lands. He was the projector of several large mills for rolling iron, and the patentee and manufacturer of locomotive tires and car wheels. His youth was like that of hundreds of other boys, passed in attending school and working on the farm, and he was twenty years old before he had a chance to attempt any use of tools. For two years he worked at the carpenter trade, but in 1840 he went to work in W. A. Wheeler's iron foundry, at Worcester, Mass., where he was employed for one year, after which he bought the business of L. C. Armsby and associated with him a cousin, Augustus Washburn, who had recently started a foundry at Fitchburg, Mass. Young Nathan soon evinced his mechanical skill by making, unassisted, from his own designs, a set of gears both straight and beveled, for a grist and sawmill at Ashburnham.

The business at this location had to be given up on account of the illness of his partner, and in 1884, Mr. Washburn sold out and returned to Stafford, Conn., where he connected himself with John P. Young in establishing a foundry. Until 1846 he continued in this enterprise, but in that year he went to Rochester, N. Y., where he made castings for cotton and woolen machinery, and did a large business with the railroads.

The car wheels then in use were very defective, and after making some experiments, with a view to relieving the wheels from strain, Mr. Washburn was fortunate enough to locate the difficulty and to apply the remedy, inventing what is known as the "Washburn chilled car wheel," which he patented in 1849, claiming for his invention the combination of the arch with the curved plate and arms, connecting the hub and rim, and a new way of disposing the metal so as to produce great strength and to avoid many of the defects to which ordinary wheels are liable, when cast whole. The usual methods of cooling the iron, so as to produce the hardness desired, left it liable to crack, and it was not until after experimenting with charcoal and white sand that Mr. Washburn discovered a way by which this defect could be overcome. His patent displaced every other patent of a car wheel.

Prior to the granting of this patent Mr. Washburn sold out his business at Rochester, N. Y. Soon Mr. E. A. Converse, of Stafford, became interested in the chilled wheel and this interest culminated in a partnership under the style of Converse & Washburn, and the removal of the business to Worcester. Great confidence was placed in the new invention, and large undertakings were entered into by the firm besides the manufacture of the Washburn wheel. In 1852 they built the Hope mills, at Staffordville, Conn., for the manufacture of satinets, and organized a company in which they were the owners. Later the firm built another mill, at Stafford Springs, Conn.

In 1865 was organized the Converseville Manufacturing Company, in which the firm were the owners and the business was for the manufacture of satinets. In addition to their works in Worcester the firm of Converse & Washburn built a foundry at Troy, N. Y., for the casting of wheels, and continued to operate it for two or three years, when they closed out advantageously. The firm dissolved in 1868, and Mr. Washburn became the sole owner of the iron industries and Mr. Converse took charge of the satinet business.

The Schenectady Locomotive Works, of New York, leased their property to Mr. Washburn in 1856, and he converted it into a manufactory for wheels, doing a large business there for three years. In the same year that he leased the works at Schenectady the increase of his operations demanded more room and he made arrangements at Brandon, Vt., for the casting of wheels.

In 1857 Mr. Washburn also turned his attention to other wants of railroads in iron equipments; to meet them he built at Worcester the Washburn Iron Works, which consisted of two rolling mills, 400x125 feet, with a foundry attached, 150x60 feet, and other buildings convenient for the work, covering, in all, about four acres. The works produced about 450 tons of iron rails per week.

Early in the prosecution of this branch of business Mr. Washburn invented a machine for rolling locomotive tires without boring them and received a patent for it in 1858. In 1859 he built the large iron works intended for similar work at Toronto, Ont., and designed the machinery for them himself; he organized the Toronto Rolling Mills and received one-quarter of the stock. During the Civil war, 1861-1865 inclusive, the Washburn Iron Works at Worcester were devoted to the manufacture of gun barrels. The English method of rolling the barrels was introduced into the establishment, by which the iron, heated to a white heat in the furnace, is passed through rolls or constant decreasing grooves until it is of proper size, diminishing the cost of their production two-thirds. Gun iron had been imported from England, but Mr. Washburn discovered a new process of puddling steel, whereby he could produce a gun-iron which was a semi-steel, equal to anything imported. However, he was obliged to desist from this manufacture in consequence of being unable to secure from American mines the necessary quality of pig-iron.

In 1865 Mr. Washburn sold the Washburn Iron Works at Worcester and built in the vicinity a foundry for casting his chilled wheels. This building was 200x60 feet one way and 90x60 feet the other, and had a capacity of producing 100 wheels a day. At the same time he entered into a partnership with William C. Barnum and other capitalists or the mining and preparation of iron suitable for commerce and for the manufacture of chilled steel and locomotive tires, holding one-quarter interest. They established blast furnaces at Canaan, Conn., in 1865, and in 1866 at Salisbury, in Litchfield county, where pig-iron was made. This firm in 1865 also purchased some iron works at Spuytenwyfel, near Yonkers, N. Y., where they manufactured railway iron for two or three years. In the new works at Worcester Mr. Washburn put mills of his own design, for the production of his wheels, and in 1867 he began to make steel locomotive tires. Worcester, overcame the difficulties in their construction and was the first to produce a satisfactory steel tire. These have constituted a large part of his manufactures ever since. His experiments in steel and locomotive tires suggested a combination of iron and steel for car wheels, which he also brought to a successful result. The plan of these was a steel tire with a cast iron filling. Under the Washburn process steel and iron actually unite and constitute the best wheel for railroad cars.

The chilled wheel never came from the process perfectly round and this interfered with its speed. The combination wheel is always finished a perfect circle. The chilled wheel is still used, but it will only travel, on an average, 30,000 miles, while the combination wheel has run 400,000 miles. The tires for these wheels have thus far been cast in solid molds in cheese form, and then have been re-heated, machined and drawn to proper size and shape, but to accomplish this task requires heavy machinery and large expense in heating. Mr. Washburn in operating his furnaces did away with the Seaman masters' furnace for making steel on the open hearth and substituted a crucible furnace. Mr. Washburn has erected in Hartford, Conn., a building 175x60 feet and a machine shop 50x80 feet, where these tires are taken and filled with cast-iron, the two making a perfect union under his process. Although his life has been filled with vast undertakings, Mr. Washburn has never forgotten either a friend or the needs of his home towns. His business has called him many times to Europe, but his services have been given as alderman and active member of the city council in Worcester and he is interested in the success of the Democratic party. Although he was reared in the orthodox faith, late in life he has become a Universalist. He enjoys the high regard of the majority of his fellow-citizens. Mr. Washburn is still inventing, one of his latest successes being a decarbonizing flame for a furnace, and a wheel which he considers perfect. This is made of the hardest metals, cannot be broken, while at the same time it is fibrous. Mr. Washburn has also invented a wonderful apparatus for pouring molten metals at once. The rim metal being too hard to bore, the soft metal is poured in the center, and another machine of his invention rolls the wheel as it is cast.

GEORGE TALCOTT. The Talcott family is one of the oldest in New England, a family distinguished in the Colonial history of Connecticut, and whose descendants have been numerous in Tolland county, and prominent in molding and shaping the religious and social life, as well as the business institutions, of their various localities. A representative of this family is George Talcott, president of the First National Bank and of the American Mills Company, of Rockville, who has long been a leading and substantial citizen of that city.

The late Phineas Talcott, his father, was a descendant in the seventh generation from John Talcott, who was a member of the family of Talcotts, of Warwickshire, England. John Talcott was born in Braintree, County Essex, and there married Dorothy, daughter of Mark Mott. In 1632 he and his wife came to America in the "Lion," with the party of Rev. Mr. Hooker. In 1636 they removed to Hartford, and occupied a house built for them in 1635 by Nicholas Clark. In both Boston and Hartford John Talcott became a prominent man, and filled important offices in both settlements.

Capt. Samuel Talcott, son of John, born in 1634, in Newtown, now Cambridge, Mass., in 1658 graduated from Harvard, and became a useful citizen, conspicuous in public life. He was one of the original proprietors of Glastonbury, Conn., and his death occurred at Wethersfield, Conn., in 1677. In 1661 he married Hannah, daughter of Hon. Elizur Holyoke.

Deacon Benjamin Talcott, son of Capt. Samuel, born in 1674, in Wethersfield, married in 1690, Sarah, daughter of John Hollister. His death occurred in 1727.

Benjamin Talcott (2), son of Deacon Benjamin, was born in 1702, in Glastonbury, and in 1724 he married Esther, daughter of John Lyman, of Northampton, Mass. He was a farmer by occupation, and resided on lands in Bolton, Conn., which he had inherited from his father.

Deacon Benjamin Talcott (3), son of Benjamin (2), born in 1725, in Bolton, Conn., married in 1753, Elizabeth, daughter of Samuel Lyman, of Coventry. He was a farmer and settled near the quarry on land given him by his father, and there his life ended in 1811.

Deacon Phineas Talcott, son of Deacon Benjamin, born in 1758, in Bolton, married in 1789, Hannah, daughter of Rev. Ebenezer Kellogg. He was a farmer until his death in 1835. Prominent in the affairs of the town, he served many times as representative in the State Legislature, and he was one of the delegates who framed the State Constitution of 1818. He was a soldier in the war of the Revolution, his name appearing on the Vernon records as a pensioner of that war. Of the eight children of Deacon Phineas Talcott, Phineas, Ralph and Allyn were among the founders of the manufacturing interests of Rockville, and of these Phin-as Talcott was especially prominent, not only in earlier and later manufacturing at Rockville, but in the business in the locality in general, and in the public affairs of the county and State.

PHINEAS TALCOTT was born Aug. 7, 1793, in North Bolton, now Vernon, Conn., and in the public schools of that period and the locality, he received training that enabled him to teach school himself, and in the fall of 1820 he became so occupied in Coichester, teaching there for one year. This experience was followed by similar work in Glastonbury until 1822, when he went to Hartford and assumed charge of what was known as the stone school house, where ten teachers were employed and some 600 pupils were in attendance. At the beginning of the year 1828 he was appointed steward in the Connecticut Insane Retreat, at Hartford, a position he filled with fidelity and ability until May, 1835, when, his wife having died some time previous, he removed to his mother's home in Vernon, taking his two small sons.

Mr. Talcott, accompanied by his brother Ralph, then made an extensive tour through the West, chiefly prospecting for land, going by way of Buffalo. From there he crossed the lake to Sandusky, Ohio, where he purchased horse and saddle, with equipments for traveling, and on Nov. 7, 1835, his trip was begun, riding through to Quincy, Ill., where he remained a short time, and then returned to Rockville, ready for new enterprises.

On, Jan. 19, 1837, Phineas Talcott became the agent of the Rock Manufacturing Company, at Rockville, with a salary of $800 per year, but this position he resigned in March, 1842, to engaged in farming. He bought of Dr. Scottaway Hinkley, the farm which then included land now considered the choicest residence section of Rockville, and upon which are located many of the city's finest homes. In April, 1846, he removed to the house where he died—the same one which is now the residence of his son George, on Prospect street. After purchasing this farm, Mr. Talcott carried it on with his other interests. In 1846 this energetic and far-seeing man began the construction of the American Mills at Rockville, of which he was the largest stockholder and its president until his decease. He also controlled a one-third interest in the Springville Mill, was treasurer of the Aqueduct Company, president of the Rockville Railroad Company, and in 1859-60, was president of the Savings Bank of Rockville. With Samuel P. Rose he carried on a paper mill, for one year, in Rockville.

For many years Mr. Talcott was a potent influence in political circles in Tolland county, and for a long time held public positions of trust and honor, the duties of which he administered with great fidelity and ability. From 1844 to 1846, from 1847-1850, from 1851-1854, and from 1857-1858, he was judge of probate for the Ellington district, and for many years was a prominent justice in Tolland county. In 1849-58-60 he was first selectman of Vernon and town agent, was a representative of the State Legislature in 1844, and State senator in 1851. Religiously, Mr. Talcott was of the faith of the Congregational Church. While at Hartford, he became a member of the South Congregational Church of that city, and in 1835 of the church of that denomination in Rockville. He was an honorary member of the board of Foreign Missions, and ever a cordial promoter of many enterprises inspired by public spirit and philanthropy.

On Nov. 17, 1823, Mr. Talcott was married to Miss Lora McLean, daughter of Col. Frances A. Roxy (McKinney) McLean, the former of whom was one of the founders of Rockville and one of the best-known men of his time. Two children were born of this union: Frederick, born Dec. 27, 1827, was connected with the firm of Hunt & Talcott, Mt. Morris, N. Y., and died Sept. 2, 1849, in his father's home, in Rockville; and George, born Jan. 20, 1827. During the progress of the Civil war Phineas Talcott was one of the strongest supporters of the administration. He was formerly a Whig but became an ardent Republican. A man of heavy weight and commanding figure, a fall on the stairs resulting in concussion of the brain, caused his death, June 6, 1863, his burial being by the side of the wife whom he had mourned for thirty-one years. So closed the life of one of the most capable, most valuable and brainiest men of Tolland county.

George Talcott was born in Hartford, on the south side of State street, nearly opposite the Exchange Hotel. His first schooling was received at a small building located near South Church, with Miss Thatcher as his teacher. He was a lad of eight years when he went to Vernon to live with his grandmother, and there he was sent to school, continuing until he was about fifteen years old, or 1818, when he entered the store of S. P. Rose, at Rockville as a clerk, but a short time after resigned on account of poor health. Leaving the store, he returned to the farm, intending to return to school but his state of health did not permit, and it was deemed wiser for him to occupy himself with literary pursuits around home. In 1852 he decided to make the trip to California, and a very enjoyable year was spent, going by way of Panama, and returning by Nicaragua; the previous year he spent some time in Aiken, Charleston, and Savannah. So after his return from California, he was made tax collector, later constable, and served as such until he was appointed deputy-sheriff under Col. Foster.

In October, 1861, Mr. Talcott, being still troubled with precarious health, made a trip to Buenos Ayres, South America, where he remained until in May, 1862. After the death of his father in 1863, he took the latter's place, and later was appointed associate judge of the city court under Judge West, whose death occurred before his term began. Mr. Talcott became his successor and resided over the first city court in Rockville, continuing in this office for three years, when he became associate judge, remaining as such until 1897, when age rendered him ineligible to further service as such. In 1868 Mr. Talcott became second selectman in Vernon, and in 1869 became first selectman, again in 1877 and 1878. In politics he was formerly a Whig, but later a Republican, and he has efficiently served his party and town.

Mr. Talcott was a member of the first board of directors of the First National Bank, in January, 1864, and he has been so connected ever since. He succeeded his father as director in the American Mill, and in 1879 succeeded Calvin Day as president of that company; he is also a director in the Savings Bank of Rockville, and for years was a member of the loaning board; is president of the First National Bank of Rockville; and is a director in the Rockville Railroad Company, which he served several years as president. He has been treasurer of the Rockville Insurance Company ever since its organization. It was he who appeared before the proper committee of the State Legislature at New Haven, to obtain its charter. For several years he was a member of the Talcott Brass Band of Rockville, so named for his father, who presented the brass instruments to the band. For some time he was a member of the Connecticut militia, serving on the staff of Gen. Elijah Smith.

Mr. Talcott was married (first), June 30, 1856, in Rockville, to Miss Rosanna McLean, of Manchester, daughter of John and Sarah (Bunce) McLean; she died in 1876, leaving one son, George Frederick, born Feb. 23, 1859, who now is an expert electrician in New York. On July 24, 1877, Mr. Talcott married Miss Ella McLean, a cousin of his first wife, a native also of Manchester, born July 3, 1847, a daughter of Charles and Octa (Strong) McLean. One son was born of this union, Phineas McLean, born Dec. 24, 1880, member of the class of 1901, in the Rockville High School. This wife died April 5, 1902, in Los Angeles, Cal. Mrs. Talcott was a highly cultured lady, a charter member of the Sabra Trumbull Chapter of the D. A. R., of Rockville, was also connected with the W. C. T. U., and Womans Relief Corps, and was very prominent as a member of the Union Congregational Church. She died in Los Angeles, Cal., April 5, 1902. In 1835, Mr. Talcott was baptized in the South Church, in Hartford. A spoon presented to him on the occasion of his birth is one of his highly prized treasures. Although predisposed to lifelong trouble, Mr. Talcott by care and regular habits has seemingly overcome all disease, and is an ample of what proper living may accomplish, as, in appearance and enjoyment of life, he far surpasses nine-tenths of those of his years. With fellow-citizens, employees and friends he is deservedly popular, and is a good representative of the best element of Rockville, Connecticut.

GEORGE T. KENDALL. The name borne by the subject of this review is one which has been long and distinctively identified with the annals of New England history, where the original representative of the name took up his abode in the early colonial epoch, and the family has been one of prominence in connection with the industrial activities and civic affairs of this section of the Union during all the long intervening years. He to whom this sketch is dedicated is a worthy scion of his race and is known and honored as one of the progressive and representative agriculturists of Canterbury, Windham county, his fine rural estate being located three miles south of the village of Brooklyn, the capital of the county.

It is predicated beyond reasonable doubt that the original American progenitor of the Kendall family of this particular line of descent, and the undoubted ancestor of all bearing the name in New England, was Francis Kendall, who was born in England, whence he emigrated to America about the middle of the seventeenth century, since official records still extant show that he was a resident of Charlestown, Mass., in 1640, while in 1645 his name was on the tax rolls as one of the earliest settlers in Woburn, that colony. There, Dec. 24, 1644, he was united in marriage to Miss Mary Tedd (or Tidd), who died in 1705, while his death occurred in 1708. He was a man of influence in the communities where he lived, and his leadership in thought and action may be read "between the lines" of the town records upon which his name appears. Thus it is shown that for eighteen years he served the town of Woburn in the capacity of selectman, while the voice from the remote past announces in no uncertain tone that he was a man of sterling character and strong individuality. A list of his children, with dates of birth accompanying, is here entered: John, born July 2, 1646; Thomas, Jan. 10, 1648 or 1649; Mary, Jan. 20, 1650 or 1651; Elizabeth, Jan. 15, 1652 or 1653; Hannah, Jan. 26, 1654 or 1655; Rebekah, March 2, 1657; Samuel, March 8, 1659; Jacob, Jan. 25, 1660 or 1661; and Abigail, April 6, 1666. The four sons noted in the foregoing list all married and made Woburn their place of permanent residence, and each had a numerous progeny, many of the third generation going forth from Woburn to become valued citizens of other towns in the Massachusetts colony, notably Tewksbury and Sherborn, in Middlesex county, and Sterling, in Worcester county, in each of which places the name became one of prominence in that and succeeding generations. Of the four sons of the original ancestor the one to whom the subject of this sketch traces his direct lineage was John Kendall.

John Kendall, the grandfather of our subject, was born in Brooklyn, Conn., where he was reared to maturity and united in marriage to Lois Palmer, a member of another prominent old family of New England. John Kendall became the owner of a valuable farm of two hundred acres located on what is now Christian Corner, Brooklyn, and there he continued to devote his attention to agricultural pursuits until 1820, when he disposed of his landed estate and, in company with his wife, two daughters and one son, removed to New Lisbon, Otsego Co., New York, whither another of his sons had gone in the preceding year, and there both he and his wife passed the remainder of their days, his death occurring Nov. 25, 1836, at the age of seventy-eight years, while she had been summoned into eternal rest April 18, of the preceding year, at the age of seventy-four. They were folk of the utmost integrity in all the relations of life and their years were filled with usefulness and kindliness, so that unalloyed confidence and esteem were ever their portion. Of their children we incorporate the following brief record: Lois, born Oct. 20, 1782, married Joseph Tyler, of Brooklyn, Conn., and her death occurred July 25, 1819. Alice, born Feb. 8, 1784, married a Mr. Rood and they resided in Otsego county, New York. Annis, born Oct. 3, 1786, became the second wife of Joseph Tyler. Nancy married a Mr. Fowler and her death occurred Dec. 22, 1836. Chauncey, who married in the State of New York, became the father of seven children and died Aug. 31, 1840, at the age of forty-seven years. John was the father of George T. Kendall. Nathan married a Miss Preston, who bore him four children, and with his family he removed to Michigan, where he passed the remainder of his life.

John Kendall was born in Brooklyn, Conn., Nov. 15, 1790, and was reared and educated in his native town, where he continued to make his home until the year 1816, when he removed to the town of Canterbury, Windham county, and located in what is locally designated as Christian Corner. Here he purchased of David Hyde a farm of ninety acres, upon which he continued to maintain his abode until 1841, when he effected the purchase of the farm of James Carey, on Hyde street, the same being the estate now owned by his son, our subject. There he continued to conduct his agricultural operations successfully until November, 1848, when he again took up his residence in his native town of Brooklyn, Windham county, where he owned property, and this continued to be his home until the close of his long and signally useful and honorable life; his death occurred June 2, 1868, at which time he had attained the age of seventy-seven years and seven months. He was essentially the architect of his own fortunes, since he began his independent career without any extraneous influence or tangible aid, relying upon his own efforts and abilities in the attaining of the goal of success, and that he did gain distinctive prosperity is evident when we revert to the fact that at the time of his demise he was one of the wealthiest men in this section of the State, his landed estate in Canterbury and Brooklyn aggregating twelve hundred and fourteen acres.

On Aug. 22, 1819, John Kendall was united in marriage to Miss Sarah Parkhurst, of Plainfield, Windham county, the daughter of Timothy and Hannah (Walker) Parkhurst. She was born in the town of Plainfield, Jan. 23, 1801, the only daughter in a family of four children, the names of her brothers being Waldo, Henry and Prentice. Her death occurred in the village of Brooklyn, Feb. 1874, and her memory is revered by all who came within the sphere of her gentle and noble influence. Her grandfather in the agnatic line was Timothy Parkhurst, Jr., who was born July 8, 1730, and to whom more specific reference is made in the sketch of Andrew H. Maine, of Scotland, Windham county.

John Kendall was a man of marked sincerity and distinct force of character, ever true to principle and unbending in his integrity of purpose. He served for three months as a soldier during the war of 1812, at the time when New London, Conn., was menaced by the British forces. Though his chief success was in the field of agriculture, which he became so prominently identified, he also learned the trade of a mason in his early manhood and to that devoted his attention for a period of ten years. Ever showing a deep appreciation of spiritual verities and upholding the cause of religion, he was a regular attendant of the Unitarian Church, Brooklyn; his wife was a devoted member of the Congregational Church. He was essentially a business man, giving careful and discriminating attention to the management of his several farming properties, but he was also mindful of the duties of citizenship and had no inclination to shrink from responsibilities in this connection. Thus he maintained a lively interest in public affairs and became a prominent factor in the local contingent of the Democratic party, of whose principles he was a staunch advocate. Recognizing his personal eligibility as a man of fine mentality and upright character, his party placed him in nomination as a representative of Canterbury in the lower house of the State Legislature, to which he was elected in 1837 and again in 1846, proving an able and faithful member of the assembly, while in 1853 the same distinction was again conferred upon him, since he was then elected to represent Brooklyn in the Legislature. That his services did not fall short of popular appreciation is shown in the still greater political preference which became his, prior to the incumbent last noted, when in 1843 he was a member of the State Senate, in which he represented the thirteen senatorial district. He was a man of spotless integrity, and his intellectual grasp, courage in the support of what he believed to be right, his mature judgment and his fairness, all commended him to the confidence and high regard of the people, who thus gave unmistakable tokens of their appreciation of him as a man worthy of positions of public trust and responsibility. He was at various times incumbent of different local offices, having been selected for many years and having ever shown an abiding interest in all that conserved the welfare of his town, county and State. He passed to his reward, secure in the esteem of all who knew him, and his name is inscribed on the roll of the representative men who have conferred honor and dignity upon Windham county.

Of the children of John and Sarah (Parkhurst) Kendall we here make brief mention in the order of birth. John Waldo, who was born June 6, 1820, died Feb. 4, 1899, having passed practically his entire life in Brooklyn. He married Harriet Sharp, who bore him one son and one daughter: John T., born March 27, 1850; and Hattie E., born March 31, 1859. She married Arthur L. Blake, April 25, 1888, and they have two children: Waldo Warren, born May 15, 1890; and Helen Burnett, born Oct. 25, 1893. Henry, who was born Jan. 17, 1827, died Dec. 9, 1893. He married Emeline H. Stevens, and they became the parents of two daughters, namely: Alice Emeline, who was born Jan. 5, 1851, and whose death occurred July 16, 1853; and Ella Gertrude, who was born Oct. 7, 1856, and whose marriage to Andrew T. J. Clarke was solemnized March 12, 1885. The offspring of this union was six daughters: Edith Darling, born Dec. 24, 1885; Ethel Emeline, June 28, 1887; Cressa May, May 3, 1890; Florence Louise, May 18, 1892; Jennie June Kendall, June 15, 1894; and Ruby Isabelle Judson, May 8, 1897. Henry Kendall took up his abode on the present Kendall farm in 1841, where his brother, George T., subject of this review, joined him a few years later, and thereafter they continued to be associated in their business operations for the long period of forty-five years, that is, until the death of the younger; they were uniformly successful in conducting their fine farm of two hundred and eighty acres and their names were inseparably associated, always familiarly referred to as "The Kendall Brothers." Henry Kendall was one of the leading and most highly honored citizens of Canterbury, was a stalwart supporter of the Democratic party and represented his town in the State Legislature in 1863. His religious views were in harmony with the doctrines of the Unitarian Church, and he was a liberal supporter of the organization of this denomination in Brooklyn. Elnathan, the next in order of birth, was born Sept. 17, 1831, and in 1855 he removed to the State of Iowa, whence, in the following year, he went to Blue Earth county, Minn., and founded the village of Vernon Center, where he located on a tract of one hundred and sixty acres of which had been granted to his father in recognition of his services in the war of 1812, and he became one of the influential citizens and successful farmers of that State. There he was united in marriage to Louisa Richardson, who was born in Indiana, and they became the parents of the following children: Sarah, Lois and Edward. In his later years Elnathan Kendall traveled quite extensively, and his death occurred in the State of Oregon in April, 1899. Horace Kendall was born Sept.

2, 1836, and his death occurred Feb. 21, 1892, at Christian Corner, Windham Co., Conn., where he had devoted the greater portion of his life to farming. He married Polly Champlain, who bore him two children, George and Mary. Amos, the youngest brother, was born Aug. 31, 1839, and is engaged in farming at Christian Corner, in the town of Canterbury. He married Mary E. Burdick, and no children have been born of this union.

George T. Kendall, whose name gives title to this genealogical resume, was reared on the homestead farm in Canterbury, and his early educational advantages were such as were afforded in the public schools of the locality and period. In 1849 he became associated with his brother Henry in the operation of the fine farm estate, of which he has had control since the death of his honored brother and coadjutor, and the alliance was one of distinct fraternal and business harmony and one which resulted in the attainment of a high degree of success. In 1849, in connection with their extensive agricultural industry, they also engaged in the operation of a grist mill, the enterprise being continued until 1894. The homestead farm comprises two hundred and eighty acres, as has already been noted, while the landed estates held by the subject of this sketch and the heirs of Henry Kendall, who still live in the same family, aggregate about 1,000 acres. Like his father and his brother Henry, Mr. Kendall has given an uncompromising allegiance to the Democratic party, in whose councils he has been a prominent factor in that section of the State, while the confidence and esteem which have ever been so significantly accorded to the representatives of the name have been his in marked degree, as is shown in the fact that on three different occasions he has been chosen to represent the town of Canterbury in the Connecticut Legislature,—in 1859, 1881 and 1884, while his services have also been enlisted in connection with various local offices, the duties of which he has invariably discharged with ability and judgment, gaining uniform commendation. He is a man of unpretentious and unassuming manner, genial and kindly in his intercourse with his fellow men, and in the community where he has passed his entire life it may well be said that his friends are in number as his acquaintances. Mr. Kendall has attained the age of more than four score years and has remained a celibate, though he has never been denied the grateful associations of the true home, for his brothers, their wives and their children have for him that appreciative affection which he always manifests in reciprocal way, so that our venerable bachelor can scarce realize any deprivation in having clung to a life of "single blessedness."

At this point we revert to the genealogy of our subject along the Palmer line, his paternal grandfather having married Lois Palmer, as was noted early in this sketch. The original representative of this branch of the Palmer family in America was Samuel Palmer, who married Hepsibah Abbey, born Feb. 14, 1688, or 1689. From them the line direct is traced through their son Elihu, who was born in 1728 and died in 1810. On Aug. 11, 1752, he married Lois Foster, who was descended from Miles Standish, through the following line: (I) Captain Miles Standish married his second wife, Barbara, about 1628, and his third child by this marriage was (II) Josiah, who was born in 1634 and died in 1690. He married Dec. 19, 1654, Mary Dingley, and their son, (III) Josiah, married Sarah Allen, who died Jan. 16 or June 16, 1741, while his death occurred March 29, 1754. Their daughter (IV) Hannah, was married to Nathan Foster, Nov. 3, 1724, and their daughter (V) Lois, born Jan. 7, 1732, married Elihu Palmer. Of the children of Elihu and Lois Palmer we enter the following data: Lois, born in 1761, was married to John Kendall Aug. 8, 1781, and they were the paternal grandparents of George T. Kendall; Olive Palmer was married to Seth Clark Jan. 22, 1786; Hannah married Jonathan Pellett, June 29, 1777; Thaddeus, grandfather of Josiah C. Palmer, of Canterbury, was born June 22d, 1759, and on June 15, 1782, was married to Thankful Cleveland, of Canterbury; Nathan married Jerusha Barstow, Sept. 9, 1794; Eunice married Josiah Smith and lived in Scotland, Windham county; Elihu, who was a clergyman of the Congregational church and who was blind, never married; Nabby married a Mr. Spalding; and Lucy B., born Aug. 24, 1771, married a Mr. Morse.

Of the Stevens family to which belongs Emeline H. (Stevens) Kendall, the widow of Henry Kendall, brother of George T., it will be consistent to make more definite mention in this connection. Richard Stevens, a native of Plymouth, England, came to Taunton, Mass., and prior to May, 1670, he there married Mary, a daughter of Thomas Linkon; his death occurred April 7, 1716. Their son Nicholas, born Feb. 23, 1669, died between April, 1746, and November, 1747. He married Annie Spur, of Taunton, Mass., and their son Robert removed thence to East Thompson, Windham Co., Conn., about 1760, finally settling in Canterbury. He died at Pomfret and his remains are interred at Abington Four Corners, Windham county. Jan. 3, 1745, he married Mary Hathaway, of Berkley, Mass., who was born in Dighton, that State, Nov. 8, 1726, and who died in East Thompson, Conn., Dec. 7, 1804. Their son Robert, born Jan. 15, 1753, died Feb. 1, 1813, in Canterbury. He married Lydia Adams, who was born April 28, 1760, and who died March 24, 1824, their children being as follows: Sarah, born July 12, 1784, who died Aug. 29, 1843; Martha, born April 3, 1787, who died Dec. 18, 1847, the wife of Hezekiah Olney, who died April 14, 1846 (a number of their descendants are now residents of Thompson, Conn.); Lydia, born July 19, 1789, who married Caleb Cook and passed away July 19, 1873; Teresa, born May 24, 1791, who died Dec. 10, 1793; Samuel, born March 11, 1793, who died Jan. 7, 1829, the father of Mrs. Henry Kendall; Robert, born March 30, 1795, who died Dec. 6, 1881; Darius, born Aug. 13, 1796, who died March 3, 1860; Mary Ann, born Aug. 8, 1799, who died Feb. 23, 1891; Ruby, born Nov. 25, 1800, who married Albert Fountain, and died Dec. 3, 1861; Eliza, born Sept. 2, 1803, who died Jan. 24, 1804.

Samuel Stevens, the father of Mrs. Henry Kendall, was married, Nov. 26, 1820, to Edith Hyde, who was born Dec. 30, 1800, and died Feb. 8, 1894, their children being as follows: John Hathaway, born Dec. 4, 1821, who resides in Danielson, Windham county; Elvira Ann, born Sept. 11, 1823, who married Josiah C. Palmer and has one daughter, Lucy Elvira; Sarah M., born April 27, 1826, who married William C. Ladd, of Tolland, Conn., and died Dec. 20, 1899; Emeline H., born April 23, 1828, the widow of Henry Kendall. Samuel Stevens died Jan. 7, 1829, and his widow subsequently married his brother Darius, to whom she bore three children: Alba H., born Dec. 22, 1834, who married, Oct. 24, 1877, Miss Olive Tyler; Robert, a bachelor, who was born Aug. 15, 1836; and Samuel, born Feb. 25, 1839, who died June 7, 1840.

It has been noted that the only surviving child of Henry and Emeline (Stevens) Kendall is Ella Gertrude, the wife of Andrew T. J. Clarke, and in conclusion we incorporate a genealogical record concerning the family of Mr. Clarke, one of the representative citizens of Canterbury. The original American ancestor was Benjamin Clarke, and from him the line is traced through his son Theophilus, whose son Nathaniel married Thankful Gates. Nathaniel served for five days at the time of the historic Lexington alarm in the early period of the Revolution. The next in descent was Asa Clarke, who was born in Canterbury, June 26, 1753, and who died in Vermont, having been a valiant soldier in the Revolution in the Fourth Company of the Third Continental Regulars, under General Putnam, and having later been a corporal in the company commanded by Captain Cady. He was granted a pension in 1818. His son, Allen G., who died in 1867, at the age of eighty-three years, married Celinda Darling, and they became the parents of four children, Thomas G., Asa, Rebecca Louise and John, the last named having died in childhood. Deacon Thomas G. Clarke, father of Andrew T. J., was born in Franklin, Conn., June 16, 1809. He began teaching school at the age of sixteen years and continued to be engaged in pedagogic work during the winter months until he had attained his legal majority, when he prepared for entrance to the theological seminary at East Windsor, Conn., where he was graduated. He thereafter was engaged in the active work of the ministry until his health materially failed, and he then came to Canterbury, where he turned his attention to farming. He was a member of the State Legislature for four years.

and for fifty years was a deacon of the First Congregational Church of Canterbury. He was a man of sterling character and won the highest esteem of the community, continuing to reside there until his death, at the advanced age of ninety-two years. He was twice married. On Sept. 1, 1844, he was united in marriage to Miss Cressa Judson, and they became the parents of the following named children: Rebecca; Isabelle S., the wife of Walter Kingsley, a prominent merchant of Plainfield; Josephine J.; Andrew T. J., who married Ella G. Kendall; Allen G.; and John D. Mrs. Clarke was summoned into eternal rest, and in April, 1870, Deacon Clarke married Sarah Johnson, who survives him.

WILLIAM HENRY SMITH, deceased. Few men have left a more lasting impress upon the community which had the honor of their birth, than the late William H. Smith, of Stafford, Tolland Co., Conn. The family is an old and highly regarded one in New England, Deacon Recompense Smith, the great-grandfather of our subject, standing high in public esteem.

Deacon Daniel Smith, son of Deacon Recompense, was born Dec. 14, 1790, and died Feb. 13, 1869, in Stafford. On Dec. 20, 1815, he was united in matrimony to Ann Kingsbury, who was born July 13, 1790, a daughter of Jabez, Jr., and Free-love (Netley) Kingsbury. She was a descendant in the sixth generation from Henry Kingsbury, of Haverhill, Mass., the line of her descent being through Joseph, Nathaniel, Jabez and Jabez Kingsbury (2).

Henry Kingsbury, was born in 1615, in England, and resided in 1658-60 at Ipswich, Mass., and in 1662-67 and later, at Rowley, Mass. Finally he settled at Haverhill, Mass., where he died, in 1687.

Joseph Kingsbury, son of Henry, was born in 1656, in Haverhill, Mass. (according to Savage, in his genealogical dictionary), and in 1679 married Free-love Ayers.

Nathaniel Kingsbury, son of Joseph, was born 1684, and married Hannah Denison, in Ipswich, Mass. They left Haverhill, in 1708, and located near Norwich, Conn., and later moved to what was then Coventry, now town of Andover, Conn. To them were born fifteen children.

Jabez Kingsbury, son of Nathaniel, was born 1717, and in 1749, he married Mary Phelps.

Jabez Kingsbury (2), son of Jabez, was born in 1758, and in 1789 married Free-love Netley.

Ann Kingsbury, daughter of Jabez (2), born July 13, 1790, married Deacon Daniel Smith, the grandfather of William H. Smith.

To Deacon Daniel Smith and wife were born: Henry, born Oct. 26, 1816, died April 30, 1880, in Grand Rapids, Mich.; Daniel K., born Aug. 22, 1818, was a farmer in Willington and died Aug. 14, 1890; Anna Eliza, born April 17, 1820, died April 5, 1820; William, born Aug. 8, 1821, died March

1, 1881; and Chauncy, born April 16, 1824, died Jan. 5, 1880. Deacon Daniel Smith was an early manufacturer of Stafford, and his life ended in Willington, Conn., at the home of his son, Daniel K. His whole active life was spent in Stafford, and he was identified with many of its most important manufacturing enterprises, and was the original owner of the mill and privilege of the Charles Fox Manufacturing Company, where he carried on what was then styled the "clothier's" business. Mr. Smith was one of the original stockholders in the Stafford Manufacturing Company, formed for the erection of the mill now occupying the same site. Deacon Smith was well known and highly esteemed as a useful citizen, and his death occurred Feb. 14, 1869.

WILLIAM SMITH, son of Deacon Daniel and father of William Henry Smith, was born Aug. 8, 1821, in the town of Columbia, Conn., and died March 1, 1881, in Stafford Springs. In his death Stafford lost one of her foremost business men and useful citizens. While yet an infant, his parents moved into the town of Stafford, where the son was reared. In his boyhood he received only such educational advantages as the common schools of the neighborhood afforded, and while still a lad he began his battle with the world, and entered the woolen mills at Foxville, Conn., where he became self-reliant and independent. Quick to observe and to profit thereby, he soon became thoroughly trained in the business of woolen manufacturing, and later was placed in charge of the finishing department of the woolen mill at Stafford Hollow, a mill of which he subsequently became part owner. This proved an unfortunate investment, whereby he was a loser to such an extent that he was obliged to begin anew his life struggle.

Mr. Smith, however, possessed a great amount of perseverance, and after this experience he moved to Stafford Springs, where he established a warehouse for the handling of wool and waste and woolen manufacturers' supplies, and this was eventually developed into the large manufacturing business of the firm of Smith & Cooley of to-day, at Stafford Springs, who now operate the Glynn mill, which was built by Moses B. Harvey years ago, this firm being the successors to that of William Smith & Co. As time passed Mr. Smith needed an associate and he took into partnership his son-in-law, William H. Cooley, and later his own son, William H. Smith. Both these men were of large business experience, practical in their ideas, energetic and able in their methods, and after 1881 they successfully carried on the business.

William Smith was one of the incorporators of the Stafford Bank in 1854, which later became the Stafford National Bank; and he was its president in 1869. In various ways he was identified with the growth of Stafford Springs, where his memory is still greatly cherished. A remarkably strong man, both physically and mentally, he frequently performed the labor of two or three men, and was known for his courage, often facing dangers when others would have retreated. Mr. Smith possessed good, sound common sense, and was an excellent judge of men and measures, a man of strong impulses, who abhorred hypocrisy or meanness, and was very quick to condemn in strong and unmistakable language. With all this severity he was wonderfully tender-hearted, and no citizen in Stafford more generously relieved the deserving poor or sympathized with the unfortunate. As a man of honor, his word was always regarded as good as his bond. Possessed of a strong character, his life showed pluck, perseverance and determination to a most remarkable degree. Shrewd and careful in his business transactions, he had the faculty of rightly judging men and forecasting probable results. From a poor boy he rose to be a man of prominence and influence by his own efforts. Fatigue seemed to be to him an unknown quantity. His aim was to succeed, and that he did succeed is evidenced by the fact that the industries with which he was associated during his life of usefulness are among Stafford's foremost establishments to-day. They are as monuments to his memory. It is said that his far-seeing business sagacity more than equalled that of three average business men.

William Smith was a member of the Congregational Church, and in his own way was very helpful, supporting it with cheerfulness in its various needs, and he left an impress for good in the community upon the period in which he lived, doing work of kindness, charity and benevolence, and his posterity can truly point to his record with a degree of pride. Mr. Smith was a man who was greatly beloved by all who knew him, and they were many, especially among the poor and needy of his community.

On June 5, 1845, William Smith and Abigail Ellis were united in marriage. She was born Aug. 8, 1823, a daughter of Wyllys and Abigail (Carpenter) Ellis, of Stafford, and she died Dec. 14, 1898. The children of this union were: Helen Maria, born May 24, 1846, in Stafford, Conn., was married Jan. 31, 1872, to William H. Cooley, of the firm of Smith & Cooley, extended mention of whom will be found elsewhere in this volume; William Henry is mentioned below; Annie Clara, born Oct. 3, 1855, was married Feb. 3, 1887, to Charles E. Butterfield, of Stafford; Mary, born Dec. 24, 1850, died April 5, 1851; and Julia Emma, born Aug. 10, 1853, died Sept. 16, 1853. In every way Mr. Smith was alive to the interests of his town, and he gave much of his time to its advancement. In politics he was a Republican, but never would accept the offices continually proffered him, desiring rather the political preferment of his friends. Neither would he connect himself with any fraternal societies. His lamented death took place March 1, 1881, and his body was laid away from mortal sight, but the powerful and far-reaching influence which he exerted through life survives and will be long-enduring.

William Henry Smith, son of William Smith was born in Stafford Springs, Sept. 25, 1848. His education began in the schools of his native town and was continued at Monson Academy, at Monson, Mass., where, in the class of 1868, he was fitted for Amherst College, having also taken special work in the Massachusetts Agricultural College. Upon his return one year later to Stafford, Mr. Smith became associated with his father and brother-in-law as manufacturers and dealers in flocks, shoddies and wool waste, a business started by the former and continued until 1881, when, upon the father's death, the business was continued under the firm name of Smith & Cooley. This business is still in existence, one of Stafford's best known enterprises. William H. Smith remained a member of this firm deeply interested in its welfare, until his own deeply lamented decease, Feb. 16, 1900.

William H. Smith was a fine type of a successful man of business—genial, alert, progressive and of unquestioned integrity. The famous Stafford flood, which made the year 1877 memorable in the annals of Stafford, swept away the plant of William Smith & Co., but nothing daunted or completely discouraged this enterprising firm, and the plant was immediately rebuilt, and the business was continued with more energy and success than before. As a citizen Mr. Smith was liberal and broad-minded and was ever interested in the prosperity and growth of his town, never courting and often declining public honors, although actively interested in all measures for the public good. One of the founders of the First National Bank of Stafford, he was elected its first vice-president, and until his death was one of the directors. He was also one of the incorporators of the Savings Bank of Stafford Springs, serving there several years as a director. Mr. Smith was one of the most enthusiastic promoters of the Stafford Library Association, and for many years was its valued president, resigning the position on account of ill health. When the plans for the new "Springs House" were being agitated Mr. Smith was one of the original supporters, realizing that an enterprise of this kind would very materially benefit the town, and he was ever willing to contribute time and money to such a cause. He was a constant attendant and liberal supporter of the Congregational Church, and was a very active member of the Ecclesiastical Society.

On Sept. 10, 1872, William Henry Smith was married to Miss Estelle Wood, daughter of Col. Alonzo and Ellen (Warren) Wood, of West Winfield, N. Y., the former of whom was a prominent farmer, well known in agricultural circles in his community. To this marriage came Robert Warren, born June 21, 1877, one of the public-spirited young men of this locality, who, after graduating from the Worcester, Mass., Academy, in 1897, was fitted for Yale, and is now associated with the firm of Smith & Cooley.

Mr. Smith was a thorough sportsman, following the rod and gun as an amusement and diversion from business cares, with never-abating enthusiasm. When on his vacation trips, which it was his custom to take yearly in the Adirondack Mountains, he was one of the most successful members of the Bisby Club, which later was merged into the Adirondack League Club. In politics, believing in the principles of the Republican party, he voted with that organization, but would never accept office.

When the sad day came for the funeral of William H. Smith, not only a large concourse of the town's people but many from afar gathered to pay a last tribute to one who in life they had held in highest esteem. The banks, the mills and the marts of business were generally closed, while a considerable delegation from all classes of society from out of the town were present. Mr. Smith's demise was felt by old associates and friends as a personal loss, while a community is always poorer when a man of his character and business eminence is removed from it. Long will be recalled his genial, pleasant personality, and many will cherish helpful memories of the well-spent life of William H. Smith.

In this connection it is interesting to recall the interesting features connected with a business with which three generations of the Smith family have been so closely identified. Smith & Cooley are manufacturers and dealers in flocks, shoddies and wool wastes, having two mills in Stafford, one of these in the village of Stafford Springs and the other, the well-known Glynn Mill, located just outside of the borough limits, on the river, toward Stafford Hollow. The business was established in 1850 by William Smith, the father of our late subject. His brother, Chauncey Smith, became associated with him about 1855, but the latter retired from the firm in 1864, and from that date to 1870 William Smith again conducted the business alone. Then he admitted to partnership his son-in-law, William H. Cooley, and three years later his son, William H. Smith, this firm being dissolved in 1881 by the death of the senior partner. In December of the same year the firm became Smith & Cooley. Previous to 1877 the business had been wholly of a mercantile nature, but in that year William Smith & Co. began the manufacture of the line of goods in which they so long dealt. They at first utilized the water-power of Holt & Burwell's shop, but in 1878 placed a boiler in their own building, and added another in 1879. In 1893 the steam plant of this establishment was rebuilt. The firm bought the Glynn mill, in 1885, and started machinery there in 1886. The equipment of the mills comprises six flock-cutters, five pickers, twenty-three cards and a dyeing plant. The flock-cutting and dyeing operations are performed at the mill in the village. This business is in a most prosperous condition, and, judging by the past, it is fair to assume that in the future it may become of vast proportions, bringing wealth and prominence to all concerned.

WILLIAM HENRY COOLEY, one of the most prominent business men and citizens of Stafford Springs, Tolland county, Conn., was born July 17, 1840, in South Deerfield, Mass., and he traces his ancestry back to Azariah Cooley, who was born March 7, 1731, and settled at Bloody Brook, in the town of Deerfield, Mass. He married April 19, 1756, Elenor Warriner, and died Feb. 28, 1788. After his death his widow located in Deerfield, as housekeeper for one Barnard, whom she later married. She was a third time married, and her death occurred Dec. 7, 1819.

Sheldon, in the "History of Deerfield," says: "Mr. Cooley's ancestry is not established, but there is little doubt he was in the line of Azariah, born in 1704, Daniel, in 1682, Daniel, 1651, Benjamin, the emigrant of Long Meadow."

Benjamin Cooley, the emigrant, appears to have been one of the first settlers in that part of Springfield, Mass., called Long Meadow, from whom all of that name in the country, as far as known, are descended. His wife's Christian name was Sarah.

Eli Cooley, the grandfather of William Henry Cooley, came from Brimfield, Mass., to South Deerfield, where he married Chloe Allen. Mr. Cooley was a man of great energy and industry, and was instrumental in building both church and schoolhouse at Deerfield. The next day after it was decided by those interested that a church should be built, Mr. Cooley was up and out on the mountains getting out the timber. This was but an example of his energy, but this was an element in all his movements. He was probably the largest landowner in Deerfield, and he was an extensive farmer. His death occurred in 1843, when he was almost eighty years of age. His children were: Dennis, who became a physician and located in the State of Michigan, where he died; Eli, who was a carpenter by trade, and also conducted a store and engaged in the making of paper boxes in Deerfield; Orrin, who became a preacher and a teacher, following the latter profession almost all his life, and died in Chesterfield, Ill.; Sedgewick, who was a farmer and succeeded to his father's farm, where he carried on extensive agricultural operations; Hollis, who went South, married a lady in Georgia who owned many slaves, later moved to Alabama, and spent his life there; Caleb Allen; Almerin, who lived a long life on a farm in South Deerfield; Phila, who married Deacon Zebadiah Graves, of South Deerfield, and died; Emily, who became the second wife of Deacon Zebadiah Graves; Rhue, who married Ebenezer Morton, of South Deerfield, Mass., a blacksmith and farmer; Chloe, who married Alvin Lawrence, a hotel keeper and one of the most prominent men in Deerfield; and Rhue, Eli and Almond, who all died at less than two years of age in 1795, 1797 and 1804, respectively.

Caleb Allen Cooley was born in 1800, in South Deerfield, Mass. He was a farmer by occupation, and he died Sept. 29, 1845, in his native town. Although not of robust health, and dying young, Caleb A. Cooley was the most active man of his family. In politics he was an Abolitionist and Free Soiler, but did not take an active part in political matters. All his life he was a member of the Congregational Church. He was married (first) Nov. 8, 1832, to Selina Riddel, daughter of Rev. William Riddel, a Congregational churchman and a farmer. To this marriage were born two children: Eli, who married Harriet Dole, and died in 1899, at Manteno, Ill.; and Lucy Selina, widow of a Mr. Shackelford, residing in Fairfield, Clay Co., Neb. The second marriage of Caleb Allen Cooley was to Esther Porter Packard, daughter of Rev. Theophilus Packard, a Congregational minister of Shelburne, Mass., and Mary (Tirrell) Packard, of Abington, Mass. To this marriage were also born two children: William Henry, our subject; and Alfred Allen, a farmer of South Deerfield, Mass., who married Charlotte Clapp, of that place.

The early education of William Henry Cooley was obtained in the common schools of South Deerfield, Mass., and later he attended a family school in Shelburne, Mass., conducted by a Mrs. Elizabeth Ware Packard. After completing his course at the latter school, he attended the academy of Conway, Mass., and later the academy and high school at Deerfield, leaving school when twenty-two years of age. When only eleven years of age he began work on a farm, during the summer season, at thirty-three cents a week for the first year, and for the second year received fifty cents a week, thus early learning the value of money. At the age of twenty-three, in June, 1863, he entered the firm of W. & C. Smith, as bookkeeper, still continuing with the house, when, upon the retirement of Chauncy Smith, the junior member, the firm name was changed to William Smith. In 1866 Mr. Cooley became a member of the firm, which was conducted under the title of William Smith & Co. until Dec. 1, 1881, when the style was changed to Smith & Cooley. The business of this house was the making of shoddies and flocks, although originally the firm dealt in supplies, and from thirty-five to forty-five men were employed. At present the house confines itself almost exclusively to the buying and selling of shoddies and flocks, and is one of the largest concerns in Stafford.

In the financial life of Stafford Springs Mr. Cooley is an important figure, for not only is he a member of one of the leading business houses of that locality, and was for a number of years a director of the Savings Bank of Stafford Springs, but he controls a number of other interests, showing in the conduct of his affairs, and of the public ones intrusted to his care, unusual sagacity and keen foresight. He is a director of the First National Bank of Stafford Springs, of which he was one of the original incorporators, and is vice-president of the Stafford Springs Cemetery Association, of which he was also one of the original incorporators.

In politics Mr. Cooley is a staunch Republican and has served on the board of burgesses for three terms. Being interested in school matters, he has served very faithfully on the school committee of Stafford, and in 1876 and 1877 represented the town of Stafford in the State Legislature, presenting bills calculated to improve the existing order of things and benefit the people of Stafford as well as the State at large.

On Jan. 31, 1872, Mr. Cooley was married to Miss Helen Maria Smith, daughter of William Smith, of Stafford, and to this union have been born: Howard Ellis, born Nov. 28, 1875, died Feb. 8, 1895; Benjamin Packard, born Nov. 1, 1878, is associated with his father; Margaret Esther, born Dec. 25, 1882; and William Smith, born Nov. 1, 1888, died Nov. 25, 1897. The eldest of the family now living, Benjamin P., graduated from the high school of Stafford Springs in 1896, and then entered the Eastman Business College of Poughkeepsie, which institution his father attended in 1862-3; this young man has a very bright future and promises to follow in the footsteps of his father in business matters.

In religious affairs Mr. Cooley has long been an attendant of the Congregational Church, and has always been very active in all of its work. For a number of years he was a member of the Ecclesiastical Society, and is now, and has been for many years, a member of the Committee of Three. In all of the undertakings of the church he has given generously of his means and time, and no deserving object or public improvement in the town lacks his hearty support. Fraternally Mr. Cooley is a member of Ionic Lodge, No. 110, F. & A. M., of which he was secretary for about twelve years.

JOHN OTIS FOX. Pride of ancestry is surely one of the most justifiable weaknesses of humanity. To be able to trace an un-interrupted and long line of vigorous ancestors, who through each generation have been notable enough to have their deeds recorded and lives remembered, and who have left a heritage to their descendants honorable names and inherited virtues, is an intense and lasting satisfaction to those so favored.

These thoughts have come to the biographer in considering the ancestral life of John Otis Fox, the prominent and extensive wholesale and retail lumber dealer of Putnam, Windham Co., Conn., one of the city's most substantial and progressive citizens.

The early records of the Fox family reach very far back in the past, and tell of (1) Thomas Fox, who had probably been a resident of New England for some three or four years when, in 1638, he was made a freeman, at Cambridge, Mass., being at that time thirty years of age. It is said that his father was the distinguished Dr. Thomas Fox, of London, and a grandson of the author, John Fox. The probable cause of his leaving England was on account of religious persecution, as he was one of the Puritans, and in the reign of Charles the First little justice was given those of the new faith. Business difficulties could not be adjusted on account of this injustice, and, like many others of the early settlers, he left a land of oppression for one in which he believed there would be no persecution.

Thus Thomas Fox became one of the original proprietors of Cambridge, Mass., then called Newtown. He was a man of great intelligence, judgment and energy, dealt largely in real estate, was many times executor and administrator of estates, was a member of the board of selectmen in 1658 and was repeatedly re-elected to the office. There is no doubt that he was a highly esteemed citizen and he is spoken of in the church records as a beloved brother. The name of his first wife is not known, as she probably passed away in England, but his second marriage was to Mrs. Ellen Green, the widow of Percival Green, who came to Boston in 1635, where he died Dec. 25, 1639. Mrs. Green had two children, namely, John and Elizabeth Green, both of whom were baptized in infancy at Cambridge. Ellen, the wife of Thomas Fox, died May 27, 1682, aged eighty-two years, death being the result of a fall in which she broke her thigh. On April 24, 1683, Thomas Fox, although now seventy years of age, was married a third time, espousing Elizabeth, the widow of Charles Chadwick, who died in 1685, aged seventy-one years. His last marriage was to Rebecca Wyeth, who surrounded his latter days with comfort and affection and survived him, he dying April 25, 1693, at the age of eighty-five years.

(II) Rev. Jabez Fox, son of Thomas Fox, was born in Concord, Mass., about 1646-7, and died Feb. 28, 1702-3. Soon after his birth, his father moved with his family to Cambridge (Newtown), as we find that in 1652 he had already become a prominent citizen there. Rev. Jabez was educated at Cambridge and graduated therefrom in 1665. In 1678 he was invited to serve one year as assistant of Rev. Mr. Carter, the first pastor of the Woburn Church, and Nov. 5, 1679, the parish voted him their minister for life. The town agreed on Nov. 10 to build him a dwelling house, 24 feet in length, 18 feet wide, 13 feet high, a stack of three brick chimneys, a cellar under and a lean-to at the chimney end, and so finish the said house and give it to him. Three plans were carried out and the house was located on Pleasant Street, near the present site of the Public Library. This gift-house from appreciative towns-people was occupied by Mr. Fox and his successors for a period of seventy-six years. It is evident that Rev. Jabez had the confidence and affection of his parishioners through life, although, as in the present day, the good man was occasionally disturbed by his salary getting far in arrears. At one time about seventy pounds were thus due him, and a part of the amount was not paid his family until after his death. He died in the city of Boston, of small-pox, Feb. 26 (headstone on grave says the 28th), 1702, but his burial was in Woburn, where still may be deciphered this inscription:

Memento
Mori
Here lyes ye body of ye Reverend Mr.
Jabez Fox, Pastour of ye Church of Christ in Woburn 23 years, and aged 56 years deceased Feb ye 28th 1702-3.

Rev. Jabez Fox married Judith Rayner, daughter of Rev. John Rayner, minister of Plymouth, Mass., and Dover, N. H. Their children all born at Woburn, were: John, born May 10, 1678; Thomas, Nov. 6, 1680, who died July 10, 1681; Thomas (2), Nov. 13, 1681; Jabez, Dec. 2, 1684; Judith, June 19, 1699, who died in 1703, of small-pox. The mother of these children married (second) Col. Jonathan Tyng, of Boston, who was formerly a member of the council of Sir Edmund Andros. Col. Tyng died Jan. 19, 1723, and his wife died June 5, 1736, and the inscription on her tombstone is as follows:

"Here lyes Buried ye Body of Mrs. Judith Tyng, wife to Col. Jonathan Tyng. Formerly wife to ye Rev'd Mr. Jabez Fox, who died June 5th Anno Domini 1736 in ye 99 year of her age. A woman of most Exemplary virtue and piety. Rich in Grace. Ripe for Glory." [Extracts from Ecclesiastical History of Woburn, and from History of Middlesex county, Mass.]

(III) Jabez Fox, son of Rev. Jabez, was born Dec. 2, 1684, and married Hannah, daughter of Rev. George Burroughs, March 8, 1705. He was a merchant tailor and a manufacturer of woolen cloth and engaged in the business from the purchase of the wool until the fitted garments were completed.

(IV) Thomas Fox, son of Jabez, was born in Boston, Mass., Dec. 7, 1706, and died in 1796. With his wife, Mercy, he removed to Woodstock, Conn., and became one of the first settlers in that place, establishing himself there in business as a manufacturer and dresser of cloth, the greater part of the work necessarily being done by hand. The spinning and weaving of the cloth were done by the women in their homes. Mr. Fox resided in a two-story red house which stood not far from Putnam Wolf cave, but was destroyed by fire in 1850. The children of Thomas Fox and Mercy were these: Hannah, born April 27, 1731; Thomas, Sept. 7, 1732; Maria, April 23, 1735; John, March 10, 1737; Mary, March 10, 1740; Jabez, May 6, 1745; Fanny, Nov. 17, 1749; and Rebecca, July 9, 1753.

(V) John Fox, son of Thomas, born March 10, 1737, who died probably in 1761, married Eleanor Lovett, who was born in 1740, and died Nov. 12, 1822. Family records mention her pleasing personal appearance. Her children were two sons: John, born Aug. 7, 1758; and William, June 28, 1760.

(VI) John Fox (2), son of John, and the great-grandfather of John Otis Fox, of Putnam, was born in Newburgh, N. Y., Aug. 7, 1758. The early death of his father, when John was but four years old, made it necessary for his mother to return to Woodstock. An account of this necessary journey is very pathetic. The bereft widow shipped her household goods on a coasting vessel, and with her two infants started for her old home on foot, accomplishing the 100 miles in this way, only to find that the vessel containing her goods had been wrecked and all lost. In 1764 she became the wife of Nathaniel Clark and died as noted above. The History of Woodstock records John Fox as one of the first patriots to answer the call for troops, and for some five years he gave the greater of his time to service in the Revolutionary army. After his return to Woodstock, he married Priscilla Lyon, born Jan. 15, 1764, who died Sept. 19, 1829; he was town clerk and justice of the peace, and did the greater part of the legal writing in the community. His death took place Dec. 1, 1843. The children born to John and Priscilla Fox were the following: Perley, born March 11, 1782; William, May 1, 1783; Abial, Dec. 1, 1784; Waldo, Oct. 9, 1786; and Nehemiah, May 23, 1789.

(VII) Capt. Abial Fox, son of John (2), was born in Woodstock, Dec. 1, 1784, and died in Peoria, Ill., April 25, 1834. In his early business life he kept a general store at Woodstock, but later removed to Providence, R. I., where he operated a popular public-house known as "Fox's Tavern." In the early days of Chicago Mr. Fox left home with a large amount of money, to invest in land, but he never returned and his family found reason to think he had been killed at Peoria. On Nov. 27, 1806, he married Judith Perry, born in 1784, who died Dec. 27, 1879. Their children were: Maria, born June 11, 1808; Nancy, Aug. 10, 1809; and John, July 5, 1817.

(VIII) John Otis Fox, son of Capt. Abial and Judith Fox, was born in West Woodstock, where the family made their home after the death of the father. Young John was given educational advantages in the local schools and Nichols' Academy, at Dudley, Mass., from which he subsequently graduated. Before he had attained his majority he had formed a partnership with his brother-in-law, John P. Chamblin, in trade and in the manufacture of shoes, in Woodstock, Conn. The firm was very successful until the financial panic of 1837 which swept away not only the firm of Chamberlain & Fox, but many other business men and organizations of the town. In this failure was involved not only the patrimony but also the earnings of Mr. Fox, and a new start in life was the only course. Therefore, in 1840 he removed to Putnam, then a prosperous village, and was soon after appointed to take charge of the depot, and this connection was maintained for thirty years, as that was the headquarters for the marketing of the produce for the adjoining towns, shipping being made to Boston and Providence with Mr. Fox as agent. For many years he kept the only livery stable in the town, and was the first individual to introduce one of the leading articles of commerce, finished lumber for building purposes, in 1858 establishing his lumber business. Mr. Fox was one of the leading and influential men of Putnam, was foremost in every enterprise promising growth and development and was ever ready to serve in any local office, however inconvenient to himself, in which he believed he was needed. He held the office of selectman, highway commissioner and others, and was a man useful in almost any situation. In 1862 he was one of the original incorporators of the Putnam Savings Bank, and became one of its first directors, serving in that capacity for a number of years. In the latter part of the sixties he was also made a director of the First National Bank of Putnam, and served in that capacity for several years.

In all his relations, whether of a public character or in connection with private business, his course was always characterized by the most absolute integrity. A man of indomitable will and unbounded perseverance, in all things he acted consistently with his view of the subject, irrespective of opinion, even if with a majority against him. In politics he was a staunch Democrat, never offensive, yet always ready to defend his convictions. Self-reliant, independent, a thinker and possessed of excellent judgment, his business career readily marked him as a successful man. Mr. Fox, in connection with his lumber interests, purchased a tract of land in Florida, which he devoted to orange culture; there, in that genial climate, he was accustomed to pass his winters, and each succeeding season found him looking forward with greater pleasure to his period of rest in the South. His death occurred in Florida, Feb. 11, 1889. A business enterprise of magnitude with which he was connected from 1886 to 1888 was the Putnam Cutlery Company, which he organized with Col. G. D. Bates, and his interest in which he sold to the latter in 1889. The company was formed for the purpose of manufacturing patent knives of all description except table and pocket knives. A patented support to the blade, owned by this company, is very valuable, making breakage or pulling of the blade from the shank impossible. Mr. Fox became the first president of this company and continued in that capacity during his association with it.

Soon after locating in Putnam, Mr. Fox was made postmaster and held the office until 1860. When he started into the lumber business, it was in a very small way, resigning his position as agent at that time in order to devote his attention to his new enterprise, and for two years he had John Gate Wooster as a partner. He belonged to no secret societies, and never changed his religious attendance from the Congregational Church, in which he was reared.

In 1848, Mr. Fox was married to Miss Eliza Phillips, who resided at West Woodstock. She died leaving two children,—John Otis, Jr., and Hatie, who was born June 23, 1866.

(IX) John Otis Fox, son of John Otis, was born in Putnam, Conn., Dec. 22, 1862, in early youth became a pupil in the public schools, and later spent two terms at the Woodstock Academy, going from there to Eastmans Business College, at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., where he remained until within one month of graduation, returning to his home in order to enter his father's office. Mr. Fox was then but eighteen years of age and has continued in the lumber business ever since. He is widely known in the trade and sustains a reputation for integrity in dealing and progressiveness in method.

The marriage of Mr. Fox took place Jan. 23, 1882, to Miss Addie Isabel White, a daughter of Ezekiel W. and Ellen (Olney) White, of Putnam, and five children have been born to this union, namely: Edith, born Aug. 7, 1886; John Otis, Jr., Dec. 30, 1889; Gladys, March 17, 1893; Hazel, Nov. 28, 1897, and Harold, a twin of Hazel. In political sentiment, Mr. Fox is a Democrat, but he has never sought office. He is a member of Putnam Lodge, No. 340, Royal Arcanum, of Putnam; of Quinebaug Lodge, No. 106, A. F. & A. M., of Putnam and of Putnam Lodge, No. 574, B. P. O. E. For the past two years he has been president of the Putnam Fair Corporation, a successful institution of the town.

HON. CHARLES F. MARTIN (deceased), for many years a leading merchant of Elliott in the town of Pomfret, Windham county, was reared in an atmosphere of business. His father, Jasper Martin, was at first a grain speculator in Brooklyn and later a store keeper at Elliott. Born in Brooklyn, Conn., Oct. 11, 1810, he spent many years of his life in that place. When a young man he purchased an extensive farm in the northwest corner of the town of Brooklyn, which, for a great many years, he managed with success. While living there he also made a business of buying grain from farmers, which he sold in the market with considerable profit, largely increasing his income. Later, through misplaced confidence, he lost nearly all he possessed. He married Emeline S. Taylor, of Brooklyn, daughter of Capt. Havilah Taylor, a well-known mason and contractor of that town. She still survives. Seven children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Martin. Edward T., now a carpenter of Westfield, Mass., married Mary Utley. Willie died young. Emeline taught school for many years at Springfield, Mass., was for the rest of her life a principal in one of the first schools in that city, and died Sept. 29, 1900, in her fifty-ninth year. Frank L., now a policeman in Providence, R. I., married Juliette Atwood. Annie E. married Henry Chase, a school teacher;

she died in Massachusetts. Alfred E., superintendent of waterworks at Springfield, Mass., married Eleanor Flagg. Charles F. is mentioned below.

Late in life, in 1873, when Charles was sixteen years old, Mr. Martin moved to the rising station of Elliott, where he erected and opened the first store. For a number of years he conducted a profitable business, and, finally, a few years before his death, which occurred May 22, 1885, turned his business over to his son. He is buried in Brooklyn.

Keenly interested in public affairs, Mr. Martin did much to promote education in Brooklyn. He also represented that town with marked credit for one term in the State Legislature. As an esteemed member of the Unitarian Church, and also as a man of genial manners he had many friends, especially in Brooklyn, where he got his start in life.

Charles Fremont Martin was born in Brooklyn, March 3, 1857, and in the common schools of that town and in the high schools at Brooklyn and Putnam obtained a thoroughly practical education. Upon leaving school he entered the store of his father, where he soon became manager. A few years later, April 6, 1882, he married Catherine Chappell Elliott, who was born in Thompson, Conn., Nov. 3, 1849, daughter of Ira and Susan (Osgood) Elliott, whose families are mentioned elsewhere in this volume. Mrs. Martin is a remarkable business woman, perfectly able to make the best of adversity. June 8, 1891, following the death of Mr. Martin, her store burned. Undismayed, she immediately erected a new building, which she still owns, and soon sold out the business. She has increased her income by sewing and now owns property in Putnam and Elliott. Mr. and Mrs. Martin had two children, who show a decided intellectual bent: Clara E., born Jan. 26, 1883, who graduated from the Central Falls high school in R. I. in 1900, later spent one year at a State Normal School at Williamantic, and is now a teacher. Abbie S., born July 9, 1886, who is attending the Putnam high school.

When Mr. Martin entered his father's store the business presented a discouraging outlook. The goods were owned by Mr. Kirk Hammond and were being sold on commission. Young Martin, however, courageously met the situation, and by wise management, in the course of a year and a half was enabled to buy out Mr. Hammond. Though his capital was at first small he readily devised means for keeping it on the increase. He turned his store into a general one, allowed farmers, unable to pay cash, to settle for their merchandise in wood, and in various ways worked up a paying custom. The wood, which came into his hands, Mr. Martin sold to the Railroad Company, and thus established a secondary business, lumber-dealing. He had advanced a long way on the road to fortune when death, to the dismay of his friends, suddenly cut short his promising career, March 24, 1891. He is buried in Abington.

An exceedingly energetic man, Mr. Martin found time to attend to a great deal besides his regular business. For some time he was postmaster of Elliott, succeeding his father. Socially he belonged to the Royal Arcanum, was a member of the Knights of Pythias Lodge, of Putnam, and also of the F. & A. M., of South Woodstock. From 1876 to 1881 he served in Co. F., 3d Regiment of the National Guard. In politics an ardent Republican he held various town offices, acting often as grand juror and on the board of relief. In 1887 he represented the town of Pomfret in the State Legislature, where he was the youngest member, and also, at that time, the youngest ever sent there from the town of Pomfret. Liberally inclined he was a member of the Unitarian Society. To his unlimited capacity for work and his remarkable social attributes which surrounded him with hosts of friends, was largely due his success.

PRESTON B. SIBLEY, sheriff of Windham county, is one of the best known men in eastern Connecticut, and enjoys as wide an acquaintance as any man in the State. The first of the name in this country came over from England with the fleet in 1629, and settled in the town of Salem. They were (I) John and Richard Sibley, were supposed to be brothers, and were both married. They united with the church in Charlestown in 1634, and John took the freeman's oath the following year. He was a selectman of the town of Salem, and attended the General Court in Boston. At his death in 1661 he left five daughters and four sons.

(II) Joseph Sibley, son of John, born in 1655, was a fisherman, and while returning from a fishing voyage was pressed on board a British frigate, and released only after six weeks of hard labor. This Joseph Sibley was the father of the Sutton Sibleys. His wife's name was Susanna, and their children were as follows: Joseph, born Nov. 9, 1684; John, Sept. 18, 1687; Jonathan, May 1, 1690; Samuel, 1697; William, Sept. 7, 1700; Benjamin, Sept. 19, 1703; and Hannah, 1722, married to Ebenezer Dagget, Aug. 10, 1742. It appears that all the sons settled in Sutton, Mass., Joseph, John and Jonathan being among the thirty families who were entered as settlers in the 4,000 acres.

(III) Joseph Sibley (2) son of Joseph, was the father of the following family: Joseph, born in 1709; John, Aug. 2, 1711; James, 1714, married March 14, 1739, to Elizabeth, daughter of Philip Chase; and Jonathan, Sept. 11, 1718.

(IV) Joseph Sibley (3), son of Joseph (2), married Hannah Marsh, who was born Dec. 29, 1713, and their children were as follows: Hannah, born June 13, 1732, who married Stephen Southworth, Sept. 27, 1753, and afterward became the wife of a Mr. Whiting, of Douglas; Ruth, June 4, 1734, who married Peter Woodbury, and died in 1755; Dorcas, July 7, 1736, married to Isaac Nichols in April, 1758; Lydia, May 30, 1738, who died the same year; John, July 12, 1739, who died Sept. 12 of that year; John (2) Nov. 10, 1740; Abner March 5, 1743, who died April 7, following; Abner (2), born April 9, 1744; Elisha, Nov. 24, 1746, who married July 14, 1763, Lydia Carriel, and located in the West; David and Stephen, twins, born Aug. 1750; Peter, May 13, 1751.

(V) Peter Sibley, son of Joseph (3), was a lifelong resident of Sutton, Mass., where he was engaged in farming. His children were: Peter and Henry, twins, born in 1776; Samuel July 5, 1780; Mary, 1790, who married and had nine children; and John, in 1794, who died in 1822.

(VI) Samuel Sibley, father of Preston B., was born in Sutton, Mass., where he enjoyed the advantages of the home schools, and where he began for himself on a farm in his early manhood. In 1800 he married Sally Harwood, and in 1827 he removed with his family to Eastford, Conn., where he bought in three purchases a farm of 140 acres. There he lived and carried on farming until his death, Sept. 28, 1859. His politics allied him to the Whig party and his religious convictions made him a member of the Congregational Church. His first wife died in 1838, and Aug. 28, 1839, he was married to Rhoda Preston, of Eastford, who died Feb. 2, 1889, at the advanced age of eighty-seven years. To his first union came children as follows: Erasmus Frederick, born Jan. 8, 1810, who lived in Sutton, Mass.; Palmer C., June 10, 1811; Emiline F. March 4, 1814; Frederick F., June 28, 1817; Samuel Lewis, Jan. 1, 1821; Hannah Cole, Oct. 1, 1824; Benjamin, April 8, 1827; Sarah Jane, April 23, 1831, who lives in Eastford, the wife of Timothy Walker; and John H., May 8, 1835.

(VII) Preston Bishop Sibley, whose name introduces this article, was the only child of the second marriage of his father, and was born in Eastford June 25, 1840. There he attended the local school until seventeen years old, when he took charge of the home farm, and was engaged in its cultivation until he was twenty-eight years of age. At that time he turned his attention to the work of a carpenter, and for ten years continued in that vocation.

Mr. Sibley cast his first vote as a Republican, and has served on the State central committee. While still a resident of Eastford he took a prominent part in local affairs, serving as deputy sheriff from 1869 to 1881, as selectman, and as a member of the State Legislature in 1873 and 1874; he served on the committees on New Towns and Probate Districts and Cities and Boroughs. In March, 1881, he removed to Brooklyn, to take charge of the county jail under Sheriff Osgood, a position he held for fourteen years, when he was appointed special agent of the State factory inspection, serving under two administrations, from July 1, 1895, to his election as sheriff, in the fall of 1898. So well and faithfully has he discharged the duties of that high position that he is now in his second term as sheriff of Windham county.

Since 1895 Mr. Sibley has made his home

Danielson, where, as in Brooklyn, he takes an active interest in local affairs. For twenty-five years he has been an agent and director of the Windham County Fire Insurance Company, and was recently elected president of the company. For several years he was a director of the Brooklyn Savings Bank, and has long been actively associated with the Windham County Agricultural Society, of which he is at present treasurer. For a time he was secretary, treasurer and a director of the Brooklyn Creamery Association, of which he is now president.

Socially Mr. Sibley is connected with Quinebaug Lodge, No. 34, I. O. O. F., and Aetna Lodge, No. 21, A. O. U. W. Both Mr. and Mrs. Sibley belong to the State Grange as well as the local Grange, in which they are very active. Mr. and Mrs. Sibley belong to the Congregational Church.

Mr. Sibley was united in marriage, Jan. 2, 1862, with Kate B. Noble, a native of Springfield, Mass., daughter of Guy C. and Maria (Badger) Noble. To this union have come the following children: Lewis Preston, born July 25, 1869, now in business in Boston, Mass.; Frederick Samuel, born April 11, 1873, who married May Hall, of Killingly, and since 1898 has been secretary of the Board of Trade of Springfield, Mass.; Mary Maria, born Dec. 24, 1875, who married Herbert M. Loomis, of New Haven, Conn., and has one son, Philip Sibley.

GEORGE BOWEN MATHEWSON. During his long and well remembered career in Pomfret, Windham county, George Bowen Mathewson was not only associated with the agricultural and political advancement of his adopted locality, but by reason of pronounced talent, built up a reputation as an artist by no means local. A scholar also, and an earnest student of men and events, his horizon was necessarily a broad one, and caused him to be an important figure in a time when the hand guiding the plow and harrow recognized in the surrounding landscape a chance for harvests only rather than an opportunity for pictorial delineation. Yet in the life of this man, so appreciative of the fine and beautiful things of this world, farm work had its compensations and seems to have been harmoniously blended with a study of the classics, and with his portrayal upon canvas of the sunsets, dawns and faces which made up his environment. Born in the beginning of the nineteenth century, in 1804, he was but a lad when the family fortunes were shifted from the Israel Putnam farm in Brooklyn, Conn., to Pomfret, where he received his preliminary education at the district schools, where he spent his entire life, and where his death occurred in 1877. He was a worthy descendant of one of the oldest families in Connecticut, and it was ever his design to maintain its traditions and excellencies.

(I) Henry Mathewson, or as the name is written in Rhode Island, Matteson, of East Greenwich, R. I., was born in 1646, and was an early resident of East Greenwich. He took up land in East Greenwich in 1678, and about that time married Hannah, daughter of Hugh and Elizabeth Parsons, of which union the following children were born; Henry, Thomas, Joseph, Francis, Hannah and Hezekiah. The father, who died in 1690, was deputy to the general court in 1685.

(II) Joseph Mathewson, of East Greenwich, had one son, Joseph, by his first wife, Rachel, and by his second wife, Martha, had ten children; Obadiah, Jonathan, William, Alice, Elizabeth, Thomas, John, Ezekiel, Lois and Eunice.

(III) Joseph, son of Joseph, was born March 22, 1706-7, and to him and his wife, Rachel, were born the following children: Rachel, born Dec. 24, 1729; Annie, Sept. 6, 1731; Elizabeth, Jan. 26, 1733-4; Clement, Jan. 7, 1735-6; Joseph, March 3, 1737-8; Lydia, July 17, 1740; Hannah, Oct. 25, 1742; Benjamin, Dec. 3, 1744; and Elias, Feb. 11, 1746. These births are all recorded in Coventry.

(IV) Joseph, son of Joseph (2), born March 3, 1737-8, married, Jan. 5, 1763-4, Prudence, daughter of Aaron and Experience Bowen, of Coventry, born May 15, 1736. In 1795 Mr. Mathewson purchased the Colonel Israel Putnam farm, then in the town of Brooklyn, Conn., but in later life he removed to the home of his son, Darius, in Pomfret, where he died Oct. 14, 1825.

(V) Darius, fifth child of the third Joseph, and father of George Bowen, was born Nov. 3, 1775, and in 1800 married Mary Smith, daughter of Ebenezer and Margaret (Bowen) Smith, of which union there were three sons and six daughters, viz.: Rufus Smith, married to a daughter of John McClellen, of Woodstock, Faith Williams McClellen, of whose six children, William Williams, Harriet Cordelia, Mary Trumbull, John McClellen, Arthur and Albert, the second married Dwight M. Day, of Putnam, the third married Colonel Alexander Warner, of East Orange, N. J., the fifth is a well known eye specialist of Brooklyn, N. Y., and the sixth died young; George B.; Huldah, who married John W. Adams of Pomfret; Cordelia, who married Rev. C. P. Grosvenor, a minister of the Congregational Church at Kingston, R. I.; Harriet, who died at the age of nineteen; Charles, who married Mary G., sister of Rev. C. P. Grosvenor, and died in Nebraska; Nancy, who died unmarried; Caroline, who became the wife of Edwin C. Searls, and mother of the Hon. Charles E. Searls; and Emily, the wife of Jeremiah Olney, a retired business man of Thompson, now residing in Hartford, Connecticut.

During earliest youth the student propensities of (VI) George Bowen Mathewson manifested themselves in divers ways, and to his childish eyes even the commonplace contained much of beauty and charm. He would draw and paint with fidelity to detail when his companions were absorbed in their sports, and it was his good fortune to be able to repair to Boston occasionally to perfect himself in technique and composition. During his whole active life he farmed during the summer and painted his portraits and landscapes during the winter season, and so excellent was his work that it drew praise from those excelling in the art of criticism. He never failed to study and read, and he was one of the best informed and generally well read men of his time in Pomfret. One of his many varied interests was politics; he was a staunch believer in the principles and issues of the Republican party, and represented his town in the State Legislature. He was a member, and for many years a deacon, of the Congregational Church, and contributed generously towards the maintenance of that denomination.

In Pomfret Mr. Mathewson married Hannah Payson, daughter of John H. and Amaryllis (Paine) Payson, the latter a daughter of Rev. Joshua Paine, a minister of a Congregational Church in Massachusetts. Of their children, (1) Amaryllis was educated at a young ladies seminary in Massachusetts, and for many years engaged in educational work in Fairfield county, Conn. She is a woman of culture and breadth of mind, and is an ardent worker in the Congregational Church. (2) Edward Payson was educated in the public schools and at the New Britain Normal, and subsequently taught school in Coventry and in South Carolina before the Civil war. He was a soldier during the war, later became very prominent as a probate judge and was one of the leading citizens of Pomfret. He married Marian Chandler Holt, in 1863, his wife being a daughter of Dr. Holt. Edward Payson died in 1892. (3) Elizabeth P., who also was a school teacher, married Hon. Charles Grosvenor; (4) Anna became the wife of Benjamin Grosvenor, of Pomfret; (5) Mary is deceased; (6) Olive lives at home; and (7) Darius, who married Mary Baldwin, lives in Nebraska.

CYRUS WINCHELL has been a resident of Rockville from the days of its infancy, and has watched and aided its progress from a hamlet to the distinction of being one of the leading manufacturing centers for woolens and worsteds in America. The name of Winchell was connected with that industry for almost three-quarters of a century, a record not equalled by any other family in Rockville, beginning in 1813, in which year his father, Chauncey Winchell, began work in a mill in the village of Buckland, and ending in 1886, when our subject severed his connection with the old Springville Manufacturing Company.

Nearly contemporaneous with the establishment of the Rock Manufacturing Company, which, early assuming the leading position among the industries planted along the Hockanum river from its source in the Snipsic Lake to the old Grabb gristmill, on the site of the Saxony Mill, of later date, gave its name of the village whose inhabitants have depended for their livelihood on these industries, was that of the industry which was organized some years after the erection of its first dam and mill, as the Springville Manufacturing Co. Though one of the smallest of the woolen industries of Rockville, it has been one of the most successful, uniformly profitable of those industries, having never suspended operations on account of financial difficulty, or passed into the control of new managers, or met with the disaster so frequent to mill property—the destruction of any part of its property by fire. The relations of Chauncey Winchell to the Springville Manufacturing Company will give interest to a sketch of his career.

CHAUNCEY WINCHELL was born Feb. 25, 1799, in Berlin, Conn. His parents being poor, and having a large family, he was “put out,” as was the usual phrase, with a farmer in Kensington, with whom he remained until his fourteenth year, and he was then hired out to a farmer by his father until seventeen years old, his father taking his wages. In the meantime he had but limited opportunities for education, and he did work adapted to his years and strength, and was thus trained in habits of industry, economy and self-reliance, developing a vigorous physical constitution which fitted him for a career of active labor, prolonged for a period far beyond that pursued by most men, or for which their endurance and vitality would fit them.

In his seventeenth year, Chauncey Winchell went to Manchester, Conn., and obtained work in a mill in the village of Buckland, in that town, which was then operated in the drawing of wire for making the teeth of cards, and he worked there some two years. The mill was on the site of the present Adams Paper Mill. He then learned the trade of millwright, and worked at it in several of the mills in Manchester and vicinity, one of them being that established in 1802 by John Warburton, at the privilege now occupied by Talcott Brothers, in Vernon, Conn. About 1823, he was engaged as a regular employe by Peter Dobson, in his mill on the Tankerooson river, near the present Ravine Mills in Vernon, his work being the construction and repair of the woodwork connected with the mill and its machinery. There he was employed until 1826, and during that time constructed two water-wheels, one for the second mill built by Peter Dobson, less than half a mile below the first mill. This mill was burned soon after its construction, and was soon rebuilt, necessitating the construction by Mr. Winchell of the second wheel.

In the spring of 1829, Mr. Winchell came to Rockville, and in partnership with Willard and Halsey Fuller, on April 1, 1829, bought from Francis McLean his oil mill, then located on the mill privileges now occupied by the New England Company. This mill, like many at that period in different parts of New England, was for grinding flax seed to make linseed oil. It was originally erected and operated on a mill privilege in East Hartford, and, having been purchased by Francis McLean, had been moved by him to the privilege on the Tankerooson river, near Vernon Station, and was again moved by him in 1826, to its location in Rockville. In it Mr. McLean manufactured linseed oil for about three years. On its purchase by Messrs. Fuller and Winchell it was equipped with cotton machinery—carding, spinning and warping—and was at once devoted to making warps for satinet. Willard and Halsey Fuller were both practical cotton spinners, and devoted their personal attention to the mill. Mr. Winchell, besides investing some capital, aided such work in construction and repairs as he was competent to do, at the same time doing considerable at his trade on his individual account, for various mills in Rockville and vicinity. On Feb. 28, 1832, he sold his interest to Halsey Fuller, and on July 4, 1832, in association with Alonzo Bailey, Christopher Burdick and Isaac L. Sanford, he purchased the property afterward known as the Springville Mill.

This was one of the pioneer woolen industries of Rockville, its first mill having been nearly contemporaneous with the first mill of the Rock Manufacturing Company, and it is now difficult to decide which of the original mills of these companies was the earliest in its completion and in the commencement of its operations. The deed of Francis, Elnathan and Daniel F. Grant to Francis McLean, dated March 9, 1821, conveying land, a part of which became the site of the Rock Mills, refers to a dam to be erected. The deed of Francis Grant to Erasmus McKinney and others, dated April 6, 1821, conveying land on which the Springville Mills afterward stood, speaks of a stone dam now erected. This dam, however, was not entirely completed, as appears from the phraseology of another deed, dated five days later (April 11, 1821), which, referring to the same dam, speaks of it as now erecting. There can be little doubt that these dams, separate from each other about half a mile, were both erected in the spring of 1821. There is much doubt as to which was first completed and first furnished water to a mill-wheel.

A mill-wheel was at once erected, and from the beginning the plant was devoted to the manufacture of satinet. In 1826 it had become the property of Augustus Grant and Warren McKinney, the former (Grant) having a two-thirds, the latter, a one-third interest, the firm style being Grant & McKinney. On Aug. 21, 1826, Warren McKinney bought one-third of his partner's interest, and on Aug. 3, 1827, the remainder of that interest, becoming sole proprietor. On March 20, 1832, he sold the property to David McKinney and Rufus S. Abbev. On July 14th, following, they sold to Alonzo Bailey, Chauncey Winchell, Christopher Burdick and Isaac L. Sanford. Alonzo Bailey at that time owned and operated the carding factory on Grant street. The record to that time of Chauncey Winchell has been given. Christopher Burdick had recently come to the village, and was employed at his trade as machinist in the machine shop of the Rock Manufacturing Co. Isaac L. Sanford was a practical woolen manufacturer. The business was conducted first as partnership, under the style of the Springville Manufacturing Company, Alonzo Bailey being the responsible manager of the business, and Isaac L. Sanford the superintendent of the mill. Chauncey Winchell had not for several years, and Christopher Burdick had not at any time, an active connection with the business. The original mill, a small building 30 feet long and 20 feet wide, having a basement of brick and two stories of wood, stood until 1886, when it was taken down and the present mill built, and after an existence of sixty-five years it was the only one remaining of the original mill structures of Rockville.

In the spring of 1833, a single set of woolen machinery and five looms were in operation, making satinet. At the May session of the State Legislature in 1833, an Act of Incorporation was granted to the proprietors, the style of the firm being retained as the name of the company, and the capital authorized being $100,000. On Oct. 1, 1833, the individual proprietors conveyed their personal interest in the mill and other property to the Springville Manufacturing Company, for the aggregate sum of $4,800, and on the 12th of the same month, the organization was completed by the election of its officers, Chauncey Winchell being elected president, and Alonzo Bailey agent and secretary. The salary of the latter was fixed for the first year at $1.25 per day and board. The capital stock was made $4,800, in twelve shares of $400 each. Alonzo Bailey subscribed four shares, Chauncey Winchell four shares, Christopher Burdick two shares, and Isaac L. Sanford two shares. The success which attended the early operations of the company may be inferred from the fact that for the first three years after the organization of the company dividends were declared—in January, 1835, $125 per share; in January, 1836, $325 per share; and in January, 1837, $600 per share, an aggregate in three years of $1,050 per share, or 262 1-2 per cent.

On Jan. 2, 1837, Isaac L. Sanford, who had been superintendent of the mill to that time, sold his share of stock and retired from the company. In 1838 a new mill was erected, 84 feet long, 34 feet wide, basement stone, first story brick and two stories wood, and this mill was subsequently moved in the rear to give more room for the present mill now used by the Springville Mill Company. Alonzo Bailey acted as agent and treasurer until January, 1860, and had the responsibility of the management during the first half of the history of the company, as has been stated. Chauncey Winchell had for several years no active relation to the business of the mill. Until 1844, he was employed in work at his trade, as a millwright, for which there had been considerable demand during the fifteen years of his residence in Rockville in consequence of the erection or enlargement of numerous mills in that village, and elsewhere in Vernon and the neighboring towns. In 1844, he became superintendent of the Springville Mill, holding that office until 1849, and was succeeded in the office by his son Cyrus Winchell, who was born in Manchester, Conn., in 1821, and had entered the Springville Mill when a lad, receiving a training in the details of the woolen business which fitted him for effective service to the company in different departments and capacities, until he was placed in charge of the mill as superintendent in 1849. He held that position until 1856, when he went to Willimansett, Mass., to take charge of a woolen mill then belonging to Nelson Kingsbury, of Rockville, and afterward of Hartford.

At the annual meeting of the Springville Manufacturing Company, in 1860, Alonzo Bailey declined re-election as agent and treasurer, and on Jan. 25th, of that year, sold all his shares of stock. At the same meeting Cyrus Winchell was elected agent and treasurer, and held both offices until the transfer of the property and franchise of the corporation to the Hockanum Company, which was made in January, 1886. Chauncey Winchell had no active relation to the immediate management of the business after 1849, but held the office of president during its whole history of more than fifty-two years.

In 1855 Mr. Winchell was a member of the first board of directors of the original bank in Rockville. On July 3, 1866, he was elected president of the Rockville National Bank, and held the office until Jan. 7, 1889. He lived to the age of ninety-four years, a remarkable instance of mental and physical vigor maintained for more than a score of years beyond what is said to be the appointed limit of human life, and for more than ten years longer than the period said to be an exceptional attainment "by reason of strength." He had a residence of nearly three-score years in the village, in which there were at the time of his death but few persons living who had preceded him in making it their home, and none of them so old as he had a record marked by such industry, ability and sound judgment in the management of his own affairs and those incumbent on him on account of his official position; by such integrity in all business transactions, and such virtues in all personal, domestic and social relations, as secured to him in a high degree the affection and veneration of all with whom these various relations and interests identified him.

Some biographical data regarding this remarkable citizen will be of interest. Chauncey Winchell was born Feb. 25, 1796, in Berlin, Conn., a son of Miles Curtiss and Lucy (Hollister) Winchell, who were born March 20, 1774, and May 6, 1774, respectively. Miles C. Winchell was a tinsmith by trade, and was a highly respected resident of Berlin, where he passed away June 10, 1844. His wife survived until Dec. 4, 1868, attaining the advanced age of ninety-four years. Their remains rest at Berlin. They reared a large family, viz.: Willis, born Jan. 25, 1794, was a tinsmith by trade, and died Nov. 12, 1875, in New Britain, Conn.; Chauncey, who is mentioned extensively elsewhere in this sketch; Whiting, born Jan. 6, 1798, died on Jan. 20, 1798; Albert, who was born Jan. 24, 1799, died at Eatonton, Ga., Feb. 29, 1888, having gone South when a young man, peddling tinware of New England manufacture, became a cotton planter and extensive slave owner previous to the Civil war, and accumulated a large property; Orrin, born May 1801, was a joiner by trade, and died Nov. 30, 1831, in Berlin; Ira, who was born on Nov. 13, 1801, lived in Berlin for years, and later in life went South and there met his death, the horse he was riding running away while he was crossing the Cumberland mountains, in Tennessee, and he was killed on the road, Feb. 15, 1871; James, who was born June 16, 1806, died in Arkansas at an advanced age; Lucy M., who was born Oct. 16, 1808, married Willis Bronson, and died in Amboy, Ill.; Eliza A. who was born Dec. 27, 1812, married Isaac L. Sanford, and died July 7, 1881, in Paris, Ky. (When a girl she worked in the mills at Rockville); Russell H., born March 6, 1817, was a mechanic, and died in February, 1857, in New Britain.

Early in 1816, Chauncey Winchell married Miss Mary Vibberts, of Manchester, Conn., who was born May 5, 1797, in East Hartford, and they became the parents of children as follows: Mary Ann, who was born in December, 1816, in Manchester, married Clark Holt, of Rockville, where she died on Aug. 15, 1887. Cyrus is mentioned elsewhere in this sketch. Chauncey and Clarissa (twins) were born in May, 1825, at Vernon, Conn. of the former, a resident of Rockville, see sketch elsewhere in this work; and the latter died in infancy. Harriet, who was born in September, 1831, died in Rockville, in September, 1853, unmarried. Albert, who was born in October, 1834, when a young man began as a clerk in Hartford, but later went to Great Barrington, Mass., where he was successful as a merchant, and is now one of the retired and most prominent citizens of that city; he married Miss Carrie Crane, of Great Barrington, Mass. Revilo, who was born on March 22, 1837, resides in Rockville (see sketch elsewhere in this work). Louisa, who was born June 15, 1839, is the wife of Frank Grant (see his sketch elsewhere in this work), and makes her home in Rockville. The parents of this family were indeed a remarkable couple. They had a happy wedded life of seventy-one years, Mr. Winchell passing away on Feb. 18, 1887, when almost ninety, and Mr. Winchell on March 19, 1890, when past ninety-four. Their remains rest in Grove Hill cemetery. Though not a member of any church, Mr. Winchell attended services and contributed liberally to the support of churches. His political support was given to the Whig, and later to the Republican party, but though he placed a high value on the privilege of voting, his interest in politics went no further, and he neither sought nor desired office. His first vote was cast in 1817, and it is said he never missed a Presidential election, voting for nineteen presidents. He was ver-public-spirited, and contributed toward the erection of the Pilgrim monument at Plymouth, Mass. His was a busy, active life, his great strength enabling him to do a large amount of work, and he was always satisfied to find a hand who could do as much as he. During the sixty years and more of his residence in Rockville, he made his home on West Main street, and built the house where he died, at the corner of West Main and Orchard streets, as well as others in the vicinity.

Cyrus Winchell is one of the very few old-time citizens left in Rockville, and of those residing there, seventy-three years ago, when he first came to the then small collection of houses, not one is left. Born Oct. 21, 1821, in Manchester, he was but eight years of age when his parents removed to Rockville, and there commenced his education in the common schools of the day, such as they were. In the winters of 1837 and 1838, he attended Wilbraham (Mass.) Academy, and in the spring of 1838, the then noted Connecticut Literary Institute, at Suffield, this course closing his schooling. During vacations he worked at the mills, and was but twelve years old when he found employment in what was then Winchell & Fuller's warp mill, standing up and feeding cotton on the apron at $1.50 per week, he to board himself. His training thus early begun, was thorough, and he became familiar with the details of the milling business from "a to z," continuing his connection therewith for almost fifty years, for nearly thirty years as the head of the best known mills in Rockville.

Soon after leaving school, Mr. Winchell went into the Springville Mill, and worked his way up from the bottom of the ladder, early displaying business capacity of a high order. It was not long before he was recognized as a valuable man, and was but twenty-eight years of age when, in 1849, he became superintendent of the Springville Mill, succeeding his father. He continued in that position until 1856, in which year he went to Willimamett, Mass., and took charge of a satinnet mill belonging to Nelson Kingsbury. There he remained until 1860, when he resumed his connection with the Springville Mill, continuing as related above, until 1886. Mr. Winchell has since lived a semi-retired life, the care of his extensive real estate holdings and other private interests serving, however, to occupy much of his time, as he attends personally to all such matters. Though ever a busy man, he has found time for recreation and pleasure, and has traveled quite extensively in the United States. As one of the substantial, public-spirited citizens of Rockville, he has had the welfare of the town at heart, and has done much toward its development, and the improvement of its institutions. He was one of the incorporators of the People's Savings Bank at Rockville, of which he has always been vice-president, and is a director in the Rockville National Bank, having been one of the incorporators of it also, and was one of the incorporators of the Rockville Hotel Company, incorporated in 1901, with a capital stock of $40,000. Though he is in his eighty-second year, his mental faculties are unimpaired, and his judgment in commercial affairs, especially in real estate values, is as sound and clear as in his more active years. He has always been slow to act, but firm in his convictions when once formed, outspoken, and not to be misunderstood. In manner he is simple and unassuming, without ostentation in any way.

On March 11, 1845, Mr. Winchell was married in Stafford, Conn., to Miss Hester Ann Bumstead, a native of Monson, Mass., who was born Jan. 5, 1826, a daughter of Jeremiah and Edna (Pease) Bumstead, the former a native of Wilbraham, Mass., the latter of Enfield, Conn., where the Pease family were among the earliest settlers, and very numerous. One daughter blessed this union, Mary Edna, who was born March 16, 1851, and married Wilbur B. Foster, of Rockville, by whom she has three children: William J., Minnie W. and Harry D. Our subject has made his home on West Main street—with the exception of two or three years—ever since he came to Rockville. In 1895, Mr. and Mrs. Winchell celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their wedding, surrounded by numerous friends and relatives. Mr. Winchell attributes much of his success in life to his fortunate selection of a life partner, and Mrs. Winchell fully shares his substantial triumphs. She is a member of the Union Congregational Church. Mr. Winchell is a Chapter Mason, and a member of Fayette Lodge, A. F. & A. M., at Rockville. He cast his first vote in 1842, when one of the qualifications was the ownership of property, and his father accordingly deeded him the property where he now resides, our subject transferring it back to his father the next day. Though not a politician, Mr. Winchell has always been interested in the success of his party, uniting originally with the Whigs, and later with the Democrats. He has held minor town offices, and represented his town once in the State Legislature, but never sought political preferment.

BROWN. There is now (1903) living in Putnam, Windham county, the town's eldest citizen, in the person of Hon. Hiram N. Brown, whose life spans but ten years less than a century, and it has been a life, too, of good deeds, so that he is looked upon as Putnam's "grand old man." Mr. Brown is the father of Hon. Charles Hathaway Brown, long a prominent citizen and business man of Putnam, of the hardware firm of Perry & Brown, and a former representative and senator, from the town and district.

HIRAM N. BROWN was born June 7, 1812, in New London, Conn., not far from the Waterford town line, a son of David and Lydia (Stebbins) Brown, natives of the same locality. David Brown was a grocery merchant for many years in New London, and a well-known citizen throughout that section of country, being prominent as a Mason. He believed in the precepts of the Golden Rule and endeavored in his daily life to keep them before him as his guide. Late in life, owing to failing health, he sought another climate, removing to Utica, N. Y., where he died and was buried. His wife, who was a member of the M. E. Church in New London, was a good Christian woman and a devoted wife and mother. Her death occurred at the home of a daughter in Woodstock, Conn., where her remains rest. Ten children were born to this couple, as follows: Peter, the eldest, who died at Charleston, S. C.; Charles, who died at Utica, N. Y.; William, who died on Staten Island; Isaac, who died in 1899, a resident of the State of Wisconsin; Sarah M.; Eliza, who married Jonah Gates and died in Woodstock, Conn.; Hiram N.; Mary Ann, who died and was buried on Staten Island; George, who died in New London; and Emma Eunice, who married Benjamin Putnam and died in Woodstock.

In childhood Hiram N. Brown attended a school taught by the then well-known master, Dow, in New London. At an early age he learned the tailor's trade with Joshua Hamlington, of New London, and in 1834 located at West Woodstock, Conn., where for twenty years he followed his trade. In 1854 he removed to Putnam, where, associated with Andrew Leavens, he opened a store for general merchandise. Two years later Mr. Brown withdrew and established the tailoring and clothing business in which he continued throughout the rest of his active business life, retiring therefrom in 1888 with a comfortable competence. While retired from business, Mr. Brown is by no means an idle man, for even at ninety he believes in being occupied, and when not busy in his garden he is active in other lines about the premises and in his home. He is a wonderfully well-preserved man for one of his years, is in possession of all of his faculties, almost unimpaired, and one would judge him to be a much younger man.

At the age of twenty, and while yet at home, young Brown, along with a number of other boys of like age, formed a temperance society, which was one of the first organizations of its kind in the State. To its principles Mr. Brown has adhered throughout his long life and to the avoidance of stimulants and tobacco, along with food properly cooked, he attributes his longevity and good health. He has been a staunch advocate of temperance all his life and has done not a little toward the uplifting of those addicted to the habit of drink, and to the elevation of the morals of humanity. On removing to West Woodstock he was the means of bringing thither lecturers on temperance, paying them out of his own pocket. This resulted in a great temperance movement in which hundreds of men signed the pledge and led temperate lives. For many years, too, Mr. Brown was a worker in the church and Sunday-school of the several localities in which he lived, being a teacher in the latter.

Many years ago he united with the Congregation Church at Putnam.

Mr. Brown's political affiliations have been with both the Democratic and Republican parties, though a Republican continually since the organization of that party in 1856, casting his first Republican vote for John C. Fremont, and his last for lamented William McKinley. His first vote was cast for Andrew Jackson for President. While a resident of Woodstock, Mr. Brown, in 1853, represented that town in the General Assembly of the State, and he has held every office in the town excepting that of selectman. In Putnam also, he has been active and prominent in public affairs, and has held all of the local offices in the town. He served seven years as postmaster of Putnam, having been appointed after the election of Abraham Lincoln as President. In fact Mr. Brown has been an all-round good and useful citizen. He has never been a member of any secret organization. He is truly a connecting link between the past and the present, being full of reminiscences, and recalls with vivid recollection early events of the nineteenth century, among them the visit of Gen. LaFayette to New London.

On Jan. 14, 1838, Mr. Brown was married at Dighton, Mass., to Harriet Hathaway, born Nov. 13, 1814, at Dighton, a daughter of Ebenezer Hathaway, and to the union came children as follows: Henry Newton, born Jan. 30, 1839, in Woodstock, who married Delia Ann Fisher, and died Feb. 1, 1890, at Woonsocket, R. I., where he had been engaged in a wood and coal business; Charles Hathaway, born Oct. 21, 1842, in Woodstock, mentioned below; Harriet Louise, born Jan. 20, 1848, who died June 29, 1854, in Putnam, and is buried there; Emma Adeline, born Nov. 19, 1854, who married May 11, 1881, Elmer G. Tucker, of Worcester, Mass. The mother of these children died May 2, 1868, and Mr. Brown was married (second) at Pomfret, Conn., Aug. 11, 1869, to Maria S. Tucker of that town. The second Mrs. Brown was educated in the schools of Pomfret and the New Britain Normal School. For some eight years she taught school in her home town and in Woodstock, and now one of the valued teachers in the infant class of the Sunday-school of the Putnam Congregation Church.

CHARLES HATHAWAY BROWN, son of Hiram N. Brown, was born Oct. 21, 1842, in West Woodstock, Conn., and removed with his father's family in 1854 to Putnam, where his later boyhood was passed and his preparation for business was received. In July, 1871, associated with F. W. Perry, the two established the present extensive business of the well-known hardware firm of Perry & Brown, of Putnam. During this intervening third of a century, Mr. Brown has gradually but steadily come to the front until he is one of Putnam's most substantial business men and prominent citizens. He is of that type of men who have never sought public office, but public office has sought him. In 1884 he was elected treasurer of the Putnam fire district, the duties of which he discharged and acceptably filled until 1896. Since the last named year, Mr. Brown has been the efficient treasurer of the city of Putnam. In 1887 he was elected registrar of voters and each year since has been re-elected. In 1896 he was honored by his fellow-townsmen with a seat in the General Assembly of the State, and in 1901 he became, by the suffrages of his district, the sixteenth, a member of the State Senate, in both bodies serving with intelligence and ability. In the House he was a member of the committee on Banks and Banking. Senator Brown is a member of the corporaion of the Putnam Savings Bank; is a director in and president of the First National Bank of Putnam; director in the Putnam Light and Power Company.

On Sept. 1, 1866, Senator Brown was married to Caroline E. Spaulding, and to them have come three children, two of whom, Wilfred and Dell, are deceased. Harriet Hathaway, the third child, has been liberally educated, attending first the Putnam schools, later Welleslev College, Wellesley, Mass., graduating in 1897. She is a member of Elizabeth Porter Putnam Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

There have been several branches of different Brown families in New London county, among them the posterity of Rev. Chad Brown, who, with his wife Elizabeth and son John, came to New England in the ship "Martin," landing at Boston in 1638. Mr. Brown entertained religious and political sentiments in sympathy with Roger Williams, and went to reside with him at Providence, R. I., and rose to prominence in that plantation. He had studied theology before coming to New England, and in Providence became settled over the church there, following Roger Williams. James Brown, of Newport, R. I., in the fourth generation from Chad (through John and James), born in 1700, married Ann Noyes, born in 1704, and their son James removed to Norwich, Conn. A brother of James Brown, of the fourth generation from Chad, who was born in 1702, married Dorothy Noyes, a sister of Ann, the wife of James Brown, settled in Stonington, Conn., and made that town his home through life. These Noyes sisters were the daughters of Dr. James Noyes. Then another progenitor of the Browns in New London county was Thomas Brown, through his sons, Moses, John and Eleazer Brown, of Lynn, Mass., all of whom removed in early life to Stonington, Conn., and were the ancestors of the greater number of the Browns of Stonington.

HENRY NEWTON BROWN, the eldest son of Hiram N. Brown, was born Jan. 30, 1839, in Woodstock, Conn., and secured his education in the public schools of Putnam and at Wilbraham Academy. Beginning his business life as a clerk in Putnam, he established himself in the dry-goods business, later confining himself through several years to a shoe business and still later operating a coal and wood business. After his removal to Rhode Island, he engaged extensively in a lumber business and died at Woonsocket, in that State, Feb. 18, 1890; he was interred in the Putnam cemetery. His political identification was with the Republican party. Mr. Brown was one of the leading and most useful members of the Congregational Church. His marriage to Delia Ann Fisher, Oct. 9, 1861, resulted in the birth of two children, namely: Edward, who died in Putnam; and Louise, who married Kendall Castle, of Rochester, N. Y. Their two children are—Newton Brown and Kendall Brooks. Henry N. Brown was a member of the Masonic fraternity in Putnam. His standing as a man and citizen may be judged by an article which appeared in the columns of the Patriot, at Putnam, at the time of his decease. So well does it express the general feeling of friends, acquaintances and fellow-citizens, that the biographer gives the entire article, from the pen of Rev. C. S. Brooks, one who knew him well. Mr. Brooks says:

"I very much regretted that it was impracticable for me to comply with the request to officiate at the funeral of Mr. H. Newton Brown. Since I was prevented from performing that office, allow me through the Patriot, to lay upon his casket my very affectionate and sad tribute of appreciation and respect. I found him when I came to Putnam, one of the positive, enterprising and aggressive men who had given the brave, growing town a type of its own, and a type both heroic and worthy it was. Mr. Brown was one of the prominent representatives of both the daring and the honor which composed the type. His aspiration, alertness, vivacity and enthusiasm set him well toward the front of the pushing and courageous body of men that were fashioning this rising township. I question whether there was a single movement that looked toward the solid progress of the place which did not have his sympathy and alliance. And it is very much to take a community when everything is in the crude state, and have faith in the future of it, and then to proceed and plan and fashion that future. You say, now, that he is dead. But as you look about you, he lives and speaks in the fine facilities and appointments which on so many sides make up this body public.

"As a husband, father, son and brother, only they can tell adequately what he was whose desolation in this bereavement is unspeakable. He was a man, not merely with a fertile mind and active hand, but he was emphatically a man with a heart. A heart with the strength of a man and the tenderness and warmth of a woman, a heart such as God makes when He creates a whole man. We rejoice to sit in the light and heat of its gladness and glow, and wherever it goes, it carries summertime. May that circle of kindred who in expressible anguish will miss his genial presence and cheer, be compensated and upborne by the Almighty Father and Elder Brother. 'My grace shall be sufficient for thee. My strength shall be made perfect in weakness.'

One less at home—
The charmed circle broken; a dear face
Missed day by day from its accustomed place;
But cleansed and saved and perfected by grace,
One more in Heaven.
One less at home—
A sense of loss that meets us at the gate;
Within, a place unfilled and desolate;
And far away our coming to await,
One more in Heaven.

"As we pause reverently by his bier, we should take note, and take to heart, that he was pre-eminently a Christian man. Boldly and unswervingly he stood shoulder to shoulder with other citizens on the temperance issue in town when it was anything but a holiday matter to do it. Squarely and manfully he met the question. Religion was a part of his life. It was no cant with him, no conventional thing, nothing that he put on upon occasion; but he wore it as he wore his face. I have known scarcely any man who could speak on personal religion with an un-Christian man more naturally, normally than he. Many is the man, I doubt not, who can recall the frank, manly words he has spoken to them about being a Christian. He had that tact and open heart that made him an apt servant of his Lord. He has won, I trust, in his wayside work gems for his crown which will make it resplendent in the day of Jesus Christ. He has been called in at noon, to lay down pen and sickle and assume, we trust, some of the high tasks of Heaven. As we gaze up after him through the parted heavens, in affectionate remembrance, may the gracious lessons of his life inspire us to prompt, devout and abundant labor for the same Lord."

TUCKER. The Tucker family; of which Mrs. Hiram N. Brown is a descendant, are old settlers of Pomfret. (I) Robert Tucker, the first of that name in America, was born at Weymouth, England, and came to the New World with the Rev. Dr. Hull, locating first at Weymouth, Mass., later at Gloucester, where he held office, but still later he returned to Weymouth and became there a man of affairs, dying at Milton, Mass., at the age of seventy-eight years, in 1682. He married Elizabeth Allen, and Joseph, their son born in 1645, was a member of the militia and was one of the organizers of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company. (II) Benjamin Tucker was born in 1644 and married Ann, a daughter of Edward and Mary (Eliot) Payson, the latter being a sister of the Rev. John Eliot, the apostle of the Indians. Benjamin died Feb. 27, 1713-14, the father of eleven children.

(III) Joseph Tucker, son of Benjamin, was born in 1686. He married and with his wife, Margaret, removed to Pomfret, Conn., where he died Sept. 11, 1753. His second marriage was to Mary Cole, Nov. 16, 1726. (IV) Joseph Tucker, the oldest child of Joseph, was born Feb. 1, 1714, Pomfret, and married Elizabeth Garrett, Aug. 1744. He took part in the expedition against Indians. (V) Ephraim Tucker, son of Joseph and Elizabeth, was born May 12, 1745, and married Mehetable, daughter of David Chandler, of Pomfret, May 4, 1767. They were the parents of six children, of whom (VI) Ephraim, born Aug. 1782, married Sarah Skinner, daughter of William Skinner, of Woodstock, born Aug. 27, 1782, and died Dec. 4, 1865. He died May 12, 1873. They had five children, namely: Maria, who married Daniel Chickering, of Spencer, Mass., and died Oct. 26, 1891; William Skinner and Susan Adeline, twins, born Feb. 12, 1813, of whom William married Lucretia T. Wheeler, and Susan married Lucius Fitts; Lucius, born Oct. 16, 1816, who married Sarah Ann Phillips, of Plainfield, Conn., and died May 19, 1874.

(VII) William Skinner Tucker, father of Mr. Hiram N. Brown, was born in Pomfret, Feb. 1813, and became one of the town's best-known citizens, spending his whole life in that place, and dying Sept. 24, 1897. He married Lucretia T. Wheeler, daughter of John Hancock and Sally (Hartshorn) Wheeler, the latter of whom died in Pomfret and was buried there by the side of her husband in the Salem cemetery. Mr. Tucker was a most estimable man and a good and representative citizen. His children were: Sarah Maria, born Nov. 11, 1818, who married Hiram N. Brown; Emily C., born July 27, 1846, who married Andrew Gilbert Williams, of Pomfret, Dec. 4, 1867; Susan Adeline, born Nov. 8, 1857, residing in Pomfret; and Charles Green, born March 22, 1859, who resides at Pawcatuck, Rhode Island.

CYRIL JOHNSON. Among the prominent, successful and representative self-made men of Tolland county, Conn., no one stands higher in the estimation of his fellow-citizens than Cyril Johnson, of Stafford. The family originated in Scotland, and through every generation has displayed those traits which have contributed to the success of the natives of that country in every locality and position in which they are found.

Nathaniel Johnson was the great-grandfather of our subject. His first marriage is recorded to have occurred in Vernon, Conn., to Huldah Hammond, and after her death he married Martha Washburn, the daughter of Solomon, Sr., and Martha (Osgood) Washburn, of Bridgewater, Massachusetts.

Ebenezer Johnson, a son of Nathaniel Johnson, was born in Stafford, Conn., April 9, 1759, and died in his native place, April 2, 1817. His life was passed as an industrious and successful farmer, and he succeeded in rearing a large family which became connected by marriage with many of the oldest and most conspicuous families of New England. Ebenezer Johnson was married to Mary Estlin, who was born June 22, 1767, and who died

Cyril Johnson

Jan. 5, 1848. She was a daughter of Timothy and Lydia (Joy) Edson, and was a descendant in the fifth generation from Deacon Samuel Edson, who was born in England, in 1612, and resided in Salem, Mass., in 1638, removing then to Bridgewater, Mass. Here he was one of the first settlers and he owned the first mill and probably built it, and was a member of the council of war at this place during the King Philip outbreak. The children born to Ebenezer Johnson and wife were: Clarissa, born Feb. 7, 1785, married Joseph Gold, of Stafford, and died Jan. 10, 1864; Celia, born Sept. 23, 1787, died Dec. 7, 1787; Mary, born Oct. 26, 1788, married, July 11, 1811, Eli Howe, a carpenter (who was a son of Israel and Hannah (Washburn) Howe, born April 27, 1789, and died Aug. 27, 1840), and died Oct. 3, 1856; Cyril was the father of our subject; Marcia, born Nov. 20, 1793, married (first) Royal Ellis and (second) Osander Edson, and died Sept. 30, 1855; Salenda, born Dec. 9, 1798, married, Nov. 12, 1816, Capt. Warren Orcutt, a son of Stephen Orcutt, a soldier in the Revolution, had nine daughters, and died Feb. 26, 1885; Nathaniel, born Oct. 15, 1801, married Minerva Cady (born March 5, 1804, and died Jan. 10, 1871), and died on Aug. 20, 1872; Timothy Edson, born June 1, 1804, married, Oct. 3, 1838, Harriet Sprague, of Pittsfield, Mass., where he worked at his trade of machinist, and there died Sept. 5, 1884; Louisa, born Aug. 27, 1807, married, Feb. 26, 1835, to Lorin Russell McIntire, a carpenter (born Nov. 13, 1807, died May 29, 1876, aged sixty-eight years), and died Sept. 13, 1876; and Ebenezer Joy, born May 28, 1810, died May 9, 1837, at Lee, Mass., of consumption, leaving his widow, Nancy Maria (Backus) Johnson.

Cyril Johnson, the father of our subject, was born in West Stafford, Conn., July 24, 1791, and he died at that place March 8, 1848. His first marriage was to Saloma Cady, daughter of Abner Cady, of Stafford, and to this union was born a daughter, Marcia Augusta, born July 20, 1820, in West Stafford, who married (first) Lewis Rockwell and (second) Mr. Keeney, of Manchester, Conn. On Nov. 30, 1826, Cyril Johnson married (second) Clarissa McKinney, a daughter of William and Olive (Fuller) McKinney, of West Stafford, born March 27, 1802; she died March 1, 1889, in Stafford. The children of this marriage were: William, born Aug. 29, 1827, in West Stafford, married Lenora Chaffee, daughter of Norman Chaffee, of South Wilbraham, Mass., and now carries on the trade of carpenter in Hampden, Mass.; Mary, born July 20, 1829, in West Stafford, married Henry Pinney, of Ellington, Conn., and is now living in Stafford Springs, a widow; Cyril, born May 20, 1834, married Oscar W. Sanford, of Stafford; Clarissa, born Aug. 22, 1836, married Edwin Parkess, son of Lewis Parkess, of Stafford Springs; Joy Ebenezer, born June 23, 1838, who married Augusta Farley, and carried on the carpenter's trade in Hartford, was a lieutenant in Co. G, 34th N. Y. V. I., and died Feb. 5, 1886 (his son, Lewis E., is with our subject in the Central Woolen Co.'s office); Henrietta, born Nov. 8, 1840, married Charles Smith, a son of Charles Smith, of Monson, Mass., and they now live in Hydeville, where he is a farmer and also carries on carpentering; Edwin, born Jan. 22, 1843, married Miss Martha Cheney and (second) Nellie Brown, and now lives in Hartford, where he is a policeman; and Lucius, born Aug. 4, 1846, was a clerk in a mercantile company, and died in Stafford Springs at the age of thirty years, unmarried.

Cyril Johnson, the father, was a carpenter by trade and built the home in West Stafford in 1823, living here all his life. For many years he followed the business of a civil engineer, doing the major portion of such work done in this section. He resided on a farm which he cultivated. In politics he was a Democrat, and held a number of local offices, notably that of sheriff.

Cyril Johnson, our subject, was born in West Stafford, Conn., Dec. 17, 1831, and his education was pursued exclusively in his native town. At the age of sixteen years he began his business career by accepting employment in the card room of what is now the Staffordville Woolen Company. After several years of service in that position he went in the same capacity to Fox's mill, in the same town, remaining with the latter company two years, returning then to the Staffordville Woolen Company, being offered by them an excellent position in the finishing department. His previous record with this company had been so excellent that they desired to obtain his services again, and for twelve years he worked in this mill, in the card and knapping departments. In 1861 Mr. Johnson went to the Phoenix Mill at Hydeville, where he was soon advanced to the position of foreman of the lower room and finishing department. In 1870 Mr. Johnson became superintendent and part owner in this mill; associated with him were Elijah Fairman, Daniel Fairman, Charles Holt, C. N. Gibbs, Charles Bard and Charles Ladd. After eleven years of successful experience in the Phoenix Mill, Mr. Johnson, in 1881, with E. C. Pinney, R. G. Beebe and Mrs. Rachael Harvey, organized the Riverside Woolen Company, at Stafford Hollow. Our subject was elected president and agent of this company in 1882, which positions he retained until Aug. 1, 1899. During the 'eighties the Riverside Woolen Company bought the Granite Mills property at Stafford Springs, and conducted same for a short time as a cotton mill. In 1888 the Central Woolen Company was organized by Mr. Johnson, William Corbin and M. A. Marcy. The Granite Mills property was transformed into a woolen mill, Mr. Johnson becoming the agent, and some time later the president. In the latter capacity he succeeded William Corbin.

There are no more desirable mill properties in the Stafford district than those of the Central Woolen Company. Their stone and brick buildings are provided with modern machinery, and are thoroughly equipped for the manufacture of high-grade kerseys, meltons, cassimeres, cloakings, coverts and other woolen fabrics. The product of these mills is widely and favorably known, and the success which has been attained is directly attributable to Mr. Johnson's capable and intelligent management. In the re-organization of this company Mr. Johnson's advice and business sagacity have been of great value.

In all public matters relating to his native town Mr. Johnson takes a very active interest, and has always been a very liberal promoter of every worthy object. However, he has resolutely refused to accept political honors, although an ardent member of the Home Market Club, of Boston, and a loyal defender of protection and Republican doctrines. Mr. Johnson is a director in the First National Bank of Stafford Springs, having held this position for a number of years, and in which institution he has been vice-president since Jan. 1, 1901. He is also a director of the Warren Woolen Company, of Stafford Springs. Mr. Johnson's business interests outside of Stafford are varied and extensive. He is president of the Rock Manufacturing Company, of Rockville, Conn.; is sole owner of the Atlas Foundry and Machine Company, of Belleville, N. J.; and is an extensive owner in the Hardman Rubber Company, of the same place.

On May 21, 1857, Mr. Johnson was married to Miss Julia C. Pinney, who was born Dec. 30, 1834, daughter of Daniel and Azubah (Carpenter) Pinney, of Stafford. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson are attendants upon the services of the Congregational Church, and are greatly interested in the Stafford public library, which building was presented to the library association by Mrs. Johnson.

As has well been said of him, Mr. Johnson's peculiar genius in directing the policy of his mills has made him successful where others would have failed. During years of business depression his mills were the only ones in his vicinity which were not shut down for a protracted period, and during the entire hard times the wages of none of his employes were lowered, but were maintained as they were during the highly prosperous years of 1891 and 1892. His relations with his employes have always been of the most cordial character, and he possesses their sincere respect and affection. Although over seventy years of age, he looks at least fifteen years younger. His genial manner, sympathetic nature, most generous disposition, frank and business-like methods make him universally esteemed by all who have the privilege of his acquaintance. Especially is he beloved by many young men, to whom his guidance and assistance have been of lasting benefit.

Mr. Johnson is in the truest sense of the word a self-made man, and his success in life is due to his energy, perseverance and pluck. Many opportunities have been far greater than Mr. Johnson's have failed, but his determination has been to succeed in life, and thus set an example for generations to follow, and he has surely attained that ambition. It can truthfully be said of him that his success has not been equalled by any in the town of Stafford. Mr. Johnson has been assisted in his life work to a considerable extent by his estimable wife, who has shown herself on many occasions to be a very capable business man, endowed with rare judgment. She has been most devoted to his interests, and many have been the instances where her counsel and advice have been sought. Their pleasant and hospitable home is located in Stafford Hollow, where they are surrounded by neighbors who esteem them at their proper value, and to whom they show a much appreciated hospitality.

COL. ANDREW MODOCK LITCHFIELD was descended from an old, distinguished family of Hampton, Windham county.

Lawrence Litchfield, the first of his line to leave America, belonged to a military organization in Boston in 1640. In the year of his death, which occurred at Scituate, Mass., in 1650, he was a resident of Barnstable, Mass. His wife, Judith (Allen) survived him, and later married William Pease. The original Windham county Litchfield purchased land of the Indians and settled in Tac Nic Hill, the town of Brooklyn. His homestead still remains in the family name.

Uriah Litchfield, born May 24, 1766, came to Hampton in 1815 and settled on the farm now occupied by his great-grandson, Fred Litchfield. He died on his farm July 30, 1833, and is buried in his home. His wife, Sarah (Witter), born Sept. 12, 1767, died May 8, 1843. They had seven children, as follows: Mary, born Sept. 17, 1789, died Mar. 4, 1793; Lucy, born Aug. 22, 1791, died May 11, 1793; Daniel, born June 21, 1793, died Sept. 1862; Asa S., born Nov. 8, 1795, died June 1860; John, born Nov. 18, 1798, died Dec. 15, 1880; Andrew Modock, the grandfather of Fred, is mentioned later; Eleazer, born July 16, 1805, died Aug. 13, 1848.

Col. Andrew Modock Litchfield, whose extensive business enterprises attracted wide attention, was a man of extraordinary talent and remarkable character. Born in Brooklyn, Conn., Oct. 28, 1818, he was but fourteen years of age when his parents moved to Hampton. Having a natural aptitude for mechanics, he, after acquiring a good common school education, engaged in several mechanical trades, among them that of wheel-wright. This beginning opened the way to something better, the lumber business. A great deal of the lumber used in Danielson, Conn., at that time passed through Col. Litchfield's hands; he also furnished timber for the Wauregan dam. He made so much more that he afterward enlarged the business till he owned and operated a saw, shingle, clover and grist mill in Hampton, employing at one time a larger number of men than any other man in that town. With large financial returns to himself and with great benefit to his employes Col. Litchfield continued his business for over fifty years. He then sold out and turned his attention to agriculture. At one time he possessed over 500 acres, being the largest landowner in the town of Hampton; but he later sold all but 125 acres which he retained for his farm and finally left to his heirs. Having amassed considerable wealth he spent the last fifteen years of his long, useful life in leisure. Col. Litchfield had an iron constitution, was seldom ill, and retained his youthfulness to the last. After a free-score and ten he could do a good day's work and, gifted with his second sight, he could read the print without glasses. He was exceedingly well-read, and possessed a remarkable memory. His death, from la grippe, occurred Feb. 14, 1890, in his eighty-ninth year; he is buried in the cemetery a few rods from his home. He was married to Caroline Fuller, of Hampton, daughter of Isaac and Rebecca (Dixon) Fuller.

Mrs. Col. Litchfield was a thoroughly charming woman, with a host of friends who made her most hospitable home their favorite resort. She died Dec. 1, 1882, at the age of seventy-four. Col. and Mrs. Litchfield had four children, all of whom retained through life high social positions: (1) Isaac F., born May 24, 1831, who now resides in Wisconsin, has for many years a real estate dealer in St. Paul, Minn. (2) Nancy D., born June 21, 1833, married Phonso Church, a druggist; she died in Providence, R. I., the mother of three children, Caroline, Edward and Gordon W. B. (3) Uriah, the father of Fred, is mentioned below. (4) Caroline R., born Jan. 19, 1838, now a resident of Naugatuck, Conn., married Rev. George Soule, a Congregational minister, who was born Oct. 12, 1823, and died Oct. 4, 1867; they had three children: Herrod (a Congregational minister at Naugatuck), George (a traveling salesman) and Mary. Col. Litchfield was a man of decided political convictions. At first he was a Jeffersonian Democrat, then a Know Nothing, and later a Whig, but finally, when the Republican party was formed, he cast his ballot in support of its principles. He was exceedingly prominent in public affairs, holding the various town offices in succession till he had filled them all. He officiated as justice of the peace till exempted him from duty, and for one term he very efficiently represented Hampton in the State Legislature. But it was in military affairs that his popularity excelled, and in the Connecticut State Militia, he held seven different commissions ranging over a period of seventeen years. The dates and signatures of his various ranks are as follows: Lieutenant, 1st Company, 5th Regiment, Sept. 2, 1826—signed: Erastus Lester; Lieutenant, Grenadier Company, 5th Regiment, May 15, 1826—signed: Oliver Wolcott; Captain, 5th Regiment, Sept. 18, 1826—signed: Gideon Tomlinson; Adjutant, 3d Regiment, Aug. 28, 1831—signed: Col. Chauncy Cleveland; Adjutant, 5th Regiment, Sept. 1, 1836—signed: William L. Jillson; Major, 5th Regiment, April 20, 1838—signed: William W. Ellsworth; Lieutenant-Colonel, 5th Regiment, May 12, 1841—signed: William W. Ellsworth. He resigned as Lieutenant-Colonel June 2, 1842.

As a military officer Col. Litchfield had an admirable presence. He was five feet, ten inches in height, weighed over 200 pounds, and had a powerful voice. With the boys and with the community at large he was exceedingly popular owing to his genial disposition and his ready generosity in aiding many a struggling young man over difficult places in life. As a consistent member of the Congregational Church he also commanded esteem, and to the cause of religion he contributed liberally. He held a phenomenal place in the hearts of all who knew him.

URIAH LITCHFIELD, in whose short life two characteristics—unflinching patriotism and rare practicability—made him a citizen of rare promise, was born at the Litchfield homestead in Hampton, March 12, 1836. He received his education in the common schools of his town, and in a select school at Warren, Conn. Having mechanical tastes he early rented a shop and hired a man to teach him the blacksmith's trade, which for several years he carried on profitably in Hampton. He then moved to Baltic, Conn., remaining there till 1860 when he returned to Hampton.

In early manhood Mr. Litchfield married Diantha C. Fuller, of Hampton, daughter of Philander and Mary (Church) Fuller. Mrs. Uriah Litchfield survived her husband and later married Archibald H. Stewart, by whom she has one child, Archie T., bookkeeper for the New England Telegraph and Telephone Co., at Portland, Maine; Mrs. Stewart now resides in Chaplin, Conn. By her Mr. Litchfield had two children: (1) Fred is mentioned below; (2) Andrew M., born Dec. 4, 1860, who married Lucy Andrews, and had three children: Helen A., born June 30, 1884; Edith I., born July 24, 1887; and Ray, Oct. 19, 1889, died Dec. 22, 1889.

Andrew M. Litchfield received his schooling in the common schools of Willimantic and South Coventry, and he completed the grammar-school course in New York City, where his mother moved after her second marriage. He entered the employ of the New York firm of Schuyler, Hartley & Graham, Maiden Lane, when sixteen years of age, and after five years began traveling for them as salesman, continuing this work for twelve years. On Jan. 1, 1894, Mr. Litchfield became the treasurer of the T. P. Davis Arms Company, wholesale dealers in fire arms, ammunition, fishing tackle and sporting goods. He retained this position until Jan. 1, 1901. In March, 1901, he purchased the general store of Edgar S. Lincoln, of Chaplin, Conn., which town he is also serving now as postmaster. Mr. Litchfield is a Republican and has always been interested in his party. He has been quite successful, and has made his own position in the world.

Soon after Uriah Litchfield's return to Hampton the Civil war broke out, and in August, 1861, he enlisted in Co. F, 8th C. V. I., for three years' service. His regiment was stationed in the hardest of all places—the Virginia battle ground—and participated in many great battles, including Fredericksburg, Antietam and others. Mr. Litchfield was usually detailed as ambulance driver, or to boat service on the Potomac river. In October, 1863, he fell ill and was sent home. He grew steadily worse until Feb. 14, 1864, when he died in his twenty-eighth year. He is buried near the Litchfield homestead. For over two years he served his country heroically, and his unstinted services would not even then have been withheld, could his constitution have prevailed against its odds. He won not only the esteem of his townsmen, but of those who knew his life history.

FRED LITCHFIELD, a respected farmer of Hampton, born in that town, March 4, 1859, was but five years old when his father died. He was not, however, denied tender nurture. Reared in the home of Col. Litchfield, he remained under the careful oversight of that benevolent gentleman till he was twenty years old, receiving a good common school education. He acquired considerable knowledge of agriculture, and having inherited mechanical tastes, for a life work he turned to farming, or to some kind of handicraft. His first position was in the sawmill of J. B. Hamlin. He proved himself a skillful workman, and remained with his employer some time, working for him in Hampton, Oneco, and Brooklyn, Conn. He finally withdrew from the sawmill business, and engaged as foreman of a farm in Pomfret, owned by Dr. Seth Rogers. At the expiration of a year, however, he returned to mechanical work; taking a position this time in the road machine shop of George W. Taft, in Pomfret, where he remained over two years. He has since applied himself assiduously to the cultivation of the soil, being engaged for one year on a rented farm at Springfield, L. I., then, till 1890, being manager of the P. W. Turner farm, at Turnerville, Conn. As about this time Mr. Litchfield's grandfather died leaving him a share of the home place, he purchased the other heirs' interests, and now owns the magnificent old Litchfield homestead, comprising the whole of the original 125 acres, where he resides, extensively engaged in general agriculture and a profitable dairy business.

In January, 1879, Fred Litchfield was united in marriage with Mary E. Botham, who was born in Woodstock, Conn., Feb. 28, 1861, one of the eleven children—eight sons and three daughters—of Edwin F. and Medelia (Holbrook) Botham, farm people of Hampton, whither they removed with Mrs. Litchfield was quite young. Delia Cleveland, the only child of Mr. and Mrs. Litchfield, born Jan. 25, 1879, was an exceptionally bright pupil, although having practically no school privilege until the age of ten, she taught in Hampton when she was sixteen, and later in two years completed a three years' State Normal School course, at Westfield, Mass., graduating in June, 1899; she has since taught school in Hampton, Bolton, Stepney Dean, in the town of Monroe, and in the grammar grade at Sterling, Connecticut.

Mr. Litchfield is a progressive farmer who takes a hand in everything that may be going on, and has strengthened in his position by the sympathy and interest of his wife and daughter. All three are members of Little River Grange, No. 36, of Hampton, and also with Pomona Grange. In 1895 Mr. Litchfield took the degree of Ceres in the National Grange, which met at Worcester, Mass. In politics Mr. Litchfield is a Republican, and one never recreant to his duty. He has served as grand master, or, has been a member of the school committee, and is now the highly esteemed justice of the peace. He is well-known, has hosts of friends, and his influence counts for a great deal in the town of Hampton.

HON. EDWARD STEVENS HENRY, agriculturist of Rockville, who for years has been prominent in public life, and at this time is a representative in Congress, is one of the well known men in public life in New England, and the product of an ancestry coming from the Connecticut Valley, Massachusetts.

Congressman Henry is in the sixth generation from (I) David Henry, a native of Ayrshire, Scotland, who took part in the battle of the Boyne under the colors of William of Orange, and after peace had been declared, settled near Coleraine, in the North of Ireland, on a grant of land given him by the King, land that had been confiscated. From him the line of Mr. Henry's descent is through Hugh, Benjamin, David and Edward F. Henry.

(II) Hugh Henry, son of David, was one of the organized colony who immigrated to this country from the North of Ireland in 1733, and settled on what was then Boston township No. 2, Franklin Co., Mass. In the early records of that township, which was renamed Coleraine in 1743, the name Hugh Henry is frequently mentioned in connection with public affairs, showing that he was a man of intelligence, business ability and force of character.

(III) Benjamin Henry, son of Hugh, the immigrant, was a man of intelligence and great usefulness in the community in which he resided. He was a soldier in the French and Indian wars, serving under General Israel Putnam, being a member of the famous "Rogers Rangers," recruited directly for the King's service. He was one of the forlorn hin the assault upon Fort Ticonderoga. He was one of the first settlers of Halifax, Windham Co., Vt., where he was long in public life, serving for thirty years as a justice and for seventeen years as a representative in the State Legislature, twelve years of that period covering 1789-1801. He was lieutenant in the militia company from Halifax, and saw service in the Revolutionary war; he was at the battle of Bennington, together with his brother James, who was shortly after killed at the battle of Stillwater.

(IV) David Henry (2) and Edward Fish Henry, grandfather and father respectively, of Edward S., were farmers and men of standing and usefulness in their communities. David Henry was one of the early settlers of the town of Heath, Mass., and lived through a long lifetime greatly esteemed and respected, dying at the age of eighty-five years. He married Prudence Fish, of Mystic, Conn., who was born in 1776, and died in 1853, in Heath, Mass. Their family consisted of fourteen children, thirteen of whom lived to maturity, and the only survivor at the present time of writing (December, 1902) is Catherine, widow of Edward Tucker, of Heath, Mass. She was born Dec. 25, 1804.

(V) Edward Fish Henry was born Oct. 23, 1801, at Heath, and leaving that place when a young man, located in Gill, Franklin county, near Turner's Falls. He taught school for many years, and was highly successful in that profession, but the principal business of his life was farming. His name appears in different public relations on the records of Gill, as selectman in 1837. He married Eliza Stevens, who was born Aug. 22, 1806, daughter of Simon Stevens, M. D., of Guilford, Vt., and to this union came six children as follows: Edward; Abby E. and Esther, both unmarried, who live in Hartford; Catherine, Mrs. Herbert Gough, Worcester, Mass., who has one daughter, May, the wife of Walter Brown, of Worcester; Charles, who died in infancy; and Mattie F., Mrs. Nathan F. Peck, of Hartford. In 1849 the parents moved to Rockville, Tolland Co., Conn., locating on West Main street. The father died in 1874, the mother in 1882. Mr. Henry was a Whig and subsequently a Republican in political faith.

(VI) Edward Stevens Henry, son of Edward and Eliza A. (Stevens) Henry, was born Feb. 1836, at Gill, Mass., the eldest of the family. His education was for the most part received under the instruction of his father, and for a time after the removal of the family to Rockville he attended the local public schools. During his early manhood he worked in a dry-goods store in Hartford and in a general store in Rockville. Possessed of a good mind and talent, and trained as became one of such sturdy New England ancestry, he began at the age of nineteen a business career which was destined to bring him success, prove useful to the community, to the State and to the Nation, and bring credit and honor to himself and to his posterity.

A man of high sense of honor, character and integrity, Mr. Henry early in life established himself in the confidence of the people, and, being a man of the people, grew in popularity, and as the years passed forged his way to the front, becoming one of the leading factors in business in the great manufacturing center of Rockville. The store in which he started business for himself was on West Main street, Rockville, and he has been active in business life ever since. He has been prominent in founding and promoting several of the financial institutions of the city; was one of the organizers of the People's Savings Bank, in 1870, and for thirty years its managing officer; was one of the promoters of the First National Bank, and is still one of its directors. Mr. Henry from young manhood has been untiring in his efforts to advance the business interests of Rockville and the welfare of its citizens, and has done much to promote the growth of the city. A conspicuous moment to his enterprise and public spirit is the large and elegant Henry block and Opera House, one of the finest business blocks of the city. He is the owner of a fine stock farm at Spring Hill, located about one and one-half miles south of Rockville, on which is a herd of Jersey Cattle, representing many of the most valuable strains of Jersey blood.

Mr. Henry early became interested in public affairs. He cast his first presidential vote for Abraham Lincoln, and has ever since been an active and zealous Republican. A man of tact, ability and integrity, he was soon taken up by his fellow citizens, who have many times honored him by election to public trusts of high calling and responsibility, and he in turn has as often reflected credit and honor on his community and State by the admirable manner in which the duties of those trusts have been discharged. For fifteen years Mr. Henry served as a trial justice of Rockville. In 1882 he was elected to the State Legislature, and in 1887-88 he represented the Twenty-third district in the State Senate. In 1888 he was a delegate-at-large to the Republican national convention at Chicago that nominated for the Presidency Hon. Benjamin Harrison, of Indiana. The same year Mr. Henry was nominated and elected State treasurer. As an evidence of the admirable manner in which he conducted this important branch of the State service we quote from an editorial of the Hartford Courant written at the close of his first term:

"His administration of the treasury has been admirable, and he has had to work under the disadvantage of new laws and new circumstances. He has so managed these that he has been able to get rid of the State tax altogether, and, with no added burden on the people, to save them say half a million dollars a year in direct taxes. He is a useful part of the machinery of taxation established by the last Legislature, and by reason of his experience can carry on the department at this time better than an equally good man could to whom the position was new. Hence for business reasons his renomination seems advisable, to say nothing of his personal strength as a candidate on the ticket; the convention will nominate a strong and successful ticket, and do it without discord or dissension; and if Mr. Henry is renominated for treasurer the State will be sure of a capable and economical management of its finances for the next two years."

Suffice it to say that Mr. Henry was re-nominated and re-elected, and that he instituted a number of reforms in the workings of the department, which were of benefit. In 1892 Treasurer Henry was nominated by his party for Congressman from the first district, but met defeat in the election which followed, as did the national ticket and other Republican Congressional candidates in Connecticut in the Democratic landslide of that year. In referring to the nomination of Mr. Henry, a Connecticut paper said:

"The Republican Congressional Convention on Saturday merely responded to popular feeling and expectation in the party when it nominated E. Stevens Henry by acclamation. His unquestioned fitness for the place and his personal popularity make him as strong a candidate as could be elected, and he has the advantage of an exceptional record as treasurer of the State for the past four years. In that time the State obligations were due, on which there was an option of payment, and the revenues have been largely increased. In the peculiar complications arising from the failure of the Democratic Senate to co-operate in electing State officers, Mr. Henry's firmness and sound judgment have been repeatedly exemplified, and have strengthened the claim of the confidence of the people which he had established during a long course of service in both branches of the Legislature, and in the several financial institutions with which he has been connected. No better or stronger candidate can be found in either party, and with his record victory should be assured."

In 1890 Rockville adopted a city charter. Mr. Henry was elected the city's third mayor, and served as such in 1894 and 1895. In 1894 he was the successful candidate of the Republican party for Congress from the first Congressional district, and was elected by a plurality of 5,207 in the district, leading the ticket by over 700. Again in 1896 he was returned to that body, receiving at the election a plurality of 16,764. In 1898, 1900 and 1902 Mr. Henry was unanimously re-nominated and elected to the Fifty-fifth, Fifty-seventh and Fifty-Eighth Congresses, uniformly receiving large majorities.

Mr. Henry has been a member of the House committee on Agriculture during his entire term of service, being, next to the chairman, the ranking member. In that capacity he introduced and reported the Oleomargarine and Renovated Butter Law, known as the Henry Bill, and after a hotly contested struggle consuming seven full legislative days in the House of Representatives and several days in the Senate, this bill was enacted into law, receiving President Roosevelt's signature May 9, 1902.

Mr. Henry has been influential in securing the appropriation for irrigation, forestry, soil survey and other scientific work under the auspices of the Department of Agriculture. He has been much interested in the introduction and extension of shade grown tobacco in the Connecticut valley. He has at all times given close attention to all questions of public interest. He has done excellent service both in the House and out of it, and is recognized as a stalwart Republican and one of the hard working members of Congress. He is sound on all issues of the day, is a protective tariff man, and maintains that the United States should hold to the gold standard and an honest dollar.

Mr. Henry's popularity is not a matter of surprise to those who have had opportunity of knowing how earnest and conscientious a worker he is in the interests of his constituency. All matters, large or small, receive his careful attention, and the affairs of the large manufacturing concern are given no precedence over the claim of the humblest soldier, fair treatment to all being one of Mr. Henry's mottoes. Unostentatious in bearing, always approachable, it is doubtful if Connecticut has a more generally popular representative than E. S. Henry. In his private life he is likewise a man of irreproachable character, kind sympathies and liberal views. He is a member of the Connecticut Society Sons of the American Revolution, of the Connecticut Historical Society and of the Masonic Fraternity, affiliating with Fayette Lodge, F. & A. M. and Adoniram Chapter and Council.

On Feb. 11, 1860, Mr. Henry was married to Miss Lucina E. Dewey, who was born Jan. 26, 1832 at Lebanon, Conn., daughter of Silas and Sally Ann Palmer (Brown) Dewey. To them was born in 1868 a daughter, Maude, who died in 1875. They have an adopted daughter, Lenore, a niece of Mr. Henry, daughter of E. B. and Frances M. (Dewey) Andrew. She is a member of Sabra Trumbull Chapter D. A. R., of Rockville.

Mrs. Lucina E. (Dewey) Henry is a descendant in the eighth generation from Thomas Dewey, who immigrated to America from Sandwich, Kent, England, as one of the early settlers under Gov. Winthrop and Rev. John Warham, and was at Dorchester, Mass., as early as 1633. The line of Mrs. Henry descent is through Josiah, of Northampton and Westfield; Josiah (2), a farmer of Westfield until about 1696, then one of the first settlers of Lebanon; Hon. Asahel, surveyor and legislator of Lebanon; and Silas Dewey. The latter was born in 1801 at Lebanon, married in 1828 at Groton, Conn. Sally Ann Brown, daughter of David Palmer and Fanny Eldredge (Chadwick) Palmer. He died at Lebanon in 1836, and his widow, who was born

Eugene L. Boon

1807, at Groton, Conn., passed away in 1893 at Rockville, aged eighty-six. Admiral George Dewey, the hero of Manila Bay, is a descendant of Josiah, son of Thomas Dewey, the emigrant.

GEN. EUGENE STOWELL BOSS is widely known in Willimantic, Windham county, and throughout the State as an upright, able and honorable citizen, and his personal acquaintance includes many prominent characters in Connecticut and New England. His long connection with the manufacturing business of Willimantic and his activity in political matters have given him a wide circle of contact with the life and thought of the day, and the more intimately he is known the more impressive become his high standards, integrity and ability.

General Boss is a Willimantic product in the truest sense, and with nearly forty-five years' connection with the leading industry of the city, the Willimantic Linen Co., he has become prominent in that line throughout New England.

Eugene Stowell Boss was born on Bridge street, in Willimantic, Jan. 13, 1842. He received his schooling in his native town, where he attended in what was known as the Upper District. In the summer of 1858 was begun his connection with the Willimantic Linen Co., which had been established a few years previous. His first work was in the finishing department, and ever since that time, with the exception of the five years in which he was employed in the service of the same company in New York, his residence has been in Willimantic. Positions of great responsibility have been filled by him in every department of this extensive concern, and for some twenty years he has been resident agent of the company, at the same time filling other and responsible positions.

In politics Gen. Boss is a Republican, and for years has taken a leading part in the affairs of that party in the State. In 1877 he represented the town of Windham in the General Assembly, and again in 1891; in 1882 and 1883 he was a member of the State Senate; in 1880 he cast a vote for Gen. Jarfield as president, having been elected one of the Presidential Electors of Connecticut; more recently he was Commissary General of the State, on the staff of Gov. Morgan P. Bulkeley; and he was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1902. Gen. Boss was the first president of the Citizens' Gas Light Co., of Willimantic, and for some time was president of the Willimantic Electric Light Co. For several years he was president of the Willimantic Fair Association; since 1884 has been the president of the Hall & Bill Printing Co.; he is a director in the American Thread Co.; and a member of the advisory board and manager of the Willimantic Mills, also being secretary and treasurer of the National Thread Co. and the Glasgow Thread Company. Fraternally Gen. Boss is a Mason, being affiliated with Eastern Star Lodge,

No. 44, F. & A. M., at Willimantic, where he is known as a genial and hospitable gentleman, of a strong and positive nature, "who never forgets his friends, or his enemies."

On May 17, 1866, in New Haven, Conn., Mr. Boss was married to Miss Arabella Alpaugh, who was born in Little York, N. J., Dec. 15, 1842, a daughter of George V. and Jane (Duckworth) Alpaugh. Four children blessed this union, as follows: Austin Dunham married Fanny Locke Hathaway, and lives in Willimantic; Estella A. died in childhood; Helen is at home; and Harry E. died at the age of sixteen years.

WADSWORTH. The Wadsworth family, of Ellington, Tolland county, in times past was represented by successful and prominent citizens, but all of the name have passed from the locality with one exception, Mrs. Elizabeth Barber, the widow of the late Edward Wolcott Barber.

The first Wadsworth who located in Ellington was Captain Ichabod Wadsworth, who descended from (I) Christopher Wadsworth, whom, it is supposed, landed at Duxbury, Mass., Sept. 15, 1632, and who passed his whole after life in that town. His position was one of prominence, with other veteran pilgrims, Miles Standish, Elder Brewster and John Alden; he was the first constable of the town and repeatedly held the office of deputy, selectman and surveyor. His will is dated July 31, 1677. His wife was named Grace, and they had these children: Joseph and John, who died in Duxbury; Capt. Samuel, who removed to Milton and was killed while fighting the Indians; and Mary.

(II) John Wadsworth, of Duxbury, was born in 1638 and died in 1700, on the old homestead of his father, Christopher; for many years he was a deacon in the church, and married Abigail Andrews in 1667, rearing these children: Mary, Abigail, John, Christopher, Ichabod, Isaac, Lydia, Sarah, Grace, Hopestill and Mercy. (III) John, son of John, was born in 1671 and died in 1750; he first married Mercy Wiswell in 1704, who died in 1716, at the age of thirty-six, and then married Mary Verdier in 1718, the children resulting being John, Uriah, Dorothy, Ichabod, Peleg and Mary. (IV) Ichabod Wadsworth was born in Duxbury in 1712, and died in 1771, and from his marriage with Annie Hart were born these children: Rhoda, Laura, Ichabod, Luke, Alpheus, Selah and Anna.

(V) Captain Ichabod Wadsworth was born May 20, 1741, and came to Ellington when a mere boy, and according to the custom of the time was "put out" to a Mr. John Bingham, until he was sixteen years old, and earned his first shilling by selling his hair. When his period of service had expired he enlisted in the army in the war of 1755 and took part in the expedition to Cuba in 1762 and in the closing events of the French war, and although but twenty years old when that war ended, was a veteran soldier. Those were the days when a soldier's life left his physical and moral being uninjured, the hardships and constant dangers permitting little licentiousness to gain a foothold in the camps, and Capt. Wadsworth was a worthy husband for the bride he married Nov. 23, 1770, Miss Chloe Webster, the adopted daughter of David Drake, of Windsor. By this marriage he came into possession of forty acres of land in the north part of Ellington, but in 1771 he lost his wife and was left with one child, David Drake.

By this time Captain Wadsworth possessed sufficient standing to be welcomed as a son-in-law into the family of Deacon Porter, and for his second wife he chose Lydia, a daughter of Deacon Porter, born July 16, 1744, who died Feb. 21, 1837. Having no children of her own, the new wife took upon herself the care of little David, and bestowed upon him all the love and kindness of a real mother. She survived her husband many years, and was ninety-three at the time of her death. In 1776 Mr. Wadsworth, as orderly sergeant of the military company, went with it to New York, where his former experience in camp and field duties and in taking care of the sick elevated him so highly in the estimation of his comrades that on the resignation of the captain, directly after, he was promoted over the subalterns to the command of the company. As a captain he was several times in actual service and was one of the three or four chief veterans of the town.

Capt. Wadsworth was extremely well qualified to cut a path for himself through the world, had by this time acquired a large property, 525 acres of land in the north part of town, and for many years was one of the leading farmers of the town. Punctual in attending church on Sunday, he used to ride in a superior style that indicated the wealthy farmer, in a large, heavy, two-horse wagon, set strong and stiff upon the axles, the sides built like a cart and painted red, with movable end boards and unpainted side boards. In this springless conveyance the men were usually seated upon a board, while the women were accommodated with chairs. In those days of comparative simplicity, Capt. Wadsworth occasionally attended meeting with his large, three-cornered old-fashioned military hat on his head, no one dreaming of this being in any way undevotional. The death of this most worthy ancestor occurred March 31, 1815, and his tombstone stands in the cemetery at Ellington, and bears these lines:

Stop, reader, spend a mournful tear
O'er the dust that slumbers here,
And, while you read the fate of me,
Think on the glass that runs for thee.

The old Wadsworth homestead still stands on the Somers road, in Ellington, where it was erected by Captain Wadsworth in 1783, and where he kept a hotel for many years.

(VI) David Drake Wadsworth, the only child of Captain Ichabod Wadsworth, was born in Ellington, Nov. 7, 1770, inherited his father's property and lived the quiet life of a farmer, successful and respected; he added considerably to his original possessions, leaving at his death, March 21, 1825, an estate of 525 acres. He had been long a pronounced Whig. On Aug. 3, 1792, he married Esther Andrews, who was born Aug. 9, 1773, and died Jan. 11, 1857. She was a native of Ellington; a daughter of Samuel and Esther (Cone) Andrews; the Cones being one of the old families of East Haddam, Conn. Samuel Andrews was a native of what is now Wallingford, Conn., and one of his sons was Rev. William Andrews, a noted Congregational minister. The children born to David D. Wadsworth and his wife were ten in number. Chloe, born Feb. 3, 1793, married Jonathan Carpenter, who went to Columbus, N. Y., where they kept a hotel for a few years and later removed to Windsorville, Conn., where he followed farming. Chloe was a natural poetess, very witty and bright, and in her youth taught school. Both she and her husband died and are buried in Windsorville. Lydia, born in April, 1794, married Enos Lyman and resided in Holyoke, Mass., where he ran a ferry boat; both of them died in Northampton, Mass. Laura married George Lyman, a brother of Enos, and they lived and died at Hadley, Mass. Esther, born May 23, 1799, married Asa Phillips, a farmer of Somers, Conn., July 6, 1823; she died there Jan. 3, 1867, and he Sept. 25, 1860. David Drake, born May 2, 1798, died May 10. John, born Oct. 10, 1803, died Aug. 12, 1835. David, born in 1804, died Oct. 14, 1829. Cordelia, born in May, 1809, married in middle life Philo Porter, who early in life was engaged in the coasting trade between Hartford and Portland, Me., and later was a farmer in Ellington; both died in South Windsor, Conn. Samuel Andrews, born in May, 1811, married Jane Ormsby, of Hampton, Conn., where he was a jeweler and spectacle manufacturer, living in various places; he finally died of typhoid fever in Bellevue hospital in New York City, and was buried in Springfield, Mass. Claudius Buchanan, born May 4, 1816, married Mary M. Alvord, of Barkhamstead, Conn. He followed an agricultural life in Ellington, where he died suddenly March 21, 1893, of pneumonia.

(VII) John Wadsworth, of the above family, was born on the homestead and was reared as a farmer boy of the period. He inherited a part of his father's farm, and assisted his mother in the management of the estate; when he married he brought his bride to reside at the homestead. Purchasing the interest of his brother Samuel and a part of the interest of his brother David, he was in a way to become a very successful farmer and a man of large means when death cut short his career, Aug. 12, 1835. His widow brought up the children and when the sons became older they purchased the interests in the farm belonging to the remaining heirs and it was successfully conducted by the widow and her children. She remained on the farm until 1885, the business being managed by her son David; till active and well preserved, she spent her last years with her daughter, Mrs. J. H. Gardner, in Putnam, Conn., where she died Aug. 23, 1897, at the age of ninety-three, and was buried in Ellington. John Wadsworth was a Whig, and held the position of highway surveyor for several years and was also a member of the local militia.

John Wadsworth married, April 24, 1828, Mary Varner, who was born Aug. 13, 1804, in Ellington, daughter of Capt. Nathaniel and Martha (Gifford) Warner, who were married June 14, 1796. The children of John Wadsworth and his wife were our in number. Elizabeth was born Feb. 5, 1829. David, born April 21, 1830, married Harriet E. Bond, Dec. 7, 1882, and died Jan. 13, 1896, in Ellington, on the homestead, where he was a farmer; his widow now resides in Chicopee, Mass. Mary, born June 6, 1831, is the widow of John Horace Gardner (see sketch elsewhere), born Nov. 25, 1836, who was a very successful dry-goods merchant, resident of the Putnam Savings Bank at Putnam, Conn., and one of the leading men; he died there Nov. 10, 1896. Philo, born Oct. 25, 1832, who died July 28, 1879, was a farmer on the old homestead with his brother David. Philo Wadsworth was a man of fine physique, of ready wit and was as agreeable in manner as he was handsome in person.

(VIII) Elizabeth Wadsworth, of the above family, was married April 13, 1853, in Somers, Conn., to Edward Wolcott Barber, who was born June 20, 1821, a native of South Windsor, a son of Harvey and Hannah (Stiles) Barber, and a great-grandson of Noah Barber, who was in the Revolutionary war and served with Ichabod Wadsworth.

Noah Barber was one of the famous party of patriots who threw the tea into Boston Harbor. It related that when they returned they passed the residence of a judge of Boston, who stuck his head out of the window and said, "Well, boys, you will have to settle to-morrow for your Indian caper." Young Barber replied, "We will settle with you, quire, if you will come out here." The squire declined the invitation. For many years Mrs. Elizabeth Barber had the old gun that was carried by Noah Barber at Quebec, an heirloom that came to her by her husband's will. Several years since Mrs. Barber sent this gun to her husband's cousin, Charles Harrison Barber, of Kent, Ohio, a veteran of the civil war, who served in the 25th C. V. I., and so lost an arm and leg while in the service. He greatly appreciates the historic value of the old gun.

The Barber family have served well their country; Edward Parsons Barber, son of the above, was a soldier in the Cuban war and later the Philippine Islands, and returning safely now holds an important and responsible position with the Boston parties, being in charge of vested interests in Yucatan. Another son, Arthur Osborn Barber, is an applicant for a cadetship at Annapolis, Maryland.

EDWARD WOLCOTT BARBER was a successful farmer and resided on what is known as Barber Hill, in South Windsor, near the East Windsor line. In 1869 he removed to Ellington and purchased the farm now occupied by his widow, where he followed such farming as his delicate health would permit. Being of ample means, he could do as he liked, and resided there until his death, April 22, 1882. He was buried in Ellington. In politics he was in sympathy with the Republican party and held many minor offices. Mr. Barber was a descendant from Henry Wolcott on his grandmother's side, one of the first settlers at Windsor, Conn., and a prominent and influential man in his day.

The first marriage of Mr. Barber took place May 5, 1847, to Sarah D. Beasley, who was born Sept. 19, 1827, and died Sept. 21, 1851, a daughter of John and Susan (Clough) Beasley, and the children of this union were: Charles E., born March 13, 1848, who married Jennie L. Palmer, and died Oct. 4, 1883, at Danville, Vt.; and Sarah M., born Jan. 10, 1851, who married John M. Daggett, and lives in Mansfield, Conn. The children of the second marriage are: a daughter who was born and died June 6, 1859; and Fannie Elizabeth, born March 17, 1865, who resides with her mother, and is a lady of great artistic ability.

Mrs. Barber is a very intelligent and cultured lady, and her remarkable memory makes her a delightful conversationalist. She has always taken a great interest in genealogy and often is able to assist her friends and other old residents of Ellington with information concerning their relatives of former days. As a business woman she possesses much ability and is not only a lady who enjoys the esteem and affection of her neighbors, but is considered one of the most substantial residents of Ellington.

HORMISDAS DION, a self-made man in the fullest sense of the word, is known far and wide as one of the best business men and most successful merchants of Willimantic, Windham county. The position which he holds in the commercial and mercantile circles of that city reflects great credit upon him when it is remembered that he could speak but little English at the age of eighteen years, and the customs and ways of the United States business people were an unknown world to him at that time of his life. There have been no wealthy and influential friends to push him forward; his advance has been made by his tact and energy, so that today he is one of the leading French people of his city.

Hormisdas Dion was born Feb. 14, 1855, in St. Pie, Quebec, Canada, a son of Anthony and Louise (Duclos) Dion, and a grandson of Anthony Dion, who was born in Canada, but who spent about twenty-five years in Detroit, then returning to Canada, where he died at Actonvale, at the age of ninety-two years.

Anthony Dion, the father of the Willimantic merchant, was a farmer in Canada, where he died at the age of seventy-five years. His wife, Louise (Duclos) Dion, died at the age of sixty-three, and both were buried at St. Pie, Canada. Anthony Dion was thrice wedded. His first wife became the mother of eight children, and his second of six, but to the third union no children were born. Hormisdas was born of the second marriage. He and two brothers are all the family who ever came to Connecticut. Anthony lives in Willimantic; and Philias is a merchant of Taftville, Connecticut.

Hormisdas Dion was reared in his native town, where he attended the public schools, and then took a course in the commercial school of the College of St. Cesaire. After this he left Canada, and came to Taftville, Conn., where his parents had previously located. After living in that place some years they went back to Canada, leaving him at his employment in the Taftville mill store, where he had his first mercantile experience. He began with a very limited command of the English tongue, yet his work brought him into contact with three or four different nationalities. In the night school at Taftville he taught French, and attended the day school to learn English. Ambitious, energetic, he was eager to learn, for his capital in business was his push and character. Studying and observing closely the life around him, he presently became quite competent, and soon came to be regarded as one of the efficient men of the force. For twelve years he was employed in Taftville, and during that time saved a considerable portion of his earnings.

In 1881 Mr. Dion and his brother-in-law, Henry Buteau, engaged in the bakery business in Willimantic, under the firm name of Buteau & Dion, the two continuing together for two years, when Mr. Dion became sole proprietor of the business, and continues it to the present time. In 1887 Mr. Dion bought the land on Ash street, near Main street, where his business is now located, and where he has erected every building required for his extensive and growing trade. In addition to the bakery proper, Mr. Dion deals in hay, straw, flour, feed, coal and wood, and enjoys an extensive patronage in these various lines.

On July 12, 1875, Hormisdas Dion was married in Baltic, Conn., to Miss Delia Bourque, a native of Upton, Quebec, where she was born Feb. 20, 1855. When her parents, Julian Bourque and wife, came to Baltic Delia was five years old, and there she was reared. To Mr. and Mrs. Dion were born: Dora, born June 18, 1884; Carrie, born June 18, 1887; Alma, born May 7, 1892; Roderick, born Nov. 1, 1893; and Louise, who has passed away.

Mr. Dion is a Democrat, and at the present writing is one of the assessors of the town of Windham, and alderman of the Third Ward of Willimantic. While taking a proper interest in local politics, he has devoted himself to his business and his prosperity shows the wisdom of his course. Socially he belongs to the Knights of Columbus, the Foresters of America, and St. Jean's Baptiste Society. In religion he is a Roman Catholic and belongs to St. Joseph's Church. Of the Willimantic Board of Trade he is an active member as he is of the Merchants' Exchange. Mr. Dion owns a fine large tenement on Ash street, in addition to the building where he lives and does business. Personally he is a quiet and courteous gentleman, and has many friends, not only among his own people, but in the city generally. Every detail of his business is known to him, as he has built it up from the most modest foundation by his industry and application.

JOHN LATHROP HUNTER, late State's Attorney for Windham county and an attorney of law of high standing, whose sudden death on April 9, 1903, was a severe shock to the community that had known and esteemed him so long, was born at Gardiner, Maine, March 13, 1834.

The Hunter family has long been represented in Maine, Mr. Hunter's forebears being among the early settlers of that State. The Stones, his maternal ancestors, were early settlers in the Cape Cod country, and were connected with many of the best families of Massachusetts, among them being the Lawrences. Mrs. Mary Butler, the great-grandmother of John L. Hunter, was a Lawrence, and her people lived in Falmouth, Mass.; she lived to be one hundred years and six months old.

The first of the Hunter family of whom record can now be found was Adam Hunter, who is supposed to have been of Scotch lineage. In 1718 he bought two lots of one hundred acres each in Topsham, Maine, then a part of Massachusetts, and settled there. He became the owner of other lands and of an interest in a sawmill, and was considered the wealthiest man and had the best house in the town. He was a captain in the Indian wars, and was selectman of the town in 1766. His wife, Mary Lithgow, was of Irish descent, and came to this country when ten years old. He died Feb. 27, 1776.

Of the nine children of Adam and Mary Hunter, the second, being the eldest son, James, was born April 15, 1735—the first white man born in the town. He was selectman in 1767-8, 1773 and 1779. He was re-elected in 1780, but refused to serve. He was one of the committee appointed in 1781 to procure seven men to serve for the town in the Revolutionary army. He held the rank of Major in the army, and was promoted to Colonel near the close of the struggle. He died in February, 1809, near the end of his seventy-fourth year, and a monument in Topsham testifies to the honor in which he was held. His wife, Abigail, was a daughter of Thomas Williams, who left England Feb. 18, 1717, "when gooseberries were in bloom," and arrived at Boston, April 17th, following, "when snow was very deep." Mr. Williams was a very highly educated man, taught Latin for a time in Boston, and settled down to the practice of medicine in what is now Bath, Maine.

James Hunter, son of Col. James Hunter, was born in Topsham, Maine, before it was set off from Massachusetts, and married Dorcas Patten, of a distinguished Maine family. They had eight children.

John Patten Hunter, son of James, was born in Maine. He served in the war of 1812, being stationed at Edgecomb, Maine. He was an extensive lumberman and cut timber in the northern part of the State, which was run down the Kennebec river to Gardiner, where it was worked up into lumber. Capt. Hunter lived to be seventy-nine years of age, dying in March, 1875. He married Mary Averill Stone, who was born March 6, 1802, in Maine, daughter of Col. John Stone who was known as one of the pioneer heroes of Maine. He took a prominent part in temperance work. By trade he was a blacksmith and made about all the axes used in his region. Mrs. Mary Averill Hunter died when she was fifty years of age. Both she and her husband were buried at Gardiner, Maine. Capt. Hunter was a Whig in early life, but later became a Democrat, and was an influential man in all political matters. In religion he belonged to the Christ (Episcopal) Church, at Gardiner, and served as warden under the pastorate of George Burgess, an honored bishop of that denomination. Capt. Hunter was a Free Mason and prominent in that fraternity. He was father of the following family:

(1) Mary married Capt. J. Thatcher Harvard, of Richmond, Maine, and is the mother of Frederick T., an attorney in Detroit, and Jane Isabella, at home. (2) Ellen Dorcas is unmarried, and lives in Richmond, Maine. (3) John Lathrop was the third, and his career furnishes the theme of this article. (4) Edward G. died in infancy. (5) Edward entered the United States Military Academy at West Point, July 1, 1860, graduating June 23, 1865, was appointed as second lieutenant of the 2d Infantry, and promoted to first lieutenant the same day. Joining his regiment in September, 1865, he was in Richmond, Va., until the following March. Mr. Hunter continued in the service a number of years, and made an honorable record for great energy, zeal, ability and devotion to duty, remaining in the army until Dec. 10, 1888, when he resigned his commission as captain in the First Cavalry, only to accept a commission as Major and an appointment as Judge Advocate in the United States Army. From 1889 to 1895 he was on duty as Judge Advocate of the Division of the Pacific, and Department of California. In January, 1895, he was made a Lieutenant-Colonel, and was stationed at St. Paul, Minn., as Judge Advocate of the Department of Dakota. During the Spanish-American war, Col. Hunter served as Judge Advocate and Mustering Officer for Gen. Brooke, at Chickamauga Park, Ga., and accompanied that officer to Porto Rico, where for a time he was in charge of civil affairs in Guayama, in 1898. His services as secretary and recorder of the Commission for the Evacuation of Porto Rico and the adjacent islands by the Spanish, were important, and he was retained as Judge Advocate of the Department of Porto Rico until Oct. 4, 1898. The first of the following year Col. Hunter returned to St. Paul, where he was Judge Advocate of the Department of Dakota, and performed the duties of Adjutant General from November, 1899, to 1901. In that year he was appointed Colonel and was Judge Advocate, Department of the East, and stationed at Governor's Island. Col. Hunter belongs to the Bar of the State of California, and has been admitted to practice before the United States Circuit Court, as well as the District Court, for the State of Washington. He married Caroline Clay Hoff, a daughter of Alex Henry Hoff, a surgeon in the United States army. Mrs. Hunter is a sister of Assistant Surgeon-General John Van Rensselaer Hoff, who is now in Washington, D. C. To Col. and Mrs. Hunter were born: Henry Hoff, an attorney of Willimantic; Jane Richards; John Saunders. (6) Georgiana married James McKinzie, and died in Canada. (7) Isabelle Tracy married Rev. Louis C. Wurtele, of Actonvale, Canada, and is the mother of two sons, Arthur, who is an Episcopal clergyman, following in the steps of his father; and John Hunter, now a student in McGill University, at Montreal.

John Lathrop Hunter received his education in Gardiner and Vassalboro, and in Bowdoin College which he entered in 1851, and from which he was graduated in 1855. While attending college he taught school during the winter season, and after leaving Bowdoin he was for a time supervisor of schools in the town of Farmingdale, Maine. To the law, however, Mr. Hunter had turned his eyes as his life work, and for it he was thoroughly prepared, both by his academic training, which was far above the average, and by his three years spent in the office of the Hon. Charles Danforth, LL. D., who afterward became a member of the Supreme Court of Maine, serving on the bench twenty-six years.

Mr. Hunter was admitted to the Bar in 1859, and spent the ensuing year in Boston, in the office of Benjamin F. Cook. At the expiration of this period, Mr. Hunter returned to Gardiner, Maine, and practiced his profession until his removal to Willimantic in 1871. He was distinguished by the possession of literary ability of a high order, and in 1863 he edited the Augusta Age, a long established newspaper then widely read, and of which M. W. Fuller, Chief Justice of the United States, was at one time editor. That gentleman was a member of the Junior class at Bowdoin, when Mr. Hunter became a Freshman.

After the location of Mr. Hunter in Willimantic; he made a reputation as one of the able and reliable lawyers of the State, and the State Reports show that he was one of seventeen attorneys who were before the Supreme Court a greater number of times than all the other members of the State Bar at the time. His legal abilities were a matter of record, and his personal character was beyond reproach. It is said that Mr. Hunter possessed the most extensive and valuable law library in Connecticut, east of the Connecticut river. A staunch Democrat all through his life, Mr. Hunter well sustained his part in the politics of the State, in which he was an enthusiastic and active worker. For many years he served on the State Central committee, and after a short intermission was, at the time of his death, on the second term of his later service on that body. In 1872, and again in 1876 he was a delegate to the National Convention. In 1879 he was a member of the General Assembly, where he served on the Judiciary committee, of which Henry C. Robinson, of Hartford, was chairman. Though he was a Democrat in a Republican body, Mr. Hunter did effective work in making the change from the old to the present form of practice. At home his services were highly valued. For years he was on the school board, and was chairman of the High School Committee. As town attorney and borough attorney he served the community in which he lived intelligently and well.

Mr. Hunter was a gentleman of culture and refinement and was genial and cordial. A member of the Sons of the American Revolution, he took much interest in the early history of this country, and was devoted to patriotic study.

Mr. Hunter was twice married. His first wife, Anna J. McClellan, bore him one daughter, Gertrude McClellan, who is the wife of Merritt McNeil, and has her home in Jacksonville, Fla. Mr. Hunter was married in November, 1882, to Miss Mary Lyon Cheesebrough, who died Oct. 3, 1900. Their child, Berenice, born Dec. 8, 1884, died Aug. 4, 1895. Mrs. Hunter had a distinguished ancestry. Jonathan Trumbull, of Revolutionary fame, and Priscilla Alden were among her progenitors. She was a charter member of Anne Wood Elderkin chapter of the D. A. R., at Willimantic, and was regarded as one of the most estimable women of the city. Mr. Hunter was an active worker in the Episcopal Church, being a member of St. Paul's parish. In his death not only Windham county but the whole State of Connecticut suffered the loss of an able lawyer and of a citizen whose public and private life alike were above reproach.

J. C. HAMMOND, Jr., one of the well-known citizens of Rockville, Tolland county, belongs to an old New England family, and is in the eighth generation from Thomas Hammond, the founder of the family in this country, according to the following line: Thomas, Thomas (2), Isaac, Elijah, Nathaniel, Elijah (2), Joseph C. and Joseph C., Jr.

(I) Thomas Hammond was born in Lavenham, England, and was a descendant of a Hammond who came into the island with William the Conqueror; his name appears on the "Battle Abbey Roll." With the family he settled in Hingham, Mass., in 1636, and in the following March took the freeman's oath. Elizabeth Cason, his wife, was a native of Lavenham. In 1640 they moved to Newtown. The following were his children: Elizabeth, Thomas, Sarah and Nathaniel.

(II) Thomas Hammond (2) was born in 1643, married Elizabeth Stedman in 1662, and died in 1678. Their children were: Elizabeth, Thomas, Isaac, Nathaniel, John and Eleazer.

(III) Isaac Hammond was born in 1668, married Anna Hendricks in 1692, and their children were: Margaret, Isaac, Josiah, Hannah, Jonathan, Esther and Elijah. (IV) Elijah Hammond was born Oct. 7, 1711, in Massachusetts, and in 1730, came to Coventry, Conn., where he married Mary Kingsbury in 1732. Twenty years later they settled in Bolton, where he died in 1800, being the progenitor of the family in Bolton and Vernon. Their children were: Nathaniel; Hannah; Priscilla, wife of Capt. J. Birge, who was killed in the war of the Revolution, and later the wife of Amasa Loomis, of Windsor. Elijah Hammond was a carpenter and joiner, and was one of the committee appointed "Authorized, with power of Agency, to recover and receive the money belonging to the town of Bolton for sale of Western Lands and to divide the same among the schools of the town."

(V) Nathaniel Hammond was born in Coventry in 1733, and when a young man removed to Bolton, Conn., where he settled on a farm and married Dorothy Tucker, who died in 1775. She bore the following children: Jason, Candace, Elijah, Lemuel, Eli, Mary, Allen, Alvin and Calvin; twins, born Dec. 2, 1775. Mrs. Hammond died the twenty-fifth day of the same month, leaving a family of nine young children. Mr. Hammond married Eleanor Olmstead, by whom he had the following family: George, Chester, Anna, Dorothy, Manton, Eleanor and Nathaniel. Mrs. Eleanor Hammond died in 1822, and the husband in 1817.

(VI) Elijah Hammond (2) was born in 1764, and was married in 1787 to Martha Strong, born in 1767, a daughter of Judah and Martha (Alvord) Strong, in the fourth generation of the posterity of John Strong, a son of Elder John Strong. Her line runs through Deacon David, and Judah Strong. Elijah Hammond was a fireman in Vernon, where he died in 1836. His wife died in 1835. They had seven children. (1) Elijah married Esther Griswold, of Manchester, Conn., and died in Vernon. They had the following children: George; Cornelius; Edward Payson; Martha; Esther, who married Dr. Roger Griswold; and Mary, who married Egbert

Abel. (2) Josiah, born in 1793, married Eveline Dart; he was a farmer, and an owner in the woolen mills of Rockville, Conn. (3) Martha, born in 1795, died in 1845, the wife of Josiah Warner. (4) Julius S., born in 1799, married Elizabeth P. Hubbard, and on her death was again married. He went to Illinois, where he lived many years, and then returned to Ellington, where he died. He was father to Webster and Martha. (5) Allen, born in 1801, was the father of A. P. Hammond, and died in 1864. (6) Mary K., born in 1807, died at the home of her brother in Colchester in 1851. (7) Joseph C., born in 1809, was father to Joseph C., the subject of this article.

(VII) Joseph Churchill Hammond was born in Vernon, where he had the schooling of his time, and when he became a young man he taught school. He was reared as a farmer boy, and before he attained his majority went to Colchester, where for a time he was employed at farming, then entered into mercantile pursuits, and after some years became the proprietor of a country store in Colchester. In 1846 he became the agent of the Hayward Rubber Company, recently established in Colchester, and held this place the rest of his life. He died in 1878.

Mr. Hammond was married Sept. 28, 1831, in Colchester, to Miss Abby Joanna Hubbard, born Feb. 20, 1810, the daughter of Daniel and Olive (Foote) Hubbard. Olive Foote was an own cousin to Henry Ward Beecher's mother. Her father, Daniel Hubbard, was a merchant in Colchester, and died in the war of 1812. He left two daughters, Abby Joanna and Elizabeth Perkins, the wife of Julius S. Hammond. Joseph C. Hammond and his wife had the following family: Daniel Hubbard, born Nov. 2, 1832; Samuel H., born Dec. 16, 1835, who died in infancy; Joseph C., Jr., born Dec. 15, 1836; David S., born March 31, 1839, who died in infancy.

Mr. Hammond was a Whig, and in his last years became a Republican, representing Colchester in the General Assembly, and serving as selectman.

(VIII) Joseph C. Hammond, Jr., was born in the town of Colchester, where his life was passed till the age of fifteen years. He attended school at Bacon Academy, and for a time was a pupil of Prof. Hall's boarding school at Ellington, and this was the end of his school days.

In 1851 Mr. Hammond became a clerk in the drug store of Lee & Osgood, at Norwich, remaining with them until 1855, when he spent some time abroad with Capt. E. C. Weeks, a schoolmate of his, and the captain of a clipper ship, "The Quickstep." They sailed from New York to London, accompanied by another brother, and all attended the World's Fair, held that year in Paris.

When Mr. Hammond returned, he secured a position with the N. Hayward Rubber Company, at Providence, R. I., where he served as shipping clerk for two years, when the works were burned and not rebuilt. In 1857 he went to Rockville, and became bookkeeper for a short time in the office of the New England Mill, where was the office of the institution which subsequently became the Savings Bank of Rockville. In 1859 he made his first permanent location in Rockville, and has continued to reside there to the present time. Entering the office of the New England Mill Company, he was bookkeeper until 1877, acting also as treasurer for some years. In connection with these duties he was treasurer for the Rockville Aqueduct Company, holding this office from 1866 to 1893. On the organization of the Rockville Water and Aqueduct Company he became its secretary and treasurer, in which capacity he has served to the present time.

Mr. Hammond invented in 1880 the "King Bee" buckle, extensively used on arctic overshoes, and the Hammond Buckle Company took shape, with Mr. Hammond as its general manager and treasurer. To place this invaluable buckle on the market required much push and energy. His efforts were rewarded by manufacturers taking it up, and it is to-day a staple article. This business was sold in 1893 to the United States Rubber Company. Mr. Hammond is the secretary and treasurer of the Rockville Railway Company, a director of the Rockville National Bank, a director in the Rockville Savings Bank, treasurer and trustee of the Rockville public library and a trustee of the Rockville free reading room. He is also secretary and treasurer of the Rockville Hotel Company, which was incorporated in 1901 with a capital of $40,000.

Mr. Hammond was married Dec. 21, 1859, in Colchester, to Miss Catherine I. Burr, a native of Auburn, N. Y., where she was born in 1841, a daughter of Henry and Lucretia (Isham) Burr. Henry Burr was the treasurer of the Hayward Rubber Company, of Colchester, Conn., where he resided, but acted as its selling agent in Boston. He died in Colchester, where was reared his family of five children, of whom but two are left, Mrs. Hammond and Horace H. Burr, of Suffield, Conn. The two children of Mr. and Mrs. Hammond are William C. and Charles H. William C., born Nov. 25, 1860, in Rockville, is professor of instrumental music in Mount Holyoke College, and is the organist and choirmaster of the Second Congregational Church in Holyoke. From 1876 to 1884 he was organist of the Rockville Second Congregational Church. For a time he was organist in the Pearl Street Church in Hartford. His wife was Frances B. Reed, a daughter of Rev. Dr. E. A. Reed, of Holyoke. Charles H. was born Sept. 16, 1863, and was educated in Rockville, where he is now residing; he is unmarried. When the Hammond Buckle Company was in existence he was connected with it.

Joseph C. Hammond's first presidential vote was cast in 1860 for Abraham Lincoln, and he has continued a Republican. In 1878 he represented Vernon in the General Assembly, where he served on the committee on Humane Institutions.

In 1863 Mr. Hammond purchased the former home of Hon. Dwight Loomis on Elm street, where he has made his home to the present time.

ALLEN LINCOLN was in his lifetime one of the most conspicuous figures in the official, financial and commercial circles of Windham county, and in whatever position he was found his duties were performed with an exactness and fidelity which won for him the lasting esteem of the entire community.

Tradition says that the first settlers of the Lincoln family came from Lincolnshire, England, and located at Hingham and Taunton, Massachusetts.

(II) A son of the Taunton settlers, named Samuel, came to Norwich, Conn., later (it is supposed) removing to Windham. On June 2, 1692, he married Elizabeth Jacobs, and they had the following children: Samuel, Jacob, Thomas, Jonah, Nathaniel (who died in infancy), and Elizabeth.

(III) Samuel Lincoln (2), eldest son of Samuel, was born in Windham Nov. 29, 1693, and on Aug. 23, 1723, was married to Ruth Huntington. Their children were: Samuel, John, Nathaniel (who lived to be one hundred and five years and five months old), Joseph, Eleazer and David.

(IV) John Lincoln, son of Samuel (2), was born July 28, 1726, and by his first wife, Rebecca, had two children, both of whom died in infancy. On May 30, 1758, for his second wife, he wedded Mrs. Annie Stowell, and the children born of this union were: Annie, Eleazer, Jonah and Jerusha, twins, and Olive. John Lincoln died June 7, 1810.

(V) Jonah Lincoln, son of John, was born Nov. 15, 1760. For many years, in addition to farming on an extensive scale, he was engaged in the woolen manufacturing business at North Windham. One of the products of his mill was the satinnet used on the uniforms during the Revolutionary war, and they also manufactured felt for paper machines. At that time the business was quite profitable, but after the war the reaction came, and through the failure of their commission merchants they lost considerable money. For a number of years his sons were associated with him, but the business was finally taken by his son Stowell. Jonah Lincoln devoted the latter years of his life to farming, and at the time of his death was quite well-to-do. Politically he was a John Quincy Adams Democrat, and took an active part in town affairs, holding many offices of trust. He was a representative for many terms, and for a long time was judge of probate for what are now the towns of Hampton, Windham and Chaplin. At North Windham he was active in organizing the Christian Church, and he donated the land for the burying-ground at that place. He died May 14, 1845, and was buried at North Windham. On May 1, 1783, he wedded Lucy Webb, who was born May 31, 1763, and who died July 23, 1846, aged eighty-three years. Their children were: James, born May 31, 1784, married Asenath Flint; Dan is mentioned below; Stowell, born Oct. 28, 1788, who was for many years engaged in the manufacturing business at North Windham, and was a captain in the local artillery, married Maria Welch, and died March 29, 1870; John, born Feb. 17, 1791, married Millany Huntington, and was a farmer in Berks county, Pa., where he died; Ralph, born Dec. 22, 1792, married Almira Trumbull, was a manufacturer at North Windham, and died June 24, 1876; Elisha, born Jan. 12, 1795, married Eliza Aplin, was a farmer in Berks county, Pa., then in Ohio, and finally in Van Buren, Ark., where he died (one of his sons is a prominent wholesale druggist in Little Rock, Ark.); Lucy, born July 11, 1797, married Benjamin Perry, a carpenter; Marcia, born Nov. 23, 1799, married Luther Burnham, a farmer, who resided in Hampton and finally in North Windham, where he died; Albert, born Sept. 9, 1802, graduated at West Point, and while on his way to Fort St. Anthony (now Minneapolis), Minn., was taken sick and died Oct. 13, 1822, at St. Louis, Mo.; and Burr, born Oct. 2, 1804, married Elmira Wood, was a cloth dresser by trade, and died Aug. 9, 1850.

(VI) Dan Lincoln, son of Jonah, was born July 27, 1786, and died Dec. 31, 1864, aged seventy-eight. In early manhood he entered his father's mill at North Windham, became an expert clothier and later partner with his brother Stowell. In middle life he bought the Tucker farm, just over the line in Chaplin, and built thereon the clover mill and the mill pond still remaining, thence removing to a farm in Scotland, and in old age returning to the Burr Lincoln place (now William Sibley's residence), in North Windham, where he died. For many years he was captain of the militia, and widely known as "Capt. Dan;" was selectman in both Windham and Chaplin; and was highly esteemed as a counselor. On Feb. 6, 1812, he married Mahetabel Flint, of North Windham (born Nov. 3, 1787, died Sept. 3, 1875), and to them were born children as follows: Amanda (born Nov. 10, 1812, died Jan. 12, 1890) married Edwin E. Burnham, of Windham, later a prominent merchant and real-estate dealer in Willimantic. Mason (born March 26, 1816) followed the blacksmith's trade for many years at North Windham, later acquired a competence and removed to Willimantic and became interested in real estate and banking, and died July 10, 1889. Allen, whose career is outlined below. Albert, born Sept. 15, 1819, followed blacksmithing until the outbreak of the Civil war, enlisted and served until disabled, returned and engaged in farming and died in Coventry, Jan. 14, 1885. Jared W., born Sept. 8, 1823, now living in Chaplin in his eightieth year, like his brother Allen taught school in early manhood, and then engaged in farming in Windham and Scotland; in 1857 he bought out Allen's store in Chaplin, was appointed postmaster by Abraham Lincoln after Allen's reremoval to Willimantic, and except for two brief Democratic interruptions remained postmaster of Chaplin until he retired from the store and was succeeded by his son, Edgar S. Lincoln; he was chosen town clerk and treasurer in 1863, and still holds those offices; represented Chaplin in the General Assembly of 1862; is clerk and treasurer of the Congregational Church and Society, and highly respected. Three other children of Dan and Mahetabel, Earle, Jonah and Dan, Jr., died in infancy.

(VII) Allen Lincoln, son of Dan and Mahetabel, was born in the north end of the town of Windham, Oct. 16, 1817. He was reared to farming pursuits, and his education was acquired in the district schools. In 1831 his parents removed to the Tucker farm, over the line in the town of Chaplin. As they were in poor circumstances, young Allen was "bound out," and in after years, used to recall his experiences, and the small amount of play that fell to his lot. His time at school was well spent, and he early found himself competent to teach, taking charge of a school while yet in his youth. When he attained his majority he purchased the Tucker farm, where he had lived as a boy, going in debt for the entire amount, but as he was full of push and energy he succeeded. However, this did not occupy his entire time. When a young man he bought wool through Ohio, then the Far West, and sold woolen goods in the same section. He met with varied success, and twice before he was thirty-five years old had lost all he had.

In 1853 Mr. Lincoln removed to Chaplin village and opened a country store. About four years from this time he came to Willimantic, and opened a country store in what was then the principal part of the village (the corner of Bridge and Main streets), in the building occupied in after years by tenants. He retained the Chaplin store meanwhile, but finally he sold that out to his brother, Jared W. Lincoln, and cast his lot with the growing village of Willimantic, removing his family there in 1864. Associating himself with I. Lester Eaton, also of Chaplin, he opened a general store in the old "Brainard House," and carried on a business there until in company with E. E. Burnham and J. G. Keigwin, he built the Union block, and removed to the store in after years occupied by John M. Alpaugh, his son-in-law, to whom he finally sold out. After removing from Chaplin he bought the so-called Howes property, on Union street, and commenced building up the village by opening up Temple, Valley and Center streets, and building the brick houses on the east named. For a long time he was in company with E. E. Burnham in the real-estate business, in which they operated largely. In 1869 Mr. Lincoln purchased the Bassett block, and soon after a large tract of land on Prospect Hill. In 1876 he formed a partnership with E. A. Buck and E. M. Durkee in the conduct of a flour and grain business, but the firm was dissolved in 1879. Soon afterward he took his only son, Allen B., in company, and they carried on a flour business under the firm name of A. Lincoln & Son until Mr. Lincoln's death.

Mr. Lincoln was through his whole career a man much interested in public affairs, and was elected to many offices of trust, which he filled with fidelity and ability. In Chaplin he held the offices of postmaster and town clerk, and served in the Legislature one year (1855). He served Windham in the capacity of selectman, town clerk (for seventeen years) and treasurer, judge of probate, justice of the peace, and also acted in other positions. He was one of the commissioners to establish the first system of water works for fire protection in Willimantic. He was especially active in borough affairs and was looked upon as a good counselor. For many years he was one of the directors of the Willimantic Savings Institute, and for a period was president of the Trust Company in Willimantic. Politically Mr. Lincoln was born and bred a Democrat, but in 1856 he became a Free-Soiler and was one of the first to go over to the Republican party which was formed at that time. In his religious views he was a Congregationalist; he acted as an officer in that denomination many years, and he was prominently identified in the building of the new church edifice at Willimantic. Fraternally he was a Mason, and belonged to Eastern Star Lodge, No. 44, A. F. & A. M., where he was highly esteemed. His death occurred Feb. 8, 1882, and his remains rest in the cemetery at Willimantic.

At a meeting of the directors of the Willimantic Savings Institute held Feb. 12, 1882, the following resolution was passed:

Mr. Allen Lincoln, for the past eight years a director of this bank, having been suddenly removed from our midst by death,

Resolved, that in the death of Mr. Lincoln, who met with us at the last meeting of the board, we feel that this bank, in common with other public interests with which he was connected, has lost a valuable helper, and that, as fellow-officers, we take this opportunity to express our appreciation of his uniform and prompt attendance, genial ways, and the valuable advice and assistance he has rendered in this management of the affairs of the bank. We miss his kindly presence from our councils, and honor and cherish his memory as a pleasant companion and good citizen, who discharged any trust, public or private, to which he was called, with fidelity and ability.

Resolved, that these resolutions be placed in the records of the bank, and a copy delivered to the invalid widow and the family of the deceased, as an expression of our sympathy with them in their affliction.

Attest, HENRY F. ROYCE, SEC.

Mr. Lincoln was one of the most prominent men in the city. His good judgment and calm reasoning methods caused his opinions to be sought in many public and private matters. His record in business circles is a clean one. When misfortune came to him in earlier manhood, he bravely faced the trouble, paid his debts dollar for dollar, and started anew, making no complaint, and asking no aid. His private life was pure, and he was devoted to his home and his family.

On May 25, 1841, in Chaplin, Conn., Allen Lincoln was united in marriage with Miss Sallinda Bennett, who was born in that town Jan. 28, 1818, a daughter of Deacon Origen and Sallinda (Babcock) Bennett, the latter of Coventry. The Bennetts were of Stonington, Conn. Deacon Origen Bennett was a farmer, and for years was a deacon in the Baptist Church at Spring Hill, Mansfield. He was twice married, Mrs. Lincoln being one of the four children born of the second marriage, as was also the only son and namesake, Origen Bennett, who now lives in Chaplin, where he is well known, as he taught school there for over forty years. To Allen Lincoln and wife were born children as follows: Martha Sallinda, born in Chaplin, April 1, 1847, married John M. Alpaugh, of Willimantic, but now of Providence, R. I., and they have two sons, Frank L. and Clifford J. Janette and Lila, twins, were born Dec. 22, 1848; Janette married Frank F. Webb, of Willimantic (mentioned elsewhere), and Lila wedded Edward H. Brown, of Providence, R. I., by whom she has three children, Ward L., Preston and Mabel B. The youngest in the family was Allen Bennett, sketch of whom follows. The wife and mother passed away Dec. 26, 1900, and was laid to rest at the side of her husband in the cemetery at Willimantic. Mrs. Lincoln, like her husband, was for many years an active and leading member of the First Congregational Church in Willimantic, and a liberal supporter of its interests. A notable memorial of Mr. and Mrs. Lincoln, an enduring baptismal font in bronze and marble, has recently been placed in the church.

ALLEN BENNETT LINCOLN, of Willimantic, Windham county, is in the eighth generation of this old and honorable Lincoln family. He was born Aug. 2, 1858, in a house that stood near Church and Main streets, a son of Allen and Sallinda (Bennett) Lincoln (sketch of whom appears above). His schooling was begun in a private school taught by Miss Rose Dimock, but in 1865 he entered the Natchaug school, opened that year, and followed its course of study until he was graduated in 1875, after which he attended Williston Seminary, from which he was graduated in 1877. His education was completed at Yale, from which institution he graduated in 1881. For about a year after leaving the University he was in business with his father, but his tastes were literary, and he secured a position as editorial writer on the Providence Evening Press, under Z. L. White, going later to the Providence Journal, under George W. Danielson. In 1885 his health failed, and he returned home, temporarily becoming chief clerk of the board of education, in place of A. J. Wright, who was absent from illness.

In the fall of 1886 Mr. Lincoln began the publication of The Connecticut Home, at Willimantic, the State Prohibition paper. Four years later he removed this paper to Hartford, where he combined with the Worcester Times, which he had bought, and the papers united in the New England Home, which at once took high rank among the prominent Prohibition organs of the day. The Prohibition sentiment, however, for some years rather fell away, and in November, 1894, Mr. Lincoln disposed of his publishing interests to what is now The New Voice of Chicago. In 1895 he established in Willimantic a branch of the Co-operative Savings Society, and soon after began fire insurance in connection. Later he took up life insurance work, which he developed extensively, and in May, 1901, sold out his other interests to M. Eugene Lincoln, and is now engaged in the life insurance work, in which he is very successful.

Mr. Lincoln has done some literary work outside of the newspaper line. In college he was for three years one of the editors of the Yale Courant. In 1883 he wrote an extended history of the Natchaug School, and in 1885 a "History of All the Fire Companies Ever Formed in Windham," both of which were published in pamphlet form, and contained much local history of value. In 1885, also, while on the editorial staff of the Providence Press, he wrote a series of articles on civil service reform which were personally commended by George William Curtis, and were issued in pamphlet form by the Willimantic Civil Service Reform Association. While in the Prohibition work Mr. Lincoln developed some talent as a public speaker, and delivered addresses in over one hundred towns in Connecticut, Rhode Island, Massachusetts and New York. He was chairman of the Prohibition State Committee for several years, and a number of his addresses on the subject were published as campaign material. In 1892 he was chosen as historian of Windham's second century at the bi-centennial celebration, an editor and compiler of the "Memorial Volume" published in 1893. In June, 1900, the Hartford Times published an article on "A New Democracy" from Mr. Lincoln's pen, concerning which the Times said editorially: "His conclusions must appeal powerfully to all patriotic Americans, and presentation of them has not been excelled in force or precision by any writer on public questions who has recently addressed the American public."

On Dec. 18, 1883, Mr. Lincoln was married, in Willimantic, to Miss Caroline L. Buck, who was born in Ashford, Conn., in March, 1864, third daughter of Hon. Edwin A. Buck, of that town. This union has been blessed with four children: Marion Buck, born Jan. 2, 1888; Elsie Bennett, Nov. 27, 1892; Barbara Grace, Oct. 15, 1896; and Julia Armour, June 28, 1899.

Mr. Lincoln cast his first vote for the Republican party, but in 1884 supported Grover Cleveland on account of his attitude toward civil service. In 1886 he united with the Prohibitionist movement, and acted with that organization for several years, but in recent years his attitude has been quite independent. He has served on the school board in Willimantic, and was a charter member of the Board of Trade. Mr. Lincoln and his wife belong to the Congregational Church, where he has been superintendent of the Sunday-school since 1895. Mrs. Lincoln belongs to the Woman's Club in Willimantic.

The career of Allen Bennett Lincoln has been in every way creditable, and the time-honored name which he bears has suffered no defacement at his hands.

EDGAR MASON WHEATON. Genealogical research has a distinct and definite value, be it in the tracing of a broken and obscure line or the following back of an illustrious and exalted lineage, and we of this modern, democratic type can not afford to hold in light esteem the record which tells of noble lives and noble deeds in the days long past, since through some such medium was laid the foundation of all that is permanent and worthy in human achievement of today, the past being the parent of the present and the present an earnest of the future. Thus he is most to be honored who places a due measure of appreciation and reverence upon the record which bears to him assurance of an honored ancestry.

The lineage of Edgar Mason Wheaton is one of distinguished and interesting order, bespeaking identification with the annals of American history from the early colonial epoch and standing for true and noble manhood and gentle womanhood, as one generation has followed another on the stage of life. In the connection there need be no apology offered in placing in juxtaposition the personal career of our subject, for he has proved a worthy scion of a splendid race and has exerted an unmistakable and beneficent influence upon the public and industrial life of the city of Putnam, Windham county, where he has maintained his home for more than a quarter of a century. He is a lineal descendant, in the eighth generation, of (I) Robert Wheaton, of Rehoboth, Mass., who was born in Swansea, Wales, in 1605, and who came to the American colonies between the years 1630 and 1636. He married Alice, the daughter of Richard Bowen, and he died in 1695-96, at the patriarchal age of ninety years. The first mention made of him is in the town records of the old city of Salem, Mass. That Robert Wheaton came from the pure, unmixed, native Welsh, or rather Cymri race, which was of Tartaric origin, and which, though often driven to the mountain fastnesses of Wales by the warlike Angles, Saxons and Normans, was never subjugated, is an incontrovertible fact, and in the successive generations have been manifest many of those sterling qualities which made the progenitors invincible in their courage and maintained for them the boon of liberty in thought and action. Robert Wheaton and his family removed from Salem to Rehoboth between the years 1643 and 1646, and there he and some of his sons were instrumental in the establishing and upbuilding of the first Baptist Church in the colony of Massachusetts, the church edifice having been located in that part of the town which was ceded to the Baptists and to which the name of Swansea was applied. This sturdy and God-fearing man, Robert Wheaton, in many respects may be likened to Roger Williams, of Rhode Island, in that he was a pioneer and a man of initiative force, the forerunner of the large number of Welsh Baptists who, a few years later, came from their native land and settled in that district. In 1657 he took the prescribed oath of fidelity, and within the following year was duly admitted as a freeman. It is a matter of record he was among those who suffered all the horrors of the Indian war of 1675, being in the locality where the savage onslaught was precipitated in all its fury, the redoubtable King Philip having his home at Mount Hope, not far distant from Rehoboth.

Robert Wheaton's homestead was in the south part of the town, and, in a historical way, it is gratifying to note the fact that the property has been consecutively retained in the possession of the family to the present day. Upon his death he left his widow, Alice, as the sole executrix of his will, but prior to his demise he had divided nearly all of his fine estate among his children. The remains of this noble man were interred in the ancient burying-ground near his homestead farm. His children were: Joseph, Samuel, Jeremiah, Christopher, Obadiah, John, Bethia, Hannah, Mary, Rev. Ephraim and Benjamin. In the following paragraphs we shall consider more particularly those in the several succeeding generations, through whom the line is traced in a direct way to the immediate subject of this sketch.

(II) Rev. Ephraim Wheaton, tenth child of Robert and Alice, was born in Rehoboth, Oct. 20, 1659, and there passed his entire life, his death occurring April 26, 1734. He married first, in August, 1676, Mary, daughter of Sampson and Mary (Butterworth) Mason, born Feb. 7, 1660. His second wife bore the given name of Hannah; she probably survived him, as she was mentioned in his will, which bore date of May 20, 1729, and was proved May 10, 1734. He was a distinguished clergyman of the Baptist church, and was settled over the first Baptist church of Massachusetts, of which mention has already been made, and he held this charge from 1704 to the day of his death. He was a man who exerted a great and profound influence for good in the community, and under his care the church was highly prospered, both spiritually and temporally. According to records still extant, within five years he baptized fifty into membership in the church. He died at the age of seventy-five years, in the fulness of honors and well-merited affection, and he left four sons and five daughters, all born of his first marriage. (III) His son, James Wheaton, was born Oct. 7, 1685, in Rehoboth; Mary, wife of James, survived him, being duly mentioned in his will, proved Jan. 22, 1742, while eight children were likewise mentioned in this document. Of these, (IV) James was the third son and was born Dec. 11, 1717. He died, intestate, July 8, 1778, his wife, Sarah, having passed away on the 29th of the preceding month. They had eleven children.

(V) James Wheaton, son of James and Mary, was born March 3, 1747 or 1748, in Swansea, Mass., whence he removed to Pomfret, Conn., in 1775, becoming one of the early settlers of the town. He was a carpenter by trade and assisted in the erection of the first Congregational church built in Providence, R. I., the same having been since known as the Benefit Street Church. As indicative of his intrepid daring and athletic strength it is related, and well authenticated, that after the completion of the spire, which was 180 feet in height, he climbed to the topmost point and stood upon the ball which crowned the spire. He later came to Pomfret and purchased what has since been known as the Wheaton homestead. He married a Miss Slade, and they became the parents of six children, one of whom was

(VI) James, who was born in Pomfret, May 5, 1789, and who died in 1874, at the age of eighty-six years. May 2, 1811, he married Nancy Lyon, and after her death, was solemnized his marriage to Betsey Angell, Dec. 2, 1816. He became the father of ten sons and six daughters, and the majority of this large family lived to attain years of maturity, and it was stated that he thus raised over sixty feet of boys, as they averaged over six feet in height. James Wheaton (3d) was a prosperous farmer and well upbore the honors of the name. In politics he was originally a Whig and later a Republican, and he served in many local offices of trust and responsibility, including that of selectman, of which he was incumbent several years. He was a man of inflexible probity, was a consistent Christian and always took an active part in every project calculated to conserve the general good of the community.

(VII) Deacon Angell Wheaton, son of James and Betsey (Angell) Wheaton, was born in Pomfret, Jan. 22, 1820, and he became one of the extensive farmers and fruit-growers of his county; his fine property was known as Orchard Hill, and all the trees which are now standing in the fine orchards of the old homestead were set out by him, and that within the memory of his son, Edgar Mason. He early became prominent in the councils of the Baptist Church of Pomfret, zealously laboring for the cause of the Master and the uplifting of his fellow men, as is evident when it is recalled that he was made a deacon in the church when about twenty-four years of age, and retained this incumbency until the organization was disbanded. For many years he was a member of the board of trustees and also superintendent of the Sunday-school. In his business affairs he was energetic and progressive; genial and unaffected in his personality, strong and robust in physique and kindly in his disposition, his character was such as to command uniform confidence and esteem, being ordered upon a high plane of honor and integrity. He was firm in his convictions but tolerant in his judgment of others, permitting no compromise to insure personal ends, and yet having no place in his heart for thoughts of enmity. He took an active interest in the public affairs of a local nature, and was a stalwart Republican in his political proclivities. Strong in his hold upon the esteem and confidence of the people of the community, he was naturally called upon to serve in various positions of trust and responsibility, having held many of the town offices. He served as selectman for several years and also as constable and as a member of the grand jury.

On March 8, 1847, Deacon Wheaton was united in marriage to Miss Lydia Ann Williams, who was born in Stonington, Conn., Jan. 1, 1827, the daughter of Thomas and Lucy (Fairfield) Williams, who eventually removed from Stonington to Pomfret. Mrs. Wheaton was a direct descendant of the historic character, Roger Williams, of Charter Oak fame. Deacon Angell Wheaton was summoned into eternal rest Jan. 4, 1889; his devoted and cherished wife survived him a full decade, and passed away Dec. 8, 1899, both dying in Putnam, Conn., where they had passed their declining years among their children, who accorded them the deepest filial solicitude. Of their children we enter but a brief record. Edgar M. is the immediate subject of this review. Alice, born in Pomfret, March 28, 1856, was married, Sept. 13, 1881, to Matthewson Angell, successful dry-goods merchant of Willimantic, Conn., and they have five children. Thomas, born in Pomfret, Sept. 24, 1861, is now located in North Omaha, Neb., where he is extensively engaged in sheep growing; he married Miss Mae Simpson and they have one son. Annie, who was born in Pomfret, March 29, 1868, was married, Nov. 25, 1897, to Frederick Stone, a carpenter of Putnam, Conn. and they have one son.

In the concluding paragraphs of this sketch will be considered the more salient points in the career of the honored citizen of Putnam, whose name initiates this article. Edgar M. Wheaton was born in Pomfret, Conn., April 18, 1851, and his preliminary educational discipline was received in the public schools of his native town and in a select school taught by Miss Elizabeth Mathewson. At the age of sixteen years he may be said to have initiated his business career, since he then left the parental roof and for the following year was engaged in the looking up and collecting of accounts for Henry S. Hutchins, a wholesale grocer of Providence, R. I. At the age of eighteen he went to Wheaton, Ill., a town founded by and largely built up through the efforts of his two uncles, Jesse and Warren Wheaton, both pioneer settlers of that State, and prominently identified with its industrial and civic history. They went to Illinois in 1837, when the western metropolis, Chicago, was but a small town, and settled on the open prairie, where they eventually laid the foundation for the thriving little city which now bears their name. For a year and a half after his rival there, Mr. Wheaton pursued his studies in the college located there, and thence went to Humoldt, Iowa, where he engaged in the manufacture, purchase and sale of lime and lime-stone, being associated in this enterprise with Dr. Russell, under the firm name of Russell & Wheaton. At the expiration of a year he purchased his partner's interest and for the following year conducted the business alone. He then availed himself of a favorable opportunity to dispose of his interests to Des Moines parties, and his next business project was that involved in the opening of a cabinet shop, and in this connection it may be said that he first came before the public as a contractor and builder—the line of industry along which he has gained high reputation and a success of no indefinite character. He is a man of marked initiative capacity and business veracity, and his new enterprise showed the value of his interposition. He was favored in securing a number of excellent contracts, and the buildings which he there erected are doing good service at the present time, showing that his fidelity to his contracts and insistency upon the best possible workmanship were as pronounced at the inception of his career in this line as they have been to the present day. Mr. Wheaton passed about two years in Humoldt, Iowa, and finally decided to return to his native town of Pomfret, reaching home just in time to enjoy a Thanksgiving dinner beneath the parental roof in 1872.

Mr. Wheaton remained in Pomfret until the following spring, when his judgment as to the business possibilities in his line in Putnam led him to come to that place and to purchase a tract of land of Simon and William Bartholomew, located near the high school building; there he soon instituted the erection of a dwelling house, in which connection his plan of procedure was distinctively different from that usually followed, as he labored alone and completed the house without having enlisted a week's work from any other person. When the home was made ready for occupancy Mr. Wheaton, who had previously taken unto himself a wife, there took up his abode and properly established the household goods, the Lares and Penates who guard the destinies of the home. Soon afterward he began the erection of other houses, for himself and others, and from this beginning his business increased to one of extensive scope and importance, justifying the wisdom of his choice in having located in the city to whose progress and material upbuilding he has so signally contributed, enhancing the public prosperity through private enterprise. He has built many of the principal business blocks in the city and a large number of its handsome residences, while his reputation has brought to him a representative support throughout a large section of country contiguous to Putnam, many fine buildings in neighboring towns standing as monuments to his skill as a builder and his scrupulous fidelity in the execution of all work entrusted to his hands. He has finely equipped shops, in which are turned out the finest lines of interior finishings, in which connection it should be noted that he furnished all the inside wood work for the South Boston high school building, one of the fine modern school structures in that section, while a general jobbing business is done in this line, entailing the employment of a corps of competent workmen and the operation of the most approved mechanical devices. Mr. Wheaton's first shop was located near what is known as the Morse Lot, on the west side of the river, and this continued to be his headquarters about two years, when the building was taken down and removed. In 1876 he erected a two-story shop on the east side of the track of the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad, near the fifth district school-house, and this was utilized until his increasing business made the accommodations inadequate to the demands, when he erected in 1892 his present extensive establishment, the main building being four stories in height and 50 by 100 feet in lateral dimensions, while the original building is still utilized as a portion of the plant.

The line of enterprise in which Mr. Wheaton is engaged is one that has important bearing upon the advancement of any community, and that locality is favored which secures for the management of such an enterprise a man of the high integrity and marked executive and technical ability of Mr. Wheaton. His success has been pronounced, and he is to-day numbered among the substantial business men of Putnam, but his prosperity has been achieved by legitimate and honorable methods and is viewed with pleasure and satisfaction by all who know and appreciate his sterling character. As a public-spirited citizen he has ever stood ready to lend his aid and influence in the promotion of all worthy enterprises for the general good of his town and State, being a staunch friend of the causes of education and religion and never neglecting any civic duty devolving upon him. His political allegiance is given to the Republican party, but he has never sought the honors of official preferment, though he consented to appear as candidate for alderman from the Second ward at the time when Putnam was incorporated as a city. He was victorious at the polls and thus has the distinction of having been a member of the first board of aldermen, in which capacity his course during his two terms of service was marked by the same fidelity and business acumen which have characterized his career at all times and under all conditions. He is a man of firm convictions and strong individuality, but is tolerant in his judgment, and kindly and gracious in his intercourse with his fellow men, being ever able to discern the silvery lining of every cloud, having an even temperament and a well balanced mentality, and thus being not only potentially but objectively helpful. In these characteristics he is a true Wheaton, for the same attributes have distinguished the family in all the various generations, whose men and women have contributed a valuable element in the communities where they have been placed. Other equally definite characteristics have been a deep conscientiousness and morality, a high sense of personal responsibility and a high regard for the rights of others. Temperance in all things has seemed to be an unwritten motto in the family, and this has been shown in the almost invariable abstaining of its members from the use of tobacco or intoxicants. That great desideratum, mens sana in corpore sano—a sound mind in a sound body—seem to typify concisely the present representative of the name.

The religious faith of Mr. Wheaton is that of the Congregational church, of which he is a zealous and devoted member, doing all in his power to further the cause of the Divine Master through earnest effort and precept and personal example in the daily walks of life. Like his honored father he has been called upon to serve as deacon of his church, having been incumbent of this position for more than twelve years, while he has also served for a number of years as superintendent of the Sunday-school, and has been prominent in other branches of the church work, having been president of the Christian Endeavor Society and a member of the Society committee. Mrs. Wheaton is also a devoted member of the same church, and both have proved active and valued workers, while their true Christian bearing has had a definite and beneficent influence in the community. Their charities have been many but unostentatious, in that they have followed the behest, "Let not your right hand know what your left hand doeth," for as prosperity has come to them they have had a high sense of their stewardship and have been helpful to others less fortunate. The beautiful family home, an attractive residence on Oak Hill, is the center of gracious and refined hospitality. Mr. Wheaton purchased the E. S. Lyon house in 1886, and this he has remodeled with marked taste and discrimination, making it one of the many pleasant homes of which Putnam has a right to boast.

In conclusion we shall touch more particularly upon the domestic chapter in the life history of our honored subject. On Aug. 25, 1872, at Independence, Iowa, Mr. Wheaton was united in marriage to Miss Charity Eliza Jayne, who was born in Barrington, Ill., the daughter of Timothy and Phoebe (Plimpton) Jayne. She has proved to him a true companion and helpmeet and is known as a woman of gentle refinement and gracious presence. To them have been born six children. Mary Alice was graduated from the Putnam high school in 1894 and from Wheaton College, Ill., in 1898, and is now at the parental home. Frank Angell was graduated from the high school in 1895 and from Wheaton College in 1899, being now in business in Indianapolis, Ind.; he married Miss Mabel Beemer, of Wheaton, and they have one child, Marion, born in Putnam. Walter Alexander, born in Putnam, was graduated from the high school there as a member of the class of 1900, and is associated with his father in business. Henry Ward, born in Putnam, is a high school graduate of the class of 1901, and is now (1902) attending Pratt Institute, Brooklyn, N. Y., fitting himself for mechanical engineering. William Edgar, born in Putnam, is a member of the class of 1903, in the Putnam high school; and Raymond Thomas, born in Putnam, is attending the public schools of his home city.

It may well be said that Mr. Wheaton is significantly favored in all the relations of life, having an ideal home, a large and important business, and enjoying the unequivocal confidence and esteem of the community, but the best of all is that he merits and duly appreciates all this.

MURDOCK. For over a third of a century this name, in the persons of Hon. George Taft Murdock and son, George Thurston Murdock, manufacturers of cotton wash goods at New Boston, in the town of Thompson, Windham Co., Conn., has been a synonym for all that goes to make up good citizenship and an influence for the best interests of the town and welfare of its people.

These gentlemen descend from a sturdy New England ancestry of the Colonial period—from men and women who have left their impress upon society in the several communities in which they have lived. Robert Murdock, the progenitor of the Uxbridge, Mass., Murdocks, from whence the Thompson, Conn., family came, was a native of Scotland, born in 1665, was probably a brother of John Murdock, of Plymouth, Mass., and came with him to America in 1688. He removed from Plymouth to Roxbury, thence about 1703 to Newtown, where he bought a house and 120 acres of land. On April 28, 1692, he married Hannah Stedman, born in 1667, probably a daughter of Thomas and Mary Stedman, of Cambridge. She died in 1727. He subsequently married again, the Christian name of his wife being Abigail. His children, born in Roxbury, were: Hannah, Jan. 22, 1693; Robert, Feb. 1, 1694; John, March 25, 1696; Samuel, March 24, 1698; and Benjamin, May 4, 1700; and one, Hannah, born in Newtown, Mass., May 22, 1705. Of these,

John Murdock married, in 1722, Sarah, and their children were: Hannah, born July 17, 1723; Abiel, February 21, 1725; John, Dec. 24, 1727; Ephraim, April 18, 1729; Amos, Aug. 7, 1730; Elisha, Aug. 25, 1732 (died in 1749); Aaron, Aug. 28, 1735; Ephraim, March 19, 1737; James, March 15, 1738; Robert, Sept. 1, 1739; Sarah, Sept. 17, 1741; and Hannah, Feb. 21, 1744. Of these Amos settled in Windham, Conn., where he married October 21, 1751, Sybil, daughter of John and Lydia (Jennings) Flint, and a descendant of Thomas Flint, of Salem, Mass., 1650. Another son, John, married (first), in 1750, Bethia Fuller, nd (second), in 1760, Mary Ward, and with his family removed to the town of Uxbridge, Mass. He, or his son John, it is said, took the name of Robert Pierpont, of Roxbury, by act of the General Court, in 1795. His children were: John, born March 6, 1761; Mehitabel, May 22, 1763; Mary, February 29, 1765; Sarah, August 30, 1766; John 2), August 21, 1768; Amasa, July 28, 1772; George, February 21, 1775; and Mary, December 7, 1778.

Elisha Murdock, of the Uxbridge stock, was born in that town, and lived and died there. He was a substantial citizen and a prosperous man. He married a Miss Chapin, of Uxbridge, a descendant of Deacon Samuel Chapin, probably of Welsh origin, who took the freeman's oath in Boston in 1641, was a deacon of the church, and probably resided in Dorchester, and moved, in 1642, to Springfield, Mass., where he was a magistrate and an active public man. Josiah Chapin, one of his sons, settled in Mendon, Worcester Co., Mass., as one of the original grantees of the town. He was the first deputy from the town to the General Court, and for more than twenty years was chairman of the board of selectmen. Of the sons of Elisha Murdock, there is mention of Fuller, Schuyler, Warren and Chapin (who died in Cuba).

Fuller Murdock, son of Elisha, about 1807 married Ester, daughter of James Taft, and to them were born children as follows: Philina, Aug. 26, 1807; Abbie Eliza, Nov. 13, 1808; Moses Taft, Sept. 12, 1810; John, Sept. 9, 1812; Charles, Feb. 1, 1815; Caleb, Feb. 16, 1817; George Taft, March 18, 1819; Harriet, Feb. 6, 1821; Chapin, June 20, 1823; and Mary Ann, June 18, 1825. The mother of these was a daughter of James Taft, and descended from Robert Taft, who is supposed to have come to America with five sons—Thomas, Robert, Daniel, Joseph and Benjamin—and who lived first in Braintree, but about 1679 removed to Mendon, Mass., where he resided the rest of his life, dying in 1724. It is believed that he was the ancestor of nearly all of the name in this country. His posterity in Mendon, Upton and Uxbridge, Mass., were numerous. Judge Taft is also of this family.

GEORGE TAFT MURDOCK, son of Fuller, born March 18, 1819, was reared to habits of industry, and early in boyhood became self-reliant. He received the benefits of the neighborhood schools until twelve years of age, at which time he in a measure became self-supporting, for he then went to work in the old Capron mill, at Uxbridge, piecing rolls, acquiring by his own efforts money to defray the expenses of a higher education, which he obtained in the academies of Uxbridge, Mass., and Plymouth, N. H. At twenty-one years of age, associated with a partner, he began a mercantile career in his native town, and in it continued with success for six years. At the close of this period he engaged in the manufacture of satinets in Millbury, Mass., then in Seaconnet Point, R. I., passing four years in the two places. In 1861 he removed to the city of Worcester, Mass., and established the firm of Curtis & Murdock, manufacturers of woollen goods. In 1865 he purchased the power at New Boston, in Thompson, Conn., with which place he has since been identified. He retained his residence in Worcester until 1879, at which time he removed to New Boston, and has since maintained a home in that place. At the time of the purchase of the mill property in New Boston it was dilapidated, and the village and surroundings were anything but inviting as a place of residence, but through the efforts of himself and only son, who has been associated with his father from youth up, the mills have been rebuilt of brick, and the capacity greatly increased; and there is, too, a different moral atmosphere about the village, where a transformation has taken place. To the energy, consideration and outlay of these gentlemen, father and son, the sightly and thrifty appearance of the New Boston of to-day is due. Their mills give employment to about one hundred operatives.

A Republican in politics, the senior Mr. Murdock has been called upon, both at Worcester and at New Boston, to aid by his counsel and advice in the carrying on the affairs of these places. He was a member of the common council of the city of Worcester in 1862, and in 1885 served as a member of the Lower House of Connecticut from his town; in this body he was on the committee on School Funds. He is a Christian gentleman, and a supporter of the church and its societies. He is also a strong advocate for the cause of temperance, in fact, he is ever found on the side of right, and he commands the respect and esteem and confidence of his fellow citizens. Mr. Murdock practically retired from active life in 1899.

In 1845 Mr. Murdock was married to Abbie A., daughter of Alvin Robinson, of Mansfield, Mass., and to them came two children, George Thurston and Lizzie G. The daughter died May 3, 1879, in Worcester, Mass., and is buried in the cemetery there; she was the wife of Horace E. Bigelow, and had one child—Gretchen Murdock, who married Dr. William C. Lunan, of Southbridge, Mass., and has two children, Marion M. and Augustus Holt. Mrs. Abbie A. Murdock died May 19, 1898, and was laid to rest in the Worcester cemetery. She was a member of the Unitarian Church at Uxbridge.

GEORGE THURSTON MURDOCK, son of George Taft, was born July 4, 1846, in Uxbridge, Mass. He was educated in the academies of Worcester and Wilbraham, Mass., and began his business career in his father's mills in Worcester, starting in the finishing room. There he became familiar with the details of the business, and later he became the accountant of the concern, in 1866 assuming the superintendency of the mills at New Boston. In 1868 he became an interested party in the business, and still later an equal partner. For many years prior to his father's removal to New Boston the son had almost the entire oversight of the business, and of later years the details and management of the concern have been largely turned over to him. He is of the same character of man as his father, with whom he has in every way co-operated in the progress and improvements brought about in the business and in the town. He is both enterprising and public-spirited, and active in public affairs. He has held some of the local offices, such as town committeeman, etc., and in 1878 was an efficient member of the State Legislature, serving in that session on the Committees on Manufacturing and Mileage.

On June 22, 1869, Mr. Murdock was married to Arrilla R., daughter of Charles D. and Lucy Thayer, of New Boston. One child, Mabel Florence, blessed this union. Mrs. Murdock died Oct. 29, 1902. She was a woman much beloved and highly esteemed in the community as was most fully attested by the expressions of love and condolence when she entered into rest.

THAYER. The Thayer family is an old one of New England, one known to Massachusetts history for 260 and more years, and to Connecticut for nearly a century. A number of families, too, allied to the Thompson, Conn., branch, which is here treated, are families of long and honorable standing in New England, among them the Wheeler, Mowry and Nichols.

The Taylers of England are of Saxon origin. The family is now extinct, but they owned lands in the County of Essex, from the reign of Edward II, and were all described with the affix "gent." In this country the grandchildren of the first Thomas Tayer spelled the name Thayer, and it has so continued until the present time. [N. E. Gen'l. Reg. Vol. XXXVII, P. 84.]

The Thomas Tayer referred to, and the progenitor of the branch of the Thayer family under consideration, was born at Thornbury, England, and married there April 3, 1618, Margery Wheeler. He came to America before 1639, and was early at Braintree, where he had a grant of seventy-six acres of land. He died "2d, 4 mo. 1665, and his wife Margery died 11d, 12 mo. 1672." Their children were: Thomas, baptized Sept. 15, 1625; Fernando, baptized April 18, 1625, and Shadrach, baptized May 10, 1629.

From this emigrant ancestor, Judge and Mayor Thayer, of Norwich, are descendants in the eighth generation, their lineage being through Fernando (or Ferdinando), Isaac, Joseph, John, John (2) and Charles D. Thayer.

(II) Ferdinando Thayer, baptized April 18, 1625, married in 1652, Huldah Hayard, of Braintree, and their children were: Sarah, Huldah, Jonathan, David, Naomi, Thomas, Samuel and Isaac.

(III) Isaac Thayer, son of Ferdinando, married (first) Mercy Ward, and (second) Mary, and their children were: Mary, Isaac, Ebenezer, Comfort, Mary, John, Nathaniel, Moses, Samuel, Joseph and Ichabod.

(IV) Joseph Thayer, son of Isaac, was born 1715, and in 1741, married Sarah Balcom, who died in 1762. In 1765 he married for his second wife Rachel Richardson. He became the father of children, as follows: Joseph, Rhoda, Sarah, Phebe, John, Thaddeus, Sarah (2), Martha, Sophrona, Asseneth, Isaac, Zilpha and Lydia.

(V) John Thayer, son of Joseph, born Sept. 28, 1752, married in 1776, Dacy Richardson, and their children were: Sarah, Arrilla, John, Joseph, Phebe and Marvel.

(VI) John Thayer (2), son of John, born in 1787, married Dec. 12, 1810, Ruth Mowry, and settled in East Douglas, Mass., and later removed to Thompson, Conn. Their children were: Mowry R., born April 27, 1812, married Harriet Morse; Charles D., born Dec. 26, 1813; and Arrilla, born Aug. 9, 1816, married Mowry Richardson [Pope's Pioneers of Mass. and Emerson's Douglas, Mass.]

(VII) Charles D. Thayer, son of John, was born Dec. 26, 1813, in the town of Douglas, Mass. and there had the advantages of the public schools. He continued his studies in the Oxford and Uxbridge high schools, and then for several terms taught school. He began a business career as a clerk at Oxford, and afterward established and conducted on his own account a general store at New Boston, Conn. This life, however, was not in keeping with his tastes and his father's health becoming poor, he assumed the charge of his father's farm at New Boston. He became owner of the farm in 1847 by deed from his father and continued farming on that place until 1869, his operations there covering the period between 1838 and 1869. In this latter year he removed to the Nichols place near New Boston village, which he had owned for some years, where he continued to reside until his death on April 6, 1898.

A man of the strictest integrity and principles of good judgment and experience, Mr. Thayer's services were frequently sought as trustee and executor of estates. He variously served his town as assessor, selectman, etc., and at one time received the nomination of his party, the Democratic, as candidate for the State Legislature, but in the race was defeated. He served as a director in the First National Bank, at Thompson.

On Nov. 12, 1843, Mr. Thayer was married to Lucy E., daughter of David Nichols, of Thompson, and to them came children as follows: David Nichols, born December 10, 1844, is proprietor of the Rockland (Maine) Daily Star; John Mowry, born March 15, 1847, is judge of Superior Court of Connecticut; Arrilla Richardson, born Feb.

850, married George Thurston Murdock, of New Boston, Conn.; and Charles Frederick, born Nov. 1, 1852, is mayor of Norwich, Connecticut.

KNOWLTON. The Knowlton family is one of the oldest and most prominent in Windham county, a family noted for its patriotism, statesmanship and religious activity.

The Knowlton family was founded on American soil when (I) Capt. William Knowlton, his wife, Anna Elizabeth Smith, and several of their children came by way of Nova Scotia to New England, as early as 1630. The father died on the passage, but the other members of the family were among the early settlers in Ipswich, Mass. The children of Capt. William were: John, William, Thomas and Samuel.

(II) William Knowlton, son of Capt. William, was born in 1615, was a member of the First Church and was made a freeman in Ipswich in 1641-2. By trade he was a brick-layer. The Christian name of his wife was Elizabeth. William Knowlton died in 1635. His children were: Thomas, Nathaniel, William, John, Benjamin, Samuel and Mary, all born between 1640 and 1649.

(III) William Knowlton, the third of the name, was born in 1642, married, and lived in Ipswich, by trade a tailor. His wife's name was Susanna. In 1669 he took the freeman's oath. It is probable that he moved to New York City in 1669 and thence to Norwich, Conn., in 1682, in company with one Thomas Clark. His children were: Thomas, Sarah and Joseph, all born between 1667 and 1677.

(IV) Thomas Knowlton, son of William (3), was born in 1667, and Dec. 9, 1692, married his first wife, Margery Goodhue; his second wife was Margery Carter. The children born to the first marriage were: Robert, Margery, Margery (2), Joseph and Deborah, all born between 1693 and 1698; and the children of the second union were: Abraham, Sarah and Ezekiel, all born between 1703 and 1767.

(V) Robert Knowlton, son of Thomas, was born Sept. 7, 1693, in Ipswich, Mass., and Nov. 21, 1717, married Hannah Robinson. He removed to Sutton, N. H., from there in 1725 to Ashford, Conn., and settled on land in the western part of the town, which is still in the possession of his descendants. Robert Knowlton was the first of the name to settle there. He and his wife were received into the Ashford church from that at Sutton, Dec. 11, 1726, and from that time he became a prominent leader in church affairs. He was chosen deacon in 1762, and for many years he performed the duties of that office; he was repeatedly chosen as a member of a committee to examine candidates for the pulpit "as to the principles and discipline." Both his strong religious feeling and his patriotic ardor seem to have been inherited by his descendants, who were firm supporters and loyal members of the Ashford church, and were among the first to respond to the call to arms.

Robert Knowlton owned a large farm in Ashford and was also engaged in the manufacture of salt. From 1739 to 1755 he represented his town in the colonial Legislature, a man of worth and wisdom. His death occurred Dec. 29, 1794, and that of his wife, Hannah, Dec. 7, 1777. About 1735 in making improvements on his farm, he erected a barn, which stood on the land now owned by R. D. W. Knowlton, until in the latter seventies, when it was torn down. As souvenirs of the old building, and in remembrance of a most worthy ancestor, Mr. Knowlton had several handsome canes made from its stanch old timbers and they are prized possessions of the family.

Six children were born to Robert Knowlton and his wife. Daniel, born in 1726, married, Nov. 7, 1745, Zerviah Wadkins, daughter of Capt. William Wadkins, of the Colonial army, and they lived in Ashford. He was a soldier and served at the siege of Louisburg. Esther, born Nov. 25, 1727, died young; Sarah, Aug. 17, 1731, died Oct. 28, 1739; Thomas, April 26, 1733, married, Dec. 8, 1756, Bridget Bosworth; Robert, May 27, 1735, died in 1739; and Abraham, April 3, 1740, married March 21, 1763, Molly Knox.

(VI) Abraham Knowlton, youngest son of Robert, was married March 21, 1763, to Molly Knox, and their children were: Amasa, born Feb. 26, 1764, who married Margaret Topliff; Sarah, June 20, 1765, who died in 1775; Miriam, Dec. 15, 1766, who married April 15, 1790, Abner Woodward; Stephen, Sept. 7, 1768, married Jan. 8, 1795, to Hannah Heath; Persis, April 2, 1770; Abel, April 9, 1772, who married Barbara Dimmock; Abraham, Dec. 17, 1774, who died when young; Nathan, Aug. 17, 1778, who married Lydia Leonard; Daniel, March 17, 1781, married Nov. 24, 1803, to Hannah Knowlton; and Amos, March 20, 1783, who married Sept. 13, 1804, Nancy Webb. Abraham Knowlton died June 14, 1821, in Ashford, and his wife, Molly, died July 8, 1819.

(VII) Daniel Knowlton, son of Abraham, born in 1781, married Hannah Knowlton, born April 19, 1783, in Ashford, daughter of Lieut. Daniel Knowlton, a hero of the Revolution, and a niece of Col. Thomas Knowlton, also a hero of that war. She was an aunt of the brave Gen. Nathaniel Lyon, who was killed at the battle of Wilson's Creek, Mo., early in the Civil war. Daniel Knowlton was a prosperous farmer of Ashford, where he resided through life. He died in 1852. Six children were born to Daniel Knowlton. Miner, who graduated from West Point Military Academy with high honors, became a captain in the United States army, served in the Mexican war, and finally resigned from military life on account of impaired health, spending his last years at Burlington, N. J., unmarried. Amanda, who married Lewis Topliff, moved to Ohio, where she died, leaving no issue. Miriam, who married Hiram Cady, a successful merchant, later a farmer, died in Ashford; she had one daughter, Mary A. H. Cady, of Ashford. Danford, who in early life engaged in the wholesale grocery trade in Hartford, in 1843 went to New York and until he retired from activity, was in the wholesaling and importing business. He married Miranda H. Rockwell, and died at Stafford, Conn., where he was living retired. His three children were: D. Henry; Miner R. and Gertrude. Elvira, who married Asher Knowlton, resided for a time in Ashford, later in Stafford, and died there; their daughter Nancy was the wife of J. F. Chamberlin, of Stafford. Edwin was the youngest.

(VIII) Edwin Knowlton, son of Daniel, was born June 24, 1825, and married Mary F. Woodward, daughter of Otis Woodward, of Ashford. He received a fair common school education, and although desirous of wider opportunities, his filial duty kept him on his parents' farm, which he brought to a high state of cultivation, greatly extending its area. This farm has been in the possession of the Knowltons for more than a century and a half, and it is now being worked by Robert D. W. Knowlton, the eldest son of Edwin. The other children are: George B. M., James E. A. and Hattie E. George B. M. Knowlton is a farmer and resides in Ashford, where he married Huldah Anderson. James E. A. Knowlton, born April 28, 1866, was married March 8, 1899, to Lottie, daughter of Henry Knowlton. He was educated in the public schools and took a course in the Morse Business College at Hartford and is now engaged in farming in Ashford, although he has been a prominent factor in political life in his town. In 1901 he was representative from Ashford to the State Legislature, in which he efficiently served on the committee on Claims. In 1900 he succeeded his brother as tax collector, and still serves in that office. In politics he is a Democrat. His two children are: Edwin E., born June 30, 1900; and Elizabeth W., born Aug. 30, 1901. Hattie E., the only daughter of Daniel Knowlton, graduated from Northfield Seminary and attended Oberlin College, later teaching school for several years. She is now the wife of Edward Walker, of Gurleyville.

The death of Edwin Knowlton occurred Sept. 11, 1884, his wife passing away April 29, 1895. Mr. Knowlton was one of the leading men of Ashford, prominent in every public enterprise, and always a representative of its best interests. In the Democratic party he was a power and was chosen to fill many positions of honor and responsibility, being at various times selectman, surveyor of highways and representative to the Legislature. His known good judgment, his sterling integrity, made him in constant request for the settlement of estates, many complicated cases passing satisfactorily through his hands. As a farmer he accumulated large means.

(IX) Robert Daniel Woodward Knowlton was born Nov. 18, 1860, on his present farm, and was educated in the district school. Until the death of his father, he assisted him in his agricultural labors; he then purchased the interests of the other heirs and secured the valuable property which has been his home ever since. For a considerable period, Mr. Knowlton dealt in stock and for a long time was interested extensively in dairy farming, but paid little attention to either at present. His farm comprises 200 acres and is widely known as one of the best cultivated and most productive in that section.

In June, 1891, Mr. Knowlton was married to Mrs. Geraldine (Coe) Sunderland, a native of Yorkshire, England. Mrs. Knowlton had one son, James, by her former marriage.

Like the rest of his family, Mr. Knowlton is prominently identified with the Democratic party and exerts a wide influence. In 1889 he served acceptably on the committee on Labor, while a representative in the State Legislature, and in his town he has been constable and collector, holding the offices for about eighteen years. Fraternally he is a member of Uriah Lodge No. 24, of Merrow, A. F. & A. M. His religious connection is with the Methodist Church.

SIMEON A. WHEATON. It is doubtful if any merchant in Windham county has continuously conducted business in one place for so long a time as has Simeon A. Wheaton, whose store at Phoenixville has weathered the changes of the town since 1849, and under the original management is still catering to an appreciative trade from behind its time honored counters. Nor does this integral and unchanging part of the commonwealth constitute the extent of the interests of Mr. Wheaton, who has experienced equal success in general farming, stock-raising and dairying, conducted on his several hundred acres of land in the towns of Pomfret and Eastford. He was born in Thompson, Conn., in March, 1829, a son of Levi and Amy (Ballard) Wheaton, and grandson of Deacon James Wheaton.

The ancestry of the Wheaton family is traced back to Robert Wheaton, who was born in Swansea, Wales, in 1605, and arrived in this country some time between 1630 and 1636. He married Abigail Bowen, daughter of Richard Bowen, and he died in 1695-6, at the age of ninety years. For a time he lived at Salem, Mass., and between 1643 and 1644 removed to Rehoboth, where he and his sons were active in the upbuilding of the first Baptist church in Massachusetts. Robert Wheaton, like Roger Williams, with whom he was in active sympathy, was a pioneer, and forerunner of a large number of Welsh Baptists, who, a few years later, came from their hilly country and settled near Rehoboth. He took the "oath of fidelitie" in 1657, and was admitted a freeman in 1658. His homestead in the southern part of the town is still in the possession of his descendants. To him and his wife were born eleven children, viz.: Joseph, a trooper under Capt. Hutchinson in King Philip's war; Samuel, also a trooper in King Philip's war, and a resident of Swansea; Jeremiah, who lived at Rehoboth; Christopher, a soldier in the Indian war, who died at Hull, Mass.

badiah, who removed to Milton, Mass., and joined apt. Johnson in the war of 1675; John; Bethia, the wife of William Blanding, of Rehoboth; Hannah, the wife of Mr. Butterworth; Mary; Rev. Phraim, a distinguished Baptist minister stationed at the first Baptist church in Massachusetts, from 1704 until his death in 1834; and Benjamin.

(II) John Wheaton, son of Robert, who was born April 20, 1650, and died July 25, 1737, married Elizabeth Carpenter, by whom he had eleven children: Samuel, Nathaniel, Priscilla, Mary, James, John, Peter, Isaac, Charity, Patience, and Joseph. He drew lands in Swansea, Feb. 7, 1670-1, and became the owner of several farms in that locality. He was surveyor in 1683, constable in 1685, and managed to draw from his lands and interests what was then considered a fortune. His finances suffered a reversion during the Indian war of 1675, and he was one of the foremost in bringing about the termination of that disastrous conflict. He was a devout member of the Baptist Church, of which his distinguished younger brother was pastor, and he was credited with largeness of heart and devotion to the best interests of the community.

(III) Samuel Wheaton, born Jan. 10, 1679, married Experience Pierce, and died prior to 1736. He lived in Swansea, supposedly in that part now known as Warren, R. I., near the coast, and no record is forthcoming of any child save Levi.

(IV) Levi Wheaton was born June 25, 1722, and probably died in 1812. He was twice married, first to Dibble Dorothy Cole, born Sept. 8, 1725; and in 1792 he took as his second wife an orphan. With the seven children born in Swansea he continued to live there until the Revolutionary war was well under way, when it is known that the two oldest sons with their families, as well as most of the other people, fled inward from the coast for greater safety. It is supposed that Levi accompanied his sons in their flight from Swansea to Pomfret in 1777, or a year later. Through his first marriage Levi Wheaton became the father of seven children: Deacon James; Simeon, a farmer at Thompson; Jeremiah, a soldier of the Revolution, who lived and died at Pomfret; Levi; Reuben; Sarah; and Syble. Of his second union there were four children: Levi, Alpersie, Jacob, and Louise, the first two being twins.

(V) Deacon James Wheaton, son of Levi, and grandfather of the merchant of Phoenixville, was born Dec. 7, 1750, and died April 17, 1844. For his first wife he married Sarah Slade, April 6, 1775; he was born March 15, 1756, and died Jan. 19, 1819. His second wife, Syble Slade, whom he married March 19, 1820, survived him, and died in Somerset, Mass., having been born Nov. 21, 1760. Deacon Wheaton owned a farm in Swansea before and during the early part of the Revolutionary war, and participated in the memorable struggle near its beginning. About 1777 he sold his Swansea farm for Continental money, which was practically worthless in his hands, but with which in 1778 he managed to secure about 100 acres of wild land on what is now called Ragged Hill, which our subject still owns. There he lived until 1800, and then removed to the extreme western part of Thompson, Conn., and settled at the junction of the Boston and Providence turnpike. A hotel established at this point proved a happy forethought for the newcomer, whose place became a favorite resting spot along this well traveled turnpike. Through zeal and industry, and wise investment, wealth poured into his coffers, and his admirable personal attributes won him the confidence and respect of all who knew him. He was tall and commanding, possessed a rare judgment and a world of common sense, and his advice was readily sought on all matters of importance in the community. In early life he became connected with the Baptist Church at South Woodstock, and served for many years as deacon and executive adviser, being an earnest advocate of religious liberty and tolerance. He was naturally opposed to the party which sought to hold onto the ecclesiastical constitution of Connecticut, and he aided in the adoption of the new constitution, and in the abolition of a privileged standing, serving also as one of the first legislators following the changed conditions. He died April 17, 1844, and is buried at West Thompson. Of the eight children born into his family the order of birth is as follows: Benjamin, born Oct. 30, 1775, who married Anna Lyon, and settled at Ashford; Levi, Oct. 30, 1775, who died Nov. 22, 1775; Levi (2), May 27, 1777; James, Aug. 20, 1779, who died May 4, 1826, in Providence, having married Abigale Farnum, of Thompson; Betsey, Jan. 31, 1783, who married Elisha Converse, and died in Melrose, Feb. 20, 1873; Joseph, April 18, 1785, who married Sally Stone, and later Eliza Miller, served in the war of 1812, and lived on the old Thompson homestead; Sally, Oct. 24, 1789, who lived at Burrillville, R. I., and married Elijah Whitman; and Alse, Sept. 13, 1793, who married William Bundy, of Thompson, an artilleryman in the war of 1812, and died Jan. 9, 1838.

(VI) Levi Wheaton, father of Simeon A., was born in Swansea, Mass., and came to Pomfret with his parents when quite young. He was reared to farming, but learned the coopers' trade, and after his marriage removed to Thompson, where he combined these occupations for a number of years. This farm was eventually disposed of and he returned to the paternal farm on Ragged Hill, Pomfret, now owned by his son, Simeon, where he farmed and followed his trade up to the time of his death, Feb. 15, 1846. He was one of the best farmers in his section of the country, and one of the staunchest Democrats. April 23, 1809, he married Amy Ballard, daughter of Jacob Ballard, of Thompson, and a soldier in the Revolutionary war. Mrs. Wheaton died April 25, 1877, having for seventeen years previously been stricken with the palsy, and unable to walk a step. She was the mother of nine children, the order of their birth being as follows: Levi, Jr., born March 5, 1810, a pioneer farmer of Illinois, who, while on the way to his home in the East was taken ill, and died in a hospital in Detroit, Oct. 16, 1838; Emily May, May 8, 1812, who married Zalmom Wood, a successful farmer, and died in Mendon, Mass.; Sally, March 17, 1814, who died Feb. 21, 1838; Maria, Dec. 16, 1816, who died March 16, 1860; Alice, July 20, 1819, who married Mr. Bliven, and died in Dakota; Abigail, July 2, 1821, who died unmarried in Pomfret; James, April 17, 1823, who died on his farm in Pomfret; Sylvester, Jan. 4, 1826, a shoe-maker of Eastford and a farmer, who married Ann Wilcox, and died, after being an invalid for forty years; and Simeon A.

(VII) Simeon A. Wheaton was but a few weeks old when his parents came to Pomfret, and he attended the public schools and the Woodstock Academy. He was reared on the paternal farm on Ragged Hill, which he now owns, came to Phoenixville, April 17, 1849, and succeeded Woodward & Allen in the general store business, to which he has since given his attention. A staunch Democrat, he was appointed postmaster in 1860, and held the position for twenty-five years; and he represented the town in the Legislature in 1882, during which session he served on the committee on Roads and Bridges. From 1877 to 1881 he was a member of the board of county commissioners, and he has served as local commissioner of the Superior Court for a number of years. As a delegate he has represented Eastford at numerous conventions, and he is regarded as the leader of the party in his part of the county. At present, and for many years past, he has been a registrar of voters, and for years has been justice of the peace and trial justice. No man in the town has a stronger hold upon the popular regard than has this venerable merchant and uncompromisingly upright politician. His influence extends over the whole State, where his attainments and fine character have made him hosts of friends, and where in earlier years he exerted his powers in furthering just legislation and promoting the issues of his party. A fearless man in all ways, he possesses decided opinions which are fortunately on the side of right and reason, and are therefore rarely questioned in matters of real importance. He has always been a great reader and keen observer, and possesses a valuable fund of general information.

In February of 1852, Mr. Wheaton married Elizabeth J. Lyon, a native of Pomfret, and daughter of Walter Lyon. Mrs. Wheaton died in 1866, at the age of forty years, leaving two children. (1) Amy Ann attended Woodstock Academy, and married Martin Etheridge, a blacksmith, to whose care she left the following children at the time of her death in North Windham: Allen W., living in Holyoke, Mass.; Asa E., a resident of New York; Elizabeth, wife of Emner Howlett, of Ashford; John B., of Eastford; and Ellery, also living in Eastford. (2) Charles A., the only son in the family, attended the district schools and Dudley Academy and is a successful farmer in Phoenixville. He represented Eastford in the Legislature of 1888, and has held several minor offices in the town. He has one child, Edith. For his second wife, Mr. Wheaton married Esther Pierce, in 1867, but of this union there is no issue.

COMFORT STARR BURLINGAME, president of the Windham County National Bank, at Danielson, is one of the most prominent financiers in eastern Connecticut. The family is an old established one in New England, and is numerous in a number of States.

Roger Burlingame, or Bullinggaame, the first ancestor of the family in America, came to Stonington, Conn., about 1637. Later he located at Providence Plantation, and there married. He owned land which is now comprised within the city limits of Providence, R. I. He was the American ancestor of Comfort S. Burlingame, of the family in Rhode Island, and, in fact, of the greater part of those bearing the name in this country.

Samuel Burlingame, the grandfather of Comfort S., of Brooklyn, came to Connecticut from Rhode Island, and settled in Canterbury, where his life ended. He was a merchant and also a manufacturer of clothing, according to the manner of the times. It was the custom to have the cloth cut and sent around to the farmers' wives, who would find time to do the necessary tailoring work, and who were quite willing to do work and receive payment in groceries, a mutual arrangement which was to the advantage of both parties. Samuel Burlingame and his wife had three children, one son and two daughters; one of the latter, Clarinda, is now the widow of Darius Wood, of Webster, Massachusetts.

Samuel Burlingame, son of Samuel and father of Comfort S., was a native of Rhode Island. During his earlier years he was engaged with his father in business, but he later learned the carpenter trade, at which he worked until the outbreak of the Civil war. Enlisting among the first patriots from his locality, he served his term, and then re-enlisted from Massachusetts. He died in Providence, R. I., in 1865, soon after his return home, at the early age of thirty-seven years, and was buried in Canterbury. There he married Judith Hyde, a native of that place, daughter of Comfort S. and Abigail (Hough) Hyde. Mrs. Burlingame died in 1896, in her seventy-first year. She was the beloved mother of the following named children: Comfort S. Alfred H., who died in young manhood; and Alice, who married John W. Conant, a silk manufacturer of Willimantic, and has two children, Carrie A. and Julia A.

(I) Deacon Samuel Hyde, Mrs. Burlingame's first ancestor in America, was born in 1610. He embarked in the ship "Jonathan," at London, bound for Boston, in April, 1639, and was the second set-ler in the village of Cambridge, about 1640. He and his wife, Temperance, who probably came in the same ship with him, had children as follows: Samuel; Joshua, born March 12, 1642; Job, born 1643; Sarah, born May 19, 1644; and Elizabeth.

(II) Job Hyde, born in 1643, married Elizabeth, daughter of John Fuller, Sr. They had children, among whom was Jonathan Hides, born March 12, 1684.

(III) Jonathan Hides married Elizabeth, daughter of Isaac Williams, Jan. 3, 1700. They had children, among whom was Isaac, born Nov. 1, 1700. Jackson's History of Newton, Mass., says this Jonathan was the first one of the Hydes to remove to Canterbury, Connecticut.

(IV) Isaac Hide, born Nov. 11, 1700, son of Jonathan and Elizabeth (Williams), married Elizabeth Starr, and died probably in 1776. He had a family of ten children, among whom was Nathan, born Sept. 23, 1751, who died April 21, 1827; he married Abigail Waldo. Isaac Hide's legatees in his will were Elizabeth, his wife, and his four sons, Isaac, Comfort, David and Nathan. His daughters were: Elizabeth, who married a Mr. Cleveland; Susannah, who married a Mr. Curtis; and Judah, who married a Mr. Adams.

(V) Comfort Hyde, son of Isaac, was born in Canterbury, Aug. 24, 1737, and there he followed farming in that town all his life. He married a Miss Faulkner, and their children were: Comfort Starr, Sarah, Alfred and Abigail, who married Willard Sharpe.

(VI) Comfort S. Hyde was born in Canterbury, Aug. 8, 1784, and like his father before him, engaged in farming. In all his business affairs he was successful, and he acquired quite a competency. He was a man of good education, and acquired much general information, and had much to do with the settlement of estates, often acting also as arbitrator in disputes. During the war of 1812 he served two months, participating in the defense of New London, Conn. In political principle he was a Democrat, and he took a deep interest in all public questions. He held nearly all the local offices, and in 1851 was a member of the Legislature. His ideas were original and he was ever ready to defend them, although very tolerant of the opinions of others. In religion he was a member of the Universalist Church, and he helped to build the church of that denomination at Canterbury. Comfort S. Hyde married Abigail Hough, and they had the following children: John, born Feb. 18, 1813, who married Emily Angel; Juliette, born Sept. 10, 1814; Jirah, born Aug. 23, 1816; and Judith, born Oct. 12, 1826, who married Samuel Burlingame. Comfort Starr Hyde died Aug. 29, 1868, and his wife passed away June 19, 1832.

Comfort S. Burlingame was born Jan. 5, 1853, in Canterbury, Conn. His early education was acquired in the district school at Canterbury, and later he attended the grammar school in Brooklyn. At the age of seventeen he took up the profession of teaching, the first winter in the Christian Corners district, in Brooklyn, after which he was engaged three winters in the North Society of Canterbury. This was followed by four years in the pursuit of his profession at the Allen Hill school, in Brooklyn, during which time he made many friends, both of a personal and public character. Although at that time he was but twenty-six years of age, Mr. Burlingame had displayed those elements of character which had attracted public notice, and he was honored by his fellow-citizens by election in 1879 to the State Legislature, being the youngest Democratic member of the House. At the same time the youngest Republican member was James P. Platt, who is now judge of the City court, Meriden, a son of United States Senator O. H. Platt. His mother resided on a farm in Canterbury, and until her death, in 1896, he conducted the farm, but after that event moved into the village of Brooklyn.

The high public office so well filled by the young educator was later filled by him with distinction through the sessions of 1887, 1889 and 1893, when he represented Canterbury. During 1887 he was one of the very active young men in the forwarding of the interests of the Storrs School, which is now the Connecticut Agricultural College, and his colleague in the movement, Hon. E. S. Henry, then senator from the Twenty-third district, who is now a member of Congress from the First district, was also very active, both working for an appropriation for this school in preference to Yale College. The gentlemen were leaders in the opposite parties, but on this subject they were in unison, and they were successful in their endeavors.

In the legislative session of 1889 Mr. Burlingame introduced the bill requiring that all oleomargarine sold must be white in color. When this important bill was first introduced it passed the House and Senate, but was vetoed by Gov. Bulkeley; however, it was again brought up, and its introducer had the satisfaction of having it passed over the veto in the House. This was a very important matter to the dairymen, and for his efforts Mr. Burlingame received much grateful commendation. In order to show appreciation of his services in the passing of the oleomargarine bill, he was appointed State dairy commissioner, in May, 1894, by Gov. Luzon B. Morris, and he held this office one month over a term, and, according to some of the best legal authorities, was entitled to hold it another term, because of the failure of Gov. Coffin to appoint a successor within the time set by law. However, rather than hold an office through a technicality, Mr. Burlingame resigned. The regular appropriation for the maintenance of this office for the two years was $4,000, yet Mr. Burlingame administered it so carefully that only $2,900 of the $4,000 was used, a record not equalled by any other incumbent of the office before or since. This valued legislator also made himself prominent in the session of 1893, when he was on the committee on Cities and Boroughs, which committee drafted the new and important bill governing the building of electric railways. In 1891, acceding to the wishes of his friends, he was a candidate for State senator from the Seventeenth district, nominally Republican by a majority of 600, and, although this caused Mr. Burlingame to lose the election, he cut the majority down to about one hundred votes.

For a period of four years Mr. Burlingame served on the Democratic State Central Committee, previous to 1896, at that time sending in his resignation, as he was not in accord with his party, belonging to the wing known as Gold Democrats. During his residence in Canterbury Mr. Burlingame served for a number of years on the school board, and for eight years was assessor. Upon taking the latter office he insisted upon the enforcement of the law which compelled citizens to render sworn statements of their property, and in this way the tax lists were greatly increased and the town debt was reduced.

In banking and financial circles Mr. Burlingame has also become conspicuous, and he is one of the incorporators of the Brooklyn Savings Bank, was a director in the Windham County Mutual Fire Insurance Company for a number of years, and served for many years previous to 1893 as a director in the Windham County National Bank. In that year he was chosen president to succeed John Palmer, who had resigned on account of failing health, and Mr. Burlingame has since held the position, his careful, conservative course meeting with general favor. At the time he entered upon these responsible duties the bank was located in Brooklyn, and was doing a very satisfactory business. However, as Brooklyn was not on a railroad line, its situation was not favorable for banking, and after deliberation the new president broached the idea of removing to a better location. This met with very bitter opposition from many quarters, but the change could be demonstrated as so judicious a move that the energy and convincing reasoning of Mr. Burlingame finally succeeded, and 407 of the 500 shares were voted in favor of the change. Charles P. Backus, the cashier, was Mr. Burlingame's able co-worker in this movement. At this period the bank had a capital stock of $50,000, having been previously reduced from $108,300, and deposits of $52,000. The same year the bank was moved to Danielson, 1895, Mr. Burlingame, with other directors, in spite of opposition, bought the First National Bank of Killingly, at Danielson, which was soon liquidated, the business being taken over to the Windham County National Bank in about six months' time; the deposits grew to about $250,000, the stock, which was formerly away below par, is not for sale, and since its removal to Danielson the bank has not lost a dollar through investments or loans on paper taken, while the profits to stockholders are increasing each year. Mr. Burlingame has the full confidence of the directors, stockholders and community.

Mr. Burlingame was one of the organizers of, and served for eight years as agent, manager and treasurer of, the Brooklyn Creamery Association, during that time doing about $150,000 worth of business, not losing one penny from bad accounts. He was a charter member of the Canterbury Grange, served as treasurer, and was afterward a member of the Brooklyn Grange. In addition to his manifold duties and responsibilities, he holds the position of clerk and treasurer of the local Unitarian Society, and since he has taken charge of its affairs the society has been very prosperous.

Enthusiastic and earnest in whatever he attends to at all, Mr. Burlingame has been a very active politician, and wields a wide influence. During his residence in Canterbury he nearly always carried the town for the Democratic party, although formerly and since the Republicans have carried the elections. Since coming to Brooklyn the town has been taken from a strong Republican majority to the doubtful side, and on several occasions the other party has been successful, owing to the able efforts of this leader.

Mr. Burlingame never married. He is a quiet and unostentatious man, of courteous manner, and is very popular with all classes. Through his wide business connections and successes in the political field he has become widely known. Always full of energy, he has the directness of judgment, combined with the broadness of mind, which has made him a leader among men and a safe and reliable financier.

EUGENE AUGUSTUS WHELOCK, treasurer and manager of the Putnam Woolen Company, is one of the successful and influential business men of Putnam, Windham county. He was reared in an atmosphere of business, as both his father and grandfather were prominent manufacturers before him. Of his ancestry, which is traced back many hundred years, he has occasion to be proud.

The Wheelocks, an old distinguished English family, intermarried in the early days with the Leversages. In 1285, during the reign of Henry II, Hugh De Wheelock, through his Knight, Richard De Maston, secured from Roger Manning all claim to the village of Wheelock. To this estate Thomas De Wheelock fell heir and became lord of Wheelock Manor. The family possessed a coat of arms, described as follows:

"Wheelock and Leversage of Wheelock." Wheelock Arms: Argent, chevron between three Catherine Wheels, sable. Leversage Arms: Argent, chevron between three plowshares, sable. Crest, a leopard's head, face jessant, a fleur de lis.

(I) Ralph Wheelock, the first of this family of whom we have much definite knowledge, was a relative, possibly a brother, of Abraham Wheelock, who was the first professor of Arabic at Cambridge University, and later, librarian. Ralph Wheelock was born in Shropshire, England, in 1600, and was educated at "Clare Hall," Cambridge University, graduating in 1626, and taking his M. A. in 1631. He married in England, and his wife, Rebecca, bore him nine children: Gershom, Mary, Benjamin, Samuel, Peregrina, Rebecca, Record, Experience, and Eleazer. Among his descendants were two presidents of Dartmouth College. While at Cambridge, Mr. Wheelock became a confirmed Puritan, and upon leaving the University, became a non-conformist minister; and with others he undoubtedly suffered much from religious persecution. In 1637, in company with his wife and daughter, Rebecca, he came to America, and in 1639 was made a freeman. Here he followed teaching. He resided for a time at Watertown, but upon the settlement of Dedham came to that place, building a residence there in 1651 or 1652. There, in 1655, when the first school was opened, he became its master, and was thus engaged for some time. In 1649, previous to his settling in Dedham, he was appointed one of the founders of the village of Medfield, receiving there the first lot portioned out to settlers, the one at the corner of Main and North streets, where he built him a residence. He died in November, 1683, in his eighty-fifth year, and his wife passed away in 1680.

Mr. Wheelock, one of the few honored with the title of "Mr.," was one of the most influential men of Dedham, and held at different times almost every important office within the gift of the town. He was one of the first selectmen of the place, and served on the board for four years (1651-55), and for several years he represented his town in the General Assembly. He was also a signer of the famous Dedham Covenant. Though he gave up preaching after coming to America, he was active in religious affairs, and assisted in the establishment of the church in Dedham. Exerting an influence in educational matters, he was one of the committee for collecting funds for Harvard College.

(II) Benjamin Wheelock, Sr., born in Medfield, Mass., Jan. 8, 1640, married in 1668 Elizabeth Bulen, of Medfield, and they had five children: Elizabeth, born in 1671; Mary, in 1674; Abiel, in 1675; Benjamin, Jr., in 1678; and Obediah, in 1685. In 1685 Mr. Wheelock moved his family from Medfield to Mendon, where he passed the rest of his life.

(III) Benjamin Wheelock (2), born in Medfield, Mass., died in Mendon. Dec. 9, 1700, he married Huldah Thayer, of Mendon, and they had eight children: Mary, born in January, 1702; Benjamin, in April, 1704; Daniel, in December, 1707; Huldah, in August, 1710; Jonathan, in July, 1713; Paul, in January, 1715; Silas, in March, 1718; and David, in January, 1720.

(IV) Silas Wheelock, son of Benjamin (2), a farmer, was born in Mendon and died there. May 20, 1740, he married Hannah Albee, and they had ten children: Simeon, born March 29, 1741; Seth, March 21, 1743; Caleb, May 7, 1745; Ebenezer, Jan. 27, 1747; Hannah, Nov. 28, 1749; Perle, Aug. 6, 1752; Calvin, March 5, 1754; Luther, March 9, 1756; Eunice, May 8, 1758; and Rhoda, April 20, 1761.

(V) Lieut. Simeon Wheelock, born in Mendon, Mass., March 29, 1741, moved to Uxbridge in 1762, during the early settlement of that place. Nov. 28, 1763, he married Deborah Thayer, of Mendon, and they had eight children: Eunice, born Feb. 13, 1765; Royal, July 16, 1766; Silas, March 26, 1769; Hannah, Oct. 16, 1771; Rachel, June 10, 1774; Polly, March 11, 1779; Nancy, Nov. 19, 1781; and Jerry, who is mentioned below.

Mr. Wheelock became prominent in the military affairs of our country. In the Crown Point expedition of 1760 he acted as adjutant of a Rhode Island regiment under the commands of Col. Christopher Harris and Gen. Amerest. July 6, 1774, he was appointed a member of the Uxbridge Revolutionary committee. When the war broke out he enlisted as lieutenant of a company of minute men under Capt. Joseph Chapin, and they marched from Uxbridge, April 19, 1775, upon the Lexington alarm, and afterward took part in many engagements. Later he served in Shay's Rebellion, and while thus engaged, at Springfield, met his death, which occurred from an injury received by a fall on the ice while descending Arsenal Hill.

(VI) Jerry Wheelock, who was for many years a well-known manufacturer of Uxbridge, Mass., was born in that place, Sept. 19, 1784. In early life he learned machinery making and the trade of "set workman." Jan. 24, 1811 he married Suky Day, daughter of Daniel and Sylvia (Wheelock) Day, of Uxbridge, Mass. Mr. and Mrs. Wheelock had six children, all of whom were born in Uxbridge: Charles A., Feb. 27, 1812; Sylvia A., Feb. 3, 1815; Silas M., Nov. 11, 1817; Maria I., July 7, 1821, who died young; Maria, March 8, 1824; and Abbie E. R., Sept. 22, 1832.

Mr. Wheelock was one of the first to manufacture and operate woolen mill machinery in Uxbridge, and in 1810 with his father-in-law, Daniel Day, he became a member of the first Woolen Company in that place. After several years he withdrew from this company, went to Holden, Mass., and engaged as manufacturer of woolen mill machinery for Artemus Dryden, Jr., continuing with him for many years. During this time he was often sent to surrounding places to set up machinery in new mills. He was in Falmouth in 1814, during its bombardment by the British warship, "Nimrod." In this same year he purchased an interest in the Rivulent Manufacturing Company, at Uxbridge, Mass., and he continued as a member of this firm for about four years. For the next sixteen years he gave his time almost exclusively to the manufacture and repairing of woolen mill machinery. So greatly had his business enlarged in 1834 that he took in his sons as partners. Carrying on a prosperous industry, he continued his connection with the firm until 1846, when he retired. He died in Uxbridge, Mass., Oct. 10, 1861.

(VII) Hon. Silas Mandeville Wheelock probably did more for the upbuilding of manufacturing industries in his section than any other individual. Born in Uxbridge, Mass., Nov. 11, 1817, he received his education in that place. His privileges were somewhat limited, being confined to an attendance of five months a year at the district schools, and three or four terms' work in a select school; but under the tutorship of such wise instructors as E. Porter Dyer, afterward Congregational minister in Shrewsbury, Mass., and C. C. Jewett, afterward Prof. Jewett, librarian of Smithsonian Institute and of the Boston Public Library, he received the foundation for a successful business career. Early in life, in his tenth year, he began work in a woolen mill, "piecing rolls for the billy," at which he earned fourteen cents a day and board. From that time he was almost constantly engaged in some form of work connected with woolen manufacture. He served at different times as operator, foreman, and superintendent of mills; and as manager and financier of private companies and corporations, having at one time the management of the woolen department in commission houses in Boston and New York. In 1846 he and his brother formed the firm of C. A. and S. M. Wheelock. They at first manufactured satinets, plaid linseys and tweeds. Later, in 1855, they enlarged the factory, put in steam power, and began turning out fancy cassimeres, discontinuing the making of other articles. On May 5, 1841, he married Irene Taft, who was born in Uxbridge, Mass., Sept. 19, 1816, daughter of Luke Taft, and a descendant in the sixth generation of Robert Taft, who is mentioned below. She was a woman of strong character, an earnest Christian, and possessed especially winning traits. She died in Uxbridge, Jan. 26, 1900. Mr. and Mrs. Wheelock had five children, all of whom were born in Uxbridge: Ellen Maria, born Sept. 2, 1842, married, June 6, 1866, Eben B. Haywood, of Uxbridge, and died in 1872; Eugene Augustus, mentioned below; Alice Augusta, born Jan. 22, 1849, who married, Oct. 21, 1874, Henry R. Smith, of Leominster, Mass., a piano case manufacturer, and is now deceased; Arthur, born March 26, 1851, now treasurer and manager of the Calumet Woolen Company of Uxbridge, Mass.; Henry, born Jan. 14, 1857, superintendent of the Putnam Woolen Company for about a year, who married, Nov. 3, 1880, Jennie G. Taft, of Uxbridge, where she now resides. He died in that place, Nov. 13, 1881.

In 1870 Mr. Wheelock organized the Putnam Woolen Company and purchased the Harris Company's property in Putnam, consisting of a factory, one-fourth of the Quinebaug river at that point, together with dwelling houses and other property. Of this new firm, Mr. Wheelock became treasurer and manager, and continued as such till 1887, when he resigned the treasurership, on account of more pressing business elsewhere. During this time, in 1883, he assisted in the organization and became treasurer and manager of another corporation, the Calumet Woolen Company, at Uxbridge. This firm purchased the New Village mill property at that place, which, in addition to factory, machinery, houses, etc., embraced the whole of the Blackstone river at that point. After repairing the mill and making many changes and additions, the company began the manufacture of fancy cassimeres. In 1886 this firm enlarged its capital stock, purchased the Uxbridge Woolen Factory, which they called the Hecla Mill, and began operating it in connection with their other business.

For over sixty years Mr. Wheelock was connected with woolen mill companies, and always proved himself a wise manager. Every debt which he contracted was paid in full when due. Though conservative, he never lacked courage in undertaking new enterprises or meeting emergencies; as an employer he always held the good will and respect of his men, and while friendly, maintained at the same time a high degree of discipline. Besides being a manufacturer, he was for many years closely identified with the business of the Uxbridge Saving Bank, and was director of the Blackstone National Bank, of Uxbridge, from 1858 till his death. He survived his Golden Wedding, which he celebrated May 5, 1891, and died at his home in Wheelockville, Oct. 15, 1901, in his eighty-fourth year. He is buried in Prospect Hill cemetery.

Mr. Wheelock rarely evinced ardent interest in politics, but served with conscientiousness on the board of selectmen for many years. He also acted on several town committees. In 1887, at the earnest request of his friends, he accepted the nomination for State Senator, and, being elected (by a very complimentary majority), afterward served two terms with marked ability and distinction. He also received the honor of attending as a delegate, the Republican national convention, which met at Philadelphia in 1900.

(VIII) Eugene A. Wheelock, born in Uxbridge, Mass., Feb. 15, 1846; received his secular education in the common and high schools of his town and in Williston Academy, East Hampton, Mass., which he attended for a short period. Strict attention to his studies enabled him to progress rapidly, so that by the time he was seventeen he was prepared to leave school. In the meantime, having given every spare moment of his vacations, since he was ten years old, to work in his father's mills, he had laid the foundation for a successful business career. Now entering the Uxbridge factory as a steady hand, he remained there till 1867. Though but twenty-one years old, he was then put in charge of the S. M. Wheelock & Co.'s Wilsonville, Conn., mill, which employed about one hundred men and women. There he remained for three years. During that time, June 17, 1868, he married Sarah Smith Taft, daughter of Zodok Arnold and Mary Mowry (Brown) Taft, of Uxbridge, Mass. Mrs. Wheelock possessed many charming traits of character and won for herself a host of friends. She died Dec. 20, 1901, in Putnam. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Wheelock, all in Putnam. (1) Silas Mandeville, born March 10, 1871, graduated from the Putnam high school, attended Cushing Academy, at Ashburnham, Mass., for some time, and then, with the intention of becoming a manufacturer, entered the employ of the Putnam Woolen Company, and, after acquiring sufficient knowledge of the business, Oct. 1, 1901, was made superintendent of the company's mills. Oct. 18, 1899, he married Ruth E. Shaw, daughter of George E. and Ellen S. Shaw, of Putnam. Mr. and Mrs. Wheelock have one child, Sylvia, born in Putnam, Nov. 26, 1900. (2) Ellen Maria, born March 20, 1873, was graduated from the Putnam high school in 1890, and afterward attended the Bishop Hopkins Seminary, at Burlington, Vt., and the Burnham school, at Northampton, Mass. She is a charter member of Elizabeth Porter Putnam Chapter, Daughters of American Revolution, and has served as corresponding secretary for several years. (3) Mary Taft, born Aug. 8, 1875, attended the Putnam high school. She is a charter member of the Daughters of American Revolution, and their librarian. (4) Irene Taft, born April 7, 1881, was graduated from the Putnam high school in 1899 and attended Smith College two years. (5) Henry Arnold, born Aug. 27, 1883, was graduated from the Putnam high school in 1900 and spent two years in Phillips Academy, at Exeter, N. H. In 1902 he entered the Sheffield Scientific School of Yale College.

In June, 1870, Mr. Wheelock was sent to Putnam as superintendent and agent of the Putnam Woolen Company's No. 1 mill, which they had recently purchased of the Harris Company. This new company enlarged its business in 1880 by the purchase of the mill in Putnam, owned by C. F. Mason & Co., and Mr. Wheelock became manager of both. In 1886, when his father resigned the trusteeship of this company, he was elected to fill the vacancy. He has since acted both as manager and treasurer. Under his efficient management the company has carried on a highly flourishing business. The mills contain nineteen sets of machinery, employ about three hundred and fifty men and women, and manufacture woolen cassimeres, overcoatings and suitings. The company owns its water power privilege, which is considered the best on the stream.

Though Mr. Wheelock subordinates other interests to his business, he is, nevertheless, a public-spirited man; for a number of years he has acted on th Republican town committee, and in 1888 and 1889 was a member of the State central committee from the sixteenth district. In educational affairs, too, he has long been active. He was a member of the first high school board, was one of the committee for the erection of the building in 1874, and acted on the town board of education for over twelve years. He is also a trustee of the Putnam Town Library. Fraternally highly connected, he belongs to Uxbridge Lodge, I. O. O. F., which he joined at the age of twenty-one; to Quinebaug Lodge, No. 106, F. & A. M., of which he was worshipful master for four years; to Putnam Chapter, R. A. M., No. 41; to Columbian Commandery, Knights Templar, of Norwich, Conn.; to Aleppo Temple, Mystic Shriners, of Boston; and was a member of the Knights of Pythias of Putnam until they disbanded.

THE TAFT FAMILY. Through his mother, Mrs. Silas M. Wheelock, Eugene A. Wheelock is descended from Robert Taft, who came to this country from England about 1678. Some think this family was of Scottish origin, as there is a tradition that he was a Scotch Puritan, an adherent of the Commonwealth, who, disgusted with the Cavaliers, sought refuge from their civil and religious tyranny in the forests of New England. There is, however, no authentic record to this effect. After coming to America he remained for some time in Braintree, Mass., where he owned a house and lot. But in 1679 he sold that property and moved to Mendon. There he afterward resided, becoming especially prominent in the years succeeding the war of 1680 and the re-settlement of the town. His residence, which he purchased upon coming there, was called "Fortfield," and stood near what is now Mendon pond, then called Taft's pond. His wife's name was Sarah, and they had five sons, all of whom grew to manhood. He was a carpenter by trade, personally a plain, unlettered man, but exceedingly well-to-do. When his children reached maturity he gave each of them a farm.

Joseph Taft, Sr., son of Robert, sometimes called Lieutenant or Captain to distinguish him from a nephew of that name, resided at different times in Mendon and Uxbridge. The farm which he received from his father was in Uxbridge, and is still owned by one of his descendants, George Z. Taft, of that place. Mr. Taft figured prominently in the management of town affairs, both at Mendon and Uxbridge. He served on committees in both places to invest the quota of bills of credit. It is through Moses, son of Joseph, James and Luke that Mrs. Silas M. Wheelock traces her descent to the original Robert mentioned above.

Mrs. Eugene A. Wheelock was also a descendant of Robert and Joseph Taft, and traces her descent through Aaron, son of Joseph; Zodok, and Zodok A. Many descendants of the Taft family have become illustrious American citizens.

HENRY S. MARLOR. Among the most prominent, wealthy and highly respected citizens of the town of Brooklyn, Conn., is Henry S. Marlor, whose successful career as a financier is well known to the public, but who is still better known as a man of cultured tastes and a patron of art and literature. His business career was principally in the city of New York, where he successfully met the giants of Wall street, but his elegant and refined home is one of the most charming in Brooklyn, Windham Co., Connecticut.

Henry S. Marlor bears his father's name, and the latter was born in Hinckley, near Leicester, England, where his life was spent until the age of forty years. His business was that of boot and shoe dealer, and until he came to the United States, in 1840, he continued in that line. After reaching New York he engaged in a retail crockery business, on Upper Bowery, which is now Fourth avenue, associating himself with the firm of Dare & Webb, this firm being at that time the largest importers of crockery in New York. Mr. Dare, of that firm, was a brother-in-law of Mr. Marlor. Until 1860 Mr. Marlor continued in business, retiring from activity at that time, and for a season he lived at Yorkville, but later located in Brooklyn, Conn., and there spent his last years, dying Oct. 2, 1886, at the age of eighty-two years. His last resting place is in the beautiful Greenwood cemetery, at Brooklyn. Mr. Marlor was a member of the Baptist Church, a devout Christian, and faithfully endeavored to follow the teachings of the Bible in his every-day life. In politics he was somewhat independent, but usually voted with the Republican party.

Henry S. Marlor, Sr., was married in England to Jane Dare, who died in New York at the age of fifty years. Their children were: Emma, who is the widow of Capt. Benjamin S. Halleck, a vessel owner and master engaged in the coasting trade, resides at Riverhead, Suffolk Co., N. Y.; Ann, who married E. P. Wheeler, who was in the grocery business in New York, died at Babylon, L. I.; John S., who married Jane Esterbrook, was engaged in the millinery and fancy goods trade on Bleeker street, New York, for a long period, but now lives in retirement in that city; Ruth, who is the widow of James H. Morrow, a builder, resides in New York; Henry S.; Thomas S. is mentioned in full farther on; George W., who married Martha McClymont, began life as a clerk in the Metropolitan Bank, in New York City, and in 1868 was appointed to the Treasury service by Gen. Hillhouse, at that time Assistant-Treasurer of the United States, and he has remained in the service ever since, and for several years past has been Assistant Deputy Treasurer of the United States, at the Treasury department in New York City; Ellen married Frederick Coole, who for a long period was connected with the Lorillard Tobacco Company, and both died in New York; and Laura S., widow of George Sweezy, a farmer in Suffolk, L. I., resides at Riverhead, L. I., where she is a noted teacher of music and a skilled performer on the piano. The second marriage of Henry S. Marlor, Sr., was to Jane Dearborn Minton. No children were born of the second marriage.

Henry S. Marlor, of Brooklyn, Conn., was born in Hinckley, England, May 10, 1835, and he was five years of age when he accompanied his parents to the United States. After spending six years at public school No. 11, in New York City, he then, at the age of eleven years, began to learn the trade of gold watch-case making, under the supervision of E. L. Preston, a native of Brooklyn, Conn., then engaged in that business in New York. In 1854 he entered the Metropolitan National Bank, of New York, as one of the clerks. Many other young men entered about the same time, but none advanced so rapidly as he, nor filled so many responsible positions during his ten years of service there. His severing of most pleasant relations was on account of failing health. In 1862 Mr. Marlor spent three months in active military service as a member of the 22d N. Y. V. I.

After resigning from the bank Mr. Marlor embarked in the brokerage banking business, forming a partnership with a Mr. Blake, who was a former associate in the Metropolitan Bank, the firm doing business under the style of Blake & Marlor, their offices being located at No. 40 Pine street. Again failing health warned Mr. Marlor that a change would be necessary, and he was obliged, in 1868, although success was crowning every effort, to retire from the business field. During these years he had been a member of the old open Board of Brokers before its consolidation with the New York Stock Exchange, and so high was his ability rated that he was made its vice-president prior to its consolidation.

Having accumulated a competency, Mr. Marlor now looked about for a pleasant home, where he could find rest and refreshment and cultivate those tastes which the press of business had precluded. In 1869 he purchased his fine farm of 250 acres, in Brooklyn, Conn., and there he has expended a fortune in its improvement and adornment. Not only does he hire more labor than any other private individual in Brooklyn, but he also treats his employees in such a manner as to have won their respect and willing service. Mr. Marlor retained his seat in the Stock Exchange until 1899. During his business career he transacted business with some of the ablest and best-known financiers of the country, and it is on record that he was the only known man who ever cornered the late Jay Gould, the occasion being upon the re-organization of the Texas Pacific Railroad.

Mr. Marlor is an enthusiastic lover of Nature, and one of his chief delights is to wander over his fine estate, accompanied by his favorite dog—an inseparable companion and faithful and valued friend. A friend to the birds and animals, none on his property need ever fear the sportsman's gun. Although his early educational advantages were not extensive, the quiet, cultured, scholarly man of to-day shows no lack in speech or bearing, while his tastes, occupations and surroundings are those of the highest ideals of refinement. His magnificent library contains what is best in the world of literature, with all of which Mr. Marlor is thoroughly and enjoyably familiar. One feature of this library is a collection of rare historical works and papers of value, not only to the reader but to the deep student, many of these having been purchased in other lands and collected with the real enthusiasm of a lover of literature.

In political life Mr. Marlor has never taken a very active part, but the wise statesmanship of the late lamented President McKinley made of him, at least during his administration, an adherent to the Republican party. With his wife he attends the Episcopal Church, she being a devoted member of that body, his generosity in this direction being as noted elsewhere.

In higher art and literary associations, especially in the city of New York, Mr. Marlor is well known and a conspicuous figure. His membership is valued in the Metropolitan Museum of Art, of New York; the Museum of Natural History; the Zoological Society, of New York; the Horticultural Club, of New York; the Reform Club; the Grolier Club, a very exclusive club for book lovers and literary men; Lafayette Post, G. A. R., of New York, which is the wealthiest post in that city, and the one from which originated the idea of having the American flag float over every school house in the United States and her possessions; a life member of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, in which he is very active and enthusiastic; and also of the Audubon Society of Connecticut, intended to act for the preservation of birds; and many other organizations of lesser degree in New York, in which city is Mr. Marlor's home during the winter season, he owning a magnificent residence on Lenox Hill.

In 1855 Mr. Marlor was married to Miss Harriet J. Van Brunt, a descendant of one of the old knickerbocker families of high estate. No children have been born to this union. Mr. Marlor is a man of strong character, firm and positive in his views, a kind and sympathetic friend, and a most formidable enemy. Outspoken, none are ever in doubt as to his opinion when it is a question of right or wrong, but few men are more capable of winning warm attachment. Mr. Marlor is a thorough business man, and all his work must be performed in a systematic manner and according to contract, Mr. Marlor always doing just as he promises and expecting others to do the same. Although an unusually successful man, he is singularly modest and unassuming, though his means have been accumulated entirely through his own efforts. To him his own hearthstone is the best place in the world, and there he finds that ease and companionship which make it an ideal home.

THOMAS S. MARLOR, a practical philanthropist and public-spirited citizen of Brooklyn, Windham county, who passed away in New York City, Dec. 21, 1898, was born Dec. 10, 1839, in England, and when six months old came to the United States with his parents, who were of exacting, truthful Puritan stock. They had a family of nine children, all of whom received thorough religious training.

Thomas S. Marlor was educated in the public schools of the city of New York, where his parents located on coming to this country. At the age of twelve he was apprenticed to learn the trade of engine turning, and then passed to responsible positions in the wholesale jewelry and dry goods business. At the age of seventeen he started in business for himself as a gold pen merchant. A year later he had three places of business, one in Chestnut street, Philadelphia; one in Broadway and one in Maiden Lane, New York City. His tastes inclined him decidedly to financial affairs, and in 1861 he went into Wall street, and although by an unfortunate turn of events lost $22,000, almost his entire capital, he retrieved himself by becoming a broker for the street. He was one of the first members of the Gold Exchange, working eighteen hours a day during the stirring times of the war when gold went out of sight. He had the business of several important houses. Then he became a banker as a founder of the firm of S. B. Benedict & Co. Mr. Benedict dying soon after, he managed the business under the name of T. S. Marlor & Co., until 1868, when he retired, satisfied with the competence he had secured in six and a half brief but important years. He held a number of places of trust, including the position of trustee of the Bankers' and Brokers' Association, and was a member of the Stock Exchange until his death.

At the breaking out of the war of the Rebellion Mr. Marlor was intensely loyal to the government under which he was reared; and unable himself to take up arms in its defense, he not only contributed freely and liberally through the ordinary channels, but at his own personal expense he procured a recruit and sent him into the field, thus discharging by proxy a duty which he felt to be upon him but which it was neither proper nor wise for him to undertake to perform in his own person.

In 1869, having met with very gratifying success in business and being desirous of disengaging himself to some extent from its burdens, Mr. Marlor purchased a tract of land in the village of Brooklyn, Conn., and erected upon it the handsome country residence to which he retired with his family. He soon afterward acquired considerable other real estate in the neighborhood of his home, and at once identified himself in a most thorough and liberal manner with the interests of the town of his adoption. He manifested his public spirit and practical philanthropy in many ways, bestowing numerous gifts and privileges upon the town, the village and the religious society with which he was connected. The handsome soldier's monument which stands near the green in the village of Brooklyn was wholly the gift of Mr. Marlor, as was also the site of the State monument to the memory of General Israel Putnam, which occupies a commanding position in the vicinity of the memorial referred to. The Putnam equestrian statue was erected by the State, but the site and all the improvements upon it, including the grading, the heavy granite coping and the granite roadway, were provided by Mr. Marlor at his own expense acceptably to the State Monument Commission. Probably no individual citizen of Brooklyn ever gave as liberally and voluntarily of his time and money for the benefit of his fellow-citizens and for the improvement and beautification of the village as Mr. Marlor did continually after making this delightful place his home.

Mr. Marlor was frequently called upon to accept positions of public service and trust, but was always disinclined to office-holding, refusing more opportunities in this way than he accepted. Although claimed by the Democrats, he was in the best political sense an Independent, and his elections to office were almost invariably by such majorities as show the voice of the people rather than the call of any political party. In 1873 he was sent to the Connecticut House as an Independent, receiving 240 votes to 26 for his opponent in a strong Republican town. He was chairman of the committee on Banks. In 1874 he was returned and in 1875 was chosen Senator from the old Thirteenth district by a gratifying majority. Governor Ingersoll offered him in 1874 the appointment for bank commissioner under the reorganization, but he felt obliged to decline. In 1875 he was appointed by Governor Ingersoll on a special bank commission, acting with John W. Steadman, of Norwich, Conn., and David P. Nichols, of Danbury, Conn. The year before he was added to the committee on New Capitol Plans. He also served on the State Board of Centennial Managers. In October, 1886, he was offered the nomination of the Democratic Congressional convention, but refused to accept, and a second time had the same offer made him with the same result. In 1892 he was one of the Democratic presidential electors for the State of Connecticut. Of the Connecticut Reformatory Home he was a corporator; of the Prisoners' Aid Association director, and a corporator and director of the Brooklyn Savings Bank.

Mr. Marlor was an active member of the Episcopal Society of Brooklyn, although at one time he had been an attendant of the Congregational Church, and he was always ready to do his part in every thing which had in view the welfare and proper entertainment of the people, and particularly the education and refinement of the rising generation. As an evidence of his own appreciation of the services of his coachman, who had been in his employ twenty-five years, in November, 1887, he made to him a deed in fee simple of the house in which he lived.

Mr. Marlor married early in life Miss Mary F. Loper, who survives him. He died, as stated before, in New York City, Dec. 21, 1898, and his remains rest in Brooklyn Cemetery, where a very fine, large monument to his memory marks his last resting place. The Marlor homestead is on the Pomfret road, on the edge of Brooklyn village, in a delightful spot where many a guest tested and enjoyed the abounding hospitality of Mr. Marlor and his estimable wife. Mr. Marlor, as might be supposed, was extremely popular, and by his death Brooklyn sustained a severe loss. His children were three, as follows: (1) Charles S. L. is mentioned in full below. (2) Lily Frances, born Aug. 11, 1863, died Aug. 21, 1865. (3) EDWIN M. M., born Jan. 6, 1867, in the city of New York, came to Brooklyn, Conn., when a boy; he was educated in the schools of Brooklyn and by private tuition, and his life has been spent in this town since his first coming. He married Gladys F., daughter of John P. Wood, of Brooklyn, and has three children: Edwin M., Dorothy M. and Frances. He is a Democrat and has served two years on the board of selectmen, serving the first year as the second member of the board and the next year as its chairman. He was elected County Commissioner in 1891, and was chairman of the board and served for two and a half years. He attends the Unitarian Church.

HON. CHARLES S. L. MARLOR was born July 12, 1860, in New York City, and was twelve years old when his parents removed to Connecticut to make their home in Brooklyn. He attended the common schools here and a preparatory school in Williamstown, Mass., in preparation for Williams College, which he entered in 1880. He remained only one year in college, however, when he left and engaged in the stock brokerage business with Samuel G. McGourkey, a son of the cashier of the Metropolitan National Bank of New York. Marlor & Co. was the style of this young firm which located on Broadway in the big city and continued for a number of years after which Mr. Marlor retired from business and again made his home in Brooklyn. While in business he owned a seat in the Stock Exchange, but he has since disposed of it and now devotes his time to the management of his financial interests. Mr. Marlor purchased his Brooklyn home, formerly the Apollos Richmond place, from the Atwoods of Wauregan. He has spent large sums in its improvement, and now has one of the finest homes in the town.

Mr. Marlor married, in New York, Miss Jennie D. Rogers, of that city. They have three children: Thomas S. and Henry S. and Ruth. Both he and his wife attend the Episcopal Church, of which Mr. Marlor is a liberal supporter.

Previous to 1896 Mr. Marlor always supported the Democratic ticket, but in that year and again in 1900 he supported and voted for William McKinley. In local politics he is now classed as independent. In 1891, which was the year of the "deadlock session," he was elected to the State Legislature on the Democratic ticket, overcoming a Republican majority. He was chosen again in 1892, and served on the important committee on Banks, the committee on Fisheries, the committee on Judicial Nominations, and the Putnam Memorial Camp committee. During the second campaign of Grover Cleveland for the presidency Mr. Marlor was the secretary for Windham county of the National Association of the Democratic Clubs. He was appointed by Gov. Morgan G. Bulkeley as the Democratic member from Windham county on the World's Fair Commission and he served on the Executive Committee of the State Board for the World's Fair. When the Putnam Monument was dedicated, June 4, 1888, Mr. Marlor was one of the staff in charge of the services. Fraternally he is a member of Delta Psi Greek Letter Society of Williams College, also of Moriah Lodge, No. 15, F. & A. M., of Danbury. Mr. Marlor has a wide circle of friends in Brooklyn with whom he is very popular, as he is also in wider circles beyond his home town.

HON. CHARLES EDWIN SEARLS, lawyer, former Secretary of State, of Connecticut, legislator, etc., of Thompson, and Putnam, has long since taken rank as one of the leading lawyers of the Windham county Bar.

Born in Pomfret, Conn., March 25, 1846, Mr. Searls is a son of the late Edwin C. and Caroline Mathewson Searls, and a descendant of the fifth generation from (I) Robert Searle, or Searl, who was admitted an inhabitant of Dorchester, Mass., June 9, 1662. He had married in 1660 a wife named Deborah—, who died March 2, 1714. He died Feb. 17, 1717. They had the following children: Nathaniel, born June 9, 1662, who married in 1694 Sarah, daughter of John Rogers and Elizabeth Pebody, and a great-granddaughter of Thomas Rogers of the "Mayflower;" Salter, born June 26, 1664, mentioned below; Edna, Feb. 24, 1669, who died when young; Robert, July 2, 1671; Edna, March 18, 1674; Deborah, April 4, 1677; and Jabez, March 16, 1679. From Robert Searle, the American ancestor, Charles Edwin Searls' descent is through Salter, Bela and Edwin C. Searls.

(II) Salter Searle, born June 26, 1664, married and located in Windham county, Conn., where he engaged in farming. Of their children eight were sons.

(III) Bela Searls married Hannah Wolcott, and their two sons who reached manhood were Edwin C. and Henry.

(IV) Edwin C. Searls, born in 1815, in Chaplin, Conn., married Caroline Mathewson, of Pomfret, and they had only one son, Charles Edwin. Edwin C. Searls was in his early life engaged in mercantile business in Pomfret. Subsequently he removed to Brooklyn, N. Y., and was engaged as a broker, having an office in New York city, and becoming a well known and substantial business man of that metropolis. His death occurred Oct. 3, 1857.

(V) Charles Edwin Searls, in 1858, after the death of his father, returned to Connecticut, to the town of Thompson, which has since been his place of residence. His early boyhood was passed in Brooklyn, N. Y., where he received instruction in private schools. At Thompson he also attended a private school, and in 1864 entered Yale College, from which he was graduated with the class of 1868. Following this event he began his study for the law in the office of the late Gilbert W. Phillips, at Putnam. He was admitted to the Bar in Windham county in 1870, and at once began the practice of his profession in Putnam, where he has since maintained an office, and been actively and successfully engaged as a lawyer. Through his studious habits, diligence and force, he has reached a creditable position throughout the county and State in the profession, and in citizenship. He has professionally represented about all of the extensive corporations of his locality. He has been a number of times honored by his fellow townsmen and the citizens of the State by election to public offices, the duties of which he has discharged with efficiency and dignity, with satisfaction to his constituents and credit to himself. He began his official career as town clerk in 1869, elected as a Republican. Continuously thereafter to the present time he has served as justice of the peace for Windham county. He was elected to the House of Representatives of the State from Thompson in 1871, and was again elected to that body in 1886, being a conspicuous candidate in the latter session for speaker. He was chosen Secretary of State in 1881, and served one term. In 1896 he was a delegate from the State of Connecticut to the Republican national convention at St. Louis. Mr. Searls is now a member of the executive committee of the State Bar Association, and a member of the local council for Connecticut of the National Bar Association. He is an enterprising and public-spirited citizen, and has ever been interested and active in movements for the welfare of the people of his town.

On his mother's side Mr. Searls descends from James Mathewson, who, with his wife, Hannah (Field) Searls, is of record at Providence, R. I., as early as 1658. James Mathewson was a deputy to the General Court in 1680.

Mr. Searls was married Oct. 8, 1902, to Miss Sarah Alice Fell, of Boston, a daughter of Thomas Fell, a prominent business man formerly of Boston, now of Providence, of English descent.

Through the following line sprang a branch of the Rhode Island, New London county, Conn., and northeastern Pennsylvania Searls:

(I) Robert; (II) Nathaniel; (III) Nathaniel (2), who married Elizabeth Kinnecut, and settled in Little Compton, R. I.; (IV) Constant, who settled in Stonington, Conn., and married Hannah Miner; (V) Rev. Roger, who married Catherine Scott; (VI) Leonard, who married Lydia Dimock.

HON. SILAS F. LOOMER. In the death of Mr. Loomer at his home in Willimantic, Dec. 11, 1899, that city and Windham county lost one of the most successful business men, and one who did much to improve the community in which his life was passed.

Mr. Loomer was born Sept. 19, 1824, near what is known as Hop River, in Columbia, Conn., and was left fatherless at an early age. His elementary education was obtained in the old red school house not far from the west shore of the Columbia river, and at the Ellington High School. After teaching for some years in towns adjoining Columbia, he took a contract to furnish wood, ties and lumber for the old Hartford, Providence & Fishkill Railroad, and to this he soon added the business of furnishing poles to the telegraph company. In these early business ventures he displayed that far-seeing ability which characterized him all through life, and enabled him to acquire early a competence, wholly by his own efforts, and second to none in the community. In May, 1861, he sold out the old homestead in Hop River, and moved with his family to Willimantic, Windham county, where he continued to deal in railroad material, and also established a coal and lumber yard, the first in the city. This venture was looked upon as very rash by the business men of the time, but it was a flattering success from the start. In 1878 he sold out this business to Lincoln & Smith, it now being owned and operated by C. L. Boss, at No. 50 North street. After retiring from the lumber business, Mr. Loomer took up the insurance business, and quickly built up the largest insurance agency in the city, and in this line he remained until his retirement in 1891, when he sold out his interests.

Mr. Loomer held to the idea that the town in which he had made his money was a good place for its investment, and in 1879 he bought a tract of land fronting seventy-two feet on Main street, and 240 feet on North street, and there began the erection of the finest opera house in the eastern part of the State. While Mr. Loomer always interested himself in public and municipal affairs, only with one or two exceptions did he consent to hold official station. Before coming to Willimantic, he represented Columbia in the General Assembly as a Democrat in 1859. In Willimantic he was made first selectman in 1885, and was elected one or two terms on the board of burgesses.

Mr. Loomer enjoyed a reputation as a safe and conservative financier, and when the Dime Savings Bank was organized he became its first president, a position he retained until his disagreement with the board of directors and managers in insisting that the Bank should take no risks whatever with the money committed to its care. For five years he was a director of the First National Bank, and he was long president of the Willimantic Savings Institute; for many years also he was a director of the Air Line Railroad.

While a young man Mr. Loomer was married to Miss Parmelia White, of Columbia, who died April 9, 1897, the mother of three children, one of whom, Anson, died at a very early age. Of the other two children, Fred C. grew to a very promising young manhood, and became a partner with his father in the lumber and coal business, but died about twenty-five years ago, and Julia, the oldest child, married the Hon. John Manning Hall, now president of the N. Y., N. H. & H. Railroad. While Mr. Loomer was a keen business man, it was a principle with him to be strictly honorable in all his dealings with his fellow men, and it can be said of but few men that they have done more than he for the prosperity of Willimantic. In all his social relations he was genial and companionable, and he made and kept many warm friends.

HON. JOHN MANNING HALL, of New Haven, president of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co., and former judge of the Superior Court of Connecticut, was, until recent years a resident of Willimantic, Windham county, the place of his birth, and one that he long has honored.

President Hall is the great-grandson of Judge George Hall, who came from England when a lad, and made his home in Rhode Island, where he became a man of prominence, serving for many years on the Bench.

Dixon Hall, the grandfather of President Hall, was a resident of Sterling, Conn., holding there a number of public offices of trust and honor, and otherwise being a useful and substantial citizen of Windham county.

The late Horace Hall, the father of our subject, was born in the town of Sterling, and in the early history of the village of Willimantic, Conn., came to it as a school teacher. Later he became identified with the manufacturing interests of that section, for years serving as local manager of the Windham Manufacturing Co., and for a time was an enterprising merchant of Willimantic. He was a man of education, good judgment and ability, and soon these qualities were recognized, and his services to public positions were sought. He held various offices of honor and trust, among them for twenty and more years that of trial justice, was selectman for a dozen or more years, and a representative in the State Legislature. He held the esteem and confidence of his fellow citizens, and when he passed from their midst his death was eenly felt. He married Elizabeth, daughter of John Manning, of Albany, N. Y., and a descendant of a direct line from John Alden. To this marriage were born three children, of whom the subject of this sketch is the youngest.

John Manning Hall was born Oct. 16, 1841, in Willimantic, Conn. He laid the foundation of his education in the schools of his native village, and in the somewhat famous school of Mr. Fitch, in South Windham, Conn. For several years he was a clerk in his father's store, but subsequently, having acquired a taste for the law, and deciding upon the adoption of that profession, he furthered his studies at Williston Seminary, East Hampton, Mass., where by hard study he completed a three years' course in two, and was graduated in 1862, standing among the first of his class. In the fall following he entered Yale College, from which he was graduated in the class of 1866. While at Yale he won distinction as a writer and speaker, and took a number of honors in composition and debate. He won the Townsend prize, and competed for the De Forest medal; he was also president of the Linonia Society. In 1868 he was graduated from Columbia Law School, New York City, after which he continued his law studies in the office of Robert Bonner, and was admitted to the New York City Bar soon after. He began the practice of law in Willimantic, and rapidly rose to prominence in the profession, and grew into a large practice not only in Windham, but in the adjacent counties. He was generally represented in all of the important cases in this section, one of which was that of the Willimantic Trust Company, which involved some $40,000 and in which he was successful, the case passing to both the Superior and Supreme courts. He became the acknowledged leader of the Bar of Windham county, and his ability gained him great honors and successes. From 1870 to 1872, and again from 1881 to 1882, he was the representative from the town to the Lower House of the State. He held the chairmanship in almost all of the important committees while a member, and in 1882 he was unanimously chosen Speaker of the House. In 1889 he was elected to the State Senate, and was made chairman of the Judiciary committee. He served as president pro tempore of the Senate. Following the close of the session of the Senate he was made judge of the Superior Court of Connecticut. The appointment was well received and was regarded as a meritorious one. He served in this high office for five years, giving eminent satisfaction, making an exceptionally good record alike for a thorough knowledge of the law, courtesy and unflinching firmness. This was the expressed opinion of the press in general of both political parties. In October, 1893, he was appointed vice-president of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, the appointment being hailed by the press throughout the State with most flattering comments. The New Haven Leader observed:

Judge Hall was very successful in all the great cases in which he appeared before the higher courts. As a judge he has been universally liked, and his conduct of cases has won very sincere approbation from his associates on the Bench and from members of the Bar. There is great regret among all the lawyers that as good a judge is to retire. Judge Hall will fill his new position to the entire satisfaction of the directors and stockholders of the Consolidated road, and also to the public. He has ornamented every position he has ever held, and he has gained steadily in public estimation from the time he first appeared before the people until the present day. His character is without a blemish; his reputation is untarnished; his ability is great; his popularity is extensive.

In his political affiliations President Hall has been a stanch Republican, and has been active, as he has passed along through life, in the local public affairs of Willimantic, where he has held about all the offices within the gift of the people. Himself liberally educated, he ever took a great interest in the schools of Windham county, and worked for their advancement. He was acting school visitor for a number of years, and early advocated the establishment of the high school, and he was chairman of the first high school committee appointed. In 1872 he advocated a more modern charter for the borough of Willimantic, and was made the committee to draft the same, and that charter remained until the adoption of the City Charter several years ago. He early advocated a liberal system of public improvements, which resulted in better streets, side walks, curbing and street lines, and finally the excellent system of sewers, being chairman of the committee putting the measures through.

On Nov. 11, 1899, Vice-president Hall was unanimously chosen president of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co., succeeding Charles P. Clark. On his promotion the Hartford Courant of Nov. 13 observed:

Vice-President John M. Hall was promoted on Saturday to the presidency of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company. This was generally expected, and expected because it was obviously the fit course, in view of the great interests of the company. Mr. Hall has been for years the vice-president, and in the various absences of President Clark, he has taken full charge of affairs, and borne the responsibilities, and done the work to the satisfaction of all. It was natural that, if he would take the place, he should have it.

The formal action of the directors, which practically ratifies the choice of the public, will be received with very general satisfaction, and the pleasant relations that exist between the Company and the State will not suffer any disturbance by this change of officers. Judge Hall is entirely familiar with the duties of his new position; indeed, all he has to do is change the title and go on with the management of that great property, as he has been managing it. He knows the road and its interests, and those of the communities that it lives on, and that depend upon it. A crisis in the affairs of the company, and we may say, too, in the business affairs of the State, has been successfully met.

President Hall is too well known to Connecticut people to need any introduction; whatever position he has held he has filled admirably. He has breadth, industry, intelligence, and a high personal character, and his election will be welcomed by stockholders and the public as a sign that the road is to be managed as it has been, and to maintain its unique position among railroads in this country. If he is to be congratulated, so are the company and the State.

On Sept. 27, 1870, President Hall was married to Julia White, daughter of Silas F. Loomer, former president of the Willimantic Savings Institute of Willimantic, and to them have been born three children, namely: John L., Florence M. and Helen B. Of these John L. Hall, who was graduated from Yale in 1894, was, like his father, distinguished in college; he took the Ten Eyck prize in 1893, and in his senior year was chosen class orator; he was a Townsend orator and took the De Forest gold medal—the highest Yale honor. He is now a practicing lawyer in the city of Boston.

MARVIN D. HARWOOD, a respected and venerable citizen of Ellington, where he is known for his industrious habits, his good character and his unswerving integrity, was born Dec. 29, 1817, in what is now Crystal Lake, in the house then occupied by his grandfather, Amasa Dimock. Until he was seventeen years of age he attended the district school for a few weeks, and the summers he gave up to hard work on his father's farm until he was twenty years of age. While at home he was also engaged in making palm bonnets and hats, a common occupation for all the members of the family, and the earnings of this work went to the support of the household. At this time many families in this part of the State were engaged in the work, and these bonnets were a staple article in the commerce of the country. His father gave him his time at twenty years of age, and for six months he worked for Calvin Knight at fourteen dollars a month. Often his day's work began long before light and ended late in the evening. The following winter he worked in the old mill at Rockville, where he received ten dollars a month, and the next year he went to Wallup, in the town of Enfield, where he worked on a farm for thirteen dollars a month. At Wilbraham, Mass., he worked a season through, and was cheated out of about half his wages by the dishonesty of his employer. Returning to Ellington, he worked for his uncle, Abner Dimock, the following winter. The ensuing season he chopped wood in Somers, Conn., and as he was capable of doing much hard work he had the best pay of the times. For several years he worked out on the farms in that region, and then bought the timber of a lot in Stafford, and contracted with the United States Armory, at Springfield, Mass., to furnish them chestnut charcoal. He made a large amount of charcoal but derived little profit from the enterprise.

In 1844 Mr. Harwood was married, and at this time he bought a farm of 140 acres of Ezekiel Newell, on Newell Hill, going into debt for more than half the purchase money. For four years he remained on this place, and got out much timber, which was used in the construction of large buildings in Rockville, at the same time making much charcoal. Selling the farm, he moved into Rockville, making his home with his brother Abner, and was employed at day's labor for two years. In 1863 he and this brother purchased a farm of a hundred acres in Ellington, which was equally divided. Mr. Harwood erected a house and his brother a barn on the place. At present he does but little work, though he is active for one of his age. His life has been one of constant toil. With no capital save his strong arm and determined will, and assisted by a faithful and devoted wife, he has accumulated a handsome competence. One season he burned over 7,000 bushels of charcoal on a lot near Crystal Lake, the last work of this kind he did.

On June 19, 1844, Mr. Harwood was married to Angeline Dimock, who was born Dec. 15, 1824, a daughter of Harvey and Harriet (Newell) Dimock and a granddaughter of Capt. Amasa Dimock. The Dimocks were of sturdy pioneer stock. Capt. Amasa Dimock was a school teacher in early life, and was an upright and honorable man, doing much good for the community in which he lived. He served as a soldier in the war of the Revolution and drew a pension for his services there. He was an untiring worker and preacher in the Methodist Church for many years. By his wife, Matilda Ellis, he became the father of children as follows: Simeon; Amasa; Harvey; Wealthy; Lois; Nancy; and Matilda, all deceased. After the Revolution Capt. Dimock removed to Ellington, and had his home at Crystal Lake, where he died. He and also his wife and his father are buried near Crystal Lake. After her husband's death Mrs. Dimock lived for a time in Pennsylvania with her children. John Dimock, brother of Capt. Amasa, was a cook in the Revolutionary army.

Harvey Dimock, son of Capt. Amasa, married Harriet Newell, and to them were born: Angeline, who became Mrs. Marvin D. Harwood; and Nancy, wife of Samuel M. Harwood, of Stafford. Harvey Dimock was a school teacher many years, beginning when but sixteen years of age. After his death his widow wedded his cousin, Lorain Dimock, and by this union became the mother of two sons: Epaphroditus, who married Adelia Richardson and engaged in farming in Stafford until his death; and Adonijah, who married Emily Charter and farmed in Somers until his death, at the age of forty-seven. Lorain Dimock died March 10, 1860, aged fifty-nine years, and Mrs. Harriet (Newell) Dimock passed away May 12, 1855, aged fifty-two years.

Mr. and Mrs. Marvin D. Harwood have no children. He is a Republican, formerly a Whig, but has always reserved the right to vote independently upon public questions. He attends the services of the Methodist Church at Rockville, of which his wife is a member. They have lived together longer than any other couple in Ellington, and both are greatly respected in the community and have many warm friends. They are well-to-do, and may feel a justifiable pride that whatever success they have attained has been hammered out on the anvil of a hard-working life.

M. D. Harwood

HOVEY. The Hovey Family of the old town of Windham, Windham Co., Conn., is one of the oldest settled families of that county.

(I) Daniel Hovey, the first of the name in New England, came to the New World about 1637, and located in Massachusetts. He was born in England in 1619, and married in 1637, Rebecca Andrews, daughter of Robert. Their children were: Daniel, born in 1642; John; Thomas, born in 1648; James, who was killed by the Indians; Joseph and Nathaniel, twins, born March 20, 1667; Abigail, who married Thomas Hodgkiss; and Percilla, who married John Ayers.

(II) Daniel Hovey (2), son of Daniel, born in 1642, was made a freeman Oct. 8, 1674. He married Oct. 8, 1665, Esther Treadwell, daughter of Thomas Treadwell, of Ipswich, Mass. Their children were as follows: Daniel (3), born June 24, 1666; Nathaniel, Oct. 9, 1667; Abigail and Thomas, twins, May 28, 1673; John, Aug. 13, 1675; Mary, June 27, 1678; Ebenezer, Jan. 11, 1680, died in infancy; Ebenezer (2), Jan. 11, 1682; Mercy. The father of this family died May 29, 1695.

(III) Thomas Hovey, son of Daniel (2), born May 28, 1673, settled in Ipswich, Mass., where he married. He and his wife Martha had: (1) Martha, Oct. 30, 1699; (2) Daniel (4), Oct. 29, 1700; (3) Esther, 1703; (4) Thomas (2), March 30, 1707. Thomas Hovey (2) married (first) Sarah Reed, in 1729. After her death he married a second time. (5) Abigail was born in 1712. (6) Phebe, baptized Dec. 20, 1713. (7) Samuel, born Feb. 22, (or May 3), 1716, married Elizabeth Perkins in 1737. (8) Mary (or Mercy) was born March 21, 1719.

(IV) Samuel Hovey, son of Thomas (1), born Feb. 22 (or May 3), 1716, married in 1737, Elizabeth Perkins, who was born Nov. 3, 1718. Samuel Hovey was a member of the 8th Massachusetts Regiment in the expedition against Louisbourg, in 1745. Children: Elizabeth, born March 9, 1738, died Nov. 6, 1740; Lucy, June 24, 1740; Samuel, March 7, 1743; Jacob, Nov. 21, 1745; Elizabeth, July 31, 1748; Abigail, March 20, 1751; Lydia, Dec. 16, 1753; David and Jonathan, twins, Aug. 1, 1757; Mary, April 8, 1759; Dudley, April 2, 1761. The mother died March 22, 1788.

(V) Dudley Hovey, son of Samuel, born April 2, 1761, married Oct. 8, 1795, Polly (or Mary) Roath Moore, born Jan. 25, 1764, daughter of David Moore, of Norwich, Conn. Their children were: Benjamin, born Dec. 14, 1796; Fanny, born Jan. 1, 1799, who married Dr. Mason Manning, of Mystic, Conn., Nov. 20, 1821, and died Sept. 23, 1822; Charles, born July 17, 1801, who died March 1, 1804; and Eliza, born July 29, 1804, who married Erastus Tucker May 11, 1829, and died March 18, 1837. Dudley Hovey died Aug. 14, 1844, and Mary, his wife, died Dec. 21, 1846.

Dudley Hovey was a manufacturer of wool hats in that part of Windham which is now the town of Scotland, where he was well-known, and highly respected. He is buried in the Scotland cemetery.

(VI) Benjamin Hovey, son of Dudley, born Dec. 14, 1796, in the town of Windham, Scotland society, grew to manhood there, and learned the trade of hatmaking with his father. He followed this trade for a number of years. Later he settled down to farming in what is now the town of Scotland, where he spent the remainder of his life. When the town of Scotland was set off from the town of Windham, in 1857, Mr. Hovey took quite an active part in the movement, and was the first town clerk of Scotland, which office he filled with credit for many years. He was also town treasurer for many years, and represented the town of Windham in the State Legislature for two terms. In political sentiment he was an "Old" Whig, and later a Republican. He was a good Christian man and lived up to the tenets of his faith. He died at his home Nov. 29, 1877, aged eighty-one years.

On Feb. 6, 1822, Mr. Hovey married Fanny Baker, born Aug. 31, 1798, in Scotland, who died in Norwich, Jan. 27, 1890, and is buried in Scotland cemetery. She was a devoted wife and mother and a good Christian woman, a member of the Congregational Church. Mr. and Mrs. Hovey had the following children: (1) Charles, born Nov. 22, 1822, died in New York City, April 10, 1877. He married Annie L. Kerr, July 2, 1859, and they had four children, Matilda C., born May 6, 1860; Charles Benjamin, July 12, 1862; Fanny Baker, Oct. 1, 1866; Frank M., Aug. 10, 1871. (2) George, born July 10, 1824. He was a soldier in the Civil war. He married Cornelia Bass, of Scotland, in 1848, and lives in the town of Scotland. His two children are Martha, born Oct. 6, 1850, and Frederick, born Nov. 10, 1856. (3) John Dudley, born May 14, 1826. He also was a soldier in the Civil war. He married Marcella Reynolds, and he died March 26, 1897. (4) Lewis, born May 20, 1828. He was also a soldier in the Civil war, and resides in Greenville, town of Norwich. He married Sarah Parker, Jan. 16, 1867, and they had one child, Louisa Parker, born May 2, 1870. (5) Edward Hurley and (6) Catherine Elizabeth, twins, born Oct. 1, 1830. Catherine Elizabeth married William H. Page Nov. 20, 1855, and had seven children; William Edward, born in January, 1859; Lewis Hovey, July 4, 1861; Hattie L., Aug. 27, 1863, died in 1864; Inez L., Aug. 5, 1865, died Oct. 11, 1865; Frederick A., April 11, 1867; Charles G., Feb. 27, 1871, died Aug. 23, 1871; Helen I., Sept. 4, 1872. Edward H. was a soldier in the Civil war. He died unmarried June 11, 1867. (7) Fanny, born March 1, 1833. She married Edmund L. Champlin Nov. 21, 1860. He died in December, 1894, and their children were: Fanny M., born July 8, 1862; Edmund Lee, October, 1865. (8) Eliza, born Oct. 28, 1837. She married Henry Freeman, and they had two children, Ida F., born Jan. 10, 1859, and Anna E., May 3, 1860. (9) Henry, born Dec. 18, 1839. He was also a soldier in the Civil war. He is now a retired business man at Norwich, Conn., where he has been located for a number of years. He married Sept. 26, 1872, in Webster, Mass., Emma F. Joslin, daughter of Nathan Joslin, the founder of the "Joslin House" of that city. Their children were: Mabel Estelle, born Jan. 18, 1874, who married R. H. Vaughn, of Norwich; Nathan Joslin, May 24, 1877, who died May 20, 1885; Grace E., June 9, 1884, who is a student at Norwich Academy; an infant born and died in November, 1889. (10) Mary, born Oct. 9, 1842. She married Dec. 13, 1877, David P. Walden. She died Dec. 20, 1883, leaving one son, Benjamin Hovey, born June 3, 1879.

RANDALL DAVIS is interesting in his hereditary, his personality and his descendants.

A few generations preceding him is found a large Welsh, English and Irish contingent of Davises in their respective countries. As to just how closely related these three different nationalities of Davises were—if at all—seems not to be a matter of record. Pretty authentic tradition says that the earliest known ancestor of Randall Davis was William Davis, an Esquire of Buckingham, England, whose two sons, William and John, joined the exodus to the American colonies about 1730. Influenced no doubt by the more liberal charter which Roger Williams had secured from Charles II, with its greater religious freedom as compared with that of Massachusetts, the brothers settled in Providence, R. I. Of John, the second son, and his descendants there is no record except that he was educated for the Church of England, was ordained and continued in the Episcopal ministry till after the death of his brother William, when he returned to England.

The older brother, William, the grandfather of Randall, already trained in mercantile pursuits, continued his business career in his new home. Deeply interested in the questions which stirred the public mind in those days he was appointed, or elected, to several public offices in succession, including that of sheriff of Providence county,—till his sudden death at the breakfast table of a hotel where he had passed the night, in 1755. At his death William Davis left two motherless children, Gaius, born 1749, and Barnabas, born 1751. Barnabas Davis found a home in the family of Rev. Eliphalet Wright, the influential minister of the Separate Church (which became Congregational before the century closed) in South Killingly. In course of time he married his daughter Hannah, and had several sons and daughters. The elder of the two sons of William Davis, Gaius, found a home in the family of Jonathan Pike, of North Providence, whose daughter Hannah, born June 19, 1751, he afterward married, and by her became the father of four sons. In 1784 he purchased a farm just across the Rhode Island line in East Killingly, Conn., where were born to him Jonathan (June 23, 1781, died Dec. 19, 1851), William (June 22, 1785, died June 15, 1840), Randall (April 10, 1789, died Dec. 10, 1861) and Joseph (Aug. 31, 1792, died Sept. 29, 1830). Gaius Davis died Sept. 23, 1815, aged sixty-six years, and Hannah, his wife, died Aug. 5, 1828, aged seventy-seven years.

Thus it will be seen that Randall Davis came of an ancestry that would naturally transmit to him at least a certain rugged strength and practical business ability.

Randall Davis was interesting in his personality, both physical and mental. One of four brothers whose aggregate height was a little more than twenty-four and a half feet, he possessed a noble frame, and was broad and muscular. With such a heredity he made a series of choices which resulted in a career and character worthy of careful study. The outward events of his life are quickly enumerated. Born in 1789, he married Phila Kies in 1818, and died in 1861. He acquired a good common school education in the schools of his own vicinity. Then, true to the rugged instincts which he had inherited, he learned the trade of stone mason. His brother, Joseph became a skilled carpenter under the tutelage of his uncle, Jonathan Pike, of Providence, and the two brothers, Randall and Joseph, formed a co-partnership as builders and contractors, and were favorably known as such until the death of Joseph in 1830. Following this necessary dissolution of the co-partnership, Randall Davis, with his wife and five children, removed to a hotel property on Franklin street, Danielson, which the brothers had begun to build some time before. Disposing of this property about 1836, he bought a fine farm of Jonathan Cutler, about a mile and a half north of the Danielson post office on Main street, built there a large new house and great barns, and occupied the place from 1837 until his death twenty-four years later.

The patriotism of Randall Davis may be inferred from the fact that in the war of 1812-15, he served as a member of Captain Solomon Sykes's company in the defence of New London—as evidenced by the fact that he and his widow for many years received a pension from the United States government. That he was devoted to his own town and region may be inferred from the fact that he was honored with many positions of trust in connection with town affairs—such as justice of the peace, assessor, selectman, etc., etc. Reserved in manner, tenacious of opinions once formed, and of few words, he is yet remembered for his kindness of heart. The young man who, with his young wife, chose to remain on the old stony farm in East Killingly till the death of his father and mother (in 1815 and 1828, respectively), in order that the declining years of father and mother might be made as comfortable as possible, is aid to have had a ready sympathy for all persons in need in all the years of his earthly life. Hence one is not surprised at the statement that in addition to providing a home for his own eight children who lived to maturity (one having died in infancy), he also made a home for two orphan boys, and gave to them the same education, care and privileges of every kind that he gave to his own. He was noted for his industry, high ideals, strict integrity and almost severe morality, and he taught his children habits of industry and the strictest morals. His word was everywhere known to be as good as his bond.

In view of the facts already cited, it will be seen that Mr. Davis was essentially a Puritan. His wife, like the typical New England wife and mother, was an earnest Christian, and was long a member of the Vestfield Congregational Church of Danielson—then called the West Parish or Danielsonville. Closely identified with its varied work, she conscientiously trained her children in accordance with its teachings.

Her husband, a fine illustration of Protestant and Puritan tendencies, was independent in his thought, and found himself unable to accept certain theological views set forth in the church creed. Hence, while deeply religious at heart and accustomed to church attendance, and unconsciously to illustrate his altruistic spirit by his quick sympathy and frequent gifts to the sorrowing and needy, he was yet unable to give intellectual assent to certain dogmas, and so remained outside the formal membership of the church with which he was accustomed to worship, and to the proper support of which he was accustomed to contribute. One of his sons—himself a church member—declares that Randall Davis was wont to teach the most rigid personal morals of any man he has ever known or heard. In this steadfast upholding of his honest convictions, he was, in a peaceful way, a part of that earnest protest, extending through many years, which long since led the old church to re-examine its intellectual beliefs, and to express its religious life, and the truth committed to it, with larger charity and with a far simpler and more Biblical simplicity.

That Randall Davis was interesting in his dependants, as well as in his heredity and personality, is a proposition easily capable of proof, if the task were not rendered so delicate by the presence of one now living. To many it has seemed that the generous spirit and gifts of the children of this noble man and his devoted wife—like the beautiful Davis Park donated to the borough of Danielson in their memory by Edwin W. Davis, or the fund bequeathed by his sister, Maria A. (Davis) Darling, to the South Killingly Congregational Church—were really but the legitimate illustrations of the life and teachings of their devoted parents, whose fine qualities vanished from the world more than two score years ago.

MRS. PHILA (KIES) DAVIS came of a family which has long been known in Connecticut. It is a family tradition that the first of whom there is definite record—Ebenezer McKee (as the name was then written), the Killingly settler—or his parents, were from Scotland. Ebenezer McKee is first of record in Killingly, Conn., in 1713, on the 19th of April, of which year two of his children were baptized in the old Killingly church on Putnam Heights. The name gradually underwent a change, first in the dropping of the "Mc" and finally to Kies by this branch of the family in 1710. Ebenezer McKee married Susannah Cady, a daughter of Nicholas Cady, and owned land in Killingly previous to the record of the baptism of his children. Nicholas Cady was a prominent man in Groton, Mass., and settled in Killingly about 1705; both he and his son-in-law, Ebenezer McKee, it seems, were large speculators in land and owned much of the land in the town of Killingly, south of Danielson. Nothing definite is known of Ebenezer McKee prior to his Killingly history. He died about 1731. His wife was living in 1775.

From this Killingly settler Mrs. Phila (Kies) Davis's lineage is through Wilson and Wilson (2).

(II) Wilson Kies, son of Ebenezer, baptized November 8, 1724, married Sarah H. Parkhurst, who was born in 1729, and they resided in Killingly. He died April 5, 1805, and she passed away October 2, 1821. (These dates are from the tombstones in the South Killingly churchyard.) Their children were: Nathaniel, born May 7, 1759, in Killingly; Ebenezer and Wilson.

(III) Wilson Keys (2), born September 13, 1774, married (first) Betsey Hulet, daughter of Dr. Hulet; she died February 18, 1829, in the fifty-ninth year of her age. Mr. Keys (so spelled by him) died Jan. 3, 1835, and was buried in Killingly, Conn. Their children were: Marvin, born June 4, 1798; Prentiss, who was a farmer in Killingly; William W., who was a farmer in Killingly; Knight, who died when a young man; Phila, who married Randall Davis; Mary, who married a Phillips, and removed to the West; Eliza, who married a Bump, and removed to Michigan; Harriet, who married a Cooper, and removed to Iowa, and Almira, who died when eighteen years of age.

Randall and Phila (Kies) Davis were married March 18, 1818, and to them were born the following family: Eliza A., born Dec. 21, 1819, married Dec. 21, 1852, Philetus King; Maria A., born Dec. 31, 1821, married Oct. 12, 1861, James Darling; Elvira, born May 21, 1823; Joseph W., born May 23, 1826, married Sarah Chamberlin, and their children were Edwin and Walter; Mary E., born June 5, 1828, married April 5, 1853, Edward Davis, and they have one child, John R.; George R., born Jan. 24, 1831, married Betsey Warren, and their children were Frank, George (deceased), and Minnie M. (now Mrs. Dr. Warren); Phila F., born

May 14, 1834, married Charles Dorrance, and they have no children; Ellen L., born March 4, 1837, married George Lloyd, and they have no children; and Edwin W., born April 25, 1839, married May Benham, and they have three children: Vinnie D., Joseph V. and Aida E.

The story of Randall Davis and Phila Kies Davis, his wife, is of interest, not so much for what they did as for what they were, and the influence they left in Danielson through their descendants. We first hear of them as keeping a hotel in the south part of the borough of Danielson, in the large house afterward occupied for many years by Edwin Ely, our largest dry goods merchant, which is still in good repair, being used as a Romish convent. This was in the days of turnpikes, stages and toll gates, when frequent relays of horses were needed, and travelers often required meals and a night's lodging.

Afterward he bought a farm near the northern part of the borough, where he lived many years and where most of his children were born. Later, he built a commodious and more modern structure near by, where he lived until his death.

The old house is still remembered by some. It stood on a gentle eminence on the east bank of the highway, now Main street, leading to Dayville. It was two stories in height, painted red, as was the fashion of the time, and was overshadowed by a magnificent elm, while tall lilacs with great clusters of purple bloom grew near the door way. A little south of the house a pretty brook spread out into a broad pool by the roadside, furnishing cooling refreshment for tired and thirsty man and beast.

Here grew up five daughters and three sons, and in the kindness of their hearts, Mr. and Mrs. Davis made room for two lone orphan boys, upon whom they bestowed the same care and education which they gave their own children.

Mr. Davis was a quiet man, but possessed of strong convictions and decided purpose. In religion, he was said to be "a little out of joint with the theology of the day," but he attended the only church accessible (the Congregational) until prevented by infirmities of age. In politics he was a Jeffersonian Democrat, uncompromising but just. He filled important offices in town, such as selectman and assessor, for many years, and always with credit. The following incident illustrates his character: When a particularly close fight was once expected between Whigs and Democrats, and a single vote might decide the contest, it was feared that Mr. Davis's strong party predilections might induce him to detain his Whig farm laborer from the polls by an important and pressing engagement. So a young man (Mr. W. H. Chollar), who was thought to be fertile in resource and possessed of considerable tact, was selected to interview Mr. Davis and obtain leave of absence for the young employe. To his surprise this was granted unhesitatingly, Mr. Davis's honor proving stronger than party ties.

Mr. Davis is remembered as a kind neighbor and the poor and homeless always found in him a friend. A mysterious personage who traveled our highways for years, known as the "old darned man," on account of his much darned clothing, demented, but quiet, reticent and gentlemanly, one who had evidently "seen better days," always found a comfortable meal and lodging at the home of Randall Davis. In his family he ruled by love rather than by fear, and one who has been an inmate of many homes, says he was never in one where there was so little fault finding or enforced discipline, as in that of Mr. Davis. His last sickness was long and intensely painful, but borne with remarkable patience.

Mrs. Davis was a church member and a constant attendant at service, when able, even to old age, and the large family of growing sons and daughters filled the long pew each Sunday. The daughters all married, the oldest son, Joseph, and the youngest, Edwin W., went West and engaged successfully in banking; the second, George R., became a prosperous farmer in the home of his boyhood; and an adopted son, George Lloyd, became a prominent citizen in business and educational affairs. The youngest son, Edwin W., came back for occasional visits, bringing his wife and children, and on one of these visits gave to his native place—the home of his boyhood—a tract of land in the center of our borough, which is now our beautiful "Davis Park," with its soldier's monument and cannon, its fountain, its music stand, its flower beds and winding paths, to be held forever as a filial tribute and loving memorial to the memory of his father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Randall Davis.

[Mrs. C. H. N. Thomas.]

EDWIN WILLIAM DAVIS. It is too soon to attempt anything like an adequate estimate of the character of Mr. Edwin William Davis, since he is still living and has been known to peremptorily forbid even a very moderate tribute to himself. Still it has seemed to the writer that there could be no harm in jotting down, without Mr. Davis's permission or knowledge, a very brief statement of facts concerning him. As the pastor of the church with which this interesting man has been connected for more than forty-six years past, and to which he has been a frequent visitor during the years of his non-residence, the writer ventures to note several facts in his life which may form a basis for some more adequate estimate of his character and career upon some future and appropriate occasion. He was born April 25, 1839, on the old homestead in Danielson, about a mile and a half above the postoffice, on what is now Main street. He was married to the beautiful and accomplished Miss May Benham, of Grinnell, Iowa. Three children have been born into this happy home: Joseph

, who is in the banking business at Harlan, Iowa; Annie D., now Mrs. T. A. Duke, of Pueblo, Colo., and Aida E., now a student at Dana Hall, in the last year of preparation for Wellesley College.

Educated in the schools of his native town of Willingby, Mr. Davis was graduated in 18— from the Rhode Island Normal School, formerly located in Bristol, now in Providence, and taught successfully for several years, both in New England and in the middle West. In 1866 he went westward and taught one year each in Ontonagon and in Saginaw, Mich. To a thoughtful and broad-minded man like Mr. Davis the opportunities of the new West made a strong appeal, and in 1868 he opened a general store in Harlan, Iowa. Somewhat later (in 1873) he responded to the needs of the community and opened a banking business in Avoca, a few miles away. While continuing this business, he is now president of The Shelby County State Bank at Harlan.

In 1883, without relinquishing his other lines of business, he removed his home to Pueblo, Colo., and opened there still another financial institution, to which he still devotes a portion of his time. In connection with this banking business in its various ramifications, involving large financial transactions in many States and in widely separated parts of the country, Mr. Davis has found a congenial field for the exercise of his large intellectual powers—a field of effort to which with his inherited instincts and cultivated gifts he has shown himself peculiarly adapted.

The character and career of Edwin W. Davis present an interesting and happy combination of heredity and noble choices.

The preceding sketch of his father, Randall Davis, traces his ancestry back to William Davis, of Buckingham, England, through William (2) Gaius and Randall.

The rugged intellectual and physical strength, coupled with independence of religious thought, and Yankee "thrift" so apparent in Randall Davis, come strikingly to view in the son; while from his singularly devout, broad-minded and devoted Christian father, he has inherited no less manifestly. One is not surprised to find that that mother was related to the late altruistic Dr. Marietta Kies, who was the first woman upon whom Michigan University ever conferred the degree of Ph. D.

Edwin William Davis is a large man, whether viewed physically, intellectually or morally. More than six feet in height, of large frame and fine physical proportions, he has a truly commanding presence. Seeing him, it is not difficult to believe that his father was one of four brothers who together measured twenty-four feet and six inches in height. But noble presence does not result from mere physique, though it may be helped by it, but from a combination of qualities. These qualities meet in Mr. Davis to a very marked degree. His commanding figure, strikingly intellectual head, strong jaw, keen and somewhat stern eye, yet sunny smile, all contribute toward a presence which, while strong and commanding, and easily a terror to evil doers, is yet, to one who has his confidence, peculiarly winsome. His large mental endowment comes to view not only in his career as a teacher, but no less impressively in the quickness and reliability with which he judges as to which among many are safe investments, and in the ease with which through a long series of years he has successfully conducted a large banking business with its various branches.

Not only is Mr. Davis large physically and intellectually, he is no less so morally. One who has known him intimately from boyhood*, and who has had business relations with him for many years, when asked as to the most characteristic thing about him, replied, "Edwin W. Davis stands pre-eminently for absolute integrity in business and in all other relations of life, and for utter fidelity to every obligation."

The real test of a man is, of course, not his inherited gifts, but his moral choices—in other words the use which he makes of his powers. That combination of qualities known as "Yankee thrift"—the power to accumulate—is, despite its value, liable to fearful abuse. Possessed by a selfish man, it may prove a curse instead of a blessing. Under the domination of an educated conscience, this power stands for much of that noble influence which has been one of the chief glories of New England.

The moral strength of Mr. Davis—as also the intellectual—appears in his views and practice as to the uses of money. He has shown himself one of that large and increasing number of men—who constitute one of the chief glories of America—by whom the art of money-getting is regarded as a sacred gift, and the possession of money as the assuming of added responsibilities for the helping of one's fellowmen. It is as though young Edwin William Davis, upon going West in 1866, had seen opportunities for altruistic influence opening up before the man who should develop the power to accumulate wealth, and should have the grace and grit to use it for his fellowmen, such as could not be surpassed by the opportunities awaiting professional teachers, either in a secular institution of learning or even in a Christian pulpit. I do not know that Mr. Davis did consciously have this train of thought, but he has certainly conducted himself in the years since then as if that had been his thought. His gift of the beautiful Davis Park to the beautiful borough of Danielson, in memory of his honored father and mother, adjoining the old church where they worshiped, and his gifts of money to that church from time to time, for various altruistic purposes, are among many similar illustrations of this mental and moral largeness so characteristic of him.

*George Lloyd, for fifty years,

Thus of large stature physically, intellectually and morally, Edwin William Davis, by a series of noble choices, has exemplified notable loyalty to an exceptionally strong heredity. Studying him, one sees the "Yankee thrift" and high integrity which characterized his father, and the devout and faithful altruism so notable in his godly mother. The end is not yet. It is still too early for adequate estimate of his career, but he is at least an interesting study and one awaits the developments of his ripening years with unflagging interest.

BARNABAS DAVIS, son of William Davis, was born in North Providence, R. I., in 1751. His father and mother dying when he was quite young, he had the good fortune to find a home in the family of the Rev. Eliphalet Wright, one of the most successful pastors the Congregational church in South Killingly has had, and who was also a tanner and currier, shoemaker, saddle and harness-maker, and a successful merchant. He was held in such esteem by the people, that his services were sought in settling estates, and as arbitrator in disputes and general peacemaker, outside of his specific work as pastor of, at that time, a large church, to the membership of which were added 150 persons during his ministry of nineteen years. In these years were included the stormy times of the Revolutionary War, and when the enemy was threatening New London, his son was drafted, and seeing that his son's health was not equal to the demand upon him, Mr. Wright shouldered his gun and took his son's place in the ranks, thus proving that he could be a fighter if necessary, as well as peacemaker, and that he was in sympathy with the war for freedom.

It would have been strange indeed, if, trained in such a home, joined to exceptionally good native ability, young Davis had not developed into an energetic, useful man with an eye for a good investment. In 1780, having married the daughter of Rev. Mr. Wright, he purchased, at a cost of £450, a farm of 160 acres; in a very desirable location, bordering on what are now known as Main and North streets, Danielson, Conn. He had previously bought land in another part of the town. There he spent his life, his property becoming more valuable as time passed on. At his death, his son, John, and after him his grandson, Edward, and still later his great-grandson, John R. Davis, succeeded him in the ownership of the homestead, which remained in the family for 125 years. Meanwhile what was, in 1780, a sparsely settled farming region developed into a busy manufacturing borough, and the trolley cars from Providence and Worcester now hourly pass by the door of the home which seemed once so far removed from a city, but which steam and electricity and enterprise have brought into apparent nearness.

(7) Hattie A., born 1876. 57. (8) Almira M., born 1881, now, 1903, in Willimantic Normal School.

Children of Huldah Nichols (34) and Otis B. Newton: 58. (1) Arthur B. 59. (2) George. 60. (3) William.

Children of Hattie Truesdale (36) and James Harris: 61. (1) Herbert married Carrie Booth. 62. (2) George W.

Children of Jabez Allen (9) and Sarah ——— Allen: 63. (1) Lucy B., born in 1843, died in childhood. 64. (2) Albion lives in or near Norwich, Connecticut.

Nellie H. Codding (53) and W. Frank Sheldon have a daughter: 65. (1) Grace, born 1896.

Herbert E. Codding (54) and Nellie (Unwin) Codding have one son: 66. (1) Leo Nichols.

Herbert Harris (61) and Carrie (Booth) Harris have a son: 67. (1) Jacob.

EDWARD DAVIS, son of John and Huldah Vaughn Davis, was born in Killingly, Conn., Aug. 25, 1825, and his life from birth until the end was spent on the ancestral estate—the old Barnabas Davis homestead—situated on the easterly side of Main street, between Danielson and Dayville—somewhat more than a mile above the Danielson post office. He was the son of John, born June 1, 1783; grandson of Barnabas, born 1751; and great-grandson of William, who came from Buckinghamshire, England, to the Providence Plantation about 1730.

Barnabas Davis, grandfather of Edward, married Hannah, daughter of Rev. Eliphalet Wright, pastor of the Separate (later Congregational) Church, of South Killingly, Conn., and had children as follows: Sarah, baptized Sept. 1, 1776; Priscilla, Sept. 1, 1776; Ludovica, Sept. 28, 1777; Eliphalet, Sept. 12, 1779; John, June 1, 1783; Eunice, Aug. 5, 1786 (from South Killingly Congregational Church records of Infant Baptisms). There was also a son, Samuel, supposedly between Eliphalet and John; he married a daughter of David Bacon, and died without issue. Eliphalet was a doctor and married Huldah Vaughn, of Coventry, R. I., and had one daughter, Abby, born in 18—, and died unmarried in 185—. Dr. Eliphalet died in 181—, and his widow, Huldah, afterward married his brother John, who is the paternal grandfather of all the Davises in the Barnabas Davis branch of William Davis, of Providence, whose sons were Gaius and Barnabas. Barnabas Davis was a corporal in Capt. Ephraim Warren's company in the Revolutionary War.

Edward Davis acquired a good education in the common schools of the day, and was well fitted for the duties and responsibilities of subsequent life. On April 5, 1853, he was united in marriage to Miss Marietta Davis, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Randall Davis, a young woman of rare qualities of mind and heart, with whom he lived in the holy bonds of mutual love and affection until her translation at death, which occurred March 16, 1897. She was a faithful and beloved member of the Westfield Congregational Church, having united with the church July 1, 1855. An only son, John Randall Davis, a successful and honored business man, survives them.

Briefly reviewing the interesting life of Edward Davis, many characteristics and excellent traits come to mind which are well worthy of mention. He united with the Westfield Congregational Church in 1842, and was an active and influential member, and for many years a beloved and honored member of the Sunday School. As a pupil, he was dutiful, obedient and responsive to the suggestions and earnest thoughts of his teachers, as an officer and teacher he was tactful, intelligent, zealous and self-sacrificing. Besides fulfilling his duties in the Church and Sunday School, he had charge, for a number of years, a flourishing Mission Sunday School in one of the neighboring districts.

As a citizen Mr. Davis leaves a record which challenges criticism. He always had decided opinions in matters relating to politics, but never would he sacrifice one iota of principle for party, and as a town officer was incorruptible, kind but unflinching and courageous, when others would waver and yield. As a temperance man, his record in efforts to promote "temperance," and what is far better, "total abstinence," is worthy of emulation by his descendants and successors. He was an officer of the Sunday School Temperance Society for a long time, and always voted to suppress the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

In writing this "appreciation," I may be permitted to conclude with a few words relative to his business and home life, which is of vital importance, and upon which so much depends in promoting virtue, morality and religion. Mr. Davis' active business life was devoted to agriculture, cattle and poultry raising, and consequently his waking and sleeping hours were at home on his own premises, and much of the time in the companionship of his cherished and beloved wife. His strict integrity, kindness of heart, cheerful spirit, combined with a shrewd mother-wit, served to brighten his own life and that of his helpmeet and of many others.

The end has now come, and we lament the death of this good man, which occurred May 14, 1897, within two months of that of Mrs. Davis, who, we are sure, was glad to welcome him to her eternal home. Mr. Davis in his last illness was comforted and cheered by the presence and kind ministrations of his son and daughter-in-law and other kindred, and as he conquered his own spirit in early life, so he has now, through faith in Christ conquered death and the grave, and forevermore will enjoy the companionship of the "pure in heart."

JAMES DARLING. The ancestry of James Darling, though slightly obscure at one point, is traced with almost absolute certainty on both the father's and mother's side back to the region of Boston, Mass., just after the middle of the seventeenth century. In maternal lines the lineage is clear and undoubted, and in paternal lines nearly so. Judge James Farmer states that thirteen of the name of Darling had graduated from the New England colleges before 1828.

Authorities on early New England settlers have John and Dennis Darling early at Braintree, Mass. Judge Savage in his New England Genealogical Dictionary, 1860, places John there 1660-90; and Farmer in his Register of the First Settlers of New England, (1829) says Dennis Darling was an early settler at Braintree.

From the Braintree Town Records it is learned that John Darling married 3 mo. 13, 1664, Elizabeth Dowman, and had born to them 12th mo. 2, 1664, a daughter, Mary.

The same records show that Dennis Darling married 11 mo. 3, 1662, Hannah Francis, and there were born to them John, 7th mo. 1664; and Sarah, 11th mo. 1669.

From Town Histories of that region of Massachusetts, such for instance as History of Milford, Mass., by Adin Ballou, (1882) p. 703, it is learned that two brothers, John and Dennis Darling, from Braintree settled in Old Mendon, soon after King Philip's war, when the fugitives began to return. John took up lands in what is now Blackstone, and more in South Bellingham; while Dennis located himself first near the Town Seat, but his children more largely in the South Parish. Both came with children born in Braintree, and had others born in their new home.

One Massachusetts Town History gives the children born to Dennis and Hannah Darling as follows: Cornelius (died young), John, Sarah, Hannah, Ebenezer, Daniel, Elizabeth and Benjamin, the first four being born in Braintree, and the last four in Mendon, Mass.

(II) Capt. John Darling, son of Dennis, b. Sept. 2, 1664, in Braintree, married (first) Elizabeth Thompson, who died in 1687; his second wife, Anne, died in 1690, and he married (third) Elizabeth Morse, and to the third marriage were born: Elizabeth, Samuel, Ruth, Hannah, Margaret, Ebenezer, Mary, Martha, Abigail and Deborah. Capt. John Darling became a great business man and landed proprietor. He headed the petition for the setting off of the town of Bellingham, which was incorporated in 1719, and he died in Bellingham in 1753, aged eighty-nine years.

(III) Samuel Darling, son of Capt. John, born March 18, 1693-94, married (first) Dec. 15, 1716, Mary Thompson, of Mendon, and their children were: Samuel, Michael, Elizabeth, Ruth, Abigail, John, Rachel, Penelope and Joshua.

(IV) Samuel Darling (2), son of Samuel, born Jan. 19, 1719, married Jan. 20, 1755, Esther Slack, of Attleboro, Mass., and had Joshua, Samuel, Benjamin, Rheuben, Esther, Olive, Ziba, Nathan and Rhoda, all born between 1756 and 1776.

(IV) John Darling, son of Samuel and brother of Samuel (2), born April 29, 1733, married Martha (or Margaret) Cook. He and his wife settled in Cumberland, R. I., where were born to them children as follows: Parmelia, Martha, John, Lurania, James, Gideon, Joshua and Jacob, all born between Oct. 5, 1766, and 1785.

Another John Darling settled in Cumberland, R. I., who was also a descendant of Dennis Darling of Braintree and Mendon, Mass., his lineage being through (I) Dennis Darling; (II) John Darling; (III) Ebenezer Darling; and (IV) John Darling, born Nov. 7, 1729, in Bellingham, Mass., married Dec. 4, 1755, in Cumberland, R. I., Anne Jilson, and had eleven children.

The Sutton and Oxford (Mass.) branch of the Darling family is as follows: (I) Dennis, of Braintree and Mendon; (II) John; (III) Ebenezer;

Gas. Darling

IV) Daniel; (V) William, of Bellingham; and VI) Zelek, born in 1762.

William Darling, of the fifth generation of the Sutton and Oxford branch, married Rachel White, moved to Mendon, and thence to Sutton, where he owned the water power and land at the outlet of Manchaug Pond.

As it seems certain that Samuel Darling, father of James Darling, subject of this sketch, was born April 1, 1779, in Sutton, Mass., there would seem to be at least a very strong probability that he was a direct descendant of either John or Dennis, who were residents in Braintree, Mass., in 1660—only thirty years after the coming of Governor John Winthrop to Boston, and only forty years after the Pilgrims first set foot on Plymouth Rock. Whether this strong probability be considered a certainty or not, there can be no doubt that his maternal ancestors were residents within a few miles of Boston at the same time that the brothers John and Dennis Darling were at Braintree.

On his mother's side James Darling is a descendant in the seventh generation from Roger Mowry, who was doubtless born in England, and who, it is known, was in Boston in May, 1663.* He was subsequently of Plymouth and Salem, Mass., and Providence, R. I., and in all four places was an associate of Roger Williams. Roger Mowry married Mary, daughter of John Johnson, of Roxbury, Mass. About 1653 he built a dwelling in Providence, in which he kept a house of entertainment, and in it lived the remainder of his lifetime. This house, until July, 1900, stood on Abbott street, not far from North Main street, and was the only house itself standing in the city which dated back to the days of Roger Williams. Mr. Mowry was a commissioner, or member of the General Court, in 1658. Both Mr. and Mrs. Mowry died at Providence; he Jan. 5, 1666, and she in January, 1679, as Mrs. Kingsley, having, after the death of Mr. Mowry, become the wife of John Kingsley.

From this Roger Mowry, the immigrant settler, Mr. Darling's lineage is through Nathaniel, Capt. Joseph, Oliver, James and Abigail Mowry. These generations, in the order given, follow in detail.

(II) Nathaniel Mowry, son of Roger, born 1644, married in the fall of 1666, Joanna, daughter of Edward Inman, and about this time was a partner with his brother John, who, with others, had purchased a large body of land in Providence Plantations. Nathaniel Mowry's homestead is supposed to have been on what is now known as Iron Hill. He died March 24, 1717-18, aged seventy-three years.

(III) Capt. Joseph Mowry, son of Nathaniel, married June 3, 1695, Alice Whipple. In 1708 he built a fine, large house, one of the largest in the Colony, which was located several miles southerly from his father's home. This home was still standing in 1878, and was then said to be one of the oldest in the State. Its location was about a mile northwest of the village of Stillwater. Capt. Mowry was one of the leading men in the Colony during his lifetime. He was a man of strong purpose, of great determination, and was honored and respected by his fellow citizens. His will, made in 1746, shows him to have been of Smithfield, R. I. Of his five children, Capt. Daniel Mowry passed his lifetime of more than ninety years in the old house referred to in the foregoing. For more than 160 years this house sheltered a branch of the descendants of Nathaniel Mowry, and for that period remained in the Mowry name. It was the home of seven families, representing six generations.

(IV) Oliver Mowry, son of Capt. Joseph, born Sept. 26, 1699-1700, married Dec. 18, 1727, Dorcas Whipple, and their children were Job, James, Silence, Abigail, Anne and Mary; the daughters, apparently from the father's will, married: Silence a Cook, Abigail a Saunders, Anne a Hidden, and Mary a Staples. The father died March 2, 1756.

(V) James Mowry, son of Oliver, married Aug. 14, 1768, Abigail Bartlett, he "of Smithfield" and she "of Cumberland, R. I.," the ceremony being performed by Daniel Mowry, Jr., a justice of the peace. Their children of record in Cumberland, R. I., were: Dorcas, born Aug. 5, 1772; James, born Feb. 20, 1776; Morris, born March 7, 1779; Oliver, born Dec. 11, 1781; and Abigail, born Dec. 18, 1783.

(VI) Abigail Mowry, daughter of James, born Dec. 18, 1783, in Cumberland, R. I., married Samuel Darling, the father of James.

James Darling was the third son in the family of twelve children born to Samuel and Abigail (Mowry) Darling, of whom one survives, Mrs. Sally (Darling) Haradon. Born in Thompson, Conn., Oct. 14, 1804, he lived there chiefly till past fifty years of age, when he moved to Danielson, where he spent the last thirty years of his life, and where he died at his residence on Academy street in 1889. His attachment to Danielson may be inferred from the fact that he kept his residence here during many years of his employment at Grosvenor Dale. He was twice married.

Mr. Darling possessed at least eight characteristics to a marked degree:

(1) He was an intellectual man. His intellectual abilities were of a high order. Though enjoying only limited school advantages, his inherited intellectual gifts were cultivated by severe application to the various problems which he had to meet in the conflict of life. A machinist by trade, he developed fine abilities and an expert knowledge in the manufacture of cotton fabrics. The quickness of his perceptions comes to view in his business transactions from first to last. He seemed able, almost at a glance, to decide whether or not a proposed investment was worth making.

(2) He was a wise and discreet man. He possessed a judicial mind. This trait found frequent illustration. George Lloyd, who knew him well, unites with others in saying that not only was he ever self-contained, exhibiting a notable absence of profane, boisterous, or ill-bred language, but that his singular chasteness and purity of speech was proverbial. Though lacking the training of the university or college, he manifested a fine judgment, a real culture, and a notable equipoise of character. It was the opinion of many that with different environment and opportunities he might have adorned the Bar or even the Bench.

(3) He was a moral man. Of strict morality, his probity of character was widely acknowledged and commented upon.

(4) He was a "thrifty" man. He was not lacking in that combination of qualities which go to make up what is known as "Yankee thrift." Noted for his Scriptural rule of life, "owe no man," he practiced a strict economy, cared bountifully for his family, and before reaching middle life, amassed a fine estate, which he afterward cared for and increased.

(5) He was an esthetic man. He was not wanting in taste. Not only was he fond of good prose literature, but also of poetry and music, and was an acknowledged judge of paintings.

(6) He was a domestic man. He had a happy home. Though himself childless, his tender heart was fond of children.

(7) He was a benevolent man. His gifts to even very remote kindred who would seem to have neither legal nor moral claim upon him are said to have been numerous and remarkable; while all worthy indigent people made a strong appeal to which he was accustomed to respond. In addition to his regular contributions from year to year to the Westfield Congregational Church of Danielson, with which he was associated as a regular attendant, he on one occasion offered to donate one of the most finely situated corner lots in town for the erection of a parsonage—an offer which unfortunately was not accepted. This was the beautiful lot on Broad street, upon a portion of which the Baptist Church edifice is now located.

(8) He was a persistent man. This was illustrated in the very fact that though he began life with nothing, he, in the face of an unfriendly environment, amassed a noble fortune. It was illustrated again in his diligent study of the principles which underlie a successful business career, until he became noted for his ability to judge of good and safe investments. It has been said by those who knew him intimately that, "no one ever sold him a good brick!" This trait received still further illustration in the fact that though a machinist by trade he came to be a high authority upon cotton fabrics, as well as upon the machinery that produced them, and was often consulted by leading manufacturers upon that subject. He was for almost half a century in the employ of the Grosvenordale Manufacturing Company, and at the age of sixty-five years was offered the agency of the Quinebaug Mills in Danielson, one of the largest mills in eastern Connecticut—an honor whose responsibilities, coming to him so late in life, he declined.

[George Lloyd and Rev. S. S. Mathews, D. D.]

KEEFE BROTHERS, FRANK and AMOS J. Among the prominent business men of this section of New England, there are none who in their lines, whatever they may be, stand any higher or are any better known than Keefe Brothers are in their line as lumbermen, box manufacturers and dealers in native wood in all salable forms. They have risen practically from farmer boys, whose sole capital was their native energy and persistent application, with no small amount of natural business shrewdness. Coming from good Irish stock, they inherited sturdy characters and robust constitutions and had the advantage of the teachings of Christian parents, all of which has been evident in the relations of these gentlemen with their fellowmen, whether as employers, business men, or individuals.

The first ancestor of these gentlemen in the United States was their father, John. The grandfather was Daniel Keefe, who lived and died in Ireland, where he was highly respected by all.

John Keefe, the father, was born in County Clare, Ireland, in 1825, and was a very excellent farmer. He came to America, with his wife, when twenty-five years of age, sailing from Limerick, Ireland, and, after several weeks on the water, landing in the New World, and settling in Portland, Maine. At the expiration of one year the father removed to Ludlow, Mass., purchased a large farm in that town and spent the remainder of his life as a farmer, dying there January 24, 1882, highly esteemed. In personal appearance he was of medium height, somewhat slender, a healthy, sober and industrious man. In politics he was a Republican, but never sought for or desired office. Early in life he joined the Methodist Church, of which his wife was also a member. Mr. Keefe did not believe in secret societies, and never would consent to join one, although he was very social in temperament. In 1848 he married Mary Spaight, who was born in 1827, a daughter of John and Catherine (Nile) Spaight, the former a farmer by occupation. To Mr. and Mrs. John Keefe were born: (1) Catherine is the widow of William Lee, of Springfield, Mass., who was a painter and paper hanger, by whom she had two children. (2) Julia married Leonard Stone, of Maine, a carpenter, since deceased, and she resides in Springfield, Mass., with her two children. (3) Frank was born Feb. 22, 1853, in Ludlow, Mass. (4) Amos J. was born Jan. 27, 1857. (5) Rebecca married Fred Corbett, of Belchertown, Mass., and they now reside in Glastonbury, Conn., where he is engaged in the grocery business in partnership with one son. (6) Mary Jane married Frank Ryder, of Chicopee, Mass., a farmer and milk dealer, and she died Sept. 13, 1899, leaving two children. The mother of this family of children is now residing with her son Frank.

The Keefe brothers spent their boyhood days in their native town of Ludlow, Mass. Their opportunities for education were such as were afforded by the common schools of that town, to which attendance ended for Frank at the age of fourteen, and for Amos J. at fifteen. Farm work occupied the major portion of their lives as young men, until about 1885, when they began in a small way to clear up wood lots. They soon found their enterprise was becoming too large for their meagre appliances, and they therefore purchased a steam sawmill, and have added to their equipment until they now have four portable sawmills in operation.

In November, 1895, they completed a box factory at Mashapaug, whereby they could utilize their otherwise waste material. Here they used small lengths in making large wooden packing-cases of all sizes and dimensions. Their first experience as lumbermen, under their present firm name, was in Ludlow, Mass., and the vicinity. In 1890 they branched out, buying from the Shaker Society, of Somers, Conn., over 300 acres of woodland, and they were there engaged over three years, taking off heavy timber. They then took off 175 acres in East Wollop in the town of Enfield, Conn., together with about forty acres on Chestnut Hill, Somers, Conn. The next change was to Willington and Stafford, Conn., on the old Lillibridge farm of 315 acres, together with several other farms of 175 acres, including Dr. Strickland's and John A. Foster's lots, in all about 575 acres of heavy timber. In addition, they also took off 170 acres on the old Warner farm, in Willington, Conn., and forty acres off the Shearer farm; fifty to sixty acres at Three Rivers, Mass.; sixty acres off the Corf farm, and forty acres on the Allen and Moulton farm, in Union and Three Rivers.

The brothers then came to Union, Conn., near Mashapaug Lake, and have been working in that locality for several years, on the Major Smith and Lyman Moore land, comprising over 1,000 acres. In fact, they have removed all the timber about the lake, and they have also much other timber yet to remove. Their portable mills have been moved about to many portions of the county, they having worked on a fifty-acre lot belonging to Abiel Town, in Union; on a twenty-five-acre lot on the Upham farm, in Union; on a forty-acre tract on the Latialle farm, in Union; on a fifty-acre tract on the Roscius Back farm in Sturbridge, Mass.; on 150 acres of the McKinstry place, and adjoining lots of 210 acres in that vicinity, and on 125 acres of the Hamilton Woolen Co., at Southbridge, Mass. They still have a farm in Union known as the Reed Cleveland place, where they expect to remove the timber—over 3,000,000 feet. They also own the old Newell farm in Union, a tract of 320 acres. They are now at work on the Samuel and John Rockwell farm, in Stafford, of over 300 acres, and they expect to get from 3,000,000 to 4,000,000 feet therefrom. Recently they have taken 275 acres in Palmer, Mass., where they obtained over 2,000,000 feet from the F. H. Brown farm. This firm has contracts for furnishing regularly all the cases used by the Southbridge (Mass.) Printing Co., a very large concern, besides with many other large woolen mills, among them several of the mills at Stafford. They also furnish the Hamilton Woolen Co., of Southbridge, Mass., with their cloth boards of all kinds, sizes and lengths. In 1900 they built a new, very complete and convenient box factory, where they can start the large, rough logs in at one end of the mill, and at the other end they come out in a box, complete, ready to be placed on the large wagons for delivery. Their plant is 50x150, one story high, with gravel roof, and it has over 200 feet of shafting; the whole plant is fitted with all of the modern and most thoroughly constructed machinery known in this line of business.

The Keefe Brothers are strictly self-made men, in every sense of the word, and are examples of what energy can accomplish. Their business requires from forty to fifty head of horses, not including many teams, and they give employment to some fifty or sixty men throughout the year. Their orders and contracts have for prolonged periods kept their box factory working day and night.

The brothers own a fine farm of 175 acres at Ludlow, Mass., which is in first-class condition, and there they keep from sixty to seventy-five cows, the milk from which is retailed in Chicopee and Chicopee Falls, Mass. In addition they also own 900 acres in Ludlow, Mass., of growing timber, adjoining the Springfield reservoir, all of it in one beautiful tract. They also are the owners of 300 acres in Stafford, which has been growing for thirty years, and this they expect to cut in the near future. Among recent purchases of timber-land in North Carolina, Keefe Brothers are one-half owners of 2,000 acres in McDowell county, and are interested in over 400,000 acres more nearby. Their operations have been but briefly stated and from time to time have included other extensive deals in lumber and cord wood. They have divided their work, Amos J. more particularly attending to the box factory, while Frank looks after the business of the sawmill, in the woods and the portable mills. Both lines are very efficiently conducted, and both are successful in the most encouraging degree.

On Sept. 4, 1889, Frank Keefe was married to Jennie Augusta King, daughter of Emory S. and Mary A. (Chapin) King. Mr. King, who was a carpenter by trade, died when Mrs. Keefe was eight years old. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Keefe are: Jessie May, born June 25, 1893, and Frank Alvin, born June 18, 1896. Mr. Keefe is an ardent Republican, but he has been too busy to assume the cares of office, although such men, with their energy and keen business acumen, are just the kind of citizens the country needs, to manage honestly and efficiently the public offices, and to fill positions of trust and responsibility. Mr. Keefe attends the Methodist Church and is a generous contributor to its support.

On August 18, 1891, Amos J. Keefe was married to Mrs. Cora Ellen (Richards) Clarke, widow of Allen G. Clarke, of Lincolnville, Maine, where she was born August 18, 1864, daughter of Philander F. Richards and his wife, Priscilla (Mansfield) Richards. The children of their family number two: Cora Mansfield, born of a former marriage, October 6, 1887, and John Amos, born March 13, 1893. Mr. Keefe is a member of the Mashapaug Methodist Church, in which he has long taken a very active part, and is one of the stewards and chairman of the finance committee. As a stanch member of the Republican party, public office has often been offered him, but his business cares have prevented his accepting anything more engrossing than a membership on the school board.

Keefe Brothers are distinctively the most extensive dealers in their line in this section of New England. Unlike most successful business men of the present they did not inherit an established business, their inheritance being a good rearing and natural business capacity. Their position to-day as business men is entirely of their own creation, simply a case of business foresight, with business capacity to take advantage of the situation and opportunity.

GEORGE ASAHAM HAMMOND, a leading citizen of Putnam, Windham county, where he is engaged in the manufacture of silk goods, is a native of that county and a scion of one of the pioneer Colonial families of New England.

(I) Thomas Hammond, baptized Sept. 2, 1603, in Melford, Suffolk, England, died in Newton, Mass., in 1675, leaving an unsigned will which was proven and admitted to probate. He married, in Lavenham, England, Nov. 12, 1623, Elizabeth Cason (spelled variously Cawston, Cawson and Carson in the locality), who was born before 1604, daughter of Robert and Prudence (Hammond) Cason, of Great Whelnetham, Suffolk, England. She was a granddaughter of Robert Hammond, of that place, who mentioned her in his will in 1604. Thomas Hammond came to America about 1635, and settled first at Hingham, Mass., but removed to Cambridge Village (then Newton) about 1650. He is known to have had two sons and two daughters. His parents were William and Mary Hammond, and his grandparents were John and Agnes Hammond, the former being a son of John Hammond, the fuller, all of Melford, England.

(II) Thomas Hammond, son of Thomas (I), born in England about 1630, died at Newton, Mass., Oct. 20, 1678. On Dec. 17, 1662, he married Elizabeth Steadman, who died in 1715, and they had seven children. He was a farmer on a part of his father's estate. Several of his descendants settled in Connecticut.

(III) Isaac Hammond, son of Thomas (2), born Dec. 20, 1668, in Newton, Mass., died Jan. 1, 1715, in the same place. On Dec. 7, 1692, he married Ann Kenrick, who was born July 3, 1672, and died in 1719. She was a daughter of Elijah and Hannah (Jackson) Kenrick, of Newton. Their children were: Margaret was born Aug. 25, 1694; Isaac, born July 31, 1698, married his cousin, Mary Chamberlain, settled at Norwich, Conn., and left many descendants; Josiah was born March 12, 1700; Hannah was born April 19, 1703; Jonathan, born in February, 1705, settled with his wife, Katherine, at Woodstock, Conn., and left a large progeny; Esther was born Feb. 3, 1708; Elijah, born Oct. 7, 1711, married (first) Mary Kingsbury and (second) Abigail Terry, of Glastonbury, Conn., and left many descendants. The last named settled in Bolton, Conn., about the time of his first marriage.

(IV) Josiah Hammond, son of Isaac, died in Woodstock, Conn., Oct. 5, 1793. On Oct. 1, 1723, he married (first) Mary Davis, who was the mother of all his children. She was born in 1701, and died Sept. 13, 1778. His second wife, Sybil, survived him. He settled in Woodstock soon after his first marriage, and in 1732 purchased a farm of Stephen Paine. His will, dated Aug. 6, 1793, mentions a daughter, Ann Kimball, and sons, John, Asa, Hezekiah and Josiah. The inventory of his belongings amounted to the sum of £1,517, 16s., 10d.

(V) Hezekiah Hammond, son of Josiah, born Nov. 4, 1733, in Hampton, Conn., was baptized June 5th following, and died Dec. 9, 1813, in the same town. On Nov. 15, 1758, he was married to Lucy Griffin, who was born Sept. 17, 1737, in Hampton, where she died Aug. 20, 1824. She was a daughter of Deacon Ebenezer and Hannah (Chandler) Griffin. Hezekiah Hammond was a corporal in the Lexington Alarm in 1775.

(VI) Col. Asahel Hammond, son of Hezekiah, was born May 10, 1778, in Hampton, and died Nov. 13, 1861, in Brooklyn, Conn., where he passed his declining years in the enjoyment of the respect due a worthy patriarch. He was a colonel in the State militia, and was familiarly known by his military title. He was a director of the Windham County Bank, and was also, during his residence in Brooklyn, president of the Windham County Fire Insurance Company. On Dec. 9, 1801, he married Betsey Robinson, who was born Jan. 9, 1779, and died May 25, 1865. She was a daughter of Joshua Robinson, and a descendant of John Robinson, English ancestor of that name in America.

(VII) George Robinson Hammond, son of Asahel, was born May 28, 1814, on the farm in

J. A. Hammond

Hampton where his son, William H. Hammond, now resides. He was an extensive farmer, stock grower and dairyman, and exercised a marked influence in the community. For several years he was captain of his home company in the State militia, served in all the principal town offices, and represented the town in the Legislature in 1867. A man of probity, and ever observant of the highest ethics of life, he was identified with the Congregational Church during his entire mature life, and was a deacon in the same for several years prior to his death, which occurred Jan. 16, 1892. In early life he supported the principles of the Whig party, in the crucial epoch preceding the Civil war was a strenuous advocate of the abolition of human slavery, and naturally affiliated with the Republican party upon its organization. On March 30, 1840, he married Miss Sarah Elizabeth Bottum (this name was originally Longbottum, and was in Connecticut very early), daughter of Joshua and Phoebe A. Bottum, of Mansfield, Conn., where the wedding occurred. Of the eight children born to George R. and Sarah Elizabeth Hammond, only two survive. The younger of these, William H., is the subject of a biography on other pages of this work. The elder, (VIII) George Asahel Hammond, was born May 26, 1841, in Hampton, and received his primary education in the common schools of his native town, where he also attended what was known as the high school. In the meantime his physical vigor was promoted by sharing in the duties of the farm. As a student in Williston Seminary he developed exceptional skill in penmanship, and became an assistant tutor. Upon leaving the school he engaged in teaching for a period of five years, except the time spent in the National army. Three years of this work were passed in his native town, and he taught also in Canterbury and Abington, the last engagement following his military service.

Soon after Mr. Hammond had attained his majority a call was made upon the town of Hampton for nine men for the Union army. Spurning any offer of bounty, young Hammond volunteered, and, through his example, the quota was filled within a week, thereby preventing a draft. He enlisted at Hampton Sept. 6, 1862, as a private, and was subsequently mustered in as a member of Company G, 26th Conn. V. I., at Norwich. He was elected orderly sergeant of his company, and, when its captain lost his life in the assault on Port Hudson, La., May 27, 1863, Sergt. Hammond was made acting lieutenant, in which capacity he served until mustered out at the expiration of his nine months' term of enlistment, Aug. 17, 1863. The 26th Regiment became a part of Gen. Neal Dow's brigade, in Gen. Banks' 19th Army Corps. It was stationed at New Orleans in January, 1863, and subsequently participated in the siege and capture of Port Hudson, where Lieut. Hammond acquitted himself as a soldier.

Subsequently Mr. Hammond furnished a substitute for three years' service in the war, and turned his attention to a business career. After teaching a year, as before mentioned, he went to Mansfield, Conn., and familiarized himself with the process of manufacturing silk, under the instruction and employment of an uncle, Charles L. Bottum. Giving his best efforts to this undertaking, he was rapidly promoted, and shortly became superintendent of the mill. At the end of eight years' connection with the business he became a member of the firm, which also admitted at the same time his present partner, C. C. Knowlton.

In 1878 Mr. Hammond severed his connection with the Mansfield business, establishing himself in Putnam on the 1st of that year. Associated with him were his cousin, Charles C. Knowlton, as an active partner, and George M. Morse, a special partner, the business being conducted under the style of Hammond, Knowlton & Co., which it still maintains. Their first mill was on the west side of the river. At the end of three years Mr. Morse's interest was purchased by his partners, who have since continued to operate it. In 1885 they moved to the Harris mill, to which large additions were made in 1892, more than doubling its productive capacity. The product of this concern, in its special lines, is second to none. All the sewing machines operated on the grounds of the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago in 1893 used silk supplied exclusively by Hammond, Knowlton & Co., and the firm received a medal for producing the best machine twist and sewing silk in the world. This is a great honor to this firm, as well as to the city of Putnam. It is worthy of note that the personal interest which Mr. Hammond manifests in his employes has up to the present time maintained pleasant and harmonious conditions in the establishment.

While not unduly partisan, Mr. Hammond entertains well-defined views on political economy, and believes that the principles of the Republican party must be sustained to secure the greatest good to the mass of citizens and to maintain the dignity and peace of the nation at home and its honor abroad. He has not failed in the conception and performance of the duties of citizenship. His interest in schools naturally led to his selection—soon after he became a resident of Mansfield—as a member of the school board of the town, and in 1876 he was selected as its representative in the General Assembly, which met in the old Capitol at Hartford. He served on important committees, including that on School Funds. In 1885 Putnam accorded him the same honor, and further recognized his value as a citizen and representative by re-electing him the following year by a large majority. In the General Assembly of 1886 he was chairman of the committee on Manufactures, and was also a member of the committee on Railroads. In the previous year the bill introduced by him authorizing the organization of the Putnam Water Company was the first passed by the House. In the legislative halls he brought to bear the same wise discrimination and sound judgment which have characterized his business career, and he proved a capable and popular member.

In recognition of his ability and faithfulness, Mr. Hammond was made representative of the 16th District on the State Central Committee of his party in 1888, and held that position for ten years following, exercising considerable influence in its councils. In 1896 he was elected a member of the electoral college which placed the lamented William McKinley in the Presidential chair, and four years later was a delegate in the national convention at Philadelphia, which renominated that noble martyr to the same position, his successor, Theodore Roosevelt, being nominated by the same convention for vice-president. For two years he was a member of the executive committee of the Home Market Club, of Boston, an honor which he appreciated, since through this medium he was brought in contact with some of the brightest minds in New England and his acquaintance with representative men of this section of the Union was widely extended.

Actuated by a progressive public spirit, Mr. Hammond has ever been ready to further any enterprise calculated to improve and benefit his home town. He was an earnest worker in behalf of the local electric light and water systems, and his home and factory were the first to use the electric lights. For several years he has been president of the Putnam Electric Light & Power Co., and to him is due much credit for the inception of the Putnam Foundry & Machine Corporation, on whose board of directors he served five years. He was instrumental in the formation of the Putnam Business Men's Association, of which he was for some time president. Educational matters have ever engrossed no little of his attention, and he has been a member of the school board continuously almost from the beginning of his residence here, with the exception of two years, and at the present writing he is chairman of the town committee.

Appreciating every medium of promoting human welfare, Mr. Hammond early identified himself with fraternal organizations. He is a charter member of Israel Putnam Lodge, No. 33, I. O. O. F., of Putnam, in which he was treasurer some years, being the first incumbent of that office. He is a member of Putnam Lodge, No. 18, A. O. U. W., and of Putnam Council, No. 340, Royal Arcanum, while in the time-honored Masonic fraternity he is identified with various bodies, being a member of Quinebaug Lodge, No. 106, A. F. & A. M.; Putnam Chapter, No. 41, R. A. M.; Columbia Commandery, No. 4, K. T., of Norwich; and Sphinx Temple of the Mystic Shrine, Hartford. Naturally retaining an interest in his comrades of the Civil war, Mr. Hammond has long been identified with A. G. Warner Post, No. 54, G. A. R., of which he is past commander.

On Oct. 12, 1862, Mr. Hammond was married to Miss Jane Crandall, a native of Canterbury, Conn., and daughter of Hezekiah and Elmira (Clapp) Crandall. Charles Henry Hammond, the first child of this union, born Aug. 17, 1868, in Mansfield, was obliged by ill health to abandon his studies in the Putnam high school, and died April 15, 1888, in Colorado. Another child was born to Mr. and Mrs. Hammond April 1, 1870, and christened Bertha Elizabeth. She graduated at the Putnam high school in 1888, being valedictorian of her class. After two years of study in Lasell Seminary, at Auburndale, Mass., she accompanied her mother and several other students in a tour of Europe in the summer of 1890, and subsequently spent two years at Mt. Vernon Seminary, Washington, D. C. On Sept. 16, 1897, she was married to Dr. Neil Macphatter, of New York, now professor of surgery in the Post Graduate School Hospital in that city. A daughter, Janet, was born to this couple in Putnam, Oct. 1, 1899, and died there May 16, 1900. She was not long survived by her mother, who entered into rest Oct. 18th of the same year. She was mourned as a young woman of gentle refinement and noble character by a wide circle of admiring friends. Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Hammond adopted Dr. Neil Macphatter as their son by act of the Legislature of Connecticut, 1903-4, the act changing his name to Neil Macphatter Hammond.

NEIL MACPHATTER, M. D., was born in Canada, Aug. 10, 1859. Both his father and mother were born in the Highlands of Scotland, and emigrated to Canada about seventy years ago.

Matthew Macphatter, his father, was born in Argyllshire, Feb. 16, 1816. His ancestors are known to have lived in the Highlands of Scotland for a great many hundred years, and took an active part in many of the hostile wars that were carried on against England as well as the various wars of the different clans of Scotland. About the year 1250, one of the northern clans were desirous of gaining possession of Kintyre, and sent a body of soldiers to forcibly capture the territory. They marched successfully as far as Glen Barr, when they met Matthew Macphatter, who was put in possession of the state of affairs. At the head of a number of his warriors he marched out and gave them battle. He inflicted upon the invaders such a severe defeat that they were nearly all slaughtered, and ever afterward that part of Scotland has remained free from any attempt of invasion. The Macphatters are intimately related with the McNeils, McDonalds and McLeods, of Argyllshire, the late Dr. Norman McLeod and the father of our subject being cousins.

Neil Macphatter, the grandfather, came to Canada in the year 1832 and settled in the township of Puslinch, Ontario, with his family. There they took up land. At this period that part of the country was a dense wilderness, where bears, wolves and other animals roamed wild and free. By dint of perseverance, and with many hardships, the for-its were cleared and comfortable homes were made. To-day it is one of the most fertile and beautiful lands it is possible to see.

The mother of Dr. Neil Macphatter was Jean Ramsay, a very beautiful and accomplished woman. He was descendent from Lord Ramsay, the Earl of Dalhousie, and belonged to one of the most distinguished families of Scotland. She was known for her beauty, high integrity and charity.

The early years of Dr. Neil Macphatter were spent upon the farm, where he received as good an education as the schools could afford. At the age of thirteen years he was sent to a private academy to prepare himself for the medical profession. After spending two years there he passed the entrance examination to the University at Toronto. There four years were spent in Trinity Medical College, and at the end of that time he was granted the Fellowship of that college. The same year he received, by examination, the degree of Bachelor of Medicine (M. B.). Shortly afterward he wrote a successful thesis on diseases of the hip joint at the University conferred upon him the degree of M. D. and appointed him one of the Examiners of the University. Being anxious to further pursue the study of medicine, he sailed for Scotland and entered the famous medical schools of Edinburgh. There he remained for two years, in active study and investigation. At the end of that time he entered the list for the L. R. C. P. degree of Edinburgh, and was successful. From Edinburgh he went to Glasgow, and after studying there for a time took the L. F. P. S. degree of the Faculty of Physicians and Surgeons of that city. In these institutions he became acquainted with the eminent men of the profession of Scotland, who have remained his friends ever since. At the time he was selected to become the assistant of Lawson Tait, the eminent surgeon whose ability has won him recognition as the greatest surgeon of his day. With him he spent one year, as his assistant in abdominal surgery and diseases of women, and the knowledge he gained is of the utmost importance to him in his profession. On his return to Canada, Dr. Macphatter was asked to become Professor of Abdominal Surgery and Diseases of Women in the University of Colorado, which incumbency he accepted, and he removed to Denver, Colo. It was not long before his ability was recognized and he was asked to become President and Senior Surgeon of St. Anthony's Hospital in Denver. He was also elected Professor of Abdominal Surgery in Gross Medical College, Denver, and in addition worked up a large private practice, and had patients come to him from all parts of the country.

In 1897, Dr. Macphatter married Miss Bertha Hammond, the only daughter of Hon. George A. Hammond, of Putnam, Conn. Shortly after the marriage they sailed to Scotland, the Doctor wishing to secure if possible the Fellowship of the Royal College of Surgeons—the highest degree that it is possible to secure in the medical profession. It is a degree but few attain, but when the result of the examination was announced he was again successful, and the coveted F. R. C. S. degree was his. Returning to this country again, he settled in New York City, where was made Adjunct Professor of Surgery in the Post Graduate Medical School and Hospital, and where he rapidly attained recognition in his profession. His contributions to medical literature are many, and are marked by fine literary style and critical acumen.

Dr. and Mrs. Macphatter had one child, Janet, born Oct. 1, 1899, in Putnam, who died there May 16, 1900. Mrs. Macphatter passed away Oct. 18th of the same year.

By act of the Legislature of Connecticut, 1903-04, Dr. Macphatter was adopted by Hon. George A. and Mrs. Hammond as their son, the act changing his name to Dr. Neil Macphatter Hammond.

JAIRUS CHAPMAN, late of the town of Eastford, died May 15, 1897, at the advanced age of over ninety-two years. He was born on a farm in Ashford, Dec. 9, 1804, the youngest son of Roswell and Lois Chapman, and grandson of Thomas Chapman, the latter a soldier during the Revolutionary war.

In his youth Mr. Chapman received the educational training accorded the average farmer boy of his time and place, and in spite of these meagre advantages managed to qualify as a teacher, in which occupation he engaged for a short time. Not finding educational work to his taste, he turned his attention to farming, which, after a time, became secondary to a pretentious business in the manufacture of scythes, broadaxes, axes and hatchets, conducted in the west part of the town, and known as the axe factory. This enterprise proved profitable, and gained for its promoters the reputation for excellent commodities warranted by their conscientious application to business. With the exception of a few years spent in East Douglass, Mass., Mr. Chapman lived in Eastford, where he was known as a public-spirited and capable man, embodying many of the admirable characteristics of New England's best and noblest citizenship. In the spring of 1850 he removed his family to Eastford village, and purchased a dwelling-house and blacksmith shop with a water privilege, where he continued for many years to manufacture axes and hatchets and cater to a general blacksmith trade. He also cultivated a few acres of land, and because of his general capabilities was brought to the fore in various capacities in the town.

On Jan. 1, 1828, Mr. Chapman married Emily Moore, who was born in Belchertown, Mass., and who was at the time of her marriage living in Eastford. This couple lived together for sixty-nine years, Mrs. Chapman surviving her husband until Feb. 4, 1899, when she died at the age of ninety-two years, eight months, the difference in their ages being but a few months. Three children were born of this union, viz.: (1) Emily E., the widow of Newton Preston, lives in East Douglass, Mass. Mr. Preston was professionally qualified for a doctor, but instead, engaged with considerable success in the insurance business. His death, due to a fall, occurred at the age of fifty-nine years. To himself and wife were born two children: Estella H., wife of C. Fred Whittemore, of Worcester, Mass., who has three children, Helen, Newton F. and Preston C.; and Etta Emily, wife of Newton Marshall, a decorator of Boston, who has two children, Howard and Preston. (2) Roswell Z. is a master mechanic of Springfield, Mass. He married Celia Ann Flint, and has had three children—William, deceased; Charles; and Harry J., a teacher in the commercial department of the Genesee Wesleyan Seminary, of Lima, N. Y. (3) Mary Juliaette was educated at the State Normal School at New Britain, and at Wilbraham Academy, subsequently engaging in educational work in Connecticut and Massachusetts for thirty years. In their old age she cared with rare patience and loving tenderness for her parents. She is a member of Crystal Lake Grange and of the Congregational Church.

A Republican in national politics, Mr. Chapman was also a stanch supporter of Prohibition. He held many local and county offices, and after the division of the towns of Ashford and Eastford represented the latter in the Legislature of 1849. The settlement of a number of estates came under his jurisdiction, one of the most important being that of the late Z. N. Allen. He was one of the directors of the Eastford Savings Bank, and was otherwise interested in prominent business enterprises in the town. He was one of the principal incorporators of the Grove cemetery, he and the late Capt. Jonathan Skinner having purchased the site, laid out the grounds, and bought adjoining lots in the center of the grounds. He was a director of the Cemetery Association from the beginning almost up to the time of his death. The building of the Baptist church and parsonage came about partly through his energies, and he was an active member of the church, and a deacon until prevented by the infirmities of age from further holding that position. A kind and affectionate husband and parent, he was also an obliging friend and gracious neighbor, and during his sojourn in Eastford won the esteem of all with whom he was associated.

DANIEL NORTON KIMBALL, a substantial and highly respected citizen of Ellington, Tolland county, passed to his last rest Nov. 14, 1902. He was descended from a family that has been prominent in this part of the State for more than a hundred years, where it has intermarried with other prominent families and contributed to the public many notable characters, and he was the last to bear the name in the town.

Richard Kimball, the common ancestor of many branches of that name in this country, embarked with his family at Ipswich, England, April 10, 1634, in the ship "Elizabeth," and landed at Boston soon finding a home at Watertown, Mass. His coming was on account of religious persecution at home, and his character and ability made him prominent in the new settlement. He was made a freeman May 6, 1635, and became a proprietor the following year, but soon removed to Ipswich, to answer a demand for a competent wheelwright, and there he spent his remaining years. Mr. Kimball was married in England to Ursula, daughter of Henry Scott, of Rattlesden, Suffolk County, England. For his second wife he was married in 1601 to Margaret, the widow of Henry Dow, of Hampton, N. H. Richard Kimball died in June, 1675, and his widow on March 1, 1676. For those early days he was very prosperous. Their children were (1) Abigail, born in England June 17, 1618, married John Severans, who died at Salisbury, Mass. (2) Henry, born in England in 1619; (3) Elizabeth, born in 1621; (4) Richard, born in 1623, died in Wenham, Mass., in 1676; (5) Mary married Robert Dutch, of Gloucester, Mass.; (6) Martha born in 1629, married Joseph Fowler; (7) John born in 1631, died May 6, 1698; (8) Thomas, mentioned below; (9) Sarah, the first of the family native to Massachusetts, born in 1635, married Edward Allen, and died June 12, 1690; (10) Benjamin born in 1637, died June 11, 1695; and (11) Caleb born in 1639, died in 1682.

Thomas Kimball, son of Richard, was born in Rattlesden, England, in 1633, and was but a year old when his parents came to America. For a time he lived in Ipswich, Mass., but removed to Hampton, N. H., where he became the owner of a mill property on Oyster river, in 1653. Later he removed to Bradford, Mass., then a part of Rowley where he was elected constable Feb. 20, 1669. By trade he was a mechanic, as well as a thrifty farmer. Mr. Kimball and his family were attacked by skulking Indians on the night of May 2, 1676, and he was killed, his wife and five children, Joanna, Thomas, Joseph, Priscilla and John, being taken captives and carried into the wilderness, where they were held forty-one days without ransom, being last freed by the friendly offices of the chief Wana-lancet, of the Pennacook Indians, and they reached home safely, where the settlers had offered up prayers for their deliverance. Thomas Kimball married Mary, a daughter of Thomas and Joanna Smith, of Ipswich, and to their union came children as follows: (1) Elizabeth, born Dec. 5, 1658, died Dec. 27, 1658; (2) Richard, of whom mention is made later in this article; (3) Joseph, born in 1662, died before 1699; (4) Mary, born in 1663, married Thomas Reddington, of Boxford, Mass.; (5) Hannah, born Jan. 27, 1661, died before 1699; (6) Thomas, born in 1665, died in Bradford, June 3, 1732; (7) Ebenezer, born April 20, 1668; (8) ohn, born Oct. 14, 1675; (9) Joanna married Joshua Morse, of Newbury, Mass., and died April 9, 1690.

Richard Kimball, the second member of the above family, was born in Hampton, Mass., in 1660, and died in Bradford, Mass., Jan. 21, 1732-3. In militia service he was cornet and afterward rose to a captaincy. On Sept. 7, 1682, he married Sarah, a daughter of John and Elizabeth Spofford, of Boxford. She was born March 24, 1661, and died Feb. 14, 1713-14. Mrs. Mehitable (Day) Kimball, the widow of his cousin, Richard Kimball, became his wife Nov. 5, 1714. To Richard and Sarah Kimball were born: (1) Richard, born Aug. 7, 1683, died Aug. 19, 1683; (2) Sarah, born Jan. 5, 1685, married John Wood, of Littleton, Mass.; (3) Samuel is mentioned farther on; (4) Mary, born Jan. 29, 1687, married Nathaniel Ames, of Boxford; (5) Richard (2), born March 27, 1689, died Jan. 5, 1768; (6) Hannah, born March 9, 1691, married Edward Carlton, of Haverhill, Mass.; (7) Ruth, born Feb. 1, 1693, married Richard Peabody, of Boxford; (8) Mehitable, born Aug. 10, 1699, married Nathaniel Gage; (9) Joseph, born Dec. 29, 1701, died July 5, 1769.

Samuel Kimball, born in Bradford, Mass., in March, 1686, died in Plainfield, Conn., in 1748. On Jan. 1, 1713, he wedded Sarah Spofford, who was born Dec. 20, 1693. They lived in Bradford, Mass., until 1723, when Mr. Kimball bought a hundred acres in Pomfret, Conn., removing, however, the same year to Hampton, Conn., where his descendants still live. On Jan. 1, 1748, his will was made and on April 8, 1748, was approved, and at the time of its execution he was living in Plainfield, Conn. To Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Kimball were born the following children: (1) Mehitable, born Feb. 26, 1716-17, died April 8, 1760; (2) Martha, born Feb. 1, 1718, married a Mr. Squash; (3) Daniel is mentioned later; (4) a son, born in 1721; (5) Richard, born July 17, 1722; (6) Sarah; (7) Mary; (8) Samuel, born in Hampton, resided at Windham.

Daniel Kimball, born in Bradford, Mass., Jan. 1719, died in Pomfret, Conn., Sept. 6, 1786. In March 27, 1751, he married Anna Hammond, and they had their home in Hampton, Conn., where were born the following children: (1) Samuel, born March 22, 1752, died Aug. 29, 1754; (2) Daniel, born March 10, 1754, died young; (3) Daniel (2); (4) Josiah, born Sept. 21, 1757, died Sept. 1, 1778; (5) Asa, born June 6, 1760, died May 10, 1816. Daniel Kimball, born in Hampton, Conn., March 1755, came to Ellington about 1800, where he purchased a large and desirable farm in District No. 5. The house which was then standing on the farm he tore down; and hauling brick-clay from Wapping, eight miles away, erected a rude one and there burned the brick, with which he put up the house now standing on the place—one of the first and finest brick houses in that section of the county. Extensively engaged in farming, his industry and good management met with large success, and he was one of the wealthy men of the day. As a Whig, he represented the town in the General Assembly. He was a member of the Congregational Church. His death occurred May 1, 1837. On Nov. 29, 1787, Mr. Kimball was married to Miriam Allworth, of Brooklyn, Conn., a native of Ellington, where she was born in 1763, and died Dec. 23, 1823. She was a woman of unusual intelligence and ability, and her kindly nature endeared her to her many friends. To this union came children as follows: (1) Josiah, born Aug. 29, 1788, married (first) Amy Herrick, and (second) Eunice Damon, and died in Ellington Oct. 14, 1852; he was a farmer. (2) Daniel was the father of D. N. (3) Asenath, born Sept. 27, 1795, married Horace McKnight, by whom she had a son, James D. (mentioned elsewhere), and she died Jan. 17, 1857.

Daniel Kimball, the second child of the above family, was born in Hampton, July 6, 1792, and came to Ellington when he was about eight years old. The management of the paternal estate passed into his hands on the death of his father, and here he continued in its cultivation until 1848 when he passed the active work of the farm over to his son, and moved to Ellington Center, where he passed the remainder of his life, dying April 25, 1876, after a brief illness; he was buried in Ellington. In his politics he was a Republican, and became prominent in the party councils; he served as sheriff of Tolland county for many years; in the General Assembly he was prominent as the representative from Ellington. Mr. Kimball assisted in the organization of the Rockville National Bank, and was one of its directors from its beginning until his death. In the Congregational Church his was a familiar presence, where he was known as one of its most liberal members.

On Sept. 3, 1817, Mr. Kimball married Roxanna McCray, who was born Dec. 13, 1794, and died Nov. 1, 1873. She was a daughter of Isaac and Roxanna (Olmsted) McCray. To this union were born: (1) Roxanna Roan, born Nov. 4, 1818, was married Dec. 17, 1846, to Henry McCray, a hardware merchant at Rockville, where they died; (2) Daniel Norton; (3) Carlos Clinton, born April 24, 1828, married Carrie C. Converse, and is a prominent citizen of Hartford, where he is engaged in business as a member of the insurance firm of Kimball & Parker; (4) Elizabeth McCray, born Dec. 20, 1830, died July 17, 1835.

Daniel Norton Kimball was born July 4, 1821, on the old home farm in Ellington, and in the neighboring district school and the academy at East Hartford acquired his education. Remaining at home he assisted his father in the management of the farm until 1848, when his parents left the farm, leaving him in charge, and there he followed farming successfully until 1877, when he removed to Ellington Center, selling the homestead farm at a later period. In Ellington Center Mr. Kimball owned a seventy-acre farm, which he cultivated, and at the same time devoted much attention to other interests.

Politically he was a Republican, and served on the board of selectmen many terms, often as chairman of the board. When his father died he became director of the Rockville National Bank, and served in that capacity until his lamented death, and he was one of the incorporators of the Rockville, Broad Brook and East Windsor Street Railway Company. All his family, as was he himself, are members of the Ellington Congregational Church. When the present building was put up in 1875, he was a member of the building committee, and to its support the family has always liberally contributed. Personally Mr. Kimball was much esteemed, and he enjoyed a host of friends in the community, to whom his sudden death brought much sorrow.

On Jan. 20, 1848, Mr. Kimball was married to Jane Thompson, who was born Sept. 19, 1823, in Ellington, a daughter of Samuel and Mary (Ellsworth) Thompson. [A sketch of the Thompson family is to be found elsewhere.] The following children were born to this marriage: (1) Charles Norton, born Oct. 17, 1849, died Oct. 23, 1851. (2) Mary Jane, born Sept. 13, 1852, it at home unmarried. (3) Elizabeth Roxanna, born Nov. 3, 1854, died June 20, 1864. (4) Julia, born Oct. 21, 1857, married John T. McKnight, and had three children: Mary K., born Aug. 28, 1886; Alice T., born Jan. 9, 1890, died July 27, 1890; and Grace E., born Nov. 13, 1892, died July 7, 1897. (5) Samuel Thompson, born Nov. 6, 1860, was educated in the high school, and in Williston Seminary, at Easthampton, Mass. He engaged in farming on the home place, and became prominent in affairs of the town, and was active in all church work. He was a fine taxidermist, and made a fine collection, which was highly prized by his father. He married Maud Pomeroy, daughter of Newton and Fannie (Croxon) Pomeroy, of Somers, and died, sincerely mourned, in 1893. (6) Fanny, born April 19, 1867, died July 12, 1867.

CYRUS BROWNLIE NEWTON, M. D., an old and prominent physician of Stafford Springs, Tolland Co., Conn., was born Oct. 5, 1831, in Ellington, Conn., and comes of a family long known in the State.

John Newton, Jr., the father of Dr. Newton, was born in Ellington, March 23, 1789, and died Sept. 6, 1863, in Somers. Sally Clark, who was born Dec. 9, 1790, in East Windsor, Conn., a daughter of Jonathan and Sarah (Brownlie) Clark, became his wife.

Jonathan Clark, who was born in 1763, married Sarah Brownlie, who was born in 1765, and died in 1838, and was a descendant of the first settlers of Windsor. Mr. Clark served in a Revolutionary war. Sarah Brownlie belonged to an old Scotch family, whose history runs back to the time of William the Conqueror.

To John, Jr., and Sally (Clark) Newton were born: (1) Elizabeth Newton, born in 1817, died in 1854 unmarried; (2) John Clark, died in California about 1861, whither he had gone to work at the blacksmith trade and follow mining; (3) Jabez, born in 1821, went to California in 1849, and is still living in that land of sunshine and flowers; (4) Samuel, lives in Missouri at the age of seventy-six; he is an extensive land owner, having bought land from the government in 1850 at $1.50 per acre; (5) Hannah, died unmarried in 1899, at the age of seventy-one; (6) Jotham, died about 1882, at the age of fifty-three, in Georgia, where he had been employed as an assayer; (7) Cyrus Brownlie; (8) Sarah Maria, died unmarried in 1863, at the age of twenty-eight years.

John Newton, Jr., was a successful farmer, and in early life was a Whig, but became a Republican on the formation of that party. A deeply religious man of the old Puritan school, he put his character and faith into his business, and thrived by honest industry. In 1845 he removed to Somers, where he died when nearly eighty.

Mr. Newton served in the American army during the War of 1812. He enlisted from Hartford in the 26th Infantry under Elijah Boardman in 1814, and was honorably discharged the same year.

John Newton, Sr., the grandfather of the Doctor, was born July 25, 1754, in Stafford, Conn., and died in 1831 in Ellington, where his remains were buried. His trade was that of a gunsmith and blacksmith, and he saw service in the Revolution, enlisting in 1776. His first land was bought in Ellington in 1789.

On Nov. 20, 1777, John Newton, Sr., was married to Ruth Bradley, of Ellington, where both are buried in one grave. Mrs. Newton died in 1835, at the age of eighty years.

Mrs. Newton was the daughter of John and Hannah (King) Bradley, and was a lineal descendant in the sixth generation from Peter Brown, a carpenter, and a passenger in the "Mayflower" on her first trip in 1620. He came over a single man, but afterward married twice in this country. His was the thirty-third name to be affixed to the "Compact" signed in the cabin of the "Mayflower." Nov. 11, (O. S.) 1620. One of his wives was Martha Ford, and he died in 1633 at Plymouth. Dr. Newton is in the eight generation from this ancient worthy.

The children of John and Ruth Newton were as follows: (1) Reuben, born in 1779; (2) Jabez; (3) Jotham; (4) John, Jr.; (5) Hannah, married a Mr. King, and died at Suffield, Conn., in 1872; (6) Ruth, born 1781, died when twelve years old; (7) Huldah, married Alonzo Lovett.

Moses Newton, the great-grandfather of the Doctor, was born in Roxbury, and died in Stafford.

About 1750 he was married, and very shortly removed to Stafford, where he followed gun-making and blacksmithing. The oath of fidelity to the State of Connecticut was taken by him Sept. 16, 1777, by his son John, Feb. 25, 1779, and by his son Moses, Jr., May 1, 1780. He and his wife, Persis, both died in Stafford. Several of their children died in infancy. Among those who grew up was John, Sr., before mentioned.

Isaac Newton, the great-great-grandfather of Dr. Newton, who was born in Roxbury, Mass., purchased a large tract of land in Stafford, May 31, 1748, on which he settled, selling a portion of it four years later to his son Moses. Isaac Newton is the first of that name recorded in Stafford, where he died in 1771.

Dr. Cyrus Brownlie Newton was born in Ellington, where his education was begun in the public schools; it was continued in the high school at Ellington, and also at Somers; and for a time he was a student in the Connecticut Literary Institute at Suffield, Conn. On leaving this institution Dr. Newton taught school for two years in Lebanon, N. J., and then became a student of medicine in the office of Dr. Orson Wood, of Somers, Conn., and later in the office of Dr. Hamilton at Somers. In 1856 he was graduated from the medical department of Yale College, and opened an office for the practice of his profession at Indian Orchard, near Springfield, Mass. He remained there, however, but a few months, locating the year of his graduation at Stafford Springs. There he has remained to the present time, earnestly engaged in the noble science and art of healing, and exercising that influence on the community which only a high minded and faithful physician can command.

In his more active days Dr. Newton filled many positions of trust and responsibility. For several years he was on the board of selectmen, and was chairman for three terms. For many years he has served on the school board, and has been acting visitor most of the time. In 1880 Dr. Newton was representative from Stafford in the General Assembly, where he served on the Committees on Cities and Boroughs. In 1881 he was a candidate for State Senator on the Democratic ticket from the 24th district, making the campaign against his brother-in-law, E. C. Dennis, who succeeded in winning the position. Dr. Newton was warden of Stafford Springs for one term. In 1880 he was appointed by Gov. Andrews a director of the State Prison at Wethersfield, a position he held for twelve years.

Dr. Newton is connected with the Connecticut State Medical Society, which he served as president in 1893; the Tolland County Society, of which he was president in 1895; the East Hampden Medical Society, of Massachusetts; and the American Medical Association. For many years he has been one of the Post Surgeons and Medical Examiners of Tolland county. Dr. Newton belongs to Ionic Lodge, No. 110, A. F. & A. M., of Stafford Springs.

Dr. Newton possesses much literary ability, and has written several valuable scientific treatises. The career of Dr. Wood, with whom he first studied medicine, and that of Dr. Joshua Blodgett, of West Stafford, have been carefully written up by him, and published for the interest and satisfaction of their many friends. His is a ready pen, and from it have come many valuable and instructive essays and sketches.

Dr. Newton was married June 1, 1858, in Stafford Springs, to Caroline Olivia, a daughter of John and Olivia (Preston) Fuller. The Fuller family is an old one in this part of New England, and John Fuller bore a gallant part in the struggle of the Revolution, for which he received a pension from a grateful country. Thomas and Mehitabel (Herring) Fuller removed from Boston to Willington in 1732, to become the first white settlers in that town. Mrs. Newton is in the seventh generation from Robert Fuller of Salem, Mass., who came from Southampton, England, in the ship "Bevis" in 1638. The Fuller families in America descend from eight ancestral heads. Thomas Fuller, of Dedham, Mass., was also an ancestor of Mrs. Newton.

Dr. and Mrs. Cyrus B. Newton had the following children born to them: (1) Mary I., who is an artist, and remains at home unmarried; (2) John Fuller, who died, aged five years; (3) Frank Brownlie, born Dec. 23, 1874, attended the local schools, took a preparatory course at the Harvard Medical School, and was graduated from the Medical Department of the University of Vermont in 1899. He had also two years' experience in Bellevue Hospital, New York City. In 1897 he was married to Miss Ruth Pomeroy, a daughter of Prof. O. D. Pomeroy, the late president of the Eye and Ear Hospital of New York. At the time of his death, Feb. 19, 1903, Dr. Frank B. Newton had built up a lucrative practice in his native town of Stafford Springs. He was widely known and greatly beloved both as friend and physician. Dr. Newton was an enthusiast in the profession, and was just entering on a brilliant and useful career. His early death means great loss not only to his family and friends but to the profession to which he had dedicated his life. (4) Charles Robert, born July 31, 1876, graduated from the Stafford Springs high school in 1893. For several years Charles Robert was a professional bicycle rider of much skill and reputation, winning many prizes at the various tournaments, and was regarded as one of the speediest riders of America at the time. He took up the manufacturing business, first, with the Central Woolen Company, and is now assistant superintendent of the Glenville Woolen Co., of Glenville, Connecticut.

HARVEY KINGSBURY. At the time of the death of this good man, May 22, 1874, the feeling was general that a life of such extended usefulness could ill be spared from the community in which he lived. Mr. Kingsbury was born Dec. 17, 1794, in Andover, Conn., a son of Joseph and Ruth (Benton) Kingsbury, and a descendant in the fifth generation from Joseph Kingsbury, of Haverhill, Mass., and Norwich, Conn., through Nathaniel, Jabez and Joseph Kingsbury (2).

Joseph Kingsbury of Haverhill was born about 1656. He was married April 2, 1679, to Love Ayers. He was a bookkeeper to Capt. Simon Wainwright, a merchant of Haverhill in 1708, at the time when Capt. Wainwright was killed by the Indians, and his house burned. Mr. Kingsbury, on June 14th, of that same year (1708), left Haverhill for Norwich, Conn., where he died in 1741, aged eighty-five years. His children were: Joseph, Nathaniel, Elizabeth, Mary, Elizabeth (2) and Susannah. [John Ward Dean, of Boston, who wrote of the Kingsbury family in 1859, Vol. XIII, of the Register, gives some speculation as to Joseph Kingsbury's relationship to Henry and Susannah Kingsbury, of Ipswich, Rowley and Haverhill.]

(II) Nathaniel Kingsbury, born Aug. 23, 1684, accompanied his father to Norwich in 1708. He married Hannah Dennison, daughter of John D. Dennison, of Ipswich, and settled in Windham, now Hampton, Conn., living there until 1731 or 1732. Thence he removed to that part of Coventry which later became Andover. He and his wife were the parents of fifteen children.

(III) Jabez Kingsbury, born June 21, 1717, married Mary Phelps, and their children were: Nathaniel, Ruth, Joseph, Jeremiah, Jabez, Mary, Amelia and Anne.

(IV) Joseph Kingsbury (2), born Feb. 20, 1755, was married to Ruth Benton, and to them were born children as follows: Sophia, Betsy, Marv, William, Joseph, Harvey and Royal.

Harvey Kingsbury was of a frail physique, and in early life was unable to pursue successfully the business of agriculture. Consequently he removed to Farmington to acquire a knowledge of the trade of a jeweler. However, he preferred the duties of an instructor to the routine of a tradesman's life, and gave special attention to study with a view to taking up teaching, reciting for a time to Rev. Mr. Woodruff, of Coventry. He taught for ten successive winters and gave satisfaction to his employers. Mr. Kingsbury, after his marriage, in 1824, removed to Coventry, and became an enterprising and successful farmer in that town. His business ability was of a high order, as was early discovered by his fellow townsmen, who called him to serve at different times as one of their selectmen. He was more than twenty years a member of the Ecclesiastical Society Committee, and of the school board for the same period. He was also one of the building committee when the present church edifice was erected. He was for many years a director of the Rockville Bank, and one of the incorporators of the Savings Bank of Rockville. In the war of 1812 he was drafted into the military service of the government, and joined the army at New London but was discharged after forty days of service, much impaired in health. This he happily overcame, and for the remainder of his life enjoyed exceptional vigor and activity.

Mr. Kingsbury possessed decided religious character and firm principles. He was a Puritan, indeed, in his adherence to integrity, careful observance of the Sabbath, and diligent attendance on the worship of God in the sanctuary and the weekly meetings. Greatly interested in the Sabbath-school, and ever ready to contribute to its support, he came forward generously when help was needed for the church, or the many gospel institutions connected therewith. He responded cheerfully to the various schemes of Christian benevolence and regarded this opportunity not only as a duty but a pleasure.

On April 7, 1824, Mr. Kingsbury was married to Polly, daughter of Roswell Wright, of Coventry. Two daughters were born to them, Elizabeth Wright and Mary Jeffers, both of whom married the late Hon. Henry E. H. Gilbert, and both of whom are now deceased.

HON. HENRY E. H. GILBERT, whose death occurred at his home in Coventry, March 5, 1895, was for years one of the substantial men and prominent citizens of that town. His ancestors and the families with which they were allied by marriage were among the first families of New England.

Born Dec. 17, 1822, in Mansfield, Tolland Co., Conn., Mr. Gilbert was a son of John and Anna (Hunt) Gilbert, and a grandson of Major John and Mellicent (Goodrich) Gilbert. His mother, Anna Hunt, was a direct descendant of Increase and Cotton Mather, through Rev. John Williams, of Deerfield, and Rev. Nathan Strong, first minister of North Coventry.

Major John Gilbert, the grandfather of Henry E. H., born Feb. 26, 1749, was an influential farmer and leading citizen of the town of Hebron during his earlier and most active business career. But for the last twenty years of his life he lived in Belchertown, Mass., where he kept an oldtime inn or tavern. He married Mellicent Goodrich, who was born probably Sept. 29, 1754, at Rocky Hill, in the town of Wethersfield, Hartford Co., Conn., daughter of Oliver Goodrich and Temperance Wright, of that town, granddaughter of Capt. Ephraim Goodrich of Wethersfield, and his second wife, Widow Jerusha (Treat) Wells, and great-granddaughter of Ensign William Goodrich, the first of the name in Wethersfield, who came from England and married in 1648 Sarah Marvin, also born in England, daughter of Matthew Marvin, the first of the name in Hartford. To the marriage of Major Gilbert and Mellicent Goodrich were born children as follows

H. E. H. Gilbert

Harvey Kingsbury

Mellicent, Mellicent (2), Wealthy, John, Bernice, Samuel, Solomon, Harriet, Betsey, George, Anna (mother of the late J. G. Holland, the distinguished author), Josiah and Charles. Major Gilbert died in 1819, at Belchertown, Mass., whither he had removed in 1799.

John Gilbert (2), son of Major John, and the father of Henry E. H., was born in Hebron Sept. 25, 1775, and married (first) April 17, 1797, Cynthia Hyde, who was born at Lebanon, Conn., June 18, 1776, the seventh daughter of Major Elijah Hyde and Mary Clark, and a direct descendant of William Hyde, of Norwich, Conn., through Samuel, Samuel (2), Elijah and Major Elijah. Mr. Gilbert settled in Mansfield, Conn., where for forty years he was a merchant. He evinced much business enterprise, and as a stockholder in the earliest mill built for the purpose, was among the first to introduce the silk manufacturing industry into the country. He was outspoken in his temperance sentiments, and early in the century was chairman of a county meeting held in Tolland at which the first temperance society in the county was organized. As an earnest, aggressive Christian his light shone no less conspicuously. Mrs. Gilbert died April 3, 1821, and Mr. Gilbert married (second) Dec. 1, 1821, Anna Hunt, of Coventry. He died Feb. 14, 1837. The children of his first marriage were: Cynthia H., John T., Charles D., George O., Gerstom C. H., Elizabeth G., Mary M. and Harriet A.; and those born to the second marriage were Henry E. H. and Nathan S.

Henry E. H. Gilbert, the subject proper of these lines, received his early education in the schools of his neighborhood. He later studied under private tutors, and also attended the high school of South Mansfield and Andover. His father was a farmer as well as a merchant, and Young Gilbert in boyhood assisted in the store, and when sixteen years of age engaged in teaching school, which he continued during intervals when his services were not needed on the farm, which had been turned over to him for superintendence. He retained his residence in Mansfield until 1859, in which year he removed to what was known as the Kingsbury homestead, where he remained until 1866. He then removed to the farm on which he spent the balance of his days, and where his daughter now resides.

Mr. Gilbert was well and favorably known throughout his section of the State. His political affiliations were with the Republican party and he was honored by his fellow citizens from time to time with an election to about all of the town offices within their gift. He was elected to the State Legislature for the sessions of 1868, 1872 and 1885, and served on the committees on Banks, Constitutional Amendment and Temperance, being house chairman of the latter. His religious connection was for more than forty years with the Congregational Church, and for most of those years he was either treasurer or member of the Ecclesiastical Society committee of Mansfield and Coventry. For nearly thirty years, beginning with 1866, he was treasurer of the North Coventry Cemetery Association. He was an enterprising and public-spirited citizen, and as a man bore the respect and esteem of the communities in which he lived.

On Sept. 24, 1851, Mr. Gilbert was married to Elizabeth W., daughter of Harvey Kingsbury, of Coventry. She died Nov. 9, 1862, and on June 27, 1866, he was married (second) to Mary J. Kingsbury, a sister of his first wife. To the first union were born four children, namely: (1) Mary died at the age of eight. (2) Annie Frances married Edgar F. Storrs, of Mansfield, Conn., and their children were Ada May, Gilbert Holland and Raymond Homer, the latter of whom died when young. (3) Henry Kingsbury died when less than two years old. (4) Hattie Elizabeth resides at the homestead. She is active in church work and the auxiliary societies. For years she has been identified with the Congregational Church. She is a member of the Christian Endeavor Society, has been secretary and treasurer of the Sunday-school since 1884, and for several years has been a teacher in the school. Mrs. Mary J. K. Gilbert survived her husband seven years, he having died March 5, 1895; she died May 31, 1902, aged seventy-five years and five months, and both are buried in the cemetery at North Coventry. She had been a member of the Congregational Church in Coventry more than sixty years, and treasurer of the Ladies Fragment Society forty-three years. She was a liberal contributor to benevolent enterprises, and although frail in health was for many years a faithful Sunday-school teacher.

HON. CHARLES ADDISON RUSSELL (deceased) was a member of Congress from the Third District, and a manufacturer of Dayville, in Killingly, Windham county. He was born March 2, 1852, in Worcester, Massachusetts.

Congressman Russell was a son of the late Isaiah and Nancy Mariah (Wentworth) Russell, and descended in several lines from families conspicuous in New England history from the early Colonial period. On his paternal side he was a descendant in the eighth generation from William Russell, of Cambridge, through Jason, Hubbard (or Hobart), Jason (2), Hubbard (2), Moses, and Isaiah Russell.

(1) William Russell, the American ancestor of the family, appears early at Cambridge, seemingly residing in that part of the town which became Menotomy. He and his wife Martha had children: Joseph, born in England about 1636, and the following born after the arrival in this country of their parents: Benjamin; John, born Sept. 11, 1645; Martha; Philip, born about 1650; William, born April 28, 1655; Jason, born Nov. 14, 1658; and Joyce, born March 31, 1660. William Russell, the father, died Feb. 14, 1661, and his widow married (second) Humphrey Bradshaw, and (third) Thomas Hall. She died about 1694.

(II) Jason Russell, son of William Russell, born Nov. 14, 1658, married March 27, 1684, Mary, daughter of James Hubbard (or Hobart). Their children were: Hubbard, born May 20, 1687; and Martha, born May 2, 1691. The daughter married (first) February 25, 1707-8, Henry Dunster, and on March 15, 1750, became the wife of Francis Locke; she died June 27, 1771. Jason Russell lived in Menotomy. He was selectman from 1707 to 1711, inclusive, and died about 1736. His widow, Mary, passed away May 14, 1738.

(III) Hubbard (or Hobart) Russell, son of Jason Russell, born May 20, 1687, married May 9, 1710, Elizabeth Dickson. Their children were: Jason, baptized March 25, 1711, married David Dunster; Margery (or Margaret), born April 30, 1715, married Joseph Belknap; Jason (2), born Jan. 25, 1716-17; Hobart, baptized April 24, 1721, died when young. The father of this family lived in Menotomy, and died June 4, 1726. His widow remarried.

(IV) Jason Russell (2), son of Hubbard (or Hobart) Russell, born January 25, 1716-17, married January 28, 1739-40, Elizabeth Winship. Their children were: Jason, born March 17, 1741-42; Elizabeth, born Dec. 27, 1743, who died March 29, 1751; John, born Aug. 4, 1746; Hubbard (2), born March 25, 1749; Thomas, born July 22, 1751; Noah, born July 15, 1753, who died Dec. 13, 1754; Elizabeth, born July 3, 1756, who married March 1, 1778, Jotham Webber; Mary, baptized May 17, 1761, died April 11, 1762; and Noah, born March 8, 1763.

Jason Russell, the father, resided on the southerly side of the Main street a few rods west of the church at Menotomy, "where he was killed by the British on their retreat from Lexington, April 9, 1775, aged fifty-eight years. He was buried in the ancient burying-ground, and with praiseworthy liberality and patriotism the citizens of Arlington have erected a handsome granite monument to mark the resting place of this early martyr of American liberty and his slaughtered companions." His widow, Elizabeth, died August 11, 1786, aged sixty-five years. Three of the sons and one daughter of this couple—Jason, John, Hubbard and Mrs. Elizabeth Webber—settled in Mason, N. H., in 1769, 1774, 1772 and 1780, respectively. Each reared a numerous family, and lived to old age, Jason to the age of eighty-four, John to eighty-six, Hubbard to eighty-eight, and Mrs. Webber to eighty-two years.

(V) Hubbard Russell (2), son of Jason Russell (2), born March 25, 1749, married Sarah Warren, of Weston (marriage published March 31, 1774). As before stated, Mr. Russell removed in 1772 to Mason, N. H., where he passed the rest of his life, reared a family and died November 6, 1836, in his eighty-eighth year.

(VI) Moses Russell, son of Hubbard Russell (2), born Dec. 2, 1793, in Mason, N. H., married May 27, 1819, Betsey Dunster, born April 20, 1801. She was a descendant in the sixth generation from Henry Dunster, who was born in England, and was the first of the name in America, coming in 1640. Mr. Dunster became the first president of Harvard College. From this Henry Dunster Betsey's lineage is through Jason, Jason (2), Henry and Iona Dunster.

Moses Russell resided in Mason until 1842, when he bought a farm in what is now Greenville. Both he and his wife were members of the Mason Village Church. Their four children were: Isaiah D., born Aug. 1, 1820; Julia Ann, born May 7, 1824, who married Sept. 22, 1842, Henry Sawin; Addison, born June 27, 1831, who married Sept. 14, 1865, Carrie E. Carey, of Shrewsbury, Mass., and died July 11, 1875; and Elizabeth J., born Dec. 16, 1837, who married Sept. 28, 1869, Henry Lyman Newell.

(VII) Isaiah Dunster Russell, son of Moses Russell, born Aug. 1, 1820, at Mason, N. H., married April 7, 1845, Nancy Maria Wentworth, born Sept. 27, 1825, a descendant of Elder William Wentworth (by his second wife Elizabeth), who appears of record in Exeter, N. H., July 4, 1639.

Mrs. Russell's lineage is traced through Ephraim Wentworth and Mary (Miller), Samuel Wentworth and Patience (Downs), Col. Jonathan Wentworth and Betsey (Philpot), Richard P. Wentworth and Deborah (Burbey) and Jonathan Wentworth and Nancy (Fiske). Of this Wentworth line Ephraim and Col. Jonathan were soldiers of the Revolution. Col. Jonathan took with him into the service two brothers. He was captain in Col. Poor's regiment, and later rose to the rank of major. Just prior to the battle of Bunker Hill he made a forced march of sixty-five miles to reach the scene of battle, arriving on the opposite side of the river with the British forces between. Col. Wentworth was under Gen. Washington at Cambridge in 1776 and was at Ticonderoga.

Isaiah Russell received only a limited education in the schools of his native town. When hardly out of boyhood he entered the employ of John Boynton, to sell tinware, of which Mr. Boynton was a large manufacturer. In 1843 young Russell launched out into business for himself at Worcester, Mass., in the line of hardware, carrying on at the same time a shop for tin, sheet-iron and copper work. In this he prospered, becoming an unusually successful business man. Isaiah Russell became one of the substantial business men and residents of his adopted city. In 1841 he united with the Mason City Center Congregational Church, and at Worcester he was identified with the Union Church. To Mr. and Mrs. Russell were born: Charles Addison, March 2, 1852; and Anna Maria, Aug. 10, 1864.

Charles Addison Russell (deceased), son of Isaiah Russell, the subject proper of this article, received his elementary education in the common schools of his native city—Worcester. He was prepared for college under the tuition of Rev. Harris R. Green, and entered Yale University, where as a student he stood high and was socially popular, owing to his genial manner and his enthusiasm in college sports. He was graduated with high rank in 1873, and after that devoted himself to newspaper work, being actively engaged up to 1878 as city editor of the Worcester Press. For a short time following this he was connected with the Worcester Spy. Later he was engaged in manufacturing in Dayville in the town of Killingly, Conn., and as treasurer of and an interested party in the Sabin L. Sayles Company's woolen mills.

Mr. Russell's tact, energy and ability soon brought him recognition. In 1881 he was appointed aide-de-camp on the staff of Gov. Bigelow, and he became a very popular member of the official gubernatorial family. In 1883 he was the representative from Killingly to the General Assembly, where he was made chairman of committee on Cities and Boroughs. While a member of the House Mr. Russell distinguished himself in debate and for his skill in disposing of public business. He was Secretary of State in 1885-86, elected on the Republican ticket with Hon. Henry B. Harrison at its head. In 1886 Secretary Russell became the candidate of his party for Congress in the Third District, and, as before wherever a candidate for public office, he received a victorious support at the polls. He served eight terms in Congress, with the distinguished ability and popularity which had been characteristic of all his previous public positions.

In 1880 Mr. Russell was married to Miss Ella Frances Sayles, daughter of Hon. Sabin L. Sayles, of Killingly, Conn., and they had children as follows: Sabin S. and Deborah.

DYER ARNOLD UPHAM. A history of the New England families whose rugged integrity and unflinching industry have contributed to the agricultural and general well being of Thompson, Windham county, were sadly incomplete without due mention of an honorable lineage, the best known representative of which is Dyer Arnold Upham, a farmer citizen of that populous and tradition-laden community. The name of Upham is one of the oldest in Windham county, and the Puritanic morality and fundamental community building characteristics of an earlier American civilization, have been strengthened rather than diluted in their passage through a long line of forefathers.

Deacon John Upham, founder of the American families of Upham, was born in England about 1597, and sailed from Weymouth, England, March 20, 1635. He settled first with the Hull Colony, at Weymouth, Mass., and later removed to Malden, in both of which towns he was a Deacon in the church, and took a prominent part in public affairs. He was for several terms a deputy to the General Court of the Colony, and served as first selectman, holding also other important offices. His first wife, formerly Elizabeth Webb, came to America with him, and after her death sometime before 1671, he married, in Augst, 1671, Catherine Holland. His death occurred Feb. 25, 1681. His oldest son Richard, was one of the original proprietors and settlers of Worcester, Mass., in 1675, and he was a man of fine character and much ability. His love for military adventure carried him as lieutenant through King Philip's war, and his death was occasioned by wounds received at the storming of Narragansett Fort. He left seven children.

Lieutenant Phineas Upham gained his rank in the Indian wars. He married Ruth Wood, who died about 1696, at the age of sixty years. The family lived at Malden, where the lieutenant died in October, 1676.

Richard Upham, married, May 19, 1698, Abigail Hovey, of Topsfield, who died Sept. 1, 1764, at the age of eighty-four. Mr. Upham lived in Reading, Mass., where he died, May 18, 1734, at the age of fifty-eight. Richard Upham purchased the land in Killingly which he made over to his son, Ivory, his first purchase being east of Stony (French) river, and he also bought land west of the river, which was turned over to his son.

Ivory Upham, son of Richard, was born in 1701, and removed to Woburn with his wife Tabitha, settling later upon the lands given him by his father, which were purchased from Isaac Jewett in 1726. This couple brought letters to the church of Killingly in 1729, and Mr. Upham united with the church in Thompson parish the day of its organization. He also helped to fell the timbers of which the meeting house was built. His children were: Ivory (2), baptized Oct. 4, 1724, married in Beverly, July 2, 1752, Mary Haskel; Samuel, baptized June 19, 1726, married in Dudley, Nov. 7, 1750, Esther Colburn; Abigail, baptized Sept. 20, 1730, in Killingly, married, Feb. 17, 1759, William Colburn; Luke, baptized June 10, 1733; Richard, baptized Aug. 30, 1735; John, baptized Feb. 20, 1737; Phineas, baptized April 8, 1739; and Ebenezer, baptized May 3, 1741.

Ivory (2), born in 1724, went out after the Lexington alarm, and he had three sons who enlisted in the Revolutionary service. Of these, Ebenezer was a soldier in the company of Capt. Elliott in 1775, and later was taken prisoner and died at Halifax, N. S., in January, 1777. Nathaniel was also a soldier in Capt. Elliott's company, and Jonathan, too, was a courageous soldier in the cause of the Colonists. The latter married Polly Nelson and removed to Vermont, where Joseph, his son, was born April 10, 1766; he married Catherine Brown, Oct. 21, 1791. Catherine was the mother of Nicholas, a well known citizen of North Grosvenor Dale, Connecticut.

Luke Upham, son of Ivory (1), baptized in Killingly, June 10, 1733, married, March 15, 1759, Lois Sabin of Pomfret. Their children, with the dates of their baptism, are as follows: Esther, April 5, 1761; Isaac, Sept. 12, 1762; Nehemiah, June 8, 1766; Ephraim, Jan. 27, 1771; Elizabeth, Nov. 29, 1772; Hepzibah, Dec. 4, 1774; Chloe, June 7, 1777; Phoebe, March 7, 1778; and Huldah, May 25, 1783.

Nehemiah, son of Luke, baptized June 8, 1766, married, Nov. 15, 1791, Polly Town, and had four children, Archelaus W., Betsy, Dyer (born in 1795), and Ichabod.

Dyer Upham, son of Nehemiah, and father of Dyer Arnold Upham, of Wilsonville, was a stone mason in his younger days, and after his marriage settled in Killingly, where in 1827, he bought the Arnold farm near Wilsonville. Here he engaged in farming and stock raising for the remainder of his life, his death occurring in 1885, at the advanced age of ninety years. He is buried in the Wilsonville cemetery. At first a Whig, he was later a Republican, but was never particularly interested in political offices. His first wife, Esther, daughter of Daniel and Nancy (Brown) Arnold, died in 1824, leaving two sons, George P. and Dyer Arnold. The former became a merchant in Boston, and died in the Hub City. Dyer Upham's second wife, Cynthia, was a half sister of his first wife. Of this marriage there was no issue, Mrs. Upham dying in 1874.

Dyer Arnold Upham, son of Dyer, was born in North Killingly, Aug. 7, 1824, and was three years of age when the family fortunes took him to Wilsonville. He had the educational advantages of the district schools, and also attended Dudley Academy, after which he engaged as a clerk in a grocery store. His enterprise is best illustrated by the fact that he rapidly rose to a general knowledge of the business, and in time bought out the concern, thereafter conducting it independently with fair success until 1857. Since that year Mr. Upham has been engaged in farming on the old homestead, where he has made extended improvements, and where he is making a specialty of poultry breeding. He has been very successful in this interesting line of work, and it is to his credit that he is the originator of the Plymouth Rock breed of fowls, he being the first to exhibit them at Worcester, Mass., in 1867.

Although the snows of age are in his hair, and he has had time to acquire a great deal of useful general knowledge while fulfilling his obligations as an exemplary citizen, Dyer Arnold Upham is still possessed of a vital interest in the people and events by which he is surrounded. As a Republican he has filled many positions of trust in the community, including those of selectman, tax collector, member of the board of relief, grand juror, and census marshal. He was a member of the Assembly in 1862, where he ably represented the needs and desires of his town.

In Grosvenor Dale in 1849, Mr. Upham was united in marriage with Lucy Stone, born in Dudley, Mass. She was a daughter of Reuben and Hannah (Davis) Stone, and died Aug. 3, 1885. Mrs. Upham attended the Methodist Episcopal Church, and was devoted to her home, her husband, and her friends. Three children were born to this union: LeRoy J., town clerk of Webster, Mass., who married Norah Janette Joslin; Earl Hammond, a salesman of Providence, R. I., who married Alice M. Hall; and Burton Stone, who married Orenette Morrarty. He has one child, Esther Arnold, born April 7, 1900, and lives on and works the home farm.

LOWELL HOLBROOK, M. D. For over fifty-eight years Dr. Lowell Holbrook has been a familiar and leading personality in the professional life of Connecticut and Rhode Island, and during fifty years of that time he has been a resident of his native town of Thompson, where he was born, Oct. 6, 1818. The oldest practicing physician in the State, at the age of nearly four score years and five he still retains possession of the faculties and talents which have brought him success, and his mind is stored with happy reminiscences of those who have come into the world under his auspices, of their children, their grandchildren, their great-grandchildren, and their great-great-grandchildren.

HORATIO HOLBROOK, father of Dr. Lowell, was also a disciple of Aesculapius, and for upwards of forty years practiced his profession in Thompson, and the surrounding towns of Rhode Island and Massachusetts. He was descended from one of the oldest families in Massachusetts, and was born in Wrentham, Norfolk county, a son of Henry Holbrook. His primary professional training was received under the able tuition of Dr. Fisk of Oxford, Mass. In 1816 he came to Thompson, Conn., and began his long professional career in this part of the State. For his time he was remarkably well read and erudite, understanding his chosen calling, and being well informed on general topics. In politics he was a Federalist, and in religious affiliation a Congregationalist. His wife, whom he married in Wrentham, Mass., was formerly Arcena Richardson, a daughter of Amos Richardson, and her death occurred in Thompson in 1846. She, too, was a member of the Congregational Church, and was a woman of fine personal characteristics. Of the children born to this couple, Laura Fisk (deceased), married Benjamin F. Hutchins; Lowell; Martha Perrys (deceased), became the wife of Perry W. P. Jacobs, of Rutland, Vt.; Mary is the widow of Mathew Mills, of Thompson, the latter of whom was a graduate of Brown University and a teacher in Thompson; and Elvira became the wife of William T. Farr, a successful manufacturer of Worcester,

L. Holcomb M.D.

Mass., who served in the Civil war, in the 51st Mass. V. I., and who died in 1869.

After completing his education in the public schools of Thompson, Dr. Lowell Holbrook entered the Monson (Mass.) Academy, from which he graduated in 1836. The successful example of his father had borne fruit in his expanding mind, and he determined to make his own future equally prolific of humanitarian and professional possibilities. During two years at Brown University he studied medicine with his father after which, in 1844, he entered the Medical University of New York, studying through four courses, and again entering the college for the years 1848-49, his diploma being received in the latter year. In the meantime he had practiced somewhat with his father in Thompson, and had gained a fair knowledge of the usages of his great calling. In 1849 he opened an office in Brooklyn, N. Y., but on the death of Dr. Bowen, of Thompson, in 1851, he gave up his Brooklyn practice, and returned to his native town to avail himself of the vacancy in the ranks. Thus has he continually ministered to the cause of suffering humanity in this and surrounding towns, and though at present he sees less clearly than of yore, he is still the courteous, large-hearted and competent dispenser of sound advice and healing prescriptions. The home in which he is passing his happy latter days was purchased by him in 1872 from Rev. Andrew Dunning, pastor of the Congregational Church, and it contains all of the comforts, all of the memories of past hospitalities, that have entered into the fashioning of his career, and the brightening of his well directed life.

In Thompson, in 1845, Dr. Holbrook married Mary Fisher, a native of Killingly, and daughter of William and Laura (Williams) Fisher; she died after forty-five years of happy married life, Nov. 16, 1890. Mrs. Holbrook was a member of the Congregational Church, and was devoted to high ideals and the noble things of life. The Doctor is a Republican in national and local politics, and filled the office of town health officer for five years. For five years he has been a member of the pension board that examines at Willimantic. In 1879 he was selected to the State Legislature, and during the session he advanced the interests of those who had honored him with confidence and support, being a member of several committees. He is a member of the County and State Medical Society, of which he has been president several times, and he is a member of the Pilgrim Society of Massachusetts, and has on several occasions been a delegate to the meetings of the same. He is identified with the Grand Army of the Republic, having served during the Civil war as surgeon of the 18th Conn. V. I., enlisting in 1862, and remaining with his regiment until peace was declared. Among the important engagements in which this regiment participated were Summit Point, Va., Piedmont and Snickers Ford.

As a soldier, as a broad minded, helpful physician and as a man who embodies the fundamental traits of good citizenship, Dr. Holbrook has established himself in the hearts and gratitude of those to whom he has proved a benefactor, and his half a century sojourn among things increasingly familiar will be remembered indefinitely.

CUNNINGHAM. This old New England family through its individual members has for generations touched the civil, political, and religious life of many of the best communities throughout the country.

The name Cunningham is of Scotch origin. The late James Cunningham of West Thompson, Windham county, a man of excellent worth, was a descendant of the Pomfret branch of the family. The original American ancestor was Andrew Cunningham who was without doubt a Scotch emigrant. He came to the town of Boston some time prior to 1684. The earliest mention of his name is in 1684 upon the records of the Scots Charitable Society, of Boston, which was in that year revived; and at the beginning of the By-Laws, adopted Oct. 25, 1684, and which he and others signed, it is expressly stated: "Wee are this day convened being Scotsmen and the sons of Scotsmen inhabitants of Bostone." At the meeting of the Society, held Feb. 4, 1695, we find Andrew Cunningham chosen as one of the key keepers of the box containing the funds of the Society.

Andrew Cunningham's occupation was that of a glazier. It is not known where he lived during the early part of his residence in Boston, but Feb. 1, 1711, he bought land on the northerly side of Summer street, between Marlborough street and Bishops alley (Suffolk Deeds, Lib. 26, page 105). Here he built a warehouse, but in 1713 sold this property. On April 15, 1713, he bought for 410 pounds sterling the house and land on Newberry street, later numbered 88 and 90 upon that street and next to the corner of Essex street. Here he lived to the end of his days. Andrew Cunningham married in 1685 Sarah Gibson. This lady was born in Boston Feb. 5, 1665, the daughter of William Gibson, a Scotchman, who had been many years in Boston. They had nine children, their births being of record in Boston as follows: Sarah, Sept. 5, 1686; Andrew, Nov. 29, 1688; Elizabeth, June 17, 1690; Andrew, Aug. 19, 1692; William, Nov. 17, 1694; David, Sept. 17, 1697; James, Feb. 15, 1698; Sarah, Sept. 16, 1700; John, March 25, 1702.

(II) William Cunningham, son of Andrew and Sarah (Gibson) Cunningham, became the progenitor of this branch of the family. He married in 1716 Elizabeth Wheeler, daughter of William, the ceremony being performed by Rev. Ebenezer Pemton. To this marriage children as follows were born: William, Feb. 14, 1719, deceased in youth; James, April 24, 1721; William (2), Sept.

28, 1722; Elizabeth, Feb. 21, 1724; Benjamin, Jan. 9, 1726; John, Feb. 8, 1727; Sarah, April 14, 1735; Abigail, July 11, 1739.

(III) James Cunningham, son of William (1), was the next in line. He married June 3, 1742, Elizabeth Boylston, who was born in the year 1718 and died June 25, 1769. The husband died June 25, 1795. They were the parents of William, born Sept. 22, 1743, died May 5, 1816; Anna, June 5, 1745; James, March 5, 1747, died Aug. 23, 1787; Peter, Aug. 14, 1750; Elizabeth, and Susan, twins, born May 8, 1753; Elizabeth died May 12, 1824, and Susan Oct. 1, 1805; Benjamin, July 28, 1755; Andrew, Feb. 16, 1760.

(IV) Peter Cunningham, son of James, was the grandfather of John and Anna Cunningham, and was a sea captain, sailing from the port of Boston. He married Elizabeth Pierpont, of Boston, who was a large owner of land in her own right in Pomfret, Conn., her estate comprising some thousand acres. Peter Cunningham and his wife came to Pomfret, where they spent the remainder of their lives, his death occurring there April 26, 1827. Mrs. Cunningham survived her husband, and died March 31, 1837. Their remains rest in the Pomfret cemetery. They were the parents of the following: An infant son born Jan. 20, 1780, died unnamed; a second child also unnamed, born Dec. 28, 1780; Robert P., Feb. 17, 1782; Peter, Dec. 15, 1783; an unnamed infant daughter, July 8, 1785; Elizabeth, June 7, 1786; unnamed infant son, March 28, 1787; Elizabeth (2), June 18, 1788; John, May 9, 1790; James, Nov. 29, 1791; Nancy, Dec. 21, 1793; Lucretia, Jan. 11, 1796; unnamed infant son, Jan. 6, 1798; Susannah, April 4, 1799; Mary D., March 6, 1802; John, June 27, 1806; unnamed infant son.

(V) JAMES CUNNINGHAM, son of Peter, was born Nov. 29, 1791, and was the father of John and Anna Cunningham. He was born in Pomfret, and died in Thompson March 31, 1880. In young manhood James Cunningham learned the cabinet maker's trade and went to Mechanicsville, where he was one of eight persons to start in the manufacturing business. He later sold his interest in this concern and engaged in the repairing of machinery for some time. The remainder of his life he spent in West Thompson.

James Cunningham was a man of great strength of character and was highly respected in the community. His politics were those of the Republican party. He was a man of fine influence in the community and believed thoroughly in the practical operation of the Golden Rule. His marriage occurred Oct. 29, 1828, the maiden name of his wife having been Silence Graves. Mrs. Cunningham was born on Nov. 2, 1800, the daughter of David Graves. She was a lady much beloved in life, and was greatly devoted to her husband and children by whom she was greatly mourned at her death, May 5, 1889. The children born to these parents were:

(1) Ellen E., born Nov. 15, 1831, died Nov. 26, 1834. (2) John M., born May 24, 1833. He married Aug. 22, 1867, Helen L. Gay, daughter of Joseph and Louisa (Hale) Gay. Mrs. John M. Cunningham is the mother of three children: Alice Louise, born June 11, 1868; Daniel Webster, Dec. 3, 1871, married Cora Came; and Charles Arthur, Jan. 12, 1876, married A. Iola Johnson and has one son, Maurice Dale, born Sept. 28, 1902. The third child of James Cunningham was (3) Daniel, born Sept. 10, 1835, died Sept. 18, 1840. (4) Anna E. Cunningham is the youngest child, born Aug. 14, 1840. She was reared on the old homestead in Thompson, where she is a highly respected Christian lady. She is unmarried, having devoted her entire life to the care of her parents. Her many noble qualities have won to her a very large circle of friends and acquaintances who esteem her highly for her genuine worth.

It will be of interest to close this sketch with as full an account as can be secured from the record of the family of the wife of Mr. John Cunningham who, it will be remembered, was Helen L. Gay. This is one of the earliest and most prominent of the New England families which settled in Watertown about 1630. The account as culled from the records runs as follows:

(I) John Gay emigrated to America about the year 1630. He settled first at Watertown and was a grantee in the Great Dividend, and in the Beaver Brook Plow Lands, owning altogether forty acres. He was admitted freeman May 6, 1635. With others of Watertown he was one of the founders of the plantation at Dedham, his name appearing on the petition for incorporation Sept. 6, 1636, and among the original proprietors of lands. He was a selectman in 1654, and died March 4, 1688. Joanna, his wife, died Aug. 14, 1691. She is said in family tradition to have been the widow Balwicke. The will of John Gay in the Suffolk records was dated Dec. 18, 1686, proved Dec. 17, 1688, his wife Joanna and son John being the executors. His estate was valued in the inventory at 4 Pounds, 5 Shillings, 8 Pence. His children were Samuel, born March 10, 1639, died April 15, 1711; Hezekiah, July 3, 1640, died Nov. 28, 1669; Nathaniel, Jan. 11, 1643, died Feb. 20, 1712; Joann March 23, 1645, married John Ware, of Wrentham, January, 1680; Eliazar, June 25, 1647, died April 13, 1726; Abiel, April 23, 1649, married Daniel Hawes, Feb. 23, 1677; Judith, April 23, 1649, twin of Abiel, married John Fuller, Feb. 8, 1677; John, May 6, 1651, died Nov. 19, 1731; Jonathan, Aug. 1, 1653; Hannah, Oct. 16, 1656, died Feb. 26, 1660; Elizabeth, date unknown.

(II) John Gay (2), son of John (1), was the second in line. He was born May 6, 1651, and married Rebecca Bacon, Feb. 13, 1679. His death occurred Nov. 19, 1731, that of his wife March 17, 1732. Their children were: Rebecca, born March 13, 1681; John, Jan. 2, 1685, died March 23, 1755.

Stephen, born May 6, 1689; Abigail, Nov. 4, 1692; Hezekiah, June 30, 1694, died Sept. 2, 1758.

(III) Hezekiah Gay, son of John (2), was third in descent from the original ancestor. He married, and died Sept. 2, 1758, his wife Elizabeth dying Aug. 3, 1766. Their nine children were: Hezekiah (2), born Dec. 31, 1724; William, Oct. 29, 1726, deceased young; Samuel, Dec. 13, 1728; William, Dec. 3, 1730; John, Feb. 2, 1736; Nathaniel, Sept. 27, 1740, died Sept. 14, 1806; Elizabeth, Sept. 27, 1740, a twin of Nathaniel; Rebecca, Feb. 15, 1744, died March 28, 1747; Ebenezer, Oct. 12, 1745, died March 19, 1747.

(IV) Hezekiah Gay (2), son of Hezekiah (1), the fourth in descent, married Elizabeth Fuller, of Needham, Mass., Nov. 27, 1746. He removed to Killingly, Conn., and was always known as Newcome Gay. His homestead was on the road passing by Simon Larnard's, occupied in later years by Elisha Brown. His children were: Ebenezer, born June 2, 1747, died July 8, 1820; Elizabeth, July 13, 1749; Hezekiah, May 16, 1755; Rebecca, Oct. 27, 1757, married Daniel Hunting, of Needham; Jesse, died Oct. 4, 1790; Esther, died young; Hadassah, died young; Richard, March 12, 1763; died Feb. 2, 1835; Mary; and Alpheus, who died June 8, 1808.

(V) Of this family Ebenezer Gay, son of Hezekiah (2), was the next in line. Ebenezer Gay was a gallant soldier during the Revolutionary war, serving under Capt. Crosby, of Thompson. He was married to Mrs. Susannah Fuller, who became the mother of: (1) Hezekiah (3), born April 9, 1786, died Oct. 29, 1869. He married Anna Gleason, of Thompson. (2) Nabby, March 8, 1789, married Elisha Brown, of Thompson, died Jan. 12, 1864. (3) Esther, March 9, 1791, died Sept. 22, 1827.

(VI) Hezekiah Gay (3), son of Ebenezer, was the sixth in descent. He married Anna Gleason April 8, 1810. She was born Aug. 6, 1789, and died April 20, 1868, his death occurring Oct. 29, 1869. Hezekiah Gay (3) lived on the old Gay homestead in what is now known as the Sawyer district in Putnam. He joined a company during the war of 1812, but was not called into action. His children were: (1) William, born Nov. 8, 1811, died Nov. 16, 1873; (2) Harriett A., Feb. 15, 1814, died Nov. 19, 1891 (married Stephen Brown); (3) Frances A., Feb. 25, 1816, died April 29, 1893 (wife of Stephen Johnson); (4) Joseph F., Sept. 12, 1818 (married Louisa H. Roberts); (5) Horace, Oct. 11, 1820, died Dec. 6, 1896; (6) Henry, July 23, 1824, died Jan. 28, 1825; (7) Mary, June 25, 1825, died April 20, 1894 (wife of Alphonso Williams); (8) George F., Feb. 16, 1829.

(VII) Joseph F. Gay, son of Hezekiah (3), the seventh in descent from John the Pilgrim, was born in Thompson, Conn., where he received his education. He married Louisa Hale Roberts, July 26, 1840. She was born June 30, 1820. After a few years they went to live on the old Gay homestead, and about 1852 removed to East Putnam, where he entered the mercantile business. In 1869 he went to Tunbridge, Vt., where he and his two oldest sons started a woolen mill and manufactured cloth and woolen yarns until the spring of 1887. They then moved their business to Cavendish, Vt., where the father now resides. Mr. Gay's wife died Jan. 18, 1890, and about that time he retired from business, which is now carried on by his sons under the firm name Gay Bros. Co., manufacturers of meltons and fine satinets. The names of Joseph F. Gay's children are: Helen L., born March 23, 1843, wife of John M. Cunningham, of Thompson, Conn.; Joseph S., Nov. 25, 1844, died March 20, 1902; Orrin A., Aug. 4, 1846, died in Tunbridge, Vt., March 14, 1887; Jason M., May 14, 1848, Cavendish, Vt.; Jane R., Dec. 7, 1850, married Eugene Sleeper, Tunbridge, Vt.; Henry C., Feb. 22, 1853, Barton, Vt.; Charles D., Dec. 17, 1855, Cavendish, Vt.; James E., Feb. 7, 1859, Cavendish; Emma A., Dec. 7, 1860, married Fred W. Tuttle, Hartford, Conn.; Harriet F., June 6, 1863, married Aura T. Austin, Chelsea, Vermont.

SMITH WILKINSON PAGE, one of the best known citizens of Stafford Springs, who practices well the art of growing old gracefully, was born July 9, 1821, in East Stafford, about a half mile west of the Union line. He was a son of Stephen Page, who was born in Gloucester, R. I., July 15, 1796.

Stephen Page was a farmer, and was also engaged in teaming. About 1818 he came to Stafford to locate on the Samuel Strong farm, then comprising 100 acres, where he lived until his death, Feb. 19, 1864. In politics he was a Whig, and in later life was a Republican. In the War of 1812 he expected to be summoned to the front, but was not called out for active service. The marriage of Stephen Page to Mary Smith, who was born March 1, 1793, occurred Nov. 15, 1817. She was a daughter of Jeremiah Smith, of Gloucester, R. I., and died Jan. 24, 1850, in Stafford, Connecticut.

To this union of Stephen and Mary (Smith) Page were born: (1) Laura Ann, born Sept. 9, 1818, never married, and died April 2, 1882, in Stafford; (2) Seneca Nelson, born Nov. 15, 1819, died March 30, 1892, in Stafford, where he was a carpenter. For a number of years he was connected with the Vermont Central Railroad, and was in the grocery business later in life with Smith Wilkinson Page. He married Rebecca Holden, of Holden, Mass.; (3) Smith Wilkinson, whose name introduces this article; (4) Frances Caldwell, born April 15, 1823, died Sept. 7, 1827; (5) Jeremiah, born Feb. 4, 1825, died Dec. 6, 1879, in Western Iowa. In earlier life he was a factory man in a cotton mill, but followed farming in Iowa. He married Adaline Clark, of Monson, Mass., and had for his second wife, Loretta Alden. (6) Samantha, born July 25, 1827, died Nov. 1, 1828; (7) Joseph P., born Oct. 31, 1828, died Aug. 28, 1829; (8) Mary Jane, born Oct. 11, 1830, died Sept. 7, 1869; she married Julius C. Anderson, of Stafford; (9) Martha, born Feb. 26, 1832, married Harrison Howe, of Stafford. She had for her second husband Maro Hammond, of Vernon, and died April 30, 1900, in North Carolina; (10) Eunice C., born Sept. 24, 1833, married E. G. Eweet, of Stafford, and died July 15, 1865, in Rhode Island; (11) Philip Allen, born Aug. 20, 1840, died April 15, 1872. He married Fannie Galvin, of Palmer, Massachusetts.

Joseph Page, the grandfather of Smith Wilkinson, was born in 1755, in Gloucester, R. I., and died Jan. 7, 1810, at the age of fifty-five years. He served in the Revolutionary war; at one time he had his gun pointed at Benedict Arnold, the traitor, and afterward "regretted that he had not killed him." This old worthy married Freelove Keach, of Gloucester, R. I., where she died. To them were born the following family: (1) Abigail, who married Timothy Sweet, and died in Gloucester; (2) David, who married a Miss Sweet, a sister of Timothy, and died in Gloucester; (3) Stephen, noted above as the father of Smith Wilkinson Page; (4) Riley, who died in Putnam, Conn., where he followed farming, and married Betsy Arnold; (5) Lucy, who married Angel Darling, and died in Virginia; (6) Rachel, who married Fenner Brown, and died in Stafford (she had lived in Macon, Ga., where she was buried); (7) Martha, who married Clark Phetaplace, and died in Rhode Island.

Smith Wilkinson Page was born in Stafford, Tolland county, and received his education in the local district school, which he attended mainly in the winter season. He worked on the farm during the summer from the time his age permitted him to essay farm tasks of any value. When he was eighteen years of age he left school, and taking a position in the Hydeville Woolen Factory worked two years in the dyeing department, and then became boss dyer in the Furnace Hollow Mill, where he remained a year. He then returned to Hydeville, where he was employed two years. At the end of this period he was compelled to give up mill work on account of impaired health.

Seneca N. Page, a brother of Smith W., had started a grocery store in Fishdale, Mass., in which Smith W. was invited to take a position. The two brothers worked very successfully together for a few years, and then gave up the grocery store as not being altogether satisfactory, though it had proved a very successful venture. In the spring of 1850 the brothers built the Page block on the corner of Main and South streets, in Stafford Springs, and in 1854 Smith W. Page went to California, making the journey by the Isthmus route. The railroad across the Isthmus was not entirely completed, and part of the journey must needs be made on mules. Mr. Page settled in Sonora, Cal., where he began mining with very satisfactory results. In 1858 he came back to Stafford, and has not since that time been actively engaged in any business, spending the most of his time looking after his extensive real estate deals.

Mr. Page built in 1893 a nice home on Grand avenue. He attends the Congregational Church and is a member of the Ecclesiastical Society of the Church. In politics he is a Republican, and cast his first Presidential vote for Henry Clay in 1844. He has served as Burgess of the borough, and from time to time has filled other borough offices. Mr. Page is a director of the Savings Bank of Stafford Springs, a position he has held for almost thirty years, and for fifteen years he has been vice-president of that institution.

Smith W. Page was married Oct. 7, 1884, to Hannah L. Ferry, who was born March 27, 1851, a daughter of C. L. Ferry, of Palmer, Mass. She died Dec. 7, 1896, leaving no issue.

Smith Wilkinson Page, despite the fact of his advanced years, is a remarkably well preserved man in both mind and body. His extensive travel, with fondness for reading, and a very retentive memory, enable him to recall incidents with ease, and to give detail of matters, which make him an entertaining companion. Probably no man living today in Stafford is as well informed as he upon the old families of the town. He is one of the oldest native born men living today in Stafford Springs. During his long life his regular habits, with a good, strong constitution inherited from his parents, have enabled him to enjoy many of life's pleasures. As a citizen his influence has been good and along lines to improve the spiritual, moral and business welfare of the town. Plain going and unassuming Smith W. Page enjoys the respect of all who know him.

SENECA NELSON PAGE, noted above as the brother and business associate of Smith W. Page, had his education in the private school of Francis O. Harwood, and completed his studies in Stafford. He grew into a man of very fine character, and became widely known for his sterling honesty and business ability. Politically Seneca N. Page was a Republican, and he held the office of justice of the peace for some years. He served on the board of burgesses, and filled various other positions. In business he proved very successful, but some six years before his death gave up active business on account of the formation of a cataract on his eyes that rendered him almost blind. He was a man of public spirit, and held the good of the town much at heart. In religion he belonged to the Congregational Church, of which his widow is still a member. His home habits were correct, and he was a deep reader. He took delight in writing, and had a marked poetical gift.

Seneca N. Page was married Sept. 12, 1848, to Rebecca Holden, who was born Sept. 12, 1828, and was a daughter of Rufus and Phila (Weber)

Geo H Reynolds

Holden, of Shirley, Mass. Rufus Holden was a farmer, and he died when Mrs. Page was but three years old. To Seneca N. and Rebecca (Holden) Page were born: (1) Andrew, born Jan. 29, 1854, died Oct. 4, 1857, in Stafford; (2) Mary Annie, born Sept. 12, 1859, married Walter Doane, Nov. 8, 1888. Mr. Doane is a druggist in Worcester, Mass., where he is in business for himself; (3) Lilla Edna, born May 23, 1865, was married Nov. 24, 1887, to Benjamin Field, of Portland, where he is engaged as a tinner, and was formerly in business for himself.

GEORGE H. REYNOLDS, who resides at Spring Manor, his handsome country home near Mansfield Depot, in the town of Mansfield, Tolland county, is one of the noted mechanical engineers of this country, and he has a high reputation both as a man and a student of practical affairs.

The Reynolds ancestry is traced to William Reynolds, who came from Plymouth, Mass., to Providence, R. I., in 1637, one year after Roger Williams, banished from the Massachusetts Bay Colony, had located there. He was one of the original purchasers of the land from the Narragansett Indians, the sum paid for this land, which is now of vast value, being about $26. William Reynolds was arrested and confined in prison, at Hartford, Conn., for his refusal to pay taxes to the Dutch; and again because he refused to pay taxes to the Massachusetts Bay Colony, after they had learned of the existence of Roger Williams, whom they had thought dead. Mr. Reynolds was married to Alice Kitson in the Open Court in Massachusetts.

James Reynolds, son of William, died in Kingston, R. I., in 1700. He settled at Newport, R. I., and after the birth of a child his wife was ordered by a council at Plymouth to appear before them in the month of February to give account of her faith. She made the trip in midwinter, on foot, carrying her babe in her arms, and accompanied by a maid. Her answers to the questions of the council were not regarded as satisfactory, and she was stripped to the waist, and given ten lashes on the bare back. Her maid received the same treatment for "being in bad company."

Joseph Reynolds, son of James, was born Nov. 27, 1652, and died in 1722, in North Kingston, R. I. His wife's name was Susannah.

Samuel Reynolds, son of Joseph, was married Dec. 31, 1732, to Ann, daughter of Samuel Gardiner.

Thomas Reynolds, son of Samuel, and great-grandfather of George H., was married Sept. 22, 1749, to Elizabeth Hopkins, who was born Sept. 22, 1729, a daughter of William and Mary (Tibbits) Hopkins.

Samuel Reynolds, son of Thomas, was born Feb. 12, 1752, and lived in Frenchtown, R. I., and later migrated to the western part of New York, near Buffalo, where he died. On Dec. 4, 1777, he married Amy Weaver, who was born Nov. 18, 1759, and who died near Buffalo. Their children were: (1) Sally married Andrew Moredock, a farmer, who died in Killingly; she died in Coventry, Conn. (2) Thomas was a seafaring man in early life, and died in Kingston, R. I. (3) Betsey. (4) Peleg married Mary Wells, and died in Mansfield, Conn. (5) Selah. (6) Christopher is mentioned below. (7) Samuel, a farmer and merchant, was the first agent of the old Norwich & Worcester railroad, and was killed by the cars. (8) Jonathan was a farmer and resided in Ashford, Conn., where he died. (9) John H. was a tailor, and died in Beloit, Wis. (10) Eleanor and (11) William were twins. (12) Eunice completes the family.

Christopher Reynolds, son of Samuel, was born July 11, 1790, in Frenchtown, R. I., where his boyhood days were spent. In 1810 he located at Mansfield, where he was employed as a farm hand by a Mr. Tillinghast, who made his home on the Stephen C. Gardiner farm. He planted the large maple tree, still standing in the yard. It was one of three, but one of the others was killed by lightning, and the other by the heat of a burning barn. During the war of 1812 Mr. Reynolds was a member of the Mansfield militia, and was one of a few men drafted from the company to go to New London to assist against a threatened descent of the British. After his marriage Mr. Reynolds entered the fulling mill, then located a short distance south of the Tillinghast farm, on land now owned by his son, Edwin. The old dam is still there, but the mill has since been torn down. Here Mr. Reynolds was engaged in cloth dressing, and also in farming a small tract of land, which he had bought. On this place ten of his twelve children were born. Until it ceased to be profitable on account of the close competition of the larger mills, he continued at the cloth business. Then for a time Mr. Reynolds employed his spare time in such labor as he could secure, and, moving to Eagleville, he assisted in building the first dam across the Willimantic river at that point. While the dam was being constructed large salmon, while endeavoring to get over it, were killed by musket shot. His former farm was purchased by his two sons, George H. and Edwin, who assumed a large indebtedness, and the parents removed to the farm, where they spent their declining years, and where they died, the husband and father July 21, 1871, from the infirmities of age, and the wife and mother, Sept. 24, 1860. They were interred in the old cemetery, a mile east of their first home in Mansfield.

Notwithstanding a severe illness from inflammatory rheumatism, Christopher Reynolds was always a hard-working and industrious man, bravely contending against pain and suffering, until the latter years of his life, when he was almost entirely confined to his chamber. In early life he was a Democrat, but later became a Republican. Though not a church member he was a man of high character, honest, moral and upright, and he reared a family of which any father might well be proud.

On Sept. 26, 1813, Christopher Reynolds was married, in Mansfield, to Clarissa Huntington, who was born in that town March 5, 1794, daughter of Jonas and Rhoda (Baldwin) Huntington. The Huntingtons and Baldwins were among the old and honored families of Mansfield, at one time numerously represented throughout that section. To this union were born: (1) Adaline, born May 2, 1814, married May 2, 1837, Jacob S. Eaton, a woolen manufacturer of Ludlow, Mass., and died in Indian Orchard, Mass. (2) Melissa, born March 14, 1816, married Sept. 26, 1842, Charles Shumway, for many years a watchman in the Corliss Engine Works, at Providence, R. I., and died in Mansfield. (3) Elizabeth, born March 14, 1818, was married (first) March 26, 1854, to Rev. Asa Sanders; her second husband was Benajah Gurnsey Roots, a civil engineer, who assisted in the building of the Illinois Central railroad, and later was prominent in State school matters in Illinois. She was killed in a runaway accident. (4) Sarah H., born Jan. 31, 1820, was married Sept. 21, 1841, to Fayette Barrows, a farmer, and died in Mansfield. (5) Julia H., born Oct. 8, 1821, was married Oct. 24, 1842, to Leander Derby, a comb manufacturer, who died in San Andreas, Cal.; she now resides in Brooklyn, N. Y. (6) Glenn H., born Nov. 25, 1823, was married May 19, 1846, to Elizabeth F. Eaton. He remained at home engaged in farming until of age, when he went to Providence, R. I., where he was employed in various mercantile lines until 1856. He then spent ten years at Danielson, after which he managed a store at Cranston, R. I., for the A. & W. Sprague Manufacturing Company. In 1868 he set up in the mill supply business at Providence, where he remained until 1886, when he returned to Mansfield, in a few years removing to Danielson, where he now resides. (7) Jane, born July 9, 1826, died Aug. 8, 1827. (8) John D., born July 28, 1827, was married April 6, 1854, to Martha Slater, and, after her death, to Mrs. White. For many years he was a school teacher, and is now postmaster at Andover, N. J. (9) George Huntington is next in the order of birth. (10) Edwin, born March 23, 1831, is mentioned at length elsewhere in this volume. (11) Benjamin Franklin, born Jan. 29, 1833, married April 27, 1857, Amanda Hawkins. He has been chief engineer of the Omaha Water Works for the past seventeen years, and resides at Florence, Neb. (12) Albert W., born Dec. 11, 1835, married Jan. 15, 1857, Rebecca Runion; he was a mechanical engineer of great promise, and died in New York, from overwork, in testing machinery.

George Huntington Reynolds was born Feb. 8, 1829, in Mansfield, and like his brothers early became responsible for his own support. When quite young he showed signs of that genius that has placed him in the front rank of the calling he is pursuing at the present time. As a mere boy he and his brothers would erect bridges, make wagons sleds, and other playthings with a touch of genuine skill. The bridges which they erected across the small streams on the family homestead, they used in hauling stone and wood, often overloading their wagons so as to break down the bridges, that they might build them up in better form. At the age of eleven years George H. was employed on the farm of Mr. Tillinghast, who had given his father employment thirty years before. Three months' schooling was allowed him each year; the first year he had $9, out of which he bought his clothing for the year; the second year, $11; the third $13; and the fourth, $16. Work began at daylight and lasted until long after dark. By trapping game, picking nuts, and other side labors, the boy managed to earn enough extra money with which to buy paper, pencils and ink, for use in drawing bridges, vessels, houses and other things in spare moments. The children of today can hardly comprehend the amount of work a farm boy at that time was expected to accomplish. During his third year with Mr. Tillinghast, Mr. Reynolds picked sixteen bushels of hazel nuts, which sold for a dollar a bushel, thus netting his employer three dollars more than his year's wages. As it is said to take sixteen bushels of nuts in the bur to make one bushel of nuts, the lad must have picked 256 bushels of burs. These nuts were picked on land now owned by Mr. Reynolds, and also on land then and now owned by the Merrows. During these years of hard work with Mr. Tillinghast, Mr. Reynolds was never sick a day, and never lost a day's time. Up to this time his schooling had consisted of attendance during the three winter months. When he was fifteen he engaged with Chauncey Dunham, of Mansfield for $6 a month. Mr. Dunham lived in the house now owned by Edwin Reynolds as a summer home and the brick house still standing was made from clay hauled by our subject's father when he was eighteen years old.

Soon after this George H. Reynolds attended select school during August, September and October, taught by a Mr. Dimock, a student from Yale who was a thorough instructor, and gave Mr. Reynolds more insight into his studies than he had secured from all his previous schooling, particularly in mathematics, in which he was quite bright.

After leaving Mr. Dimock's school Mr. Reynolds was employed as a spinner in woolen mills at Ludlow, Mass., and at Broad Brook, Wilsonville and Merrow, Conn. He was a master of the trade, and at Merrow he could do his work in half the time his predecessor had needed. It was at Merrow that his first mechanical construction work was done. The mill owners were putting in new machinery, and the boss machinist (sent from Hartford to take charge of the work) selected as his assistant Mr. Reynolds, who showed such aptitude for the work that the jealousy of the "boss" was aroused, lest his place might be lost. As a result Mr. Reynolds left the spinning trade and devoted himself to mechanical work. Going to Leominster, Mass., he began work on steam machinery, which has been his work to the present day. In 1856 he exhibited a steam engine of his own designing, and a decided improvement on what had gone before to the American Institute Fair, held at the Crystal Palace, New York, for which he was awarded the gold medal of the Institute, and was made superintendent of the Fair the following year.

In 1859, Mr. Reynolds became chief draughtsman of the Delamater Iron Works, and in 1862, he was made superintendent and general manager of the Mystic Iron Works, of Mystic Bridge, Conn. These works were established for the purpose of building ships and engines for the Government during the Civil war, and when the war was over Mr. Reynolds returned to the Delamater works to assume the position of superintendent, which he held until 1884, when he resigned to take a similar position with the Crane Elevator Company of Chicago. He has done more to improve and perfect the passenger elevator, perhaps, than any other one man living, and is still engaged in the study of its problems. His services in this connection are much sought after by builders of elevators, not only in this country but in Europe as well. The dynamite gun greatly interests him, and all the guns so far constructed have been made under his patents. He is the consulting engineer of the Pneumatic Dynamite Gun Company of New York, and superintended the gun construction of the dynamite cruiser, "Vesuvius." He has also built guns for Italy and England. When the Crane Elevator Company was absorbed by the Otis Elevator Company, Mr. Reynolds was still continued as engineer for the combination. The Locomobile Company of America has engaged him as its engineer. He is one of the foremost engineers of this generation, and he has taken out more than a hundred patents in his line of work.

For many years Mr. Reynolds had his home in Pelham Manor, N. Y. In 1885 he built a handsome and attractive home on land in Mansfield, which he has reclaimed from its primitive condition of forest and boulder, and with the aid of the landscape gardener, has made it one of the most picturesque and charming places in the town. This romantic spot has received the name of Spring Manor, from the many springs of clear cold water that well up on the grounds. The entire estate consists of about a thousand acres of land, on which, as a boy, he spent years of hard work for Mr. Tillinghast, as noted above. Personally Mr. Reynolds is genial and social, and he is an interesting talker, with a splendid memory, and a large fund of general information. His disposition is hospitable, and his manners democratic. He has traveled widely, and his impressions of the countries he has seen are vivid and impressive. A staunch Republican, Mr. Reynolds has never sought office, though while living in Pelham Manor, he served eight years as president of the school board.

On Nov. 1, 1853, Mr. Reynolds was married to Abby E., a daughter of James Brown, of Westfield, Vt. To them have come children as follows: (1) Nellie J., born Sept. 2, 1854, died in young womanhood. (2) George Osmar, born Dec. 9, 1856, graduated from the Friends' School at Providence, R. I., entered the service of a New York manufacturing firm and is now one of the firm of Hitchcock, Dermady & Co., manufacturers of hatters' furs. He is married and has two children, George Osmar, Jr. (who shows much ability as an artist) and Grace. (3) Irving H., born April 13, 1862, took up mechanical work in 1879 as a marine engineer, and in 1884, entered the employ of the Edward P. Allis Company of Milwaukee. He has been identified particularly in the development of the Modern High Duty Water Works pumping engine, notable examples of his work being in the city water works of Boston, Pittsburg, Detroit, St. Louis, Milwaukee, Chicago, Omaha, etc., many of these engines holding the world's records for economy. At the present time (1903) he is chief engineer of the Allis-Chalmers company, manufacturers of engines, mining and milling machinery, and employing upward of six thousand men. He married Bertha Barker, of Milwaukee, in 1889. (4) Grace C., born July 10, 1870, died in infancy.

FREDERICK STOUGHTON MEACHAM was born Aug. 21, 1872, in Tolland, Conn., on the old homestead, where his father, Charles Meacham, lived and died.

Charles Meacham was born Aug. 31, 1837, and died Jan. 11, 1896. He was at one time engaged in the manufacture of spools on the old homestead on a very extensive scale. His life business, however, was farming and he was a successful and prosperous man. In politics he was a Republican, and at different times filled many minor offices. In church affairs he was very active, being chorister, and Sunday-school superintendent for many years. He is remembered as a man of domestic habits and traits, much devoted to his family, a kind friend and a good neighbor. Mr. Meacham was a charter member of the Tolland Grange. He was the general agent for the American Agriculturist in several counties in New York as well as in Connecticut, and was engaged with the Phelps Publishing Company, which is now the Orange Judd Company of Springfield, Mass. Mr. Meacham gained his early education in the Ellington high school.

Charles Meachman was first united in marriage to Miss Emily Clark, a daughter of William Clark, of Tolland, who died Aug. 9, 1864. His second wife, Anna, was a sister of his first wife. She died Feb. 9, 1866, and he was married, a third time, to Mary Stoughton, who was born April 30, 1838, and married Mr. Meachman, Dec. 22, 1866. Her parents were Cicero and Lavina Stoughton, of New Preston township, Washington, Conn. To this marriage were born the following children: Emily Clark, born Dec. 14, 1867, who married Albert Parsons, a farmer of Ellington, and became the mother of Ruby Marian, born April 18, 1894; Anna Louise, born July 2, 1869, living at home; Frederick Stoughton; Charles Edwin, born April 19, 1875, a poultry fancier and largely interested in poultry raising, who married Edith Lathrop, and has two children, Florence, born June 3, 1900, and Charles Preston, born Jan. 21, 1902.

Enoch Giles Meacham, the grandfather of Frederick S., was born in Tolland, Feb. 13, 1812, received his education in the Tolland schools and devoted his mature years to farming and milling, for some years carrying on a butcher business as well. In his later years he took much satisfaction in his connection with the church, of which he became a deacon when a young man. He died May 2, 1895. Anna C. Ladd, his wife, was the daughter of Stephen Ladd, of Tolland, and they were married in 1836. She was born in 1818, and died Nov. 7, 1891. Stephen Ladd was a grandson of Jonathan Ladd, who came to Tolland about 1720. Their children were: Charles, who was the father of Frederick S.; Caroline; William G.; Sarah, wife of Dr. S. P. Ladd of Moosup, Conn.; Wilbur, who died at the age of five years.

Enoch Meacham, great-grandfather of Frederick S., was born in Woodstock, Conn., and came from that point to Tolland in 1797, settling on the farm where his descendants are now found. He died Aug. 29, 1839, at the age of seventy-one. His wife, Peggy, died March 15, 1837, at the age of sixty-four years.

Frederick S. Meacham was educated in the home district, and in the Rockville high school. In 1892, 1895, 1896, 1897, 1900 and 1901 he taught school in the towns of South Windsor, Vernon and Tolland; during these years he has continued on the old Deacon Meacham farm. The house in which he lived until March 12, 1903, when it was destroyed by fire, was built by his great-grandfather in 1811 and was called the best in the town at the time of its erection. This farm of 250 acres was known as the "banner farm" of the town, because of the excellent manner in which it was kept up and cultivated. Mr. Meacham owned 196 acres, with a saw, grist and shingle mill, long since established by his grandfather on the Hockanum river, which runs through his farm. The mill power was greatly improved by the addition of a 38-horse power water wheel. Feb. 8, 1902, the place was sold to the Rockville Water and Aqueduct Company. For two years Mr. Meacham has been Past Master of the Tolland Grange. In his politics he is a staunch Republican, is a member of the school board, and was acting school visitor in 1898 and 1899; he has also served on the board of relief. An active man in the Congregational Church, he has been president of the local society of Christian Endeavor.

The Meacham family is one of the old and honored families of the town, and has had among its various representatives some of the best citizens of the place.

GEORGE HARRISON NICHOLS, a leading agriculturist and stockman, and one of the largest landowners in Windham county, is a worthy representative of a family that traces an honorable lineage back to the sixteenth century.

The first of the name of whom we have authentic record was William Nichols, born in England in 1599, who came to Massachusetts and was granted land in Danvers in 1638. He was a man of considerable means, and in 1652 resided upon a farm embracing six hundred acres. He probably died about 1695, his will being probated Feb. 17, 1695-6. His wife, Mary, survived him and was living in 1696. Their children were: John, born in 1640, died Oct. 12, 1700; Mary married Thomas Cave of Topsfield, Mass., and Hannah married Thomas Wilkins in 1667.

(II) John Nichols, born in 1640, in Danvers, Mass., died Oct. 12, 1700. By his wife, Lydia, he had ten children: William, born Aug. 25, 1663; Anna, Aug. 24, 1665; John Jan. 14, 1667; Thomas, Jan. 20, 1669; Isaac, Feb. 16, 1672; Lydia, April 16, 1675; Rachel, Nov. 3, 1677; Elizabeth, March 16, 1679-80; Ebenezer, Nov. 9, 1685; and Margaret.

(III) Thomas Nichols, son of John, married Johanna Towne, of Topsfield, and in 1725 moved to Sutton. Of their eight children we have the following record: Anna was baptized Aug. 31, 1696; Mary, Isaac and Constant, July 27, 1700; Jonathan, Oct. 17, 1703; Elizabeth, Dec. 2, 1705; Phebe, July 27, 1707; and Thomas, Sept. 21, 1712.

(IV) Jonathan Nichols, son of Thomas, baptized in Salem, Mass., settled in Thompson, Conn., in 1763, where at the time of the formal organization of the town he was the first man to receive the title of Mr. On May 14, 1731, he married a Miss Phelps (possibly Marv), and they had eight children: (1) Jonathan, born June 24, 1739, was a shipbuilder at Quadic, also contractor of the turnpike between Hartford and the Connecticut State line. He was prominent in Revolutionary affairs; as captain of a company, and at the surrender of Ticonderoga stood third man from Ethan Allen. He was a delegate to the Constitutional Convention of 1818. The first Methodist Conference held in Connecticut (the sixth in New England), which met Sept. 19, 1796, was held at his residence in Thompson. (2) Elijah is mentioned below. (3) Molly. (4) Rachel was born May 17, 1749. (5) David was a Universalist in religious belief. His son, Amasa, founded Nichols Academy, at Dudley, Mass. (6) Hannah, (7) Hulda and (8) Lucy completed the family.

- George Harrison Nichols

(V) Elijah Nichols, Sr., a farmer, born in Thompson, Nov. 25, 1743, married (first) in 1766, Martha Flint, and after her death, which occurred on April 28, 1772, he married Mary White, who died Aug. 14, 1827. He died in Thompson Feb. 22, 1839, aged ninety-six. By his first marriage there were two children: Elijah, Jr., who is mentioned below; and Martha, who married David Haskell, by whom she had a son, Jefferson, who was presiding elder of the New England Methodist Conference for twenty-one years.

(VI) Elijah Nichols (2), born in Thompson, in 1770, was an extensive land owner and agriculturist in Windham county. His property he first held in company with his father, but in 1807 a division was made, he receiving $5,000, which he invested in the Stroud place, a 361 acre tract, in Northeast Grosvenordale, valued at $6,000. The mortgage of $1,000 which he was obliged to put on the place, he cleared in one year, and at the end of seven years had amassed $7,000 from his investment. In succeeding years he became even more successful, and at the time of his death, which occurred on March 17, 1850, in his eighty-first year, he was enabled to give each of his children $8,000. With his father and his uncle, Jonathan Nichols, he was among the founders of the Methodist Church, of which he was steward. By his wife Millicent Brackett, of Thompson, who died Jan. 16, 1850, aged seventy-nine, he had five children: Faxon, an extensive farmer of West Thompson who represented his town in the Legislature in 1854, died in 1862, at the age of seventy; Capt. George Pickering is mentioned below; Schuyler, for a number of years an occupant of the Stroud place, died in Thompson in 1878; Franklin, a man of great ability, in early life a deputy sheriff of Thompson, afterward president of the Thames National Bank, also of the Savings Society, and director of several banking institutions, married Anna Fairfield, and he died in Norwich, in 1891, in his eighty-sixth year; Millie died March 10, 1799; and Emeline married Hezekiah S. Ramsdell, a Methodist minister, and died in West Thompson.

(VII) Capt. George Pickering Nichols, the revered father of George Harrison, was a wealthy agriculturist and exceedingly prominent in public affairs. He was born in Thompson, Dec. 14, 1796, and he married (first) Lucy Alton, daughter of Thomas Alton, and, after her death, which occurred in 1826, he married her sister, Mary Alton. By his first marriage there was one child, Mary, who married Samuel D. Crosby, of Thompson, and died in New York at the age of thirty-four. By the second marriage there were five children: (1) Lucy married Josiah Stiles, of Thompson, now a pork packer of Chicago, and died in Chicago in her sixty-seventh year. (2) Jerome, born March 6, 1831, was a carpenter and farmer in the vicinity of Thompson for many years; he represented his town in the State Legislature in 1870, and held many other offices of trust. His death occurred March 19, 1897. (3) Monroe became prominent in educational and military life. He assisted in raising the 18th Regiment in 1862, and went out as captain of Co. A, enlisting Aug. 15, 1862. On the 22d of the same month he was promoted to Lieut. Colonel, and served through the war in that position. On June 15, 1863, he was taken prisoner at Winchester, Va., and remained some time in Libby prison. His regiment participated in the following battles, all of which, except Winchester (which was fought June 13-15, 1863), being in 1864 and all in Virginia: New Market, May 15; Harrisonburg, June 3; Piedmont, June 5; Lexington, June 11; Buchanan, June 14; Liberty, June 16; Quaker City, June 17; Lynchburg, June 18; Salem, June 21; Hedgerlee, July 10; Stricker's Ford, July 18; Kearnstown, July 23; Winchester, July 24; Martinsburg, Aug. 12; Sandy Point and Middletown, Aug. 11 and 12; Hupp's Hill, Aug. 13; Opequan, Aug. 21; Halltown and Charles-town, Aug. 22-26. Lieut. Col. Monroe Nichols was given an excellent education and prior to the war was a preceptor in Nichols Academy. After the war he went to Minnesota, where he died Jan. 17, 1868. In connection with his war record the Putnam Patriot said: "Distinguished alike for studiousness and versatility he might have won success in any position; but like many others in those crucial days, he sacrificed all his brilliant hopes and prospects on the altar of his country." (4) George Harrison was the youngest son. (5) Emily, the youngest daughter, never married, and died in Chicago in September, 1898. George Pickering Nichols, the father, was a successful farmer during his life, owning a 260-acre tract. As a young man he was quite active in public life, filled many local offices, and represented his town in the Legislature in 1851, and several other terms. At first an ardent Democrat, he held tenaciously to what he believed to be the original principles of that party. When he finally became a Republican, he claimed that the party, not he, had changed doctrines. He commanded the highest esteem from his townsmen and was made captain in the State militia. Zealous in religious matters, he was largely instrumental in the erection of the Fisherville Methodist Church, and after the building was finally completed he served as steward and trustee for many years. He died July 27, 1877, and his wife passed away Sept. 25, 1882, aged eighty-two years and five months.

George Harrison Nichols was born on the old Nichols homestead April 26, 1837. He was grounded in the common branches in the district school, and later added to his educational equipment at the Thompson Academy. He, however, early developed an independent spirit, and his mind running more to business than to a scholastic career, he left home at the age of seventeen years and embarked in business for himself. From his earliest youth he had possessed an almost intuitive knowledge of cattle on the hoof, being able to judge to within a few pounds of the actual weight of any animal. This knowledge he now put to good service, and going over into New York State began the career in which he has been so successful. It is safe to say that George Nichols has bought more cattle on the hoof during his lifetime than any other man in the State. He followed this kind of a life exclusively until the retirement of his father from active work on the farm, when he came home and assumed the management, and there he has since passed his life among the friends of his boyhood, with whom none is more deservedly popular. He has added to the old homestead at various times, and now owns a body of 700 acres, much of it being fine woodland.

It is said that every man lives two lives—one unseen, for his own contemplation, the other seen, for the contemplation of his neighborhood. However this may be, the life that George Nichols has lived is reflected in the honest, open countenance that he bears, his kindly and generous nature employing itself in deeds of helpfulness and charity. In business circles he has been quick to connect himself with legitimate enterprise, and shrewd enough to detect the fictitious value of boom schemes. He was one of the promoters and subsequent organizers of the electric street railway of Putnam and Grosvenor Dale, and was for several years a member of the board of directors, and was the first president. He was a stockholder and director of the Thompson Savings Bank, and also acted as its president for three or four years. He was president of the Windham County Brick Company for several years, and for eighteen or twenty years was a director in the Thompson Savings Bank of Putnam, and for sixteen or seventeen years was its president, and he was also president of the Thompson National Bank of Putnam. Once convince him that any enterprise is reasonably sure to promote the comfort and happiness of his community, and his time and capital are used without stint in carrying it to a successful conclusion.

In political life he has not been active in the sense of an office seeker. His staunch Republicanism, however, and his well-known executive ability made him the popular candidate in 1881-3 from his district for the State Legislature, where he employed his time in the support of all good measures, acquitting himself with credit and with satisfaction to his constituency. He has held most of the local offices at one time or another, including that of first selectman for three or four terms. From 1888 to 1898 he was a trustee of the Connecticut Hospital for the Insane. On Jan. 21, 1865, Gov. Buckingham appointed him sub-recruiting agent to his brother, Capt. Monroe Nichols, for the State of Connecticut.

Mr. Nichols is very domestic in his tastes and has always taken great interest and pride in his home. He has reared four sons and two daughters, all of whom are strong characters in their different communities. His first marriage occurred, in 1857, in Thompson, when he wedded Mary, daughter of James Johnson, and she became the mother of all his children, namely: Lucy A., born Sept. 9, 1858, married Nov. 21, 1895, in Hartford, Conn., Edmond S. Backus, now in the general merchandise business in Thompson and they have two children; Murial and Lawrence Edmond; Mary, born Mar. 9, 1861, died Sept. 22, 1878; George E., born April 25, 1864, now a stock buyer for Nelson Morris of Chicago, married Mary Means, of Louisville, Ky.; Warren F., born June 6, 1867, also a stock buyer for Nelson Morris, stationed at St. Louis, Mo., married Sadie Gerbrick; Earl P., born Nov. 25, 1870, now a commission merchant at St. Joseph, Mo., married Josephine Steinacker; and John Monroe, born Sept. 7, 1873, with the Nelson Morris Co., at St. Joseph, Mo., wedded Mary Carter. The mother of these children was a woman in the truest sense of that good old Anglo-Saxon word, and her untimely death on May 12, 1879, was deeply mourned by her devoted husband and children. The second wife of Mr. Nichols was Martha, daughter of Jeremiah Olney, of Thompson. His present wife, whom he married March 27, 1897, was Mary Blake, a native of the Wolverine State, and a daughter of Alexander and Susan (Crosby) Blake (the latter of whom was a native of Thompson), son and daughter, respectively, of Robert Blake and Charles Crosby. Mrs. Mary (Blake) Nichols was educated in the Grand Rapids public schools, the city of her birth, with a supplementary literary course in Mrs. Bryan's Seminary in Batavia, N. Y. Discovering here an unusual talent for art, she was later sent east to Boston where she took a thorough course in the Boston School of Art. Following this she was the efficient superintendent of art and drawing in the schools of her native city for several years. The kindly graciousness of her manner has opened up a large place in the affections of the people among whom her ancestry were esteemed neighbors and friends.

COL. CHARLES WARREN. The reader of these memoirs will find the conviction borne in upon his mind that underlying all differences of training and environment there is another factor upon which the history of each individual is based. An ideal, a steady purpose, is needed, and where this is found life is simplified and all things tend to bring about sooner or later the desired end. Truth "where there's a will there's a way," and fortunate is the man who early in life finds the right channel toward which to direct his energies. Among those who have solved this problem with enviable results is Col. Charles Warren, merchant, financier, soldier and loyal citizen.

Col. Charles Warren is a native of Connecticut born Sept. 25, 1835, in Stafford, Tolland county. He is a son of Samuel Barnes Warren, who was born July 5, 1810, in Boston, Mass., and died April 15, 1870, in Stafford, Connecticut.

By trade Samuel Barnes Warren was a carpenter, and devoted almost his entire business life to contracting and building. In early youth he removed from his native city to Stafford, Conn., and for several years carried on a wagon-repairing business in partnership with Rufus G. Pinney, of Stafford Hollow. (From 1850 to 1854 Mr. Pinney was comptroller of the State of Connecticut.) Samuel B. Warren was a Democrat but cared little for politics, being of a quiet, conservative disposition, unpretentious and unassuming. Physically robust and healthy he was never under a doctor's care until the sickness came that carried him off.

On July 16, 1834, Samuel Barnes Warren was married to Marilda Orcutt, who was born March 2, 1813, a daughter of Horace and Polly (Howe) Orcutt, substantial and respectable farming people of the town of Stafford. Mr. Orcutt was one of four brothers after whom the village of Orcuttville in that town was named. Mrs. Samuel B. Warren died in Stafford, March 1, 1885. She was the mother of eight children, a brief record of whom is here given: (1) Charles, the subject proper of this sketch. (2) Ann Eliza, born Feb. 1, 1837, died Oct. 11, 1855. (3) Augusta, born July 14, 1839, died Nov. 19, 1901, in East Boston, the widow of Daniel Webster, a wool carder in his day. She was the mother of two children—Lillian A. Flagg and Flora B. (4) Stephen, born Nov. 4, 1841, a "finisher" in the employ of the Globe Woolen Co., of Utica, N. Y. He married Margaret Reed and has one son, Walter. (5) Ellen, born March 10, 1844, died March 9, 1862. (6) Emily, born April 9, 1846. She married March 18, 1869, Anson Bartlett, a painter and decorator, of Grand Rapids, Mich., who is now blind as the result of wounds and exposure during the Civil war. Their children are—Bert, born Nov. 9, 1875, Carrie E., born April 30, 1870, and Charles, born Feb. 14, 1872. (7) Chauncey, born June 9, 1848, died Aug. 31, 1901. He married Sarah E. Lincoln and had four children—George, Aug. 18, 1879, died in 1886; Charles, Nov. 30, 1889; Lillian, Jan. 6, 1892; Harold, April 5, 1894. (8) Lottie, born Sept. 17, 1850, married July 1, 1874, Frank B. Willis, of Windham, Conn., a "finisher" in a woolen mill. They have one son—Edward F., born Aug. 27, 1875, clerk in a shoe store in Bridgeport, Connecticut.

Col. Charles Warren received a thorough education at the common schools of his native town laying aside his books at the age of nineteen, when he entered the finishing department of the Converseville Company's woolen mills. Such was his ability and skill in this branch of the business that at the end of little over a year he was promoted to the position of head finisher in the mill. In this capacity he remained until 1860, some five years, when at the earnest solicitation of Henry Thrall, he entered into partnership with that gentleman under the firm name of Thrall & Warren, wholesale dealers in leather at Boston, Mass. In this enterprise they met with success, and continued it until about the time of the breaking out of the war of the Rebellion. They then closed out their business, and Col. Warren, whose patriotism outweighed all other considerations, returned to his native town to offer his services to his imperiled country.

As Col. Warren's military record and experience are detailed in full farther on in this sketch, we will here take up the narrative of his life from the time of his discharge from the U. S. service Dec. 21, 1865. Returning to Stafford, he once more took up the vocations of peace, and in 1866 with James M. Lord and William W. Ellis, purchased the general store of Ellis, Converse & Co. This business was at that time carried on in the building which stood at the corner of Main and Spring streets, Stafford Springs, where Col. Warren in 1884 erected the two-story brick building known as "Warren's block," in which the Savings Bank of Stafford Springs is now located. The style of the new firm was Ellis, Warren & Co. and so continued until 1871, in which year Mr. Ellis' interest in the concern was purchased, the firm becoming Warren & Lord. In 1880 the Colonel sold out his interest to Mr. Lord, retiring from the business which all along had proved highly successful. Taking a well-earned rest and vacation, he made a trip to the Pacific coast by way of recreation. In July, 1880, Col. Warren was elected president of the Savings Bank of Stafford Springs, which position he has since filled with honor to himself and gratifying results to the bank and its numerous patrons.

That Col. Warren is one of the leading citizens of this section of Connecticut goes without saying; he is widely known as a substantial business man, retired several years ago from active life, yet ever maintaining his interest in the advancement and prosperity of his locality. Charitable toward all deserving objects and possessed of a kind and generous disposition, he is withal unassuming and modest beyond measure and he enjoys the highest respect and esteem of all who know him.

Col. Warren is a director of the Stafford Public Library Association, one of the trustees of the Memorial Fund of that association, and very active in its interests; he is a trustee of the Arba Hyde Fund for erection of a library building; is a director and one of the original incorporators of the Stafford Springs Cemetery Association; and a member of Winter Post, No. 44, G. A. R., of Stafford, in the affairs of which he takes an active interest. He is a consistent member and trustee of the M. E. Church, of which he is a liberal supporter; while in politics he is a stanch Republican, invariably declining, however, any political preference. He is a member of The Pilgrim Society that erected the Pilgrim Monument at Plymouth, Massachusetts.

Thus far we have spoken of Col. Charles Warren as a civilian, and it is now our pleasure to take up his military career which is one worthy of full record—the record of a man who entered the service as a comparatively humble private and returned with the rank of colonel. Even in his youth Col. Warren was deeply interested in military affairs, joining a military company organized in his native town and serving as sergeant in the same until leaving town for business in Boston, Mass. On Oct. 4, 1861, Charles Warren enlisted as a private in Co. B, 11th C. V. I., a company largely composed of Stafford men, and was mustered into the service of the United States as sergeant, Oct. 24, 1861, for three years or during the war.

Charles Warren was made a second sergeant before leaving the State and soon after promoted to the position of first sergeant. He left the State with his regiment in December, 1861, joining the Burnside expedition to North Carolina. He actively participated in the battle of Newbern March 14, 1862, and in the Maryland campaign of September, 1862, which resulted in the battles of South Mountain Sept. 14, and Antietam Sept. 17. On Oct. 27, he was commissioned first lieutenant, was in the advance into Virginia in November and at the battle of Fredericksburg Dec. 13, 1862.

Lieutenant Warren was actively engaged in the siege of Suffolk, Va., by Gen. Longstreet in April and May, 1863, and participated in several skirmishes with the Rebel forces besieging the place. On July 18, 1863, he received his promotion as captain and was assigned to the command of his company. A large part of his company re-enlisted as veterans in January, 1864. A furlough of thirty days was granted, and he returned with his men to Connecticut, where they were received with much enthusiasm and demonstrations of general joy and gratitude. Returning to the front at Williamsburg, Va., in March, Capt. Warren commanded his company in the advance up the James River in May, 1864, participating in the battle of Swift Creek May 7, and Drury's Bluff May 16, and in the battle of Cold Harbor June 4, being under continuous fire for ten days. Crossing the James River with his regiment he was in the advance on Petersburg June 14, and actively engaged in the investment and siege of the city, being under fire continuously for about sixty days. On June 27, Gen. Stedman appointed him on his staff as acting assistant inspector general for the 2d Brigade, 2d Division, 18th Army Corps.

Capt. Warren served in this position under Gen. Stedman, Col. Guyon, Col. Murrey and Gen. Ripley until November, 1864, having an active part in the battle of Fort Harrison Sept. 29, and Williamsburg road near Richmond Oct. 27 and 28. On Nov. 17, 1864, he was commissioned major of his regiment, and May 17, 1865, was made lieutenant colonel, and commanded his regiment in the advance on Richmond on the Newmarket road north of the James river April 3, 1865.

Being among the first troops to enter the city

Lieut. Col. Warren's regiment stacked arms near the capitol and was assigned to the duty of putting out the fires which the Confederates had kindled and which were fast sweeping the city to destruction. On April 5, Lieut. Col. Warren was appointed provost marshal in Richmond, and served in this position until September, 1865, when he was assigned to the command of the Sub-Division of New River, embracing several counties in southwest Virginia, and was commissioned colonel Dec. 14, 1865. After more than four years and two months service Col. Warren returned home in command of his regiment, and was honorably mustered out of service Dec. 21, 1865, having participated in every important march and battle of his regiment, and in others of importance.

In March, 1865, when major in command of his regiment, being disgusted at the character of the substitutes sent him from Connecticut as recruits, he resigned. The resignation was not accepted. Extracts from endorsements on Major Warren's resignation by superior officers: "This officer can not be spared. I consider Major Warren to be one of the best officers in the service, his regiment always appears in excellent order, which is due to his exertions, which as his regiment is composed largely of substitutes reflects the highest credit on him."

[Signed] "EDGAR M. CULLEN,
"Col. 96th N. Y. Vols., Com. Brigade."

"The resignation of Major Warren disapproved, as he is an excellent officer. The efforts of Major Warren and his officers to enforce discipline in this regiment have been most praiseworthy.

[Signed] "CHAS. DEVENS,
"Maj. Gen. Com'd. Div."

"Respectfully returned, disapproved. The service can not afford to lose such officers at this time [Signed] "JOHN GIBBON,
"Maj. Gen. Com'd. Corps."

On March 9, 1865, the 11th C. V. I. was presented by Miss Julia A. Beach, of Wallingford Conn., with a beautiful national flag, bearing upon its folds the names of eleven battles in which the regiment had participated. The following was inscribed upon the staff: "To the Eleventh Regiment Conn. Volunteers. This flag is presented by Julia A. Beach in memory of their valorous commander, Col. and Brig. General Griffin A. Stedman Jr., fallen before Petersburg, Va., August 6th, 1864 and in memory of the officers and soldiers of the regiment who have nobly dared and died in its defence."

Chaplain Smith, of the 8th Conn., made the presentation speech, which was responded to by Major Warren in command, as follows:

"It is an old saying that the heart of man can become to full for utterance, and it seems to me that this is one of those occasions. Soldiers that have followed the old Flag through the smoke of battles, have feelings for these colors that can no be uttered or expressed. Chaplain Smith, on behalf of the officers and men of the Eleventh Regiment, thank you for your kind presentation remarks, and in accepting this trust allow me to say that the gentle donor of this beautiful gift will ever be held in grateful remembrance by us—a gift that soldiers prize above every other gift, the emblem of our country's liberty—the Star Spangled Banner, the Flag of the Free.

"As our eyes greet the familiar names of the battles borne upon these folds, it brings to mind stirring scenes of the past and memories of the brave Stedman, Kingsbury, Converse, and many a brave comrade who has fallen on many a bloody field in North Carolina and Virginia; and will ever be an incentive to us to still do what we can to hasten the downfall of this truly cruel rebellion. With the blessing of heaven upon us we will try to prove ourselves worthy of the honor conferred upon us by one of the patriotic daughters of Connecticut, whose name is borne upon the gift, Miss Julia A. Beach, of Wallingford. May God help us to defend it and bear it with honor through any scenes we may be called to pass, until its colors wave triumphantly over a united, peaceful and happy country. Sergeant, bears these colors as you have borne the old ones, and I believe these strong arms that support these bayonets here will never suffer it to be disgraced."

Upon the return of the regiment in December, 1865, the flag was surrendered to the care of the Adjutant General of the State, and deposited in the State Arsenal. On Battle Flag Day September 17, 1879, this flag with others was carried by the regiment, under the command of Col. Warren, through the streets of Hartford, amid great enthusiasm, and deposited in the State Capitol with applause and cheers from the 152 surviving comrades of the regiment and the assembled thousands who witnessed the parade.

The following is a narrative of the experiences of the 11th C. V. I. from Oct. 24, 1861, the date of its mustering in, till Dec. 21, 1865, when it was mustered out of service: The Eleventh remained in camp until Dec. 16, 1861, and was then ordered to Annapolis, Md. When leaving Hartford its total strength—officers and men—was 927, Col. T. H.

Kingsbury commanding. A handsome set of regimental colors was presented to the regiment at New York Dec. 7, 1861. It camped at Annapolis and was consigned to Burnside's expedition; on Jan. 6, 1862, broke camp, and one-half was soon afterward on board the gunboat "Sentinel," the other half on the bark "Voltaire." The day after setting sail from Fort Monroe a great storm arose, lasting several days and giving rise to great fears that the expedition had met with disaster; but enough were saved to make lively work afterward on the North Carolina coast. During the storm the "Voltaire" was carried by a tremendous wave onto the sand beach off Cape Hatteras, N. C., and left high and dry on the shore, soon going to pieces. After being on shipboard twenty-nine days the several companies went into camp near Hatteras.

Early in March, 1862, the regiment moved to Roanoke Island and joined the forces preparing to operate against Newbern, N. C. It took an active part in the attack on that city, being near the center of the line, and in the final charge its colors were among the foremost on the enemy's works. After the battle the Eleventh encamped on the Trent until July, when it was ordered to join the Army of the Potomac at Fredericksburg, Va., and was placed on duty in that city. About the end of August the Eleventh evacuated the city, crossed the Rappahannock, and burning the bridges, moved north to Washington to join the army under McClellan for the Maryland campaign, being assigned to Harland's Brigade, 9th Corps. This brigade was in the advance toward Frederick, Md., and on Sept. 12 the skirmish line of the Eleventh entered the city on the heels of the Rebel army. The advance was resumed on the 13th, and the Rebels forced back to Turner's Gap, South Mountain, where a desperate battle took place in the late afternoon of the next day. The Eleventh was under fire but its loss was small. The advance was resumed on the 15th and 16th, when the enemy was found concentrated behind Antietam Creek. The battle of Antietam commenced early on the 17th, and in the afternoon the Eleventh was in the advance on the left for the capture of the stone bridge. Two companies were detached as skirmishers, under Capt. Griswold, and plunged into the creek. It was a literal "valley of death." Capt. Griswold was killed in midstream, and Col. Kingsbury was mortally wounded, but the regiment held its ground until supported, when a general charge across the bridge drove the Rebels from the stone wall and the heights beyond. The Eleventh lost 181 men, including every field officer. Being nearly out of ammunition it was relieved, but before the cartridge boxes could be filled it was again called up to support a battery with the bayonet. The enemy being repulsed and falling back across the Potomac the regiment went into camp at Pleasant Valley, Maryland.

About Nov. 5, Harland's Brigade broke camp, crossed the Potomac at Berlin, and marched south until the 9th when Burnside assumed command, and the direction was changed to Falmouth, which point was reached Nov. 19. The Brigade encamped on Stafford Hills until Dec. 12, when it moved across the river into the city and lay down in the streets waiting for the morrow. Upon the lifting of the fog the next morning the battle began and raged until dark. Harland's Brigade was not closely engaged with the enemy. The Eleventh supported pickets connecting the line of Sumner with Franklin on the left; their loss was small. Gen. Burnside decided to renew the attack next day by putting himself at the head of his old corps (the Ninth), and the Eleventh was selected to lead the advance. He was at last dissuaded from the desperate scheme, and the regiment was saved. The Connecticut Brigade quietly crossed the river on pontoons on the night of Jan. 14, 1863, and returned to the camp. On Feb. 6 it moved to Newport News, Va., where it remained until March 13. At this place the Connecticut Brigade was noted for its fine appearance on parade. On March 13, it was ordered to Suffolk, Va., where a month was spent in building fortifications. About April 10, Gen. Longstreet invested Suffolk, and the Connecticut Brigade took an active part in the defense. About the end of April the Eleventh led a reconnoissance, capturing a part of the enemy's advance line with small loss. Another reconnoissance in force was made May 3, with a small regimental loss. The siege was raised about May 3, and the brigade moved back to Portsmouth. At the end of June the Connecticut Brigade was ordered to Yorktown to form part of a force for an advance on Richmond. The Brigade marched up the Peninsula in a fiercely hot sun, and many of the men were sun-struck. The advance continued until July 4, when the Connecticut Brigade was held at Taylor's plantation as a reserve, while the rest of the division made an unsuccessful attempt to destroy the Richmond & Fredericksburg Railroad. The whole force was ordered back, the Eleventh going to Plymouth, where it remained until October, when it was ordered to Gloucester Point, Va. There it occupied Fort Keyes, and performed garrison duty at Yorktown.

In January, 1864, 268 of the men re-enlisted for three years, received a veteran furlough of thirty days, and returned to Connecticut, arriving in New Haven January 15. They were received in the State with demonstrations of general joy and gratitude. After the expiration of its furlough the regiment sailed south and arrived at Williamsburg, Va., March 3, and was assigned to the 18th Corps. On May 4, it embarked and followed gunboats up the James river, effecting a landing at Bermuda Hundred. On the 7th the Richmond & Petersburg Railroad was occupied, and the Rebels forced back toward Petersburg, across Swifts Creek, the regimental loss being twelve. On the 13th the 18th Corps made an advance in force toward Richmond, with the Eleventh regiment at the front. The enemy was forced back and a line of works near Fort Darling captured. On the 16th the Rebels made a desperate flank attack, and came near getting into the rear. The Eleventh checked the enemy in its front, but the danger appearing of the regiment being surrounded, Col. Stedman ordered it to retire. The regimental loss was nearly 200. The army fell back and threw up a line of works from the James to the Appomattox; the Eleventh worked day and night until these were completed.

About the end of May the 18th Corps went to reinforce Gen Grant at Cold Harbor, arriving there

June 1, and the Eleventh were at once sent to the front as skirmishers, meeting with but small loss in the action of the 1st. On the 3rd they were at the front in the grand bayonet charge in the early morning on the line of the enemy's works. The charge was repulsed with a loss of several hundred in Stedman's brigade, of which the Eleventh contributed ninety-one. Major Converse, Capt. Allen and Adjutant Barnum were mortally wounded. After the repulse the regiment threw up a breastwork with tin cups as a protection from the enemy's fire. After the remaining ten days under continuous fire, the 18th Corps moved back to Bermuda Hundred, and on the 14th advanced toward Petersburg, capturing an important line of works together with several pieces of artillery. The investment of the city now commenced and the Eleventh took an active part in the siege until the last of August, being continually under fire. From May 1st the regiment had lost one-half of its officers and over four hundred men in action. About the end of August the regiment went to the Bermuda Hundred front, and soon after, north of the James river to the line nearest Richmond. On the death of Col. Stedman and Lieut.-Col. Moegling, Capt. R. H. Rice became Colonel, and Capt. Charles Warren, Lieutenant-Colonel. Upon the resignation of Col. Rice Col. Warren was commissioned to succeed him Dec. 14, 1865.

The Eleventh was now assigned to the 1st Brigade, 3rd Division, 24th Corps, and participated in the triumphant advance April 3, 1865, into Richmond. It was sent to aid in putting out the fire which was fast sweeping the city to destruction. Lieut.-Col. Warren was appointed provost marshal and the regiment detailed for provost duty. Soon thereafter it was sent to Southwestern Virginia, and performed police duty until November, when it was ordered home to Hartford, where it was finally mustered out, Dec. 21, 1865, having been in the service four years and two months.

The several engagements and sieges in which the 11th C. V. I. participated were as follows: Newbern, N. C., March 14, 1862; South Mountain, Md. Sept. 14, 1862; Antietam, Md., Sept. 17, 1862; Fredericksburg, Va., Dec. 12-15, 1862; Suffolk, Va., April 24, 1863; near Suffolk, Va., May 1863; Swifts' Creek, Va., May 9, 1864; Drury Bluff, Va., May 16, 1864; Cold Harbor, June 1864; and before Petersburg, June 15 to Aug. 2, 1864.

J. SPRAGUE BARD, one of the most valuable and leading citizens of Brooklyn, Windham Co. Conn., has long also been one of its most successful business men. As a member of the world-known firm of Mabie, Todd & Bard, the leading gold pen manufacturers of the world, and makers of the famous "Swan Fountain Pen," his business reputation has become enviable, while the liberality and generosity of his public spirit have made him admired and esteemed in every part of Brooklyn.

John Bard, the father of J. Sprague Bard, was born June 13, 1778, in Sharon, Conn., and there learned the trade of jeweler, following the same through the greater part of his active life. For a short period, during the progress of the war of 1812, he was engaged in the hotel business at Windham Center, and he resided for a short time in the towns of Scotland and Canterbury, locating in Brooklyn, Conn., in 1836. There he carried on a jewelry business through many years, moving for a few years to New York City, but when business cares no longer interested him, he returned to Brooklyn where he lived in retirement for some twelve years. His death occurred June 21, 1866, and his remains were laid away in the cemetery in Brooklyn.

John Bard married Mary Foster, who was born July 18, 1777, a native of Canterbury, Conn., and a daughter of William Durkee Foster, who was a soldier in the Revolutionary war. Mrs. Bard died April 11, 1857. The children born to John Bard and wife were: Sophronia, who married Samuel Robbins, a merchant, and died in Fairlee, Kent Co., Md.; George J., who was engaged in the manufacture of gold pens, and died in Brooklyn, Conn.; James D., who also was engaged in the gold pen manufacturing business, and who died in Norwich, Conn.; Edmund H., who at the age of eighty-one years, is an active music teacher in New York City; John Jr., who also became interested in the manufacture of gold pens and now lives retired in Providence, R. I.; J. Sprague, of Brooklyn; Charles, president of the Norwich Savings Society of Norwich, Conn.; Mary F., widow of Howard Meeks, a clergyman of the M. E. Church, of Fairlee, Md.; and two others that passed away early in life.

J. Sprague Bard was born in Westminister society, of Canterbury, Conn., Aug. 3, 1824, and he had reached the age of twelve years when his parents moved to Brooklyn, Conn. His early school life was passed in Canterbury, and it was during this time that occurred the persecution of Prudence Crandall, the excitement of the time making a great impression upon the youth. It may be recalled that she was a pioneer teacher of colored children, and race prejudice was still so strong that she was not only stoned, but she was finally lodged in jail. Local history of the time gives the facts. Seeking a more advanced education, Mr. Bard then entered the Brooklyn Academy, which was then under the very scholarly management of Rev. Howe, a minister of the Congregational Church. At the age of twenty-two years, in 1846, he went to Boston, Mass., and engaged with his brother, who established a small factory there for the manufacture of gold pens, the firm name being Bard Bros. The output of this factory was about 1,000 pens a week, at this time, but it prospered from the beginning. In 1848 a branch house was opened in New York City, and Mr. Bard went thither, the business being operated at both places for a few years, and then the factories consolidated at New York. After several years of association with his brothers, J. Sprague Bard severed his connection, and in 1874 entered into another partnership, the firm becoming Mabie, Todd & Bard.

The great firm of Mabie, Todd & Bard have their offices at No. 130 Fulton street, New York, with factory located on Grove street, in the same city, and they engaged in the manufacture of gold pens, fancy gold pen holders, gold pencils, gold tooth picks and similar articles of luxury, in connection with the justly famous "Swan Fountain Pen," and they are the largest manufacturers in their line, in the United States, probably the world. They have established branch stores in Chicago, Ill., and Manchester and London, England; and their employes number fully 200, thirty of whom are clerks in their London store.

During his active connection with the firm, Mr. Bard had charge of the business of the factory. In 1901 he disposed of his interest in the company, and now lives the life of ease his former years of activity have made possible. During the administration of President Grant, Mr. Bard devised and presented to him a magnificent gold pen, which was probably the very finest ever made, and which has never been duplicated. After the death of this great man, this pen of beautiful workmanship, with other of his valuable effects, was presented to the Smithsonian Institution, where its beauty can be seen by the public. The presentation was made to the President for Mr. Bard, through Hon. Hamilton Fish, then Secretary of the Treasury, and a friend in New York to Mr. Bard.

Mr. Bard was first married in New York City to Miss Julia A. Buel, who was born March 12, 1830, in Litchfield, Conn., and died Sept. 27, 1863, in New York City, and was interred in Brooklyn, Conn. The children of this union were: Charles R., who married Louise Reed, resides in New York, and is the agent for a French drug house; and Frederick B., who married Dec. 12, 1888, Grace Lillian Wright, who was born in Providence, R. I., in 1854, is a lawyer by profession, and lives at Bay Ridge, N. Y. The second marriage of Mr. Bard was to Miss Sarah E. White, of Brooklyn, Conn., a daughter of Adams and Harriet (Robinson) White. The children of this marriage were: Harriet Adams, born April 25, 1873, died Aug. 10th, in the same year; Bertha, born Oct. 29, 1874, died April 13, 1892, in beautiful young womanhood; Sidney W., who was educated in Trinity school, in New York and Columbia College, married Katherine Robinson, and resides in Brooklyn, Conn.; and Ernest R. (twin to Sidney W.), who was educated with his brother, is an electrical engineer in New York City.

In politics, Mr. Bard has always taken a voting interest only, although he is Republican in the fullest sense of the word. However, in Church matters, Mr. Bard has not been so indifferent, for several years having been senior warden in St. Luke's Episcopal Church, of Washington Heights, on the corner of 141st street and Convent avenue, having previously been junior warden for a long period. For many years and during the period of erection of the present beautiful structure, he was the church treasurer. In Brooklyn, Conn., he is also senior warden of the church, and is a devoted and consistent churchman.

Although Mr. Bard has spent the greater part of his unoccupied time in Brooklyn, for many years during the summer months, finding in this beautiful locality and among these excellent people, the relaxation and companionship that he desired, he has not until recently determined to make it his permanent home. According to his wishes and tastes, the old Adams White homestead has been remodeled and modernized and the grounds and gardens have been put into order, and there Mr. Bard promises himself to devote attention to the cultivation of rare and beautiful flowers for the love of the work. His delight is in roses, and he has succeeded in making a bower of bloom of his home through a protracted season.

Few men have shown more public spirit than Mr. Bard. One gift that he made to Brooklyn was that of a six-acre addition to the cemetery, and this he had laid out and graded without expense to the town. A touching fact, in this connection, was that this addition was presented to the town as a memorial to his daughter Bertha, who was laid to rest in 1892. Another evidence of his kind thoughtfulness was that a certain portion of this beautiful memorial annex to the old cemetery should be set apart for the use of those worthy persons who could not afford to buy a home for their beloved dead. All over Brooklyn may be seen evidences of his generous public spirit, progress and improvement following in his train, all for the benefit and honor of his fellow-citizens. It may be declared that no citizen of Brooklyn enjoys higher regard or more sincere affection than Mr. Bard, his lack of display and his evident wish for no public testimonials making more highly valued what he has done. In him is found the courteous, Christian gentleman, whose winning smile is followed by the helpful hand, and many there are within the confines of Brooklyn to testify to their reasons for holding him in loving respect and affection.

HON. EBENEZER COLLINS DENNIS, president of the First National Bank of Stafford Springs, Tolland county, and one of the most prominent citizens, was born in Hardwick, Mass., a son of Adonijah Dennis, Jr., and a descendant of a family that has played a prominent and worthy part in the history of New England.

Rev. Samuel Dennis, his great-grandfather, was born in Sutton, Mass., and became a minister in the Baptist Church. He preached for a number of years in Petersham, and from there went to Barre, Mass., thence to Hardwick, where he located on a farm and where he died in 1784. His children were: Adonijah; Patience, who married Thomas Winchester; Samuel, who married Anna Cobb; and Polly, who became the wife of Roger Wing.

Adonijah Dennis, son of Rev. Samuel, was born in Sutton, Mass., in 1759. He remained with his father and engaged in farming on the homestead at Hardwick, Mass., which he inherited, and where he died Sept. 30, 1844, at the age of eighty-five years. As a soldier in the Revolutionary war it was his fortune to participate in the battle of Stillwater and to be present at the Crossing of the Delaware. For his service in the Revolution he had a pension from the Government. In Sutton, Mass., in 1780, he was married to Eunice Sibley, of North Salem, who died Sept. 30, 1844, at the age of eighty-two. They had the following family: (1) Royal married Sankey Watson; he lived in Fair Haven, where he was a captain of the State Militia, but in 1823 he moved to Hartford, N. Y., where he died. (2) Samuel married Cynthia Barrett, of Carlisle, and died in Concord in 1864. (3) Lucy married John Dexter, and died in 1817. (4) Betsy married John P. Colburn, of Fairhaven, Vt. (5) Polly died young. (6) Adonijah (1) died young. (7) One died in infancy. (8) Miss Eunice lived to an advanced age. (9) Louis married Lucy Henry, of Boston, where he died in 1860. (10) Patience became the wife of Asa Clark. (11) Adonijah, Jr., is mentioned below.

Adonijah Dennis, Jr., the father of Ebenezer C., was born in Hardwick, Oct. 4, 1803, and there died March 24, 1881. He was a prosperous man in his town, where he held various public positions, and was selectman in 1855. His residence was on the family homestead, where he died. On Sept. 11, 1827, he was married to Julia Ann, a daughter of Ebenezer Collins; she died in 1858, aged fifty-one years. To this union were born the following children: (1) John G., born Aug. 5, 1828, was a promising lawyer, and died July 31, 1858. (2) Samuel S., born Dec. 18, 1829, died in early childhood. (3) Samuel S. (2), born March 12, 1833, married Julia Maria Sibley in 1863; he was a representative in the Massachusetts General Assembly of 1866, and selectman from Hardwick many years, at present serving his fortieth year as chairman of the board. For many years he was on the school board, overseer of the poor, and general agent of the town, and he has been very prominent. Farming has always been his occupation. (4) Ebenezer Collins was born July 26, 1834. (5) Julia Ann E., born Aug. 6, 1839, married S. W. Newcomb April 23, 1863. (6) Louis H., born May 5, 1841, lives in Spencer, Mass. (7) Dabliette M., born June 9, 1844, married William H. Tucker in 1867, and died Aug. 12, 1874. (8) Julius A., born Dec. 1, 1844, married, in 1868, Elizabeth H. Knight, of Hardwick, Mass. (9) Charles P., born Nov. 18, 1846, died in early childhood. (10) Frederick, born Oct. 8, 1848, married Julia M. Williams in 1869, and he lives in Staten Island.

E. C. Dennis

Ebenezer Collins Dennis was born in Hardwick, Mass., where he had his schooling, and at the age of seventeen was apprenticed to the tanner's and currier's trade under B. W. Sherman, with whom he remained three years. For a year at Worcester, Mass., he worked at his trade for Muzzy & Smith, and in 1856 he came to Stafford to take a position as foreman of the shop of Thrall & Howland, which he held for four years, and in 1860, in company with Sylvester T. Preston, he leased the mill where he is found to-day. The partnership of Preston & Dennis, curriers and leathermen, continued for two years, when Marcus Howland was admitted to the firm, which became Preston, Dennis & Co. In 1863 the mill in which these gentlemen were operating was purchased by them. During the war they furnished the government a large amount of leather, especially for saddle and cavalry material. This firm was brought to an end in 1870, when Mr. Dennis bought out his partners, and six years later converted the establishment into a perfectly equipped grist mill, in which enterprise he has met with great success. His output is mainly meal and feed in a variety of forms, which are in large demand. The ground on which this mill property is standing was used for a hammer handle factory years ago by Amos Heald, who sold it to George M. Ives and H. Converse, who intended to use it for a foundry but sold it to Henry Clark, who erected a portion of the mill used by our subject. Until 1899 Mr. Dennis also maintained a feed store on Main street, where he has handled fertilizers and other articles demanded by the farming trade.

Mr. Dennis is a staunch Republican, and cast his first presidential vote for Abraham Lincoln in 1860, since that time taking a deep interest in the welfare of his party. For four years he served as State Senator, his term running from 1881 to 1885, his district, then the Twentieth, now the Twenty-fourth, including Stafford. During his senatorship he was chairman of the Claims and Fisheries committees. In 1870 he was a member of the committee to purchase grounds for the Agricultural Society, and in 1888 a stock company was formed for the purpose of handling the affairs of the society, with Mr. Dennis as president, and he has remained as such ever since. The annual exhibitions of this society are ranked among the leading ones of Connecticut. Nowhere else in New England, with a city of the same size to draw from, does an agricultural fair entertain as large crowds.

Mr. Dennis was for two years, until 1872, one of the directors of the old First National Bank; he was also an incorporator of the New Stafford National Bank, and has been one of its directors since its organization. In 1898 he was elected vice-president, and in 1901 became president of the bank. He is taking a deep interest in the Rockville and Stafford Trolley Line, and was one of the committee selected to secure the charter. Mr. Dennis attends the Congregational Church, of which his wife is an active member. He belongs to the Ecclesiastical Society of the Church.

On April 6, 1861, Mr. Dennis married Miss Sophronia Malissa Fuller, a daughter of John and Oliva (Preston) Fuller. Her parents went from Willington to Stafford in 1846, where her father, who was a very successful farmer, retired from active work, improving much real estate, however, during his last years, as an investment. To Mr. and Mrs. Dennis came one child, George Leroy, born June 30, 1865, in Stafford, and now associated with his father in business. He was married Nov. 7, 1895, to Miss Sally Wenberg, of Stafford. Mrs. Sophronia M. (Fuller) Dennis is a descendant in the seventh generation from Robert Fuller, of Salem, Mass., who came from Southampton, England, in the ship "Bevis," in 1638, and remained in Salem until 1663, when he located at Rehoboth, Mass. In 1676 that settlement was broken up by the Indians, who burned the houses of the settlers, and Robert Fuller lost his wife, Sarah, and two sons in the destruction of his home. Returning to Salem, Mr. Fuller married Margaret Waller, and lived in that place until 1696, when he made a second settlement in Rehoboth, where he died in 1706, his wife having passed away six years previous. This Mr. Fuller was one of eight ancestral heads from whom the Fuller families descend. Thomas Fuller, of Dedham, Mass., was also an ancestor of Mrs. Dennis.

John Fuller, the grandfather of Mrs. Dennis, was born in Willington in 1753, and was married to Azubah Vinton. He took a gallant part in the Revolution, and received a pension for his services. Thomas and Mehitable (Herring) Fuller, his progenitors, removed from Needham to Willington, Conn., in 1732, being among the very first settlers of the town, their posterity taking a front place in the business and intelligence of the after days.

Mr. Dennis has been one of the leading citizens of Stafford Springs for over forty years, and has served as warden, assessor and selectman. Whatever has been his capacity as a public servant, his discharge of the duties incident thereto has been marked by the same business-like methods that have always characterized his private affairs. In 1887 he built his home on Maple street, where he has since resided.

GARDINER HALL, JR. Few families in the State of Connecticut have become more favorably known in industrial circles than that to which Gardiner Hall, Jr., belongs. The honorable ancestry is traced back to 1630, and since about 1830, various members of the family have been conspicuous in the manufacturing life of Connecticut.

The early family records tell that John Hall came from Coventry, Warwickshire, England, in 1630, to Charlestown, Mass., probably in the fleet with Gov. Winthrop, but it is not known whether his family accompanied him or not. His age was about twenty-one, and his name is No. 19 on the list of church members of the First Church of Charlestown, at its organization, July 30, 1630. On May 14, 1634, he was made a freeman. In his will, which bears the date of July 15, 1694, he mentions eight sons, although his sons are believed to have numbered twelve. This will was probated Aug. 29, 1696, his death having occurred July 23d of that year, and he was buried on his own farm. He married Bethia Farmer, or Pease. His known children bore the following names: Samuel, John, Shebar (by his first marriage), Joseph, Benjamin, Nathaniel, Gershom, William, Benjamin and Elisha (by his second marriage). John Hall was known as a very prominent man in Yarmouth, Mass., and served the town as selectman a number of years. His sons all took a leading part in the town's affairs.

Benjamin Hall, son of John, was baptized May 23, 1653, and died Aug. 7, 1737, passing away when alone in his bed. On Feb. 7, 1678, he married Mehitable, daughter of James Mathews, of Yarmouth, Mass. She died Feb. 20, 1741, in her ninetieth year. Benjamin Hall was a soldier in the second Narragansett expedition. He settled early in Harwich, Mass., and moved to Mansfield, Conn., about 1708, but died in Harwich. The three children born to Benjamin bore the names of Barnabas, Shebar and Hannah.

Barnabas Hall, son of Benjamin, and the next in line of descent, was born in Mansfield, Conn. He and his wife Mary had ten children: Benjamin, Mary, Temperance, Mehitable, Barnabas, Temperance (2), Hannah, Abner, Mehitable (2), and Barnabas (2).

Barnabas Hall (2), son of Barnabas, was born April 30, 1731, in Mansfield, Conn., and died Dec. 5, 1756. On Jan. 24, 1750, he married Ann, daughter of Theophilus Hall. She died Nov. 15, 1755. Their four children were: Nathan, Hannah, Eunice and Mary.

Nathan Hall, son of Barnabas (2), was born May 26, 1751, in Mansfield, Conn., and was married May 8, 1771, to Deborah, daughter of Peres Swift. She died May 29, 1774, and Mr. Hall married Martha Lyman, of Lebanon, Conn., who bore him seven children: Abigail, Origin, Martha, Wealtha, Anna, Nathan and Almon.

Nathan Hall (2), son of Nathan, and the grandfather of Gardiner, Jr., was born June 13, 1781, in Mansfield, Conn. In April, 1825, he removed, with his large family, to Willimantic, Conn., where both he and his wife died, and there they lie at rest side by side in the Willimantic cemetery. He married Philomela, a daughter of Stephen Fisk, of Mansfield, Conn., and they had thirteen children: Stephen F., born Oct. 11, 1804; Origin, born Dec. 4, 1806, who was the pioneer of the family in the thread business in Willington in 1840; Philomela, born March 16, 1808; Gardiner, born Nov. 18, 1809, the father of Gardiner, Jr.; Lurancy, born Nov. 12, 1811; Eleazer B., born May 9, 1813; Norman B., born May 17, 1815; Deborah, born Nov. 17, 1816; Lyman, born Sept. 10, 1818; Egbert, born Feb. 15, 1820; Edwin H., born May 26, 1821; Nathan L., born in Sept., 1823; and Lovisa, born July 10, 1824. Lyman and Lovisa died in infancy. The occupation of Nathan Hall was that of a farmer, and he reared all of his children to useful pursuits.

Gardiner Hall, the father of Gardiner, Jr., was born Nov. 18, 1809, in Mansfield, Conn. His early educational advantages were limited, and mostly of a practical character, the thorough knowledge of men and affairs, of which he later gave evidence, being the result of close observation, and deep and absorbing study of life as he found it in his relations with the world. When but a mere lad he became familiar with the details of cotton spinning in Eagleville, Conn., at the early age of six years, having tasks assigned him which kept him alert for fourteen hours a day. He was engaged at the work of what is known as "back boy," "piecing in the cotton roving" to the "mule," a light work, but one requiring attention. His wages were fifty cents per week. Until his death, on Nov. 22, 1879, he was prominently identified with the manufacturing interests of his native State. His first thorough knowledge of the "Mule" spinning business was obtained at Willimantic, while in the employ of the Windham Manufacturing Company. He became so proficient in this work that he was able to earn $12 per week, while the usual wage of spinners was but $5 or $6. He was industrious and economical, and it is worthy of comment that before he was twenty-one years of age he had built and paid for a two story brick house in Willimantic for his parents. This house still stands, on Main street, near High. Mr. Hall remained with the Windham Manufacturing Company until about 1836, when he removed to Newport, R. I., where he started and very successfully managed the spinning department at the Perry mill. In September, 1837, he returned to Willimantic, being first connected with the mill in which he had formerly been employed, and subsequently assuming the assistant superintendency of the Duck mill owned by Samuel Hill. Five years later he placed in successful operation the Valley mill, at Stafford Hollow, Conn., of which he was superintendent and also part owner, and upon the sale of his interest in the property to his partners, Moses Harvey and Elijah Fairman, he assumed the duties of agent of the Panola mill, at Rockville, which mill was the first on the stream at that place.

In July, 1848, Mr. Hall removed to Willington, Conn., at which point he built and equipped a factory for manufacturing cotton wadding and batting. The company consisted of Gardiner Hall, Andrew Fuller, Dr. Jason Safford, and Origin Hall, all Willington men except Dr. Safford, who was a well known druggist of Willimantic. In 1850 Mr. Hall formed a co-partnership with Timothy Merrick, Origin Hall, and Lewis Brigham, of Mansfield, and, they under the name of Hall, Merrick & Brigham, changed the mill into a thread factory and began the manufacture of this very important article. In 1857, owing to his thorough knowledge of and vast experience in this line, Mr. Hall was called to Willimantic to superintend the erection of the spool cotton thread mills, of what is now known as the Willimantic Linen Company. These mills were built by the Willimantic Linen Company, for the purpose of manufacturing spool cotton thread, this company having bought out, in 1857, the company known as "The Old Willington Thread Co.," and moved the entire establishment to Willimantic, thus closing the original Willington plant. The introduction of the machinery which they required needed an expert like Mr. Hall to put it in running order, and this work he most successfully accomplished. He remained there the following seven years, superintending the entire plant, and these were years of great prosperity to the mill.

In 1864 Mr. Hall returned to South Willington, where his son, Gardiner Hall, Jr., and his sons-in-law, John R. Champlin and Marcus M. Johnson, were engaged in the manufacture and sale of spool cotton thread, under the name of Gardiner Hall, Jr., & Co. In the spring of 1868 he purchased the interest of Marcus M. Johnson, and thus continued in the business until his death, in 1879.

Gardiner Hall was a man of exceptional mechanical ability, of strict integrity, active in town and county affairs, and one who was regarded by his fellow citizens with the highest esteem. Not only did he faithfully serve his town and neighborhood in local offices, but he was also county commissioner, and was sent as a representative to the State Legislature, where he displayed the same excellent judgment in regulating the affairs of the State as he did in the conduct of his own business. Mr. Hall was connected by membership with the Baptist Church at Willimantic, and was an earnest and active advocate of the cause of temperance.

The marriage of Mr. Hall, celebrated Nov. 29, 1832, was to Zeviah Emeline Essex, born Dec. 22, 1807, daughter of William Pones and Zeviah (Hill) Essex, of Colchester, Conn., and they became the parents of the following children: Adeline, born May 14, 1834, died April 28, 1842. Orline, born Aug. 16, 1835, was married Oct. 28, 1858, to John R. Champlin, who later became a partner in the thread business. Emeline (1) and Gardiner, Jr., twins, were born July 14, 1837; the former died Sept. 20, 1837. Emeline (2), born Nov. 24, 1839, was married Oct. 23, 1863, to Marcus Monroe Johnson, who was a partner in the thread business in Willington for a period of about three and a half years. William H., born March 28, 1842, became a member of Company H, 18th Connecticut Volunteers, under Col. Ely, of Norwich, Conn., and was killed May 20, 1864, at New Market, Va. Origin was born April 18, 1844. Albert was born April 1, 1846.

The death of Gardiner Hall was felt by the members of the community where he had so long lived, and which he had so greatly benefited, in the light of a personal bereavement, for his seventy years had been filled with deeds of charity and neighborly kindness. Aside from his public services, his memory is cherished by both personal and business friends. The Willimantic Journal, in its issue of Nov. 23, 1879, published an extended notice of this distinguished public citizen.

Gardiner Hall, Jr., whose name introduces this sketch, was born in Newport, R. I., July 14, 1837, and until the age of eighteen years spent the winter months at school, and the remainder of the year in the mill of which his father was one of the proprietors. Having familiarized himself with the details of the manufacture of spool cotton thread, in the fall of 1860, as a member of the firm of Hall & Manning, he began the manufacture of cotton thread at South Willington, with every prospect of success, when the derangement to business consequent upon the breaking out of the Civil war led, on Feb. 1, 1861, to a suspension before the first year had expired. Mr. Hall, in November, 1861, accepted a position with the Willimantic Linen Company, of which his father was general superintendent and manager, and until June 10, 1862, was employed in the bleaching department of that establishment, at a salary of $7 per week. Returning to South Willington, Mr. Hall, nothing daunted by still existing circumstances, originated the firm of Gardiner Hall, Jr., & Co., of which he was sole proprietor, and began the manufacture of spool cotton thread, assuming for two years the entire work and responsibility of the business, although yet but a young man. His determined will and courage to meet and conquer obstacles was soon shown. On April 12, 1864, John R. Champlin and Marcus M. Johnson became associated with him, the latter in January, 1868, disposing of his interest to the father of our subject, who then became one of the partners in this rapidly increasing business. Under the firm name of Gardiner Hall, Jr., & Co., the business has, since the death of Mr. Hall's father and also of his brother-in-law, been conducted and managed by Gardiner Hall, Jr. Since 1862 Mr. Hall has conducted his business without a stop or interruption, by panics or for any other cause. During that whole time he has neither given nor endorsed a note, nor purchased anything without paying cash for it.

The successive stages by which this important manufacturing interest has been brought to its present prosperity, from its small beginning, amply shows the character of the man who possessed the grit and determination to make it a success. This industry gives employment to a large force of hands, and, in return, the company has met the reasonable demands of its employes and has erected suitable, comfortable and sanitary buildings for those who labor for it. The village of South Willington is one of the most picturesque in the country, as well as one of the busiest. It owes its growth and development chiefly to Mr. Hall, who is one of the most active, progressive, broad-minded and public-spirited men in his part of Connecticut.

An artificial lake, rightly called "Lake Beautiful," because of its attractive appearance, is a placid sheet of water covering twenty-one acres of ground, and its condition is but an example of Mr. Hall's philanthropy. It is fed solely by springs, and, by an invention of Mr. Hall, the pure, clear water taken from one of these large springs is conducted by iron pipes through the village, to be used for domestic purposes. The lake is stocked with trout and other fish. It was built by the company as an adornment and convenience, at a great expenditure of time and money. The company's tenement houses consist of commodious, well-arranged buildings, with every modern convenience for comfortable living. The company has also furnished a public hall, built in 1875-76, to which the men have free access for holding meetings of various kinds, and there they attend religious services. There is also a school house, in which Mr. Hall himself has taken a great interest. It can scarcely be surpassed for excellence in workmanship, in the various interior arrangements, by any similar building, in a country village, in the State. At a recent school meeting it was voted to double the capacity of the school house, by raising the entire building and grading the rooms. The excellent designs for the buildings of the company were prepared under the personal supervision of Mr. Hall, who is most humanely interested in the welfare of those whom he employs, and that this fact is recognized is proved by the cheerful demeanor and satisfied and happy lives lived in the beautiful village of South Willington, where there have been no "strikes" because there is no reason for them.

The farm on which stands the village of South Willington is an important feature in the history of the town. It is owned by Mr. Hall, and comprises about 600 acres, for the most part grass land. A corps of laborers, aside from those employed in the mills, are kept constantly busy about the farm and buildings, and in their various capacities are improving the place, which is one of the best kept and most beautiful farms in Connecticut, the great barns being models of their kind. Every horse, ox and hog is housed in suitable apartments well-lighted and ventilated, and supplied with the latest sanitary improvements, looking to their health and comfort. The devices for the management of these dumb creatures are unique and practical, and have originated in the fertile brain of Mr. Hall, who is possessed of great inventive ability and has patents on many specimens of the children of his brain. A large number of the machines used in the mills have also been invented by Mr. Hall, perhaps the most important being that of 1861, called, in the trade, the thread dressing or finishing machine; another, of the greatest value, is the one which was patented in 1870, the automatic spool printing press, used for printing labels in four colors in one operation, on thread and silk spools. This press machine is very valuable, and has been adopted by the large silk manufacturers, who have paid Mr. Hall a heavy royalty. Another wonderful and useful invention is the tension regulator, which gives a constant tension and takes the thread off the spool without turning the spool; this was patented in 1879.

The buildings of the company deserve special notice. The mills consist of several large structures, one of which is 80 x 30 feet in dimensions, and four stories in height, with basement and attic. There is a wing, 40 x 20 feet, three stories in height; bleach house, dye house, dry house, store house, etc., making an aggregate length of over 550 feet. In addition there is a large dry house for spools, 40 x 26 feet, with five drying floors, having 4,000 feet of pipe; the store building contains the office and hall, and is 30 x 60 feet, and three stories high; and there is also a spool block store house, 40 x 24 feet. There are from forty to fifty tenements. The company employs about 150 hands, and manufactures annually an equivalent of about 36,000,000 200-yard spools of thread, and the spools for this thread require about 1,000 cords of white pole birch wood each year, which is furnished by the neighboring farmers, who received from $4 to $6 per cord. If the company declined to buy this timber the farmers would find no use for it except for firewood; the ashes are valuable as a fertilizer. So in various ways Mr. Hall has been of benefit to his section. It may well be mentioned that Mr. Hall disposes of his product directly to the wholesalers, jobbers and manufacturers, and for 33 years has maintained an office in New York City, at No. 59 Walker street, this firm being the oldest occupant of the Lorillard building, where they have been located since 1870. The high grade of his goods always insures a high price in the open market, and his entire production is disposed of without a single salesman on the road. His motto is "Quality first." Mr. Hall is also the owner of the mill business of E. H. Hall & Son, of North Windham, Conn., it being operated in his interest.

It would seem as if much of Mr. Hall's energy and thought have been directed toward the welfare of the locality, even when conflicting with his individual interests. This has not prevented him accumulating large means, and he has built up a section which looks upon him as a philanthropist. The vast interests under his direct control, and depending upon his judgment for their successful continuance, have kept him much out of public life. He has been active in the Republican party as a layman, although, with his grasp of affairs, his keen, active mind, and thorough-going methods, he would have made an ideal legislator, even in high places; but his attention has been so continually with his business, devising new methods and revising old ones, that his days have been too short to accomplish more. However, in 1896, he was one of the Presidential electors, for the State of Connecticut. An old writer has said that an age is great in proportion as its inventions are numerous, and the century just closed has been one of the greatest in the invention and development of machinery. Among those who have taken a leading part in this line Gardiner Hall must be numbered. Mr. Hall's public town services were for years represented by the working of twenty miles of road each year, and now his general tax payment is more than one-fourth of the whole tax of the town of Willington.

Mr. Hall was one of the original incorporators of the Stafford Savings Bank. It was his influence, thirty years ago, that brought about the law for banks to pay interests on deposits on the first of every month, which so many of the banks have adopted. Mr. Hall is also one of the leaders in very many industrial and financial interests of other States, and is the largest individual stockholder in the Berkshire Cotton Manufacturing Company, of Adams, Mass., which has the largest individual plant of the kind in the world, and which was organized in 1889, when the first mill was built. The capital stock at the beginning was $500,000, which has since been increased until it is now $2,500,000, of which Mr. Hall holds over one-fifth paid-up stock. In 1889 was erected the first mill, 280 x 100 feet, four stories high, containing 35,000 spindles, four 250-horsepower Corliss boilers, and an 800-horsepower engine. In 1892 was constructed another building, 340 x 100 feet, four 15-foot stories high, with 40,000 spindles and three 500-horsepower Babcock & Wilcox water-tube boilers, and a 1,000-horsepower engine. At the dedication of this huge building it was visited by President McKinley, and some 9,000 seats were placed on the first floor in the mill to accommodate those present. In 1895-96 still another mill was added to the plant, 440x116 feet in dimensions, and with five 17-foot stories and a wing, leading from the same, with dimensions of 150x75 feet, five stories high. In this mill, the largest and most complete mill of all, were placed 80,000 spindles. It is supplied throughout with the "Manning" type of upright boilers, in order to supply a 1,500-horsepower engine. In 1898-99 the business had reached such proportions that still another building was required, the new one being 520x125 feet in dimensions, and three stories of 17-feet in height; a weave shed of 520x225 feet was added to this. This mill contains 105,000 spindles. In all the mills of this monster plant are an aggregate of 260,000 spindles, and 6,100 looms. The product of these mills includes all kinds of lawns, sateens and similar dress goods of the finest texture, some of the former being so fine that it requires from twenty-five to thirty yards, forty inches in width, to weigh one pound. Employment is given to several thousand hands.

In this vast business Mr. Hall has been interested as a director since its organization, others of this body having been Theodore A. Havemeyer, David A. Wells, Edwin N. Gibbs, and ex-Lieut.-Gov. William H. Hale, all now deceased. The present board is composed of William B. Plunkett, treasurer; Charles T. Plunkett, secretary; Gardiner Hall, Jr., Charles Hubbard, Stephen A. Jenks, William H. Hale (son of ex-Lieut.-Gov. Hale), William H. H. Hall and Willis Brisco, of Norwich. The president of this august body is John A. McCall, who is also president of the New York Life Insurance Company.

Mr. Hall has since 1867 been a stockholder in the Ponemah mills, of Taftville, Conn., a concern which has from 1,500 to 2,000 employes; and is in addition a one-third stockholder in the Greylock Shirt Company, of Adams, Mass., which employs 150 hands; is a stockholder and one of the original incorporators of the Greylock National Bank, of Adams, Mass., in which he controls one-twentieth of the stock; is a director in the W. H. Davenport Fire Arms Company, of Norwich, Conn., of which he is about one-sixth owner, and is a director of the Hopkins & Allen Arms Company, of Norwich, Conn., in which he owns about seventeen per cent. of the stock. Mr. Hall is also interested in the Windham Silk Company, of Willimantic, of which his son, William H., is also a director. He is largely interested in the International Fire Engine Company, of No. 159 Broadway, New York City; and has recently taken $250,000 worth of stock in the White Mountain Paper Company of Portsmouth, N. H., and is one of the board of directors (the mill partly erected is designed to be the largest individual paper mill in the world).

On Nov. 25, 1862, Gardiner Hall, Jr., married Miss Fanny Parker, who was born in England, a daughter of William and Ann (Penny) Parker, of Coventry, Conn., and came to America at the age of six years. To this union the following named children have come: William Henry, born May 31, 1867, is mentioned below; Clara Adeline, born June 5, 1869, married George Storrs Elliott, of Willimantic, and died Nov. 4, 1899; Rosa Orline, born Oct. 12, 1871, Ida May, born April 20, 1874, and Elizabeth D., born Oct. 1, 1877, are all residing at home. All the family graduated from Willimantic Academy. The family has long been connected with the Baptist Church.

WILLIAM HENRY HALL, the worthy son of the subject of this biography, was born May 31, 1867, in South Willington, Conn., in the house in which his father lives, and received his early education in the common schools. Later he pursued his studies in the Willimantic high school for two years, and in 1888 graduated from the Wesleyan Academy, at Wilbraham, Mass., going from there to the Wesleyan University, at Middletown, and graduating from that great institution in 1892. Since that date he has been connected with the thread factory, and associated with his father in business interests. His sympathies in politics have always been with the Republican party, and he has been registrar of voters since October, 1893. His fellow citizens have testified to their appreciation of his talents and public spirit by almost continuously since 1893, electing him as a representative to the State Legislature; he was a member of the House during the sessions of 1893-95-97, and in 1899 represented the Twenty-fourth Senatorial District. While in the House in 1893 he was clerk of the Railroad committee, filling the same position in 1895, and in 1897. While serving in the Senate he was chairman of the committee on Roads, Rivers and Bridges; was also chairman of the Labor committee and the committee on Contested Elections, and was a member of the Senate Appointments and several minor committees. In 1902 he was also a member of the Constitutional Convention.

William H. Hall and his family are members and liberal supporters of the Baptist Church. Socially he is connected with the Masonic fraternity, has taken an active part in Blue Lodge Masonry, filling all the chairs up to the first office, and has reached the thirty-second degree, being a member of the Norwich Consistory. He is also a member of Fraternal Tent, No. 2, K. O. T. M., of Manchester, Conn., and of the college society Psi Upsilon, in Middletown. He is treasurer of the Connecticut ("Storrs") Agricultural College.

The marriage of William H. Hall took place June 14, 1894, to Miss Alice May Holman, daughter of Judge William D. Holman, of Tolland, and children as follows have blessed this union: Doris Elizabeth, born Jan. 30, 1897; Gardiner Holman, April 9, 1899; and Clara Alice, Feb. 18, 1901. In 1894-95 Mr. Hall built his present elegant home in South Willington, which occupies one of the most desirable sites in the town, and is fitted with every modern convenience and arrangement for luxurious living, and there Mr. Hall dispenses a hospitality in accord with his prominent position.

ORIGIN. HALL, brother of Gardiner Hall, Jr., was born April 18, 1844, in Stafford, Conn., and attended first the schools of Willington, later becoming a student in the Belden school, at Providence, R. I. This institution he left at the age of twenty-two years, and became connected with the finishing department in the firm of Gardiner Hall, Jr., & Co., remaining in that position one year, when he was made overseer of the winding room, where he was occupied for several years more. Mr. Hall then entered the machine shop, where he remained until 1883, thoroughly learning the trade. At that period he made a trip to Idaho and Colorado Springs, and during the next ten years was interested in mining lands and insurance and real estate. He then came back to Willington, and resumed his old position as machinist and engineer in the company, and has been identified with its interests ever since.

In politics Mr. Hall has taken a leading position in Republican ranks, and was elected as representative by that party, serving in the Legislature in 1898-99; he was an efficient member of the committee on Bridges, Roads and Rivers. He has filled a number of local offices, among them that of constable. Socially he is connected with the Masonic fraternity, holding membership in St. John's Commandery, No. 11, Willimantic.

Origin Hall's first marriage was to Miss Ellen A. Scott, of Coventry, a daughter of Seymour Scott. She died, leaving two children: Ethel Virginia married Joseph Kingsbury, of South Willington, a carpenter, and they have two children, Elsie May and Origin Joseph; Esther Claris is the wife of Harry Luce, of Newington, Conn. The second marriage of Mr. Hall was to Miss Nellie Foster, of Coventry, a daughter of Joseph Foster; there are no children by this union.

ALBERT HALL, born April 1, 1846, was married Dec. 29, 1868, to Alice Eaton, of Stafford, and now resides in Idaho Springs, Colo., where he is engaged in the real estate and mining business. They had two children: Owen Gardiner, who died at the age of eight years; and Etta M., who married Charles Van Dyke Peek, of New York.

JOHN A. CARPENTER. Mr. Carpenter was born in West Greenwich, R. I., June 23, 1828. William, the founder of this branch of the Carpenter family, came from England in the ship "Bevis" in 1638, and settled in Weymouth, Mass. Being the cousin of Alice Carpenter-Southworth, wife of Governor Bradford, there is no doubt that their influence induced him to come to New England.

Mr. Carpenter's great-grandfather, Robert Carpenter, enlisted as corporal in the Continental army in Col. Michael Jackson's regiment, and served from April 24, 1777, to Oct. 7, 1777. He enlisted again in Col. Pyncheon's regiment, and again enlisted for three years Feb. 9, 1778.

The Baileys, Mr. Carpenter's ancestors on the maternal side, were an old Rhode Island family, having been among the early settlers of Newport, R. I. His mother was Mary Bailey, daughter of Joseph Bailey, a Revolutionary soldier of West Greenwich.

Amos Carpenter, father of John A. Carpenter, was a man of fine physique and varied attainments, being skilled as a shoe-maker, cooper and carpenter. During the depression of business in 1837 the family removed to a farm in the eastern part of Pomfret (now Putnam), Conn., where a family of six girls and three boys were brought up in the strictest of Puritan ways. John Anthony Carpenter, the seventh child, inherited from his father a fine constitution, a natural adaptability to any kind of work and a capacity for hard unremitting labor.

During his boyhood John A. Carpenter assisted in the work of the farm and attended the district school. He attended Wilbraham Academy for a short time and, in 1846, went to Woodstock Academy for one term. In the winter of that year he commenced teaching school, which occupation he followed for nearly twelve years, with marked success. Some of his classes in mathematics were remarkable even in those days when the "three R's" received so great a part of the energies of teacher and pupil.

In 1857 Mr. Carpenter took charge of the counting room and stores of M. S. Morse & Co., where he was employed until July, 1866. He was then chosen cashier of the First National Bank, which position he has continued to hold to the present time. He was active in obtaining the charter and organizing the bank, which began business March 24, 1864, and the original petitions and copies in starting the bank are in his handwriting, as he was clerk at the first meetings. Mr. Carpenter is the only survivor of the nine original directors. On Oct. 1, 1866, he was chosen treasurer of the Putnam Savings Bank, which had been organized but a short time, and had then between $100,000 and $200,000 in deposits. He held the office of treasurer about eight years, when the deposits exceeded $1,000,000. By statute no person could be simultaneously cashier of a National Bank and treasurer of a savings bank with deposits amounting to $1,000,000, and Joseph Lippitt was chosen treasurer, Mr. Carpenter remaining one of the trustees to the present time.

Mr. Carpenter has always been a Republican in politics and an active party worker; he was Chairman of the Republican town committee through the war of the Rebellion and for some time prior thereto, and in those trying times he spent much time and labor in the upbuilding of the party. He was elected Judge of Probate for Putnam probate district in August, 1863, and held that office thirty-five years. He has had the high compliment many times of being nominated by the caucuses of both Republican and Democratic parties and but one decision made by him has been appealed from and carried to the Superior Court. He was the first warden of the town fire district, and assisted in getting it in working order; was one of the first school visitors of the new town of Putnam and held that office many years.

Mr. Carpenter has always been active in the interests of improvement in schools, churches, and general town and city affairs, and always willing to pay his share of all expenses. He has had the management as administrator or executor of the settlement of many large estates, several of over $100,000, and one of over one million dollars, without being required to give bonds. He is now trustee and guardian for several large estates, and has always managed them with great exactness and fidelity and to the perfect satisfaction of the parties interested. Mr. Carpenter has always had the full confidence of his townspeople, and his integrity has never been questioned.

Mr. Carpenter's first wife was Elizabeth Williams, daughter of Byram Williams, of Pomfret, who died leaving one son, Byram Williams Carpenter. This son has for many years been proprietor of a livery stable, and is at present with his wife, Mary (Moffatt), living in Somerville, Mass. He has one child.

By his second wife, Marcia Chandler, John A. Carpenter has three children, all living in Putnam. Jane Elizabeth married Edgar Morris Warner, now clerk in the Superior Court for Windham county. They have three children.

Annie Chandler married Chester E. Child, a lumber dealer, and has one child.

John Frederic married Alice M. Sharpe, and they have three daughters. He is by profession a lawyer, but is at present assistant cashier of the First National Bank.

GEORGE CLINTON PARKESS, an old and prominent resident of the village of Stafford Springs, Tolland Co., Conn., was born there Feb. 1, 1835, and is a son of Lewis Parkess, who was born in the same community, in 1800.

Lewis Parkess learned the blacksmith trade when he was a young man and for a time was in partnership with Mark Alden making carpenter tools from the native ore. Alden & Parkess met disaster, and Mr. Parkess was compelled to pay all the debts of the firm, which was a severe blow financially. Mr. Parkess and his brother Preston then formed a firm known as Parkess Brothers and were for several years engaged in the blacksmith business. Lewis Parkess finally retired from that occupation and engaged in farming and also conducted a store. He was postmaster at Stafford Springs for some years. The old Green Mill had him for one of its original stockholders, and for a number of years he was a director in that corporation. Mr. Parkess remained a farmer until his death, in 1862.

Lewis Parkess was a Democrat and at different times held several of the town offices. He took an active interest in the Universalist Church at Stafford Hollow and gave freely to its support. In the Masonic fraternity he was equally active and liberal.

Lewis Parkess married Lydia Pinney. Mrs. Parkess was born in Granby, Conn., and was a daughter of John Pinney. To Mr. and Mrs. Parkess were born two sons and one daughter who died in infancy; also Goodwin Edgar, who married Clarissa Johnson, and died at the age of thirty; George C.; Albert, who married Eloise Foland, is now living at Hartford, where he is engaged in business as a decorator; Lewis Cass, who married Elsie Pease, of Hampden, and is a railroad engineer residing at Brattleboro, Vermont.

Aaron Parkess, the grandfather of George C., married a Miss Thompson, of Vernon, Conn. In the annals of Stafford Springs he is recorded as one of its pioneers, pursuing the trade of scythe and nail making when these articles were all worked out by hand labor. Mr. Parkess still owns a house built by his grandfather, in which that gentleman used nails made by himself. In his later years the grandfather turned to the cultivation of his extensive landed property. He was very active in the work of the Congregational Church, of which he was a member. Of Aaron Parkess' children, (1) Joel the oldest was a farmer, and in middle life became a mill and lumber man in Maine; (2) Preston was a blacksmith, and retired to a farm; (3) Lewis is noted above; (4) Nathan was a manufacturer of sash, doors and blinds; (5) David was a merchant in Stafford Springs; (6) Polly never married; (7) Lucy died in early womanhood; (8) Mary married Frank Johnson, a stage driver from Stafford to Hartford.

The remote ancestor of the Parkess family was one of three Scotch-English brothers, who came to New England at a very early day. The family name originally was spelled Parkess—the form used by George Clinton Parkess. The spelling has been corrupted to Parkhurst.

George Clinton Parkess was born in Stafford and his education in the local schools; he also attended the Wesleyan Academy at Wilbraham, Mass., two terms. At the age of nineteen he went to Hartford to take a position as clerk in the store of R. H. Agard, with whom he remained for a year, leaving the store to spend another year in Wesleyan. At the expiration of that period he became manager of the grocery store of J. F. Phillips on North Main street, in Hartford, Conn., where he remained until the sale of the establishment. He then clerked for F. D. Adams on State street for seven years. For a year and a half he was with a Mr. Phillips, and then for three years was with Hosmer Griswold on Main street, Hartford. His father's death in 1862 brought him back to Stafford Springs. There Mr. Parkess bought out Spellman & Winters, and in company with Gardner Winters, who was high sheriff of Tolland county, conducted a butcher and meat business for some four years. Mr. Parkess then retired in favor of his partner, becoming assistant station agent of the Vermont Central railroad at Stafford Springs.

Mr. Parkess has been engaged in the real estate business and in building enterprises, opening up Prospect street—an investment which has richly paid him. In the incorporation of Stafford Springs Mr. Parkess took a lively interest. He has been elected warden of the borough three times, being also a member of its first board of burgesses. In 1897 he was appointed deputy borough judge, and the following year became borough judge, a position he has retained to the present time. Mr. Parkess is a member of the Society of Municipal Judges of Connecticut. For a number of years he has been street commissioner, has served as a assessor, and is now a burgess. In the movement which resulted in the establishment of the present admirable schools of Stafford Springs he was a hard and enthusiastic worker. Mr. Parkess is a director of the Stafford Savings Bank and is a member of the Loaning Committee. In the Stafford Springs Cemetery Association he is very influential, was one of its original incorporators and stockholders and is now one of its directors. Mr. Parkess belongs to Wolcott Lodge, No. 60, A. F. & A. M., at Stafford Hollow, to Orient Chapter, R. A. M., at Stafford Springs, and has been very active in all his Masonic associations.

Mr. Parkess and Lucy Adalaide, a daughter of Jesse Hollister, of Hartford, were married Feb. 1, 1863. Mrs. Parkess died, having become the mother of the following children: George Lewis, who died at the age of four months; Lucy Maude, who married Enos E. Penny, a jeweler in Springfield, Mass., and is the mother of one child, Howard Parkess.

Mr. Parkess was married a second time, in 1889, to Mrs. Frances (Granger) Bradley, the widow of Amos Bradley. By this marriage there has been no issue. Mr. Parkess attends the Methodist Church, and his wife the Baptist. He is a Democrat but not a partisan.

CYRUS WHITE, late president, treasurer and manager of the White Manufacturing Company, and president of White, Corbin & Company, Rockville, was born at Richford, Vt., Nov. 18, 1814, the eldest of eight children of a farmer of moderate means. He was early inured to the toils and privations of life in a newly settled region, and thereby gained a hardy physical development, and laid the foundation of industry, frugality and self reliance, which served him so well in his subsequent career. With the limited educational privileges of a few weeks each year in the district schools, he gained a fair knowledge of the rudimentary sciences (reading, writing and arithmetic), and at the age of nineteen started out to learn the blacksmith's trade, serving an apprenticeship of three years in the little hamlet of East Enosburg, about ten miles distant from the paternal home. Here he learned, literally and figuratively, to strike while the iron is hot, a practical lesson to keep ever in mind. At the close of this term, in November, 1836, the chances for obtaining employment in Northern Vermont being less favorable than in other localities, he made an engagement with a man in Ware, Mass., and went there to find that his intended employer had died suddenly a few hours before his arrival. This left him without business among strangers, with only three dollars in his pocket, but providentially he heard of an opening for employment at Vernon Center, Conn., with a chance to work his passage thither by helping a drove of cattle to that place. There he remained until April 1, 1838, receiving about eighty cents per day and his board for his services, from which during the seventeen months he managed to save $100 in cash; and with this capital he hired a shop at Rockville, employed two assistants, and thus commenced business for himself. On Jan. 1, 1839, he engaged in a matrimonial partnership with Miss Sarah A. Grant, of Ware, Mass., formerly a school companion in Vermont. This union proved a very fortunate and happy one, and continued until his death. Of five children born to them, three are yet living, namely: Sarah Jane, now Mrs. P. Gorman; John W.; and Lillian F., wife of Edward White, all of whom live in Rockville. During the next few years Mr. White acquired considerable real estate and built the residence in which he lived at the time of his death, also White's Opera House and other buildings. In 1848 he bought a half interest in the iron foundry business, and about two years later the firm of C. White & Co., which had at this date bought tools and started a machine shop business in connection with the foundry and smelting business, with Milton G. Puffer employed as a patternmaker and ingenious mechanic, inaugurated a series of experiments which resulted in the production of an improved machine capable of folding and pasting 10,000 letter envelopes per day. Mr. White discovering in this a chance for a permanent and profitable enterprise, began to lay the foundations for the eminently successful business of C. White & Co. In this his partner had less faith, and in 1855 sold his interest to L. A. Corbin, when the firm was changed to White & Corbin and the foundry and blacksmith shop were sold, a water-power purchased, and early in the spring of 1856 a four-story building, 83x39, was erected for an envelope factory.

On July 4th, following, three or four of these improved envelope machines were started in the new factory, and the business was placed on a more permanent basis, Mr. White devoting his time exclusively to the general management of the business, and to the building up of a trade in envelopes and paper. Sales were small and means also; hence the firm had to proceed slowly. A business of about $8,000 the first year, more than doubled the next, and so continued to increase until a condition was reached where sales amounted to $325,000 in a single year. Machines were added as fast as they could be made by the company with their limited facilities. In 1866 William H. Prescott, who had been their bookkeeper for several years, and who by his ability and strict attention to business had made his services indispensable to the firm, was, at the instance of Mr. White, admitted as a partner, with an equal interest with the two former partners, when the firm became White, Corbin & Co. In May, 1870, Mr. White having other business requiring his attention, retired from the management of the envelope and paper business and thereafter for years the managerial duties devolved upon Mr. Prescott. The business continued to develop to such an extent that in 1881 it gave occasion for the purchase of the "Florence Mills," one of the largest and finest mill buildings in Rockville, and which it became necessary to enlarge by extensive additions some years later in order to accommodate the still increasing business, which became among the most extensive of its line in the world. As ability, integrity and success had given value to the name of Cyrus White, it was frequently sought as a means of obtaining credit by others less fortunate. By his kindness of heart, which too often led him to disregard warnings to avoid suretyship, he became involved by the failure of parties he had assisted during the autumn of 1869, in liabilities amounting to nearly $200,000. This necessitated taking certain mill properties, assuming private incumbrances thereon, and likewise a further outlay to make the property available as a source of income for reimbursement for obligations he had assumed. This led to the commencement of the White Manufacturing Company, of which Mr. White was principal owner and manager at the time of his death; he also then held a one-third interest in White, Corbin & Co. He also owned the Highland farm, located within the city limits, which he himself carried on and managed. He took great pleasure in improving its well-tilled fields, and in its fine herd of cows and young stock. He also owned a large farm in Enosburg, Vt., well stocked, together with two fine sugar orchards of over 2,000 trees.

In Rockville Mr. White did a large grain and milling business, the extensive "City mills" being then run by the White Manufacturing Company. The various enterprises with which Mr. White was at that time, and had been, identified had kept him a very busy man. Notwithstanding he was almost an octogenarian at the time of his death, he still attended to the direction and general management of his business with the energy and vigor of a man in the prime of life. A recital of the struggles and triumphs through which he had passed affords a fine picture of a life which illustrates the possibilities of undimmed vision and spirit as buoyant as in earlier a success of enterprises undertaken under adverse circumstances, and in some cases almost without any previous practical knowledge of their details. His success is not measured by his own personal profit only, but in the advancement of the interests of others with whom he was associated, and in contributing largely to the material wealth, prosperity, population and industries of his adopted city, notwithstanding the many obstacles that would discourage or dismay the average man, but which Mr. White resolutely met and overcame. To the very last he looked on the bright side of life with undimmed vision and spirit as buoyant as in earlier days; and while he carried a full share of the burdens and responsibilities of life, he extended the hearty greeting of a friend, and richly deserved the reputation he won, and the magnificent success he achieved.

From early boyhood Mr. White was a devout Methodist, and in the early days of the church at Rockville he threw himself into the work with great energy. To him more than any other one man was due the building of the handsome church edifice on Main street. Politically he was a Whig, then a Republican, but at times his sympathy was strongly with the Prohibition party, as he was a strong advocate of temperance. Mr. White died at his home in Rockville, May 10, 1891. His estimable widow yet resides at the old home of her deceased husband, and is remarkably well preserved for one of her years.

ELLIOTT. The Elliotts of the town of Thompson, Windham county, descend from an early and sturdy New England ancestry, a branch of which, however, it is only within the limits of this article to treat of—that of the family of the late Thomas Elliott and his paternal lineage, including a notice of his sons, Marvin Dexter and Henry Elliott, the latter for many years a prominent manufacturer and merchant of New York City.

(I) Francis Elliott, a mariner, settled in Salem, Mass., in 1686, and on June 6th of that year married Abigail, daughter of John Nichols. He owned considerable land in that region, and he was a deacon in the church.

(II) Thomas Elliott, son of Francis, married July 20, 1723, Lucy, daughter of John and Elizabeth Flint, and became a resident of Middleton, Essex Co., Mass. In 1749 Mr. Elliott purchased a large tract of land along French river, in Thompson parish, town of Killingly, Conn., gave a farm to each of his two married sons, Francis and Joseph, and moved with them to that region. His son, Francis, was born Feb. 14, 1724; Thomas was born Aug. 17, 1725.

(III) Joseph Elliott, born Feb. 2, 1729, married in 1749 Jerusha Barry (or Bury), and resided in Thompson parish, Conn., where he was prominent in public affairs. When the question of laying out regular school districts was agitated in the town, he was the spokesman and active in the work. He was a member of the 11th Regiment, Connecticut Militia, for years, was made ensign in 1761, and on the breaking out of the Revolution became captain of a company. At the Lexington alarm, in 1775, he marched with his company to Cambridge. Later he was at the head of a company in the 3d Regiment, commanded by Col. Israel Putnam. With others Capt. Elliott was at the battle of Bunker Hill, and from exertions incident to the battle contracted a fever from which he died Aug. 12, 1775.

His children were: Rachel, born in 1751, married David Converse; Roy A., born Feb. 18, 1752, married Betsey Prince; Jerusha, born Jan. 20, 1754, married Alpheus Converse; Joseph, born Jan. 19, 1755, died when young; Thomas was born May 20, 1757; Sarah, born May 19, 1761, married Capt. William Dwight; Samuel, born July 4, 1762, married Esther Holmes; Keziah was born June 3, 1764; David was born October 2, 1766.

(IV) Thomas Elliott (2), born May 20, 1757, married Sarah Holmes, of Pomfret, who died Aug. 6, 1792, and in 1793 he married (second) Chloe Bates, born Jan. 1, 1760, daughter of Issachar and Hannah (Joy) Bates, and a descendant in the fifth generation from Clement Bates (through Joseph, Caleb, David and Issachar), who came to Hingham, Mass., in the ship "Elizabeth," in 1635. She died Nov. 13, 1820. His third wife was Mrs. Eleanor Fiske. Mr. Elliott was a farmer in the town of Thompson. For a number of years he served in a military company of which Pain Converse was a lieutenant. He died in Thompson June 27, 1843, aged eighty-six. Four children were born to the first, and five to the second marriage, namely: Aaron, baptized June 2, 1782, married Betsey Carroll; Lucy, baptized Jan. 9, 1785, died Jan. 9, 1802; Ebenezer H., born April 1, 1787, married (first) Esther Clough, and (second) Harriet Kelly; Elijah, born Feb. 15, 1789, married Mollie Clough; Thomas, born Dec. 24, 1793, is mentioned below; Issachar, born Oct. 16, 1796, died Oct. 15, 1815; Sarah Holmes, born April 23, 1798, married S. E. Tift; Chloe P., born April 12, 1801, married Richard Chappell, of New London; Ira was born Feb. 14, 1805. By the third union there were no children.

(V) THOMAS ELLIOTT (3), born Dec. 24, 1793, married Nov. 5, 1814, Mary Jacobs, born Jan. 5, 1782. She died Sept. 21, 1820, and he married (second) Oct. 9, 1821, Polly Dexter, born Sept. 7, 1793, daughter of Joseph Dexter; she died Jan. 4, 1862. Mr. Elliott was a farmer in Thompson, a large land holder, an industrious and energetic man, and made a good citizen. In his political views he was a Republican. His death occurred Feb. 24, 1873, in Little Compton, R. I., and his remains were buried in the West Thompson cemetery. His children were as follows: Issachar was born March 18, 1816; Nelson, born Nov. 9, 1817, died Jan. 3, 1842; Mary, born June 21, 1820, married Walter Bates, of Thompson; Horace, born Aug. 26, 1822, married, in 1846, Mary Elliott, daughter of Theodore, and died July 5, 1886, leaving a daughter, Emogene, who was born June 8, 1849, married, in 1878, Gilbert Williams, and had one child, Howard E., born April 27, 1876; Sally, born Sept. 11, 1824, married Robert Jacobs; Marvin Dexter was born Jan. 3, 1829; Henry was born July 12, 1831; Jane, born Feb. 9, 1838, is now deceased.

MARVIN DEXTER ELLIOTT, born Jan. 3, 1829, on the old Elliott homestead in Thompson, married, at Webster, Mass., Ann Jane Bates, born there, daughter of Nelson and Lucia (Jacobs) Bates. Mr. Elliott remained at home with his parents until his marriage. He attended the public schools of the town, and also the Thompson and Monson (Mass.) Academies. After his marriage he settled on a farm of some 120 acres, located near Thompson Center, which tract of land he owned, and upon it he engaged in general farming and stock raising until 1882, when he purchased a tract of land at Thompson Center, upon which he has since lived and been occupied in farming, and in looking after the landed estates and interests of his brother Henry, whose place of residence is at Brooklyn, N. Y. Mr. Elliott is a man of temperate habits, industrious and energetic, and has by frugal habits, along with energy and industry, and the use of good judgment in his business affairs, prospered. He has ever manifested a deep interest in the progress of his town and the welfare of its people, whose esteem and respect he commands. He has been both enterprising and public-spirited, and is an all around useful citizen to his community. For some eight years he was the assessor of the town, six years in succession. His political affiliations are with the Republican party. Mrs. Elliott, too, has played well her part in the community. The family are members of the Congregational Church. Their home has been blessed with five children, namely: (1) Myron H. is now carrying on the home farm. He married Alice White, and two of their three children, Ralph and Arthur, are living; the third died in infancy. (2) Charles, born May 17, 1859, on the homestead in Thompson, grew up on the farm, and after attending the district school of his native town entered Putnam high school. At the age of seventeen years he went to New York, where he was clerk for a short time, and later became salesman for the firm of Wallace, Elliott & Co., which position he filled for upwards of fifteen years. In 1892 he became a member of the firm of Merritt, Elliott & Co., wholesale shoe dealers, of which firm he is still an active member. He is a Republican in politics and in religious connection a member of Dr. Cadman's Congregational Church, Brooklyn, N. Y. Socially he belongs to the Arkwright and Union League Clubs of Brooklyn. He is unmarried. (3) George married Celetta B. Hussey, and has two children, Arlene and Bernice. They reside in New York. (4) Chester M. married Maude Joslyn, and has one child, Harold Chester. They reside in Webster, Mass. (5) Fannie, who was liberally educated in Brooklyn, N. Y., is at the homestead.

HENRY ELLIOTT, son of Thomas and brother of Marvin D., born July 12, 1831, in Thompson, married, April 2, 1857, Mary A., daughter of William Whitehouse, of New Hampshire, then a resident of Brooklyn, N. Y. They have had three children, Clinton, Dexter and Augusta. Clinton, who is a resident of New York, married Miss Mai Launsbury, of Brooklyn, and they have two children, Dorrity and Clinton. Dexter, also a resident of New York, married Mary (May) Frances Adderman, and they have one child, Frances.

Mr. Elliott attended the schools of his neighborhood, his early boyhood being passed upon a farm, and for a time he was in school at Dudley, Mass. He was thrown upon his own resources at an early age, beginning his business career at sixteen years of age as clerk in a store in the neighboring town of Woodstock. After an experience of some two years as clerk he found a larger field for his growing ambition in a jobbing rubber boot and shoe house in New York City, becoming in 1850 connected with a business he followed from that time on through his active business career. He began, however, at the very bottom of the ladder, and worked for the first six months without remuneration. His capability, industry and energy were soon noticed, and were recognized by promotions, and at the end of four years he was admitted to a partnership, but with the proviso, enacted by himself, that the management of the business should rest exclusively with him. In 1858 he purchased the interests of his partners, and thereafter conducted the business alone. He had, in the meantime, become a conspicuous figure in the rubber goods field, where his sagacity and tact as a buyer and skill as a salesman had made his presence felt in the market. He had also won a reputation as a financier and a business man of exceptional judgment and ability. He became by appointment the agent in New York for three of the largest rubber boot and shoe companies in the United States, at the same time conducting his own extensive business, and in all met with remarkable success. In 1873 the large leather boot and shoe business of his brother-in-law, J. T. Whitehouse, and his own were consolidated and the firm of Wallace & Elliott formed. To this firm, J. E. Jacobs, a nephew of Mr. Elliott, was admitted as a partner, and the title of the firm became Wallace, Elliott & Co. Subsequently Mr. Elliott's son, Clinton, was taken into the firm, which concern has since ranked among the largest in the trade. These gentlemen own a number of factories, and are extensive manufacturers of boots and shoes. One has but to read between the lines to judge of the character and force of the man whose career is here briefly reviewed, and of his importance to the concern in his long active business life. He has now practically retired.

Mr. Elliott's political affiliations have been with the Republican party, and, while not a politician, he is ever active and zealous in party interests as a citizen. He has never cared for the emoluments of office, and has declined opportunities in that line. In his religious views he is a Congregationalist. Mr. Elliott resides in Brooklyn, N. Y., though he maintains a summer home in his native town—Thompson, Connecticut.

LEWIS ANGEL CORBIN. Among the retired builders and manufacturers of Rockville, who in the last half century has probably done more than any other citizen toward the developing of the business interests of that city, is Lewis Angel Corbin. From a most humble beginning, through the drudgery of toil, Mr. Corbin has gained the eminence he now enjoys, and his prosperity has been well earned.

The earliest known ancestor of Mr. Corbin, was Lement Corbin, who lived in Dudley, Mass., a descendant of English ancestors. Elisha Corbin, great-grandfather of Lewis Angel, was born June 13, 1713. Joshua Corbin, son of Elisha, also of Dudley, was born July 16, 1757; he married a Miss Wood, and reared a large family: Cynthia, Rhoda, Matilda, Otis, Royal, Lewis, George, Joshua, Carleton and Bradford.

Lewis Corbin, son of Joshua, was born in 1794, in Dudley, Mass., where he lived and pursued the trade of stone worker. His death occurred from lock-jaw in 1840. His political principles were those of the Jacksonian Democrat. His wife, Mary (Sayles) Corbin, was born at West Dudley, Mass., a daughter of Royal Sayles and his wife, who was a member of the Aldrich family. Royal Sayles was a farmer, who also owned saw and grist mills, a cider press and a cooper shop, while on his farm he fed cattle which he drove to Brighton, Mass., and there sold them; he was a prominent man and gave his sons farms of their own. After the death of her husband, Mrs. Corbin removed to Rockville, Conn., where she died, her burial being at Grove Hill cemetery. To Lewis and Mary (Sayles) Corbin were born children who lived to maturity, as follows: Lewis Angel; Mary, who married Orville Button, and died in Suffield, Conn.; John, who lives in Rockville; Sarah Ann Maria, who is the widow of George W. Goodrich, and resides in Rockville.

Lewis Angel Corbin was born Sept. 18, 1822, in Dudley, where his ancestors have so long resided. The educational advantages afforded at that time were considered sufficient, although they appear meager to the students of the twentieth century. He was early required to engage in remunerative work of some kind, as he was the eldest in the family, and in 1840 was completely thrown upon his own resources on account of the death of his father. Farm work was the labor most in demand, and for two years he ploughed and hoed, tilling the soil as carefully and thoroughly as in after years he managed great business interests, but he was ambitious, and kept on the outlook for wider opportunities. In 1842 he went to the State of New York in pursuit of something which would prove of sufficient value to enable him to make of it a life work, applying in Albany, Troy, Watertown and Glens Falls, but disappointment met him at every turn, and his money, although carefully hoarded, was getting low. Finally, tired but not discouraged, for his hopeful nature has carried him over many a difficulty, he reached Warrensburg, where he found a Mr. Warren, who needed a young man who would consent to work from 4 A. M. to 9 P. M. for $9 a month, and with this generous owner of sawmills, timber lands, stock and store, he remained until the spring of 1843, when he became homesick and returned to Dudley. Here he found employment with his uncle, Sylvanus Wakefield, at $11 per month to work at stone cutting. Appearing very skillful at this trade, his uncle encouraged him to learn it, and here he remained for a year, and then hired out to Harvey Prince, receiving $1.25 per day. For the following three years he industriously worked on the great mills then in course of construction, in Webster, Southbridge, Charlton, and in Oxford, Mass., also in Thompson, Conn. When Ebenezer Rich took charge of the building of the wheels for the Rock Mill, at Rockville, Mr. Corbin went to that place, Sept. 19, 1846, but did not take his family until in the spring of 1847. On April 1, 1847, he took charge of the stone work on the American Mills then building, and in the following year, on the Hockanum Mills, also doing much work in the neighboring towns.

On Jan. 1, 1851, attracted by the golden tales from California, in the companionship of George Talcott, of Rockville, and Mr. Vaughn, of Tolland, he went by way of the Isthmus of Panama, and for two years engaged in mining in the West, returning by the Nicaragua route. After his return home in 1853, he built the home where he now resides on High street, opposite Market street, and in 1854, built the Ellington Mills, for the manufacture of woolen goods. This property was partially destroyed by fire, and our subject rebuilt it for the owners.

In 1854 Mr. Corbin thought he saw a future in the envelope manufacturing business, and for $100.00 bought the one-third interest of Milton G. Puffer in the envelope machinery, the other partners being J. N. Stickney and Cyrus White. Later J. N. Stickney's interest was purchased by Cyrus White, and L. A. Corbin and the firm of White & Corbin was established for the manufacture of envelopes, this firm being the pioneers in the business. The water power was bought of Albert Dart, and in 1856 the mill now owned by the J. J. Regan Manufacturing Company was built for the enlarged business. Previous to this it had been conducted on Main street in the old foundry building, as it had been regarded as a poor business. Sales were few, and the limited capital of the owners required the most careful moves. Their stock of paper was bought on time, and the business was a drag on account of want of means. As our subject had his excellent trade to fall back upon, he took contracts again in stone work, one of these being for the Congregational Church at Great Barrington, Mass., and by dint of great care and economy, he realized a handsome profit, which went into the struggling envelope business. As an example of the energy and perseverance of Mr. Corbin, as to details, it may be mentioned that before work, at this critical time, he himself, sharpened his tools in the morning and in evening, although performing his full duty during the day. At the new mill beside envelope making a large flour and grain business was carried on. This firm purchased the New England Mill, at auction, on the failure of that concern; and in 1881, the Florence Mill, which was the largest brick building in Rockville, was bought by the firm, this being enlarged and made the largest manufacturing plant of the kind in the country. In 1898 Mr. Corbin retired from the firm when it was absorbed by the U. S. Envelope Company, but his natural abundance of energy and vigor would not permit him to be quiet, and he is still active in attending to his extensive private interests, which include not only heavy real estate holdings in Rockville, but through the South and West.

While for years the practical head of the great firm of White & Corbin, in addition to the duties incident to that position, Mr. Corbin was a director in the Rockville Railroad, and in other business enterprises and there has probably not been a movement dependent upon the support of the citizens of the town, but he has been solicited for aid, and it just as surely received liberal support if its merits proved to be of advantage to Rockville.

Mr. Corbin cast his first presidential vote in 1844, for Henry Clay, and in 1856 joined the Republican party, but has never posed as a politician. In 1867 he served as selectman of Vernon, and has held local offices, but the demands of an enormous business required his attention too closely for him to accept office to any extent.

On Sept. 18, 1845, Mr. Corbin was married in North Grosvenor Dale, in the town of Thompson, Conn., to Miss Mary Upham, a native of Thompson, who was born Dec. 10, 1822, a daughter of Asa and Olive (Jordan) Upham; she died in Rockville, July 21, 1900. Their children were: (1) Louisa, born in Dudley in 1847, married in 1867, in Rockville, Sydney A. Grant, of Springfield, Mass. They have two children, Helen; and Lewis Corbin, who married Hattie Somes, deceased, and has one child, Sydney Somes. (2) Imogene, born in Rockville in 1851, married in 1871, Edwin Woodford, and their only daughter, Grace, was married in 1897 to Thurston Wilcox, by whom she has two children, Marjorie Edmond and Thurston Woodford. Mrs. Imogene Woodford died June 21, 1901. (3) Mary A., born in Rockville in 1856, married in 1877, Walter E. Payne, and has two sons, Leslie and Clarence. On June 12, 1902, Mr. Lewis A. Corbin was married to Mrs. Laura (Lord) Ellinwood, daughter of Abel Lord, a successful lumber dealer at Athol, Mass. The Lords were one of the oldest and most highly respected families in northern Massachusetts.

Since 1866 Mr. Corbin has been the efficient president of the board of trustees of the Methodist Church of Rockville, and he has made the interests of the church second to no other. His substantial gifts have aided the charitable and benevolent objects of this religious body, while the example he has set has given encouragement to both pastors and people. Many thousands of dollars have been given by him in money, but it is his lofty character which has made him one of the most esteemed of the citizens of Rockville.

JUDGE CHARLES NELSON DANIELS, who is a prominent politician and influential citizen of Willimantic, Windham county, descends from an old New England family, whose first American ancestor was John Daniels.

(I) John Daniels was recorded at New London in April, 1663. In 1664-5 he was married to Mary, a daughter of George Chappell, who, in 1635, when about twenty years old, came from London in the ship "Christian," and who was at Wethersfield, Conn., from 1637 to 1649, when, with his wife Margaret, he came to Pequot, where he died in 1709. John Daniels died about the same time.

(II) John Daniels (2), son of John the settler, was born about 1665-6, and in 1685 married Agnes, the daughter of Samuel Beebe, who came to New London about 1649. Mr. Daniels died in 1756, being about ninety years old at the time.

(III) Jonathan Daniels, son of John (2), is of the third generation in direct line.

(IV) Lemuel Daniels, son of Jonathan, married Hannah Fuller, and settled in the eastern part of Middle Haddam parish from Colchester.

(V) Asa Daniels, son of Lemuel, married Elizabeth Fuller.

(VI) Lemuel Daniels, son of Asa, married Martha Lamont, of Hillsboro, Columbia Co., New York.

(VII) Archibald L. Daniels, son of Lemuel, married Lavina Beebe.

(VIII) Nelson Fitch Daniels, son of Archibald L., married Alenda Clark, and lived at Barre, Orleans Co., N. Y. Mrs. Alenda (Clark) Daniels was a daughter of Chester and Mary (Williams) Clark, a granddaughter of Gideon and Jemima (Newcomb) Clark, and a great-granddaughter of Jonathan Clark. Through her grandmother, Jemima (Newcomb) Clark, she was a lineal descendant of William Bradford (afterward Governor of Plymouth Colony), of the "Mayflower," 1620, the line being through Maj. William Bradford, Thomas Bradford, Jerusha (Bradford) Newcomb, Peter Newcomb, and Jemima (Newcomb) Clark. Nelson Fitch Daniels was the superintendent of the Orleans County (N. Y.) poor house, and in his later years occupied a position of responsibility on the Erie Canal. He died at Eagle Harbor, N. Y. After his death his widow and son, Charles Nelson, came back to Columbia, Conn. The former died when she was over seventy years old.

Charles Nelson Daniels, Judge of Probate for the district of Windham, Conn., was born at Barre, Orleans Co., N. Y., July 2, 1849, a son of Nelson Fitch and Alenda (Clark) Daniels. When he was but eight years of age he lost his father by death, and then with his widowed mother located in Columbia, Conn., where his preliminary education was acquired in the local schools. He afterward attended the Willimantic Institute, kept by D. P. Corbin, and also the preparatory department of Shurtleff College, in Upper Alton, Ill., where he remained about a year and a half, beginning in the fall of 1864, and returning to Connecticut in 1866. The Rev. Daniel Reed was the distinguished president of this school, and he was an intimate friend of the family of Judge Daniels.

When young Daniels had reached the age of sixteen years, he left school, and for a time was engaged in farm work, being in the employ of his grandfather, Chester Clark, and his uncle, Charles Clark. Soon after coming of age he entered the service of the Hartford, Providence & Fishkill Railroad, as a switchman, and continued with it in various capacities until it became the Boston, Hartford & Erie Railroad. In May, 1879, he gave up railroading to become a bookkeeper for Lincoln & Smith, lumber dealers in Willimantic. In May, 1882, he engaged with George K. Nason, who had bought the lumber and coal business of Hyde Kingsley, with whom he remained until May, 1889, when he was appointed postmaster at Willimantic, entering upon the active duties of his office, in March, 1890, under President Harrison. Four years later President Cleveland appointed Joel B. Webb in his place. On leaving the postal service he entered the employ of Lincoln & Boss, lumber dealers, with whom he was found until January, 1897, when he assumed the duties of Judge of Probate for the Windham district, to which office he was elected the preceding November.

Judge Daniels has served in numerous public capacities, including that of clerk. He was treasurer of Willimantic from 1880 to 1889; treasurer of the water fund in 1885; Burgess of the borough from 1889 to 1890; chief engineer of the Willimantic Fire Department from September, 1885, to March, 1890, when he resigned; and he is now serving his second term as Judge of Probate.

For some five years Judge Daniels was connected with the military service of the State of Connecticut. In 1877 he was quartermaster sergeant on the staff of Col. William H. Tubbs, who commanded the Third Regiment, C. N. G., and so continued until 1882.

Judge Daniels is a prominent Mason, being past master of Eastern Star Lodge; a member of Trinity Chapter, Olive Branch Council, St. John's Commandery, and a charter member of Sphinx Temple, Mystic Shrine, at Hartford. The Judge is also a charter member of Obwebetuck Lodge, I. O. O. F., Willimantic Council, R. A., and Willimantic Lodge of the A. O. U. W.

In his political relations Judge Daniels has always been a pronounced Republican, having voted for Gen. Grant in 1872, and since 1876 has taken an active part in the work of the party. In 1884, 1890, and in 1894 and 1898, he was chairman of the Republican town committee. In 1896, and again in 1898, he was a member of the Republican State Central Committee from the 17th District, and he is now serving his third term on that body.

On Dec. 28, 1877, Judge Daniels was married in Columbia, Conn., to Susie E. Howard Little, who was born in Pawtucket, R. I., Aug. 4, 1850, a daughter of Henry Howard and Alice (Rollinson) Little. Mrs. Daniels was but a little girl when her parents moved to Willimantic, where she was reared and had her education, and where she was married. To this union have come two children: Nelson Archie, born April 7, 1879; and Grace Lillian, Sept. 21, 1881.

HALL (Pomfret, Conn., branch). Through the courtesy of John Partridge Jepson, of New York, a lineal descendant of Rev. David Hall, D. D., of Sutton, Mass., we are enabled to give from reliable family records, in connection with other data gleaned from Massachusetts and Connecticut publications, the genealogy and a part of the history of the distinguished Hall family of Sutton, Mass., and Pomfret, Windham Co., Conn., among whom was Rev. David Hall, D. D., of Sutton, Mass., from whom descended many distinguished persons, notably Dr. David Hall, of Pomfret, Conn., and later of Vermont; his brother, Dr. Jonathan Hall, of Pomfret, and the latter's sons—Hon. Jonathan Prescott, a jurist and eminent lawyer of New York, Hon. Charles Henry, also a prominent lawyer of New York, Dr. David Priestly Hall, and their sister Miss Anne Hall, an artist of celebrity.

(I) John Hall, the progenitor of this branch of the Halls, came from Coventry, England, in 1630, and settled at Charlestown, Massachusetts Bay, New England. He afterwards married a Larned (Miss Bertha, says one authority) and settled at Yarmouth on Cape Cod, where twelve sons were born to them, seven of whom, namely, John, Gersham, William, Joseph, Nathaniel, Elijah and Benjamin, the late Rev. David Hall, D. D., of Sutton, said he had seen, and two of whom were alive in 1733, aged about eighty years.

(II) John Hall (2) married a Boyse, of Barnstable, and had three sons and many daughters, the sons being Joseph, John and Nathaniel. These sons and two of the daughters were alive in 1733, at Lovetown, near Philadelphia; Nathaniel settled in the province of Pennsylvania, or in Maryland.

(III) Joseph Hall settled on the paternal inheritance and married Hannah Miller, daughter of Rev. John Miller, the first minister of the Gospel in that place. She died in September, 1710, and he afterward married Mrs. Mary Morton, a widow. His children born to the first marriage were Joseph, Daniel, Josiah, David and Hannah, Priscilla and Margaret; and those born to the second marriage were Mary, Peter, John and Barthsheba.

(IV) Rev. David Hall, D. D., was born Aug. 5, 1704, and received his education at Harvard College, from which he was graduated in 1724. He was ordained to the pastoral charge in Sutton, Mass., in October, 1729. He received the degree of D. D. from Dartmouth College in 1777. On June 24, 1731, Rev. Mr. Hall was married to Elizabeth Prescott, of Concord, Mass., a daughter of Jonathan Prescott, Esq., of that town, a near relative of Col. William Prescott, of Bunker Hill fame. Dr. Hall was an able and learned divine. He died in the eighty-fifth year of his age and the sixtieth of his ministry. He had twelve children: (1) David Hall, born May 5, 1732, married Sept. 11, 1755, Mrs. Mary Barret. He studied medicine, was a physician in Sutton and later removed to Pomfret, Conn. The following reference to him is from the "History of Windham County": "Dr. Thomas Morton, the first physician of Pomfret, is believed to have removed his residence prior to 1760. His place was filled by Dr. David Hall, of Sutton, who removed to Vermont after the loss of his wife and several children, and was succeeded in practice by Albigeance, son of Zachariah Waldo." Dr. Hall was a poet as well as physician. He was the author of the witty epigram on Ethan Allen ascribed to Dr. Hopkins in Goodrich's "Poets of Connecticut."

(2) Elizabeth Prescott, born in February, 1734, married Dr. Hale, of Concord, N. H. (3) Rebecca Hall, born Sept. 1, 1736, married Rev. Aaron Putnam, of Pomfret, Conn. She was killed when under thirty years of age in a runaway, and left three daughters, who settled in Cherry Valley, N. Y.

(4) Mary Hall, born Dec. 4, 1738, married Col. Putnam, of Sutton, Mass. (5) Hannah Hall, born Aug. 31, 1740, married Asa Grosvenor, of Pomfret. (6) Sarah Hall, born Dec. 5, 1742, married Gen. Chase, of Vermont. (7) John Hall, born Feb. 27, 1744, died in childhood. (8) Benjamin Hall, born Feb. 27, 1745, married a Morgan, and resided at St. Albans, Vt. ("The History of Sutton" has it that he married Elizabeth Mosley and removed to Cornish, N. H.). Seven children were born to them, among them Charles Hall, a physician of eminence in St. Albans; and Benjamin, also a physician, who settled in 1812 in Canada. (9) Lucy Hall, born March 19, 1748, married Capt. Paine, of Vermont, thought to be a native of Ashford, Conn. (10) Joseph Hall, born Sept. 8, 1751, married Chloe Grosvenor, of Pomfret, daughter of Eleazer Grosvenor, of that town. Their children were Joseph, who became a physician and lived at Northville, Tenn.; David, of Sutton, also a physician; Lemuel Grosvenor, a minister; and Lucy, who married Dr. Smith, of Sutton, Mass., a son of Professor Smith, of Dartmouth College. (11) Jonathan Hall, born Jan. 20, 1754, is referred to below. (12) Deborah Hall, born March 5, 1756, married Rev. Daniel Grosvenor, of Grafton, Mass. Many distinguished persons descended from this highly honorable family.

(V) Dr. Jonathan Hall was born in Sutton, Mass., Jan. 20, 1754. He was bred to the profession of medicine under his brother-in-law, Dr. Hale, of Concord, N. H. He settled in Pomfret, Conn., where he was married, lived a highly useful and honorable life, and died Aug. 19, 1815, when in his sixty-second year. "Dr. Jonathan Hall," says a "History of Windham County," "was at the same time [about 1790] settled in Pomfret and in the early years of his practice gave promise of future eminence. He was held in high repute at home and abroad, both professionally and socially, and his children, as they came upon the stage of action, were shining ornaments of that polite and refined society which distinguished Pomfret at that day." Dr. Hall measured up to the early predictions. He became an eminent physician—one of celebrity. He was married at Pomfret to Bathsheba Mumford, daughter of Peter Mumford, of Newport, R. I., who had retired to Pomfret during the Revolutionary war, and they reared a remarkable family, eleven in number, all of whom made their mark in the world. Their children were:

(1) Charles Henry Hall, born Dec. 26, 1781, married Sarah Mullet, daughter of Thomas Mullet, of London, England. Mr. Hall was bred to the law and became a shining light in the profession. He was a speculator in real estate and owned at one time nearly the whole of Harlem, N. Y., and in its purchase gave evidence of a correct idea of New York's future, but death claimed him ere he could take advantage of his own ideas. He died Jan. 8, 1852. Mr. Hall was also a breeder of fine horses and sheep and imported to this country or owned the first blooded horses of his day. The first Merino sheep in this country were imported by him. He owned flocks in Pomfret, many thousand sheep, and many so valuable as to be protected by cloth covering to keep the dirt out of their wool. To his marriage with Miss Mullet were born children as follows: Charles Mullet, who died at Harlem, N. Y., when aged twenty-five years; Mary Jane, born in 1819, who died in New York, Jan. 29, 1893, aged seventy-three years, unmarried; and Eliza Ann, born Jan. 19, 1822, who married Dr. Louis A. Sayre, an eminent physician and surgeon of New York, had four children, Charles, Louis, Mary and Reginald Hall, and died in New York, Jan. 7, 1894.

(2) Hon. John Mumford Hall, born Aug. 10, 1783, was never married. He died at Cadiz, Spain, March 11, 1823, while serving as United States consul at that point. (3) Peter Prescott Hall, born May 9, 1785, died Jan. 11, 1787. (4) Bathsheba Hall was born Jan. 4, 1788, and in 1806 was married to George W. L. Partridge. To this marriage came children as follows: George S., born Nov. 7, 1807, who died May 15, 1876; Ellen M., July 1, 1811, who died Nov. 12, 1888; Eliza Ann, in 1818; Emily, in 1816, who died July 22, 1881; and John M. H., Feb. 15, 1820, who died Oct. 12, 1845. The mother of these died Oct. 13, 1864. (5) Eliza Hall was born Nov. 30, 1789, and died March 16, 1872. She married Henry Ward, eldest son of Col. Samuel Ward and his wife Phoebe Greene, and resided at No. 23 Bond street, New York. They had one son, Henry Hall Ward, born in New York April 19, 1820, who died at Saratoga, Aug. 27, 1872. He was a Knight Templar. (6) Ann Hall was born May 31, 1792, and died Dec. 11, 1863, at No. 23 Bond street, New York City. She was an accomplished woman, and an artist of rare ability. Her miniatures are surprisingly beautiful and probably cannot be excelled by any in this country. A collection of them is now owned by her kinsman, John Partridge Jepson, of New York; few of them have been seen by the outside world. Mr. Jepson has, too, a portrait of Miss Hall (who was a noble looking woman), the work of the artist Alexander, of Killingly, Conn., and Boston, Mass. (7) Peter Hall was born May 5, 1794, and died unmarried, at Pomfret, Jan. 10, 1854. (8) Hon. Jonathan Prescott Hall, jurist, was born July 9, 1796, in Pomfret. "In 1820 at Pomfret were lawyers John Holbrook, Elisha B. Perkins and Jonathan Prescott Hall. The Bar of Windham county at this time boasted a very creditable array of legal talent, and held a good position in the State." Mr. Hall early attained eminence as a lawyer in New York City and during the administrations of Tyler and Fillmore was United States district attorney for the southern district of New York. He was the author of "Reports of Cases in the Superior Court of the City of New York, 1828-29" (2 Vols., N. Y., 1831-33). Mr. Hall was married to Harriet DeWolfe, daughter of James DeWolfe, of Bristol, R. I., but had no issue. He died at Newport, R. I., Sept. 28, 1862. His widow died one year later, Sept. 28, 1863. (9) Abigail Mumford Hall was born Nov. 7, 1800, and died March 7, 1801. (10) Abby Maria Hall was born March 16, 1802, and died Feb. 6, 1887. She married William Greene Ward, son of Col. Samuel Ward and Phoebe Greene, his wife, and one of the firm of John Ward & Co., bankers, 52 Wall street, New York. (11) David Priestly Hall was born July 15, 1798, and died in New York, Nov. 22, 1868. He entered Harvard College in September, 1816, and was graduated with the class of 1820. He studied law with Henry Wheaton, Esq., of New York, and was admitted to the Bar in 1824. He was married to Caroline Minturn, daughter of Jonas Minturn, of New York. To this marriage came the following children: John Mumford, born Jan. 22, 1833, who died Nov. 5, 1840; Rowland Minturn, born Sept. 3, 1834, who was graduated from Harvard College in July, 1856, read law with his father and was admitted to the Bar of New York in 1860, and who was a volunteer soldier in the Union Army from October, 1861, until the autumn of 1864; Caroline M., born Sept. 16, 1838, who died Feb. 1, 1857; Elizabeth Prescott, born Oct. 6, 1841, who died April 25, 1893; Frances Ann, born July 29, 1843; and David Prescott, born Nov. 15, 1845.

Referring to the old Mumford family into which Dr. Jonathan Hall of Pomfret married, the parents of the wife of the Doctor, Peter and Abigail (Martin) Mumford, were born and died respectively, March 16, 1728, and May 8, 1798, and Jan. 11, 1728, and June 30, 1809. Another of their daughters, Nancy Mumford, married in July, 1785, Col. Thomas Grosvenor, whose daughter Hannah Grosvenor, married Edward Eldridge, to whom were born children as follows: Mary Ann, who died unmarried at Pomfret; Harriet, also unmarried, who died at Cambridge, Mass., Dec. 24, 1899; Edward, who died in New York, Jan. 19, 1876, aged forty-nine years; Henry G., married to Eliza Davis; and Helen G., who married Feb. 13, 1868, Charles W. Goodhue. Col. Thomas Grosvenor died in Pomfret, July 1, 1824, aged eighty years.

The burial ground at Pomfret, situated on Pomfret street, was given to the town by the Hall family and was part of their estate; in it lie buried many prominent persons, namely: Grosvenors, Halls, Mumfords, Eldridges, Jepsons, Chandlers and many others.

JEPSON. The Jepson family of the old aristocratic town of Pomfret, Conn., and one allied by marriage to the distinguished Hall family of that town and of Sutton, Mass., and from which have descended the present Charles E. Jepson, an agriculturist of Pomfret, and his brother, John Partridge Jepson, a prominent broker of New York and a man of means and influence, is one that was early at New London, Conn., a record of which comes through Mr. Jepson of New York from an old Jepson Bible, published in 1802, now in his possession, coming to him through the direction of Daniel Jepson, of Long Island.

The lineage of the brothers, Charles Edward and John Partridge Jepson, in the family record following, is from Henry through Daniel and Charles Jepson.

(I) Henry Jepson, born Feb. 15, 1738, at New London, Conn., was married Jan. 23, 1768, to Harriet Denison, a native of the same town, born Jan. 3, 1739. They died respectively in the town where they were born, March 3, 1816, and July 21, 1816, aged seventy-eight and seventy-seven years. Their children, all born at New London, were: Hannah born Sept. 7, 1769, who died at New London, Feb. 7, 1849, aged seventy-nine years; Ann, Nov. 17, 1771, who died at New London, Nov. 1, 1821, aged fifty years; Henry, May 6, 1773, who married, May 14, 1797, Harriet Holt, born Feb. 3, 1776, the husband dying at New London, Sept. 1, 1839, aged sixty-six years; Daniel, Jan. 8, 1775; Margaret Dec. 12, 1776, who married David Dunn Pulsifer of Boston, and died in that city Jan. 2, 1817, aged forty-one years; Esther, Sept. 17, 1779, who died in New London July 28, 1846, aged sixty-seven years; and John, April 13, 1783, who died at Prince's Island, Africa, Jan. 21, 1822, aged thirty-eight years.

(II) Daniel Jepson, born Jan. 8, 1775, at New London, Conn., was married at Lebanon, Conn., Sept. 28, 1804, the ceremony being performed by Rev. Dr. Ripley, to Mary Colfax, born at New London, Aug. 24, 1785. Mr. Jepson died at New York, Nov. 29, 1814, aged thirty-nine years, and Mrs. Jepson passed away in that same city, Feb. 26, 1814, aged twenty-eight years. Their children were: Daniel, born in New York, July 15, 1805, who was married there Jan. 4, 1838, by Rev. William C. Brownlee, D. D., to Caroline J. Browning, born in New York, July 11, 1809, Mr. Jepson dying at Canassie, L. I., April 2, 1884, aged seventy-eight years, and Mrs. Jepson dying at the same place Feb. 6, 1886, aged seventy-eight years, leaving no issue; Anna, born in New York, Oct. 15, 1806, who married, May 16, 1833, Rev. Asa Hinkley; David Pulsifer, born in New York, Oct. 13, 1808, who died there Sept. 1, 1809; and Charles, born in New York, Sept. 7, 1812.

(III) Charles Jepson was married Oct. 15, 1833, to Ellen Maria Partridge, born July 1, 1811, in Woodstock, Conn., daughter of George W. L. and Bathsheba (Hall) Partridge. Mr. Jepson died at Pomfret, May 15, 1841, aged twenty-nine years, and his wife died Nov. 12, 1888. Their children, all born at Pomfret, were four in number:

(1) William Ward Jepson, born Aug. 28, 1835, died at Glen Cove, L. I., Jan. 5, 1846 (drowned), aged eleven years.

(2) CHARLES EDWARD JEPSON, born April 28, 1838, married, in May, 1889, Maude Gilliat, daughter of Rev. John Henry and Susan (Schroeder) Gilliat; no issue. Mr. Jepson received his education in the schools of his native town and there grew to manhood. On the breaking out of the Civil war he enlisted, April 22, 1861, becoming a private soldier in Rifle Co. B (known in the State organization as Rifle Co. A), 2d C. V. I., which went out under the leadership of Col. Alfred H. Terry, and which had the honor to participate in the first battle of Bull Run, July 21, 1861, in which it acquitted itself with great credit. At this engagement the regiment was in a brigade under the command of Gen. E. D. Keyes. Young Jepson was mustered out with his command Aug. 7, 1861. He re-enlisted, Nov. 9, 1861, as a corporal in Co. A, 1st C. V. Cavalry, and for one year shared the fortunes of that brilliant regiment. The First was a unique regiment in some respects; it began active service a battalion of four companies, fighting bushwhackers among the mountains of West Virginia, in March, 1862, and ended it, a regiment of twelve companies, by escorting Gen. Grant when he went to receive Lee's surrender at Appomattox Court House, in April, 1865. The regiment was engaged with the enemy in some form over ninety times, and suffered loss in killed, wounded or missing over eighty different times. Its regimental service was in Sheridan's renowned cavalry, in the division commanded at first by Wilson and afterward by Custer. Returning to his home after honorable war service, from which he was discharged Oct. 9, 1862, Mr. Jepson entered the employ, at Meriden, Conn., of the gun shops of Charles Parker, in whose service he remained for five years, when, owing to ill health, he returned to Pomfret and there engaged in farming, which pursuit he has since followed with that degree of success his efforts have merited. Fruit growing and the raising of poultry have been the lines he has especially given his time to. Both he and his wife are members of the Episcopal Church, and he is a Free Mason, holding membership with Israel Putnam Lodge at Woodstock. In politics Mr. Jepson affiliates with the Republican party.

(3) JOHN PARTRIDGE JEPSON, born Oct. 9, 1839, was married, at Brooklyn, N. Y., June 6, 1872, by Rev. Mr. Homer, D. D., to Mary J. G. Smitten, born at Barbadoes, West Indies, a daughter of Richard and Ann (Padmore) Smitten, and to this marriage has come one child—Ellen Maria, born in Brooklyn, N. Y., April 5, 1873. Mr. Jepson was taken to New York at the age of four with his mother's family, his father, Charles Jepson, having died when he was eighteen months old. At the age of ten years he returned to Pomfret, where he was educated, attending the best schools the town afforded, and graduated at Dr. Roswell Parks' high school. In the fall of 1860 he went to New York and entered the shipping house of Handy & Everitt, Nov. 28, 1860, and continued with this firm and the different changes, namely, Handy & Hoadley, Hoadley, Eno & Co. and Hoadley & Co., until the failure of the firm in 1898, when he went into a brokerage business by himself. During all this time he resided continuously in Brooklyn, N. Y., where he is well known.

In 1872 Mr. Jepson was elected a member of the Mendelssohn Glee Club of New York on the first tenor part, and continued with them for twenty-two years, until 1894, during which time he sang in the choirs of many of the prominent churches of Brooklyn and New York, notably that of Holy Trinity of Brooklyn, under George William Warren, for two years. Among the many singing and social societies that he belonged to may be mentioned the Brooklyn Choral Society, the Brooklyn Harmonic, Il Trovatore Sociable, the New York Canoe Club and the Stuyvesant Heights Republican Club.

Mr. Jepson became a voter a few days before the election of Abraham Lincoln and voted for him twice and for every Republican President since that time. When he left Pomfret in 1860 many of his friends thought that a few months would find him back in the old homestead again, but forty-two long years find him still a resident of Brooklyn, N. Y., and still hale and hearty. He has kept a diary continuously since he came to New York, and many a stirring event may be found in it, and many events long since forgotten are there recorded in detail. He has kept a faithful record of all his old friends and associates in his native place, and at a glance can tell you the date of the death of any of the old residents of Pomfret. Very fond of athletic sports, he is himself an athlete of no common order, and for many years was a member of the old Atlantic Base Ball Club, which for many years held the championship, and afterward joined the Excelsior Base Ball Club.

The voice of Mr. Jepson can best be judged and appreciated by his long connection with the Mendelssohn Glee Club and the prominent church choirs with which he was so long identified, for one encounters the greatest difficulties when seeking membership. The Mendelssohn Glee Club mentioned is by far the best male voice organization in the United States, if not in the world, and under the strict leadership of Joseph Mosenthol, who was first tenor violin in the Philmonic and a graduate at Leipsic, it was no sinecure to hold membership, especially as Mr. Mosenthol required the accuracy of the orchestra in tone and time. A candidate for membership must be proposed by an active member, must then sing before the committee of admission, consisting of five good, active members, one from each part—first tenor, second tenor, first bass and second bass and one extra—and, if acceptable to them in every way, not only in singing but socially, he is permitted to sing with the club for one month on time before he is elected, and if he gets three black balls he is out. It is not an uncommon occurrence for men to wait for years before gaining admission to membership. It is known that associate members, who do the listening and pay the expenses, have waited as long as a dozen years before election; neither money nor standing in society cuts any figure in the candidacy. Probably no other society in the United States could so act. The club has had as high as 600 persons on the waiting list at one time and the limit was 250 persons.

A high compliment was paid to the voice of Mr. Jepson by the late George William Warren, the organist of Holy Trinity Episcopal Church, Brooklyn, to whom Mr. Jepson had applied for admission to the choir as tenor. The choir was a select one—the finest in New York. Mr. Jepson was first asked to join the preparatory class, which he did, and after the rehearsal he was invited by Mr. Warren to meet with the choir on the following Saturday; this he did, and for two years sang in that body. At the time of application for admission there were twenty good voices awaiting a call.

(4) Maria Hall Jepson, born April 5, 1841, in Pomfret, died there Dec. 6, 1883. She was a lady of refinement and education and a great reader of the best works and authors. Beloved by all who knew her, her memory will long be cherished by those who were fortunate enough to know her well.

PARTRIDGE. George Washington Lee Partridge, born in 1778, in Preston, Conn., died in 1824, at Stafford Springs, Conn. Mr. Partridge was married in 1806 to Bathsheba Hall, born at Pomfret, Jan. 4, 1788, a daughter of Jonathan Hall, of Pomfret, the youngest son of Rev. David Hall, D. D., of Sutton, Mass. To this marriage came children as follows:

(1) George Sidney Partridge, born Nov. 7, 1807, died May 15, 1876, in Brooklyn, N. Y. He married Mary Tuo, of Newport, R. I., and to them were born three children. (a) George Sidney Partridge, Jr., born Nov. 18, 1832, died in Paris, May 20, 1875. He married Helen Catlin, daughter of Dr. Catlin, of Brooklyn, L. I., and their children were: Sidney Catlin; William Ordway, the sculptor; Lynde Catlin, who was born and died in 1874; and Lucy Ann Deshy. (b) William Tuo Partridge, born March 21, 1834, died June 27, 1862. He was captain of Duryea's Zouaves and was killed in the battle of the Wilderness during the Civil war. (c) Charlotte W. Partridge, born Oct. 16, 1837, married William Ordway, of Boston, and died in that city.

(2) Ellen Maria Partridge, born July 1, 1811, in Woodstock, Conn., died in Pomfret, Nov. 12, 1888. She married, Oct. 5, 1833, Charles Jepson, of Pomfret.

(3) Emily Hall Partridge, born in 1816, in Providence, R. I., died in Brooklyn, N. Y., July 22, 1881. She married, Sept. 16, 1840, at Pomfret, Charles G. Sabine, and to them were born children as follows: Joseph Lamson, born Aug. 3, 1841, in New York, who died there Nov. 21, 1861, aged twenty years; Henry Charles, born Jan. 16, 1843, who died Oct. 24, 1899; John S., born Dec. 25, 1844. The father of this family, Charles G. Sabine, died Dec. 4, 1886, in Brooklyn, N. Y.

(4) Eliza Ann Partridge, born in 1818, at Pomfret, died in New York, Sept. 19, 1902, aged eighty-four years.

(5) John M. H. Partridge, born Feb. 15, 1820, died Oct. 12, 1845.

BAKER. For only a few years short of a century three generations of the Baker family, of Stafford Springs, Tolland county, have been identified with the history of the town and borough, active in all that has transpired to build up a prosperous community and a village beautiful and busy amid the hum of its many spindles. The late Henry C., Gilbert H., and the lamented Ella M. Baker, and the sons of Gilbert H.—Frank H., Leonard B. and Gilbert S., all active today in carrying forward the business interests established by their ancestors—are of the Stafford family under consideration.

G. H. Baker

The forerunners of this Baker family in Stafford were the brothers John and Henry C., the former of whom established the present furniture house of G. H. Baker & Co. in 1808. In 1815 he was succeeded by Henry C., and he in turn, in 1852, by Gilbert H. Then, in 1881, the business came into the possession of Frank H. and Leonard B., who have since carried it on—a rare instance where a business remained consecutively for almost one hundred years, through three generations of a family, without interruption.

The Baker brothers, John and Henry C., came to Stafford in 1808, from Norwich, Conn., where Henry C. Baker was born Sept. 11, 1792, son of John Baker and grandson of, probably, William Baker. The latter was no doubt a descendant of Alexander Baker, who came from London in the ship "Elizabeth and Ann," in 1635, and settled in Boston, as Joshua Baker, fourth son of the emigrant, born in 1642, removed from Boston in 1670, and settled in New London, where he became a large land owner. He later settled in Mohegan. In 1674 he married Hannah Mintern, daughter of George Tongue, and he died at North Parish (Montville) in 1717, leaving a large estate to his four sons and five daughters. This Joshua Baker was the ancestor of the Bakers in that part of New London county, Connecticut.

John Baker, grandfather of the late Gilbert Huntington Baker, was born Sept. 8, 1756, and died Oct. 28, 1795, in Stafford. He was a ship-builder and followed his trade in Norwich. He married Hannah Church, who was born Sept. 13, 1757, and died Oct. 2, 1835. We have the following record of their children: John was born May 19, 1779. William was born May 6, 1781. Hannah was born Nov. 25, 1783; she is buried in the West Stafford cemetery, up on the hill. Jacob was born Dec. 17, 1785. Anna Fitch was born Sept. 4, 1790. Henry Church Baker is mentioned below. Jacob (2) was born Sept. 15, 1794.

Henry Church Baker, born Sept. 11, 1792, died Sept. 21, 1851. On Nov. 28, 1816, he married Eunice Kingsley, who was born Dec. 10, 1796, and died Dec. 22, 1879. To this union came eight children, as follows: William Kingsley Baker, born Sept. 25, 1817, died in May, 1897; he was a prominent manufacturer of Springfield, Mass. Three sons, born April 5, 1819, May 28, 1820, and June 2, 1822, respectively, died in infancy. Henry Clinton, born July 14, 1823, died Feb. 17, 1841. Gilbert Huntington is mentioned below. Alpheus Eugene, born April 3, 1830, died April 14, 1849. Charles Andrews, born Feb. 17, 1833, is a druggist of Fall River, Mass. The mother of this family was a daughter of Alpheus Kingsley, of the town of Franklin, Conn., who died in 1850, at the age of eighty years. He was of Scottish origin, his ancestors having come from Scotland to this country, and with others settled in the town of Scotland, in Windham county, Conn. Alpheus Kingsley was a patriot of the war of the Revolution, serving under Gen. Washington at Valley Forge.

GILBERT HUNTINGTON BAKER, son of Henry C. Baker, and the father of the Baker Brothers, of Stafford Springs who are still active in business there under the old firm name of G. H. Baker & Co., was born Nov. 27, 1826, in Stafford, where he received a common school education, and at an early age began a business career under the training of his father. He speedily developed exceptional business ability, and the management of the father's business, in which the son became interested, was left mainly to him. He directed all of the details, and through his tact, excellent management and care, coupled with industry and energy, a large and prosperous business was built up. On the death of his father, in 1851, the son succeeded to the business and continued to carry it on through the active years of his life. In 1881 it passed into the hands of his sons who have since been active and energetic in sustaining the high standard of excellence maintained by the father and grandfather for so many years. For some years prior to his decease Mr. Baker was not in robust health, but he was a great home man, of domestic habits, and loved to be with his family, so he remained with them till the last, although the physicians told him he might live ten years longer in another climate. This disposition also made him averse to holding office or mingling much in public, and, while most capable, and often urged to accept public trusts, he usually declined. Just after the Civil war, however, he did consent to accept the office of Internal Revenue collector for Tolland county, a position he efficiently and creditably filled. He was a director in the Stafford Savings Bank, of which he was one of the incorporators, and served until the time of his death, July 25, 1887. He was the first president of the Stafford Springs Cemetery Association, and ever maintained a deep interest in the development and beautifying of the cemetery. Like his father, Mr. Baker was prominent in the work of the Congregational Church, and a member of the Ecclesiastical Society. His political sympathies were with the Republican party. In his death Stafford lost a most useful citizen, one whose enterprise and generosity had done much for the community in many lines outside of business circles, and he left an enviable name in the community with which he had been identified all his life. His qualities of head and heart were of the highest order. Kind-hearted, of a liberal and loving disposition, he was esteemed and beloved by all who knew him, and no man enjoyed more deeply the warm affection of his immediate family.

On Feb. 14, 1848, Mr. Baker was married to Clarissa Malvina, daughter of Simon L. and Dolly Ann (Tracy) Kingsley, of Norwich, Conn., and to the union were born seven children, namely: Ella Maria, Irving Gilbert, Edmund Kingsley, Frank Harding, Leonard Ballou, Edith Clare and Gilbert Stewart.

(1) Ella Maria Baker was born Dec. 11, 1848, in Stafford Springs. In early childhood she exhibited her talents in writing little notes of affection to her friends, and naturally often fell into rhyming. At the age of twelve years her writings attracted attention, showing talent worthy of cultivation. Some of her contributions found their way into print, and high-grade periodicals were eager to publish her writings. Her best efforts were drawn out by ties of friendship, she being of a sweet, charitable nature, devoted to her friends. Her charitable impulses became an incentive to literary work, her contributions bringing her money, and she loved to go as an almoner among the poor and aid in relieving distress. Her literary work was chiefly fragmentary. No collection has ever been made of her prose articles, which were generally stories written for the young, and given to the religious and juvenile periodicals. Her first book was "Christmas Pie," others were "Soldier and Servant," and "Seven Easter Lilies."

Miss Baker's life was a busy one, and though brief, she left her impress upon the period of her existence, and a name worthy of remembrance. Her life was spent in the discharge of domestic, charitable and religious duties. Of an unobtrusive nature, her poems and writings were given to the press with reluctance and self depreciation. She was active in the organization of the Stafford Public Library, and contributed toward sustaining it, and was a director and secretary of same from the beginning. Miss Baker died at the home of her birth May 8, 1884.

(2) Irving Gilbert Baker, born March 20, 1853, is living in Springfield, Mass., and is connected with the Springfield Mirror Manufacturing Company, as manager. His first wife was Sophia Arms, daughter of George Arms, and for his second wife he married Grace Pinney, of Stafford, daughter of Julius Pinney. There was one child by the first union, Clara Kingsley, who married Charles Pinney, of Stafford.

(3) Edmund Kingsley Baker, born May 16, 1855, is treasurer and manager of the Hampden Paint Works, in Springfield, Mass. He married Mary Stickney, daughter of Dr. Peter Stickney, of Springfield, and they have had four children, Madeline, Rhea Kingsley, Donald and Lawrence.

(4) FRANK HARDING BAKER, born July 17, 1857, lives at the old home. He is a member of the firm of G. H. Baker & Co., at Stafford Springs; also of The Baker Company of Springfield, which company is composed of himself and brother Leonard B. The Stafford Floral Company, of Stafford Springs, was founded, and is also owned by F. H. and L. B. Baker, this concern being one of considerably more than a local reputation, with an equipment and capacity for surpassing institutions of its kind usually found in places like Stafford Springs. In 1903 Mr. Baker represented Stafford in the Connecticut General Assembly, serving on the committee on Incorporations. Socially he is a member of Ionic Lodge, F. & A. M., Knights of The Maccabees, and the Modern Woodmen of America, all of Stafford Springs. Politically he is a staunch Republican.

(5) LEONARD BALLOU BAKER, born Oct. 2, 1859, is a member of the firm of G. H. Baker & Co. Since 1880 he has been identified with several manufacturing enterprises in Springfield, at present being manager and part owner of the Baker Company manufacturers of paper-machine aprons in that city. He is an owner, with his brother, F. H., of the Stafford Floral Company of Stafford Springs. Socially he is a Mason, and a member of the Nyassett Club, of Springfield.

(6) Edith Clare Baker, born Sept. 17, 1864 is now Mrs. J. Carl Converse, of Springfield, Mass., and has two children, Julius Kingsley and Clove Baker.

(7) Gilbert Stewart Baker, born Nov. 12, 1870 is associated with the G. H. Baker & Co. Socially he is a member of Ionic Lodge, F. & A. M., of Stafford Springs.

CHARLES HOLT, deceased. The name Holt is of ancient origin, and is defined by Halliwell as a "grove or small forest, on the South Downs of England. Generally, if not always, it is a small hanging wood." Lower says: "A copse, a wood corresponding with the German 'Holtz.'" Another authority defines it: "A peak hill covered with wood."

The founder of the family, so far as record show, was (I) Nicholas Holt, who was born in England in 1602, and in England married Elizabeth who died at Andover, Nov. 9, 1656; he married for his second wife, Hannah, widow of Daniel Rolfe and daughter of Humphrey Bradstreet. The second wife died June 20, 1665, in Andover, Mass., and Nicholas married for his third wife, Mrs. Martha Preston, May 21, 1666, and she died March 21, 1703, aged eighty years. The offspring of Nicholas were ten in number. Nicholas, with his first wife, and one child, was on the ship "James" of London, which sailed from Southampton, England, April 6, 1635, and arrived at Boston, Mass., on June 3, following, the voyage taking fifty-eight days. By trade, he was a tanner and came from Romsey, England, and upon his arrival in the New World, settled in Newbury, Essex Co., Mass., and after nine years, removed in 1644 to Andover, Mass. His was the sixth name recorded in a list of householders, and he was one of ten male members of the church at the ordination of the first pastor, Oct. 24, 1645. His death occurred Jan. 30, 1685, when he was eighty-three years of age.

(II) Nicholas Holt (2) was born in 1647, in Andover, Mass., and died, Oct. 8, 1715, in the same community, at the age of sixty-eight; he married Jan. 8, 1679, Mary Russell, a daughter of Robert Russell, and his wife died April 1, 1717. They had eleven children; Mary, Nicholas, Thomas, Abigail, Sarah, James, Robert, Abiel, Deborah, Joshua and Daniel.

(III) Abiel Holt, a son of Nicholas (2), was born June 28, 1698, in Andover, Mass., and died Nov. 10, 1772, aged seventy-four years, in Windham, Conn., where he was buried. On Feb. 12, 1721, he married Hannah, a daughter of Timothy and Hannah (Graves) Abbott. She died Feb. 11, 1751, aged fifty-six years. Ten children were born of this union, at least seven of whom removed to Willington, Conn. These children were: Hannah, Elizabeth, Abiel, Caleb, Nathan, Anna, Isaac, Timothy, Mary and James. In 1718, when twenty-seven old, Abiel went to Windham, Conn., and he and his young wife were among the earliest members of the church there.

(IV) Caleb Holt, son of Abiel, was born March 6, 1729, in Windham, and died Dec. 2, 1815, in Willington, Conn., where he is buried. Jan. 29, 1755, he married Mary Merrick, who died June 4, 1790, aged sixty-four. May 17, 1791, he married Chloe Hatch, who died Aug. 18, 1810, aged eighty years. Five children were born to Caleb: Elizabeth, who married Abiel Stevens; Elijah, who married (first) Molly Simmons, and (second) Lavina Dutton; Caleb; Joshua, who died when twenty-seven years of age; James, who died in infancy. Caleb Holt was one of the earliest settlers and a very prominent citizen of Willington, being known as "Sergeant" Holt, and he was a delegate to the convention for the ratification of the constitution of the United States. The military title was probably a Revolutionary one. His home was one mile east of Willington Centre, and among his five children Elijah was quite prominent, being a deacon and holding various town offices; he was town clerk for a number of years, and lived on the home farm for the greater part of his life.

(V) Caleb (2), son of Caleb (1), was born April 23, 1759, in Willington, and died Sept. 8, 1826, in the same community, where he is buried. Jan. 8, 1783, he married Sarah Goodale, who died Oct. 4, 1831, aged seventy-one. The children born of this marriage were: Horace, who was born Aug. 29, 1784; Royal, born Dec. 2, 1786, in Willington, Conn., where he died in 1864, who married Lavina Lamb, of Vermont, and had seven children; Joshua, born April 27, 1792, who married Oct. 27, 1831, Daluka W. Leonard, and died Nov. 8, 1834, aged forty-two years; Ralph, born Oct. 10, 1794, who married Sally Rider; Juliana, born April 25, 1796, who married Nov. 2, 1823, Robert Sharp. Caleb (2) was a tanner and currier and successfully carried on that business in Willington, and was also a wealthy farmer, owning large tracts of lands, which he divided among his sons, giving each a farm.

(VI) Horace Holt, son of Caleb (2), died in his native town of Willington, Jan. 30, 1863, and is buried there. March 8, 1821, he married Polly Holt, who was born Sept. 7, 1798, and was a daughter of Joseph Holt, a descendant in another line from Abiel Holt, third generation from the founder Nicholas. The children born to Horace and Polly Holt were: Henry Oscar, born Aug. 9, 1822, in Willington, Conn., who died there Dec. 20, 1872, having had the management of the home farm and cared for his parents during the latter part of their lives, and who married May 13, 1852, Louisa Holt, whose grandfather and his were brothers; Celenda, born Sept. 16, 1825, who married June 26, 1844, James Calkins, and went to live at Mansfield, Conn., where she became a widow, still residing in the town of Four Corners; Charles; Horace Goodale, who resides in Rockville, and was born Nov. 21, 1830.

The father was a tanner by trade, succeeding to his father's business. Their unpretentious, low, one-story house was located a half mile or so from Willington Hill, and there their four children were born. From this house the family later removed to a small farm two miles south. The father, who was in poor health, found it difficult to provide for his family from the slender income which his trade of shoemaker and tanner gave him, and the task of looking after the financial part fell upon the shoulders of the eldest son, Henry, who nobly acquitted himself of his duty and cared tenderly for his parents and younger brothers and sisters until they were old enough to look after themselves.

(VII) Charles Holt, deceased, was born Aug. 3, 1827, in Willington, near Willington Hill, where he attended the common schools. As his inclinations did not turn towards farming, when he was about thirteen he went to live with his Uncle James, his mother's youngest brother, whose home was three miles west of the homestead, near the Robert Sharp mills. This was about 1840. Uncle James was one of the best mechanics of Willington, and was engaged in the wagon business. The demand for spools, however, caused him to abandon the wagon business and engage in the manufacture of spools, and it was in this latter business that young Charles was first put to work. In 1843 his family expressed the wish that he learn a trade, and as his inclinations were of a mechanical turn, he was apprenticed to a cabinet-maker, J. N. Holmes, at Willington Hollow. There he proved his worth, and was soon able to do better work than his master, who two years later failed, and Charles again went to live with his uncle. About this time, he attended the old Centre select school, and this closed his school career. During this short time, he proved himself much better grounded than the average pupil, and was a general favorite, his quiet ways and droll humor being interesting and amusing.

In 1846, his friends secured a place for him at Stafford Hollow, with Moses B. Harvey, where he could learn the trade of machinist. Several years prior to this, he had been sent by his uncle, to the establishment of Mr. Harvey, and took so great an interest in the machinery of the plant, that it was with deep satisfaction that, at the age of nineteen, he entered upon his new work. Having already learned the trade of spool maker, and having a natural inclination in the direction of mechanics, the work proved very congenial, especially as he was made very comfortable in the home of Mr. Harvey. After finishing his apprenticeship, and working for some time as a journeyman, he decided to change his field of operation and entered a pistol shop in Middletown, Conn. His work was to be drilling the barrels at a certain price per inch. Here his ingenious nature came into play. Seeing, as he thought, that some improvement could be made, he asked the privilege of using tools to make some changes, with the result that he earned the first day two or three times as much as the others had done at the same work. His employer, instead of being pleased at the good workmanship displayed, regarded it as a personal injury, and interfered with him as much as possible. This the high-spirited young man could not endure, and after a few months, he returned to Stafford, Tolland county, and entered the firm of M. B. Harvey & Co. as a partner, and made Stafford his home for the remainder of his life.

In 1857, he was honored by being made superintendent of the Hydeville Manufacturing Company, of which his father-in-law, Elijah Fairman, was agent. In 1860 fire destroyed the mill of this company, but a new structure was quickly erected in its place, and so rapidly was this done, that the new building was called the "Phoenix." Later, the proprietors failed, and a new company was formed, known as the Phoenix Woolen Company. Misfortune seemed to follow misfortune, for the next disaster was an explosion of the boiler, which totally destroyed the dyeing department; finally, the flood of 1877 destroyed the dam. Still, in spite of everything, there were good times with the bad years. In 1880, Mr. Holt became sole owner of the property, and this he continued to control, with much success, for about seven years.

About 1884 he and his family, with Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Pinney, joined a "Raymond party" for a fifty-nine day trip across the continent. This trip included some time in the Rocky Mountains, in Colorado, the orange groves of California, and a stage ride into the Yosemite Valley. This trip was very much enjoyed by all the party, and by none more than the genial Mr. Holt, who was ever full of pleasant story and merry joke.

In 1888 Mr. Holt sold the entire plant to E. C. Pinney and Christopher Allen, planning to enjoy the remainder of his life in retirement, free from the business cares and worries which had filled his life for forty years. After due consideration, Stafford Springs was selected for the new home, in part on account of its proximity to the old and tried friends of earlier days, to whom he was so deeply attached.

By the time, however, that the ground on East Main street had been prepared, the plans made, and the house well under way of construction, his health broke down entirely, and Mr. Holt was obliged to abandon the management of what had been to him such an interesting work. When in trouble do men prove their friends, and Mr. Holt was no exception to the rule, for just at this juncture two of his oldest and dearest friends came to his rescue and superintended the new house until it was completed, so that through the four years of lingering illness that followed, Mr. Holt was enabled to enjoy the comforts and luxuries of his modern home, surrounded by those he held most dear. In the midst of these surroundings he was taken away, Jan. 27, 1892, and was laid to rest on the brow of the hill, in the beautiful Hillside cemetery.

On July 22, 1850, Mr. Holt was married to Julia, a daughter of Elijah and Cynthia (Harvey) Fairman, of Stafford; she was born Feb. 26, 1829, and died May 10, 1862, having had two children: Celia, still living; Charles F., who was born Jan. 22, 1862, and died Sept. 15, 1862, aged seven months and twenty-three days. Mr. Holt married a second time, July 2, 1879, his choice being Joanna, a daughter of Abner and Cynthia (Alden) Burleigh, of Hampden, Mass., by whom he had no children.

In religious faith, Mr. Holt was a staunch Universalist and attended the church of that creed and gave most liberally of his means towards its support. His political affiliations were with the Whig party until the organization of the Republican party, in 1856, when he allied himself with it, and until the close of his life, supported its principles. In 1858, he represented the town of Stafford in the State Legislature.

The beautiful fountain in "Haymarket Square," Stafford Springs, was erected by his devoted widow and daughter, as a tribute to his memory. In the death of Mr. Holt, Stafford lost one of its most honored and highly respected citizens, and his family a loving father and husband. Never was a deserving object brought to his notice, but he gave generously to it. No man ever applied to him for aid in vain. Kind, genial, charitable, a good business man, a public-spirited citizen, a warm and true friend, a loving and devoted man in his family, his memory will long be kept green by those who knew him, and his good deeds will not be forgotten in the community where he made his home for so many years.

CROSLEY FITTON. America has been distinctively a field for the man with initiative power, and there has been room for him in every progressive business, however crowded it may have been. The man of ideas has had, and does have, a high value, but his potency has been slight in comparison with that of the one who has had the ability to put his ideas into practice. Among those who showed marked capacity in the handling of industrial affairs of wide scope and importance was the subject of this memoir, who was prominently identified with the manufacturing of woolen goods in Connecticut for many years, and who held the unequivocal confidence and esteem of all who knew him, being signally true and loyal in all the relations of life, and guiding his course along a line of utmost integrity and honor. He was a representative citizen of Rockville, Tolland county, and such was his public spirit that his influence and tangible aid were ever extended in support of all measures for the public good, while his record as a citizen and a man is one to which his descendants may point with distinctive pride and satisfaction, since he left the priceless heritage of a good name. Crosley Fitton was a native of England, having been born in Lancashire Dec. 19, 1839, son of James and Mary (Watson) Fitton.

James Fitton was reared and educated in England, where, as a youth, he served a thorough apprenticeship in a woolen mill, becoming a skilled artisan in that line, and being endowed with superior mechanical ability. He held responsible positions in various English mills and remained in his native land until about 1839, when he emigrated to America, reaching his destination after a voyage of six weeks' duration. His wife and son Crosley remained in England until 1841, when they joined the husband and father, who had located in the State of Massachusetts. He was employed in various mills in that State and in Connecticut, and eventually engaged in business on his own responsibility. He died at Shaw, England, when seventy-one years of age, his wife passing away at the age of fifty-one years.

Crosley Fitton received his early educational discipline in the public schools of the various towns and cities in which his father was employed, and he completed his scholastic training in an academy at Lenox, Mass. As his father was a thorough and practical mill man, being an expert in all details of the manufacturing of woolen fabrics, his son secured exceptional advantages in connection with this line of industry, the father having eventually engaged in the manufacturing of goods on his own responsibility, owning and operating a well equipped mill. Crosley Fitton manifested, at an early age, a distinctive predilection for the business in which he was so thoroughly trained under the effective direction of his honored father, and while still a youth he acquired an accurate and comprehensive knowledge of all details of mill work, especially in the manufacture of worsteds and other high-grade woolen products. At the age of sixteen years he was incumbent of the responsible position of boss weaver, and before he had attained the age of twenty years he became superintendent of a mill.

After his marriage, which was solemnized in the year 1861, Mr. Fitton became superintendent of a mill at Cavendish, Windsor Co., Vt., where he remained until 1863, when he located in Rockville, Tolland county, where he had been called to the superintendency of the Hockanum mill, and in this connection it may be noted that his youthful appearance at the time was a subject of comment, since much older men were usually selected for the important preferment to which he was thus called. In 1864 Mr. Fitton returned to Cavendish, Vt., to superintend the erection of a mill for his father, and he placed the same in operation and continued in charge of the work until 1867, when he returned to Rockville, and there assumed the superintendency of the Rock mill, with which he continued to be connected in that capacity until his somewhat sudden death, April 29, 1891, while for a number of years prior to his demise he had also been agent for the mill of whose operation he had the general supervision. His remains were laid to rest in Grove Hill cemetery. He was a man of marked individuality and of fine mental powers, while the elemental strength of his character had its foundation upon the basis of inflexible integrity and honor, so that to him was ever accorded the utmost measure of confidence and regard, both in business and in social circles. He was unassuming and entirely free from ostentation, had a supreme respect for the dignity of honest toil, and held the loyal regard of those employed under his direction as well as of those by whom he was himself employed. A true and noble manhood was his, and his life was one of signal usefulness and honor.

As a woolen manufacturer Mr. Fitton ranked among the most able in New England, and the Rock Company attained its greatest success and prosperity during the period of his identification with its interests. The mills were enlarged during his regime, new machinery of the most approved type was installed, the corps of employes was materially augmented, and the woolens manufactured were not excelled by those of any mill in the Union. Mr. Fitton was endowed not only with a high order of business and administrative ability, but also with distinctive mechanical genius and skill, while he had the power of concentrated effort and consecutive application—the invariable concomitants of definite success. He was often the first to arrive at the mill in the morning and the last to take his departure at night, his energy and devotion to his work being unflagging. He was prominently identified with other important enterprises in Rockville, having been president and a member of the directorate of the Rockville Water Power Company, and a director of each the Rockville Railway Company, the Rockville Aqueduct Company and the Rockville Gas Light Company, while for several years he was also a member of the directory of the People's Savings Bank. He was essentially publicspirited, and his influence was exerted in a most effective and helpful way, while he took great pride in his home city and in furthering its interests in every way. He did much toward promoting the efficiency of the fire department, and was largely instrumental in securing the first steam fire engine, which was named in his honor. He was one of four citizens who purchased the hotel property in Rockville, giving the town a hotel building excelling those in the average towns of double the population, the Rockville Hotel Company being incorporated in 1901, with a capital of $40,000.

Mr. Fitton gave an unflinching allegiance to the Republican party, in whose cause he maintained a lively interest, though he was in no sense a politician. In 1885 he was elected to represent his district in the lower house of the State Legislature, where he made an excellent record as an able and duly conservative legislator. He contributed liberally of both time and means to furthering the cause of his party, and was one of its most trusted counselors in this section of the State. In every public capacity in which he consented to serve, the discharge of his official duties was marked with the same care and fidelity which characterized his course in connection with his private affairs and business career.

Mr. Fitton's life, though eminently successful in a financial way, was not hedged in by sordid influence nor devoted to the mere accumulation of property, and he never desired to leave a large estate. His views of life were broad and ideal, and he placed a true estimate on the values of human existence and effort. His benevolences were numerous and practical, and many became known only through the manifestation of the gratitude of the recipients, for he was unostentatious in his kindly acts, and his kindness of heart was never made an excuse for display. His public spirit, his devotion to his home and family, and his many other noble traits of character were the reflex of this intrinsic kindness, which was a dominating element in his nature and which caused him to put forth his efforts toward insuring the greatest good to the greatest number. Fraternally Mr. Fitton was identified with the time-honored order of Freemasonry, holding membership in Fayette Lodge, No. 69, F. & A. M., of Rockville, while he was also a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Order of Foresters, in the latter of which he was affiliated with Court Hearts of Oak, Foresters of America, No. 6957. His religious faith was that of the Congregational Church, and he was a member of the building committee which had in charge the erection of the beautiful Union Congregational Church in Rockville, while his interest in all departments of church work was of vital and insistent order.

On Jan. 23, 1861, at Cavendish, Vt., Mr. Fitton was united in marriage to Miss Caroline R. Tarbell, who was born in Chester, that State, April 28, 1838, a daughter of Thomas and Caroline (Rice) Tarbell. Her father was a son of Nathaniel Tarbell, who removed from New Hampshire to Vermont, and became a pioneer of the Green Mountain State, where he located in a section which was still a primitive wilderness, the trails through the forest being marked by blazed trees. The family first settled in the vicinity of Chester, Windsor county, and it was in that town that Thomas Tarbell was born. His wife was a native of Westboro, Mass., a daughter of Ira Rice. Mrs. Fitton was reared and educated in her native town. She survives her honored husband and occupies the beautiful home, at the corner of Elm and Prospect streets, the residence having been remodeled in 1887, and being one of the most attractive homes in Rockville. During the long years of her residence here she has retained the affectionate regard of a wide circle of devoted friends, and her home has ever been a center of refined and gracious hospitality. To Mr. and Mrs. Fitton were born three children concerning whom we enter brief record, as follows: Mary E., born in Cavendish, Vt., Dec. 16, 1862, was married, Nov. 19, 1884, to Parley B. Leonard, of Rockville, and they have three children, Crosley E., Ella C. and Carrie F.; George Crosley, born in Cavendish, Vt., July 22, 1866, married Mrs. Mary (Wing) Prentice, and they have one child, Crosley; JAMES T. FITTON, born in Rockville, May 23, 1872, still resides at the old homestead.

LEBBEUS BISSELL. There are few residents of the city of Rockville who are better known, more universally respected, or who have been more important factors in the business world of that section of Tolland county, than the venerable Lebbeus Bissell. He is a representative of one of the oldest families of New England.

(I) John Bissell, the founder of the Windsor family, settled in that town about 1640. Tradition asserts that this John with a brother Thomas came from the County of Somerset, England, to Plymouth, Mass., in 1628, and that the latter died or returned to England. The family is probably of Huguenot origin, for many of that faith fled to England to escape the persecution which followed the massacre of St. Bartholomew in 1572. John Bissell received a grant for a ferry over the Connecticut river in 1648-49, and he is credited with being the first settler on the east side of the river. Evidences show that he built on the east side of the river as early as 1659-60. He gave the homestead and ferry on the west side to his son John and in 1662 removed to the east side of the river. John Bissell, the settler, died in 1677, aged eighty-six, and his wife died in 1641.

(II) John Bissell (2), son of John the settler, born in England, married June 17, 1658, Isabell daughter of Major John Mason, of Saybrook, Conn. She died March 29, 1665. Of a second wife there are no reliable data. Mr. Bissell had the homestead on the west side of the river, with his brother Nathaniel owned a sawmill on the east side of the river, and kept the ferry from 1658 to 1668. He died in 1693.

(III) Josiah Bissell, son of John (2), born Oct

Lebbens Rippe

IN HIS 90TH YEAR.

10, 1670, married Miriam, widow of William Hayden, Dec. 10, 1703. She died July 8, 1747, when in her sixty-sixth year.

(IV) Benjamin Bissell, son of Josiah, born in 1719-20, married, Nov. 27, 1745, Mary Strong, both of Windsor. Mr. Bissell removed to Torrington, Conn., in the year of his marriage, and is credited with being the first settler in that town, his house standing on the east side of the street, where he kept a tavern for a number of years. Mr. Bissell died Sept. 12, 1790, aged seventy-one years, and his wife passed away Aug. 19, 1806, aged eighty-six years.

(V) Benjamin Bissell (2), son of Benjamin, born in Torrington, married, April 21, 1778, Silence Winchell, who died at Harwinton, Conn., June 1, 1829. He was a farmer by occupation. When he married he left Torrington parish, in the town of what is now Torrington, and bought a farm in Harwinton, Conn., where he lived the remainder of his life and reared his family of three sons and one daughter, namely: Porter, the father of Lebbeus, born March 22, 1779; Benjamin, born Nov. 7, 1782, a farmer, who passed his latter years at West Hartford; Almira, born Sept. 22, 1780, who married a Mr. Sabins, moved to Pennsylvania, and died in that State; and Horace, born Nov. 18, 1786, a farmer on the old home farm in Harwinton, where he lived and died.

(VI) Porter Bissell, son of Benjamin (2), born March 22, 1779, in Harwinton, Conn., died at the age of seventy-seven, in Wolcottville, now Torrington, Conn., Oct. 18, 1855. He was a harness-maker by trade. He married Lucy Tinker, a native of Westfield, Mass., daughter of Martin and Mary (Peck) Tinker, the latter a native of Lyme, Conn. His children were: George P., born May 14, 1803, who died Aug. 30, 1804; Ann W., Nov. 21, 1804; George P. (2), March 27, 1806; Martin, Feb. 6, 1808; Lebbeus, Jan. 8, 1810; John, Oct. 18, 1811; Rosetta, Nov. 27, 1813; Elizabeth, April 23, 1816, who died May 1, 1847; Mary E., June 17, 1818; Lucy, June 25, 1820; William, Feb. 7, 1822, who died Feb. 22, 1825; and Catherine, Oct. 27, 1823, who died Oct. 31, 1849. Lebbeus Bissell is the only surviving member of this family of twelve children; his sister Ann, who died at the age of ninety-two years, was the next in longevity.

(VII) The boyhood days of Lebbeus Bissell possess an interest to the biographer and the public, as they take the mind back so many years, to the days when the wonderful discoveries of science, as we enjoy the results to-day, had not been even imagined. Until he was ten years of age he lived in Wolcottville, and there attended his first school, his teacher being a maiden of sixteen years, named Fanny Austin; later she became Mrs. Whitmore. When a boy of ten Mr. Bissell went to Vernon Center to live with his uncle, Lebbeus P. Tinker, who was a prominent citizen of that place, merchant, postmaster, and for many years town clerk. The trip was one of great adventure to the lad, his father taking him from home by team to Hartford, there being no other way of transportation at that time. Reaching Hartford after a day's driving, another team was secured, and Uncle Tinker's home was reached April 1, 1820. Mr. Bissell's remarkable memory recalls many incidents of this trip, as his first entrance into what seemed to him the great outside world made a vivid impression upon his boyish mind.

The travelers reached Vernon Center in time to witness one of the exciting occasions of the town. The first Monday in May, following his arrival at Vernon, was "general training day," and one of the incidents of the day impressed upon Mr. Bissell a temperance lesson which he never forgot. The parade ground was at Vernon, and Rev. William Ely, then pastor at Vernon Center Church, was invited to offer prayer, and later to attend the banquet which usually followed. His prominent position made his words and actions notable, and when the worthy pastor was offered wine (the drinking of which was all too general) he boldly refused it and emphasized his refusal with the manly words: "I will not drink and wish that others would not." Perhaps the good man never realized the good effect of his brave declaration to the admiring little stranger who heard them. This same Rev. Mr. Ely was the organizer of the first Sunday-school which Mr. Bissell ever attended.

Lebbeus Bissell made his home with his uncle at Vernon until he was twenty-one years old and there received his first training in business. He attended school in Vernon and later at Hartford and Ellington. In 1822 he attended the private school of John J. White during the months of April, May and June, and in 1825 he attended the first term of the John Hall School, at Ellington, which later became celebrated as an educational institution of New England. During his six months' attendance at this school Mr. Bissell boarded with Dr. Allyn Hyde and James Chapman. The rest of his education was acquired at Vernon.

When not at school Mr. Bissell was employed by his uncle, whose various business interests furnished ample opportunity for work and business training for a young man. Lebbeus remained with his uncle Lebbeus until June, 1831, when he accepted a situation as clerk at East Hampton, Mass., in Luther Clapp's general store, receiving a salary of $150 and board for his first year's services, and an additional $50 each year while there. While living in East Hampton, Mr. Bissell boarded with a deacon in the church and became associated with the best class of society. He took so great an interest in the Sabbath-school, and was so regular in his attendance, that on one occasion, when a visit to a friend prevented him from going, two of the most prominent and influential men of the town, Luther and Ichabod Wright, sought him out to find the cause. Thus was he valued in that community.

Mr. Bissell lived at East Hampton until the fall of 1834, when he returned to Vernon, and in company with Bela Abbott, in January, 1835, took charge of the mercantile business of Lebbeus P. Tinker, the new firm style being Bissell & Abbott. This partnership continued for about five years, when Mr. Bissell became sole proprietor. Bissell & Abbott at one time manufactured palm-leaf hoods, which was a profitable business at the time. The first six dozen of these hoods made by this firm were taken to New York by Mr. Bissell and sold to S. D. Hall & Co., who continued to take their product for some time. These goods had a big sale, and at one time the head of the firm of S. D. Hall & Co. came to Vernon for a hurried order of one hundred dozen of hoods and took from his pocket six one hundred dollar bills, practically paying for the goods in advance, so great was his confidence in the reliability of Bissell & Abbott and in the perfection of their goods. As it chanced, this money was unusually welcome at that time, and Mr. Bissell remembers that he used the sum to a better advantage than almost any other money paid to him.

Mr. Bissell continued in the mercantile business in Vernon until November, 1847, when he removed his stock of goods to Rockville, bought out the interest of George Maxwell in the firm of White & Maxwell, and with Stanley White formed the new firm of White & Bissell. The business was located on the southwest corner of West Main and Union streets. This firm was in existence about ten years when Mr. Bissell sold out to George Groves, E. S. Henry and Joseph Selden. Soon after this Mr. Bissell built a handsome business block on West Main street, almost opposite Vernon avenue, where he resumed business and continued there until the end of his mercantile career, when he disposed of his business to Cyrus White.

It was about 1858 when the Savings Bank of Rockville was established, and it was first located in Mr. Bissell's store, where it remained until it was removed, early in 1872, to its present location on Park Place. Mr. Bissell was the first secretary and treasurer of this, the oldest banking institution in Rockville, and has ever since held the position. He has seen its deposits approach the two million mark, and its surplus the one hundred thousand mark, a climb from naught. About 1870 was established the insurance firm of L. Bissell & Son (the son being A. T. Bissell), which has grown and developed into the leading insurance business in that section of Connecticut, and includes an array of reliable companies not surpassed by any local fire insurance agency in the State. Mr. Bissell has been interested in other business enterprises and at one time was a director in the old Phoenix mill at Vernon and one of the first directors of the Rockville Bank, which later merged into the Rockville National Bank. He was one of the founders of the Rockville Mutual Fire Insurance Company, serving as its secretary until 1880, when he was succeeded by his son.

Mr. Bissell was first entitled to vote in 1832, but lost that privilege by going to Massachusetts about that time. In 1836 he cast his first Presidential vote for Martin Van Buren, since which time he has voted for every Democratic candidate, taking a keen interest in this, but not entering actively into politics. For some years he served as justice of the peace, but his business interests have been so absorbing that, had he inclination, he would scarcely have found time to have attended to public duties. When but a lad of eighteen he was offered his first position, that of corporal in the old Connecticut militia, an honor he declined.

Both Mr. Bissell and his wife belong to the Union Congregational Church, Mr. Bissell previously having been a member of the old Second Church and the society's committee.

On Jan. 24, 1838, Mr. Bissell was married by Rev. William Humphrey to Miss Harriet Johnson, of Vernon, a daughter of Stephen and Electa (Noble) Johnson, the latter of whom was a daughter of Rev. Mr. Noble, who for years preached at Willington, Conn. Stephen Johnson died at Vernon, April 5, 1853, aged sixty-six years. His widow died Nov. 6, 1878, aged ninety-one years, five months and twenty-six days. Mrs. Bissell died Dec. 24, 1847, at Vernon, leaving no issue.

On Jan. 14, 1849, by Rev. A. Smith, Mr. Bissell was married (second) to Miss Christina C. Johnson, a sister to his first wife, a lady of rare amiability and Christian graces. She died at the age of thirty-nine years, in Rockville, Feb. 25, 1854, and was first interred at Vernon, but later removed to Grove Hill cemetery, at Rockville. She left two children, namely: Arthur T., born Feb. 9, 1850, who is in business in Rockville; and Hattie, born Dec. 19, 1852, in Rockville, in the home on the corner of Union and West Main streets. The daughter was a young lady of fine natural gifts, and graduated from the Hartford high school. In September, 1892, she was married, in California, to E. S. Jackson, of Providence, R. I., which is their present home.

On Jan. 4, 1860, Mr. Bissell was married, a third time, in New York City, to Miss Lucy A. Clark, a native of Woodstock, Conn., daughter of Deacon Lathrop and Lucy (Perrin) Clark. Mrs. Bissell was but a child of two years when her parents removed to Webster, Mass., where she was reared.

Asahel Clark, the grandfather of Mrs. Bissell, was a distinguished Revolutionary soldier. His name appears as a private on the Lexington Alarm list and he marched from Connecticut for the relief of Boston in April, 1775. He was made sergeant in the 7th Co., 3d Reg., Gen. Putnam, which was raised on the first call for troops in April and May, 1775, and was stationed during the siege in Putnam's center division at Cambridge. He took part in the battle of Bunker Hill, serving in the army from May 10 to Dec. 16, 1775. In 1776 he was corporal in the company commanded by Lieut. Tucker, 6th Co., 11th Regt., at New York. On Jan. 1, 1777, he was commissioned ensign and resigned April 20, 1778. In 1777 he went into camp at Peekskill, and in September of the same year was in Pennsylvania with McDougall's brigade. In the battle of Germantown, Oct. 4, 1777, he took a brave part and was with the army during the terrible winter at Valley Forge, 1777-78.

Deacon Lathrop Clark, son of this brave soldier, also had a fine military record, having been a captain in the army during the war of 1812. For many years he was a deacon in the Congregational Church at Webster, and for forty years was a teacher in Woodstock and Webster.

Although Mr. Bissell has seen many generations of feeblar men come and go, he still retains the vivacity and the vigor of those twenty-five years younger. In stature small and spare, his step is elastic and his mind as clear and vigorous as it was forty years ago. Most interesting are his reminiscences of earlier days, and so remarkable is his memory that he can recall occasions and dates that have passed from the minds of much younger persons. He has always taken a great interest and pride in Rockville, and is the only man alive who attended the "raising" of the first mill built in this city of mills, the location of that mill being on the site of the present Rock mill. This was in 1821, when he was a lad of eleven years.

In 1824, when a boy of fourteen, Mr. Bissell took a trip to Sturbridge, Mass., which was indelibly fixed upon his memory. He accompanied Simeon Cooley, who was taking in a load of teasels. While there he had the pleasure of seeing the Marquis de LaFayette. Soon after the Civil war he met another distinguished man, and was the only one of the great crowd who flocked to Vernon to meet Gen. Grant to be presented to him personally. Mr. Bissell deemed this an honor, and no doubt the distinguished soldier and statesman felt honored in being so kindly greeted.

ARTHUR T. BISSELL, secretary and assistant treasurer of the Savings Bank of Rockville, Tolland county, secretary of the Rockville Mutual Fire Insurance Co., and treasurer of the Rock Manufacturing Co., is one of the well known business men of his city, prominent in financial and commercial circles.

Mr. Bissell was born in Rockville Feb. 9, 1850, only son of Lebbeus and Christina (Johnson) Bissell. His education was begun in the schools of his native place, where he attended the high school when John M. Turner was its principal, and the training he received in Rockville was supplemented by four years' study at Edward Hall's school, in Ellington. In 1866 he entered upon his successful business career. From boyhood he had been employed in his father's store in various capacities, and this practical business training gave him an interest in affairs in early life, and also a knowledge of the details of business.

Mr. Bissell went to Hartford soon after leaving school, in 1866, and for a year and a half was clerk in the store of Brown, Thompson & Co., beginning in the lace department at a salary of $5 a week. His board alone cost him $6 a week, but he sought the experience that work in such a house could give. He was presently assigned to other departments, and he considers the time he was engaged in that house as spent in the most valuable way. Mr. Bissell was next with C. S. Wetherbee & Co. for a half year, at the expiration of which time his father recalled him to Rockville, to enter his store. This was in 1868. Almost at once began his connection with the Savings Bank of Rockville, which was then conducted in his father's store, the young man being engaged in posting accounts, keeping books to some extent, and receiving deposits. All this was carried on together with his store work. This was the day of small things, but as the bank grew in importance the prominence of the young man in its affairs became more evident, and he presently became an official in its organization. In 1884 he became the assistant treasurer of the Savings Bank of Rockville and seven years later was made secretary of that institution; he has filled both these positions ever since, doing a large share of all the business of the bank. In 1870 was established the insurance business of L. Bissell & Son, who now have the largest local fire insurance business in Tolland county, including in their agencies such companies as the Aetna, Hartford, Phoenix, National, Connecticut, Royal of Liverpool, Pennsylvania, American, Home and Rockville Mutual. In the building up of this particular line of business Mr. Bissell has been very efficient. Since 1880 he has been secretary of the Rockville Mutual Fire Insurance Co. Mr. Bissell's connection with fire insurance and underwriting has been extensive and varied. At the present writing he is vice-president of the State Association of Local Fire Insurance Agents and he has served as a director in the Aetna Indemnity Company of Hartford. He is regarded as one of the able financiers of Rockville, and his judgment on questions of investment is regarded as conservative and valuable.

Mr. Bissell was married Oct. 5, 1875, to Miss Alice Bell Farmer, who was born in Ellington, Tolland Co., Conn., Feb. 22, 1852, only daughter of Cornelius and Emily Phelps (King) Farmer. Cornelius Farmer was born in Bolton, Tolland Co., Conn., June 28, 1818, and he and his sister Cornelia, now the widow of B. F. Hurlburt, of Hartford, were the youngest children of Aaron Farmer, who lived in Bolton, and died when Cornelius was a small boy; he was a soldier in the war of 1812. Emily Phelps King was born in South Windsor, Conn., Dec. 4, 1824, daughter of Roderick and Sally (Newberry) King, and granddaughter of Alexander King, who was a soldier in the war of the Revolution. Cornelius and Emily Phelps (King) Farmer celebrated their Golden Wedding, and white roses from the bush that had furnished decorations at their wedding, June 10, 1847, were used to decorate fifty years later. The bush had for many years put forth much later in the season, but that year it was in bloom in June. Mrs. Farmer died May 4, 1899, and was buried in Ellington. Mr. Farmer is living in Rockville, making his home with his daughter, Mrs. Bissell. To Mr. and Mrs. Farmer were born three children (1) Roderick Walton was for many years president of the Hartford Trust Co., and has his home in Hartford. (2) Leslie Phillips, who resides in South Orange, N. J., has from young manhood been in the railway business. (3) Alice Bell, Mrs. Bissell, was reared in Ellington, and gained her education at the Hartford Female Seminary, in its day a noted school.

To Mr. and Mrs. Bissell have been born two children: (1) Emily Arthur is a graduate of Lassel Seminary, at Auburndale, Mass. (2) Lebeus Farmer studied at the Rockville high school, graduated from Phillips Academy, Andover, in 1901, and is now attending Yale, class of 1904. In 1880 Mr. Bissell built his home on Prospect street, where he has resided to the present time.

Mr. Bissell is a Democrat, and has served as justice of the peace in Rockville. He was one of the early members of Rockville Lodge, No. 18, A. O. U. W. Mrs. Bissell was a charter member of Sabra Trumbull Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, as was also her mother, Mrs. Farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Bissell are attendants of the Union Congregational Church.

HON. JOSIAH PERRY. Among the thriving little manufacturing towns in which New England abounds it would be difficult to find one where more ideal conditions obtain than in Perryville, Mass. There the best of the old and the new systems seems to have been combined, with the result that the most cordial relations exist between employer and employes, and that prosperity reigns in the best sense—no extremes, but sufficient for each. At the head of this model community for over thirty years has been Josiah Perry, one of a family of mill men, and one of manufacturers in a section where many men of genius have developed the best products of fertile brains. Mr. Perry was born March 14, 1832, in what is now Perryville, son of Joseph Hartshorn Perry, and descends from an old New England family.

(I) Ezra Perry, of Sandwich, Mass., 1644, was a native of Devonshire, England, born probably about 1615. He married Feb. 12, 1651, Elizabeth Burgess, and died in Sandwich, April 18, 1690.

(II) Benjamin Perry, born Feb. 15, 1670, in Sandwich, married Dinah, daughter of William Swift, and had children as follows: Merebah, born June 11, 1695; Remember, March 14, 1697; Seth,

May 19, 1699; Benjamin; Susannah, Dec. 27, 1701; Abner, March 10, 1703; Josiah, Oct. 18, 1709; Nathaniel, July 2, 1713; and Eliakim, May 8, 1716. The father and most of the sons removed in 1734 to Stoughton, Mass., where many of the descendants have left honorable records.

(III) Abner Perry, son of Benjamin and Dinah (Swift) Perry, was born March 10, 1703, and married Joanna Gibbs. He was killed at the siege of Louisbourg, Cape Breton.

(IV) Josiah Perry, son of Abner, born about 1740, in Watertown, Mass., removed thence in early manhood to Foxboro, Mass., and about 1775 removed to the town of Dudley, now Perryville, Mass., where he was one of the first of that name. He was a landowner there, buying land and settling there in 1773. He was twice married, one of his wives being Mary Forrest, daughter of John and Johanna Forest. He was the father of eleven children, viz.: Abner, born Nov. 24, 1764; Josiah, Sept. 5, 1765; Eliphaz, Oct. 16, 1767 (grandfather of Franklin Perry, of Putnam); Mary, Jan. 7, 1770; Rowland, March 9, 1772; Richard, June 27, 1774; Hannah, baptized Nov. 3, 1775; Phoebe, born Jan. 14, 1779; Roxanna, Sept. 23, 1781; Zelpha, Oct. 12, 1785; Joseph Hartshorn, Sept. 12, 1789 (father of Hon. Josiah Perry).

(V) Joseph H. Perry, the founder of the manufacturing interests in Perryville, Dudley, Mass., was born Sept. 12, 1789, in Thompson, Conn., on the farm of his father, which lay partly in Thompson and partly in Dudley. He was the youngest son of Josiah Perry. Joseph H. remained in Dudley, engaged in farm labor, till his twenty-seventh year. At that time, having decided to change his occupation, he went to Uxbridge, Mass., and invested a part of his savings in the stock of the Rivulet Manufacturing Co. He continued to work in the mill until the closing up of its operations, losing his investment but gaining a knowledge of the details of the woolen manufacture. While at Uxbridge, on Feb. 17, 1820, Mr. Perry married Mary, daughter of Samuel Taft, for many years a prominent resident of the town. Seven children were born to them, two of whom are now living, one, Samuel, dying in infancy. The eldest son, George W., died of typhoid fever at Warrenton, Va., in 1862, while in the service of the Union army. Charles H. was thrown from a sleigh and fatally hurt. Experience Taft married William Morris. Mary Nichols married Rufus P. Eddy, and is the only surviving daughter. Harriet married P. W. Newell.

On the closing of the Rivulet mill Mr. Perry went to Woonsocket, R. I., where he was employed for about one year at the mills there. In the fall of 1825 he returned to his native place, and, in partnership with Danforth Upham, Abner Wyman and Richard Perry, purchased from his older brother, Eliphaz (who then owned the original home farm), a few acres of land, including water privilege.

Josiah Perry

He then built a dam and erected a mill and commenced the manufacture of satinets under the name of Joseph H. Perry & Co. In a few years the other partners had sold their interest to him and Charles Carpenter, he owning two-thirds and Mr. Carpenter one-third. There was at the outset only one set of machinery; it was eventually increased to four sets. The mill was burned in 1857, and rebuilt the same year. Joseph H. Perry died Sept. 5, 1863, lacking only seven days of being seventy-four years of age, but had maintained remarkably his physical and mental vigor, continuing his active interest in and personal management of the business, being at the mill on the day of his death, which was caused by an attack of apoplexy. He was a man of much business ability, of sound judgment, deliberate and careful in the consideration of his plans and persistent in carrying them out. Of few words, when they were spoken it was well understood that he meant what he said. He took a kindly interest in his employes and in the people of his vicinity, being known familiarly among them as Uncle Hartshorn, and his death was deeply mourned by them and by the business community in which he had been so long and favorably known. His wife survived him twenty-one years, reaching the advanced age of ninety-one. Upon his death his two sons, Charles H. and Josiah, bought out the other heirs and the junior partner, Charles Carpenter, continuing the business under the name of Joseph H. Perry's Sons.

During this period young Josiah worked in the mill out of school hours, and in 1852 took charge of the weave room, remaining in that position until 1858. The citation of a few facts and figures will give an adequate idea of the conditions of the day. Mr. Perry's wages as overseer of weaving were $1.25 per day, which amount was later advanced to $1.50. Board was $1.50 per week for men and $1.25 for women. The hours of labor were long. In summer work was begun at 5 A. M. At six o'clock they stopped to take a half hour for breakfast, at 12 M. to take a half-hour allowed for dinner and work then continued until 7 P. M., making thirteen hours per day. Work ceased on Saturday at 5 P. M. In winter the hands took breakfast before starting to work, which began at 6.30 A. M., and, with the exception of a half-hour for dinner, continued until 7:30 P. M.; on Saturday the mill stopped at 4 P. M. While the wages were low and the hours long, living expenses were also low, and, as Mr. Perry says, nothing could be done in those days except work and save money. The method of manufacturing at that time affords in other respects a striking contrast to that of to-day. The method of "trueing up" the card cylinders and rollers will illustrate the difference. A straight edge was adjusted lengthwise on each side of the cylinder to be turned, and upon these edges a long plane, called a joiner, was placed. The cylinder was revolved and the plane vibrated by hand from one end of the roll or cylinder to the other, the position of the straight edge regulating the cut. In the weave room each loom was lighted with two petticoat lamps, one at each end of the loom; in the card room, owing to the danger from an open flame, lanterns were used. Rosin gas was introduced in 1857. The Civil war, which began in 1861, raised the price of rosin from $1.50 to $25 per barrel, necessitating the use of a refuse from coal tar for making gas until after the close of the war, when rosin was again used. To-day the mills are lighted by electricity.

In 1858 Mr. Perry was placed in charge of the mill as superintendent. In 1862 a percentage of the profits was paid to him and to his brother Charles H., as a part of their salaries. In 1863 Joseph H. Perry, the father, died, and the two brothers, Josiah and Charles H., bought the interests of the other three heirs, that of their mother, and also that of Charles Carpenter. The new firm, styled Joseph H. Perry's Sons, took possession about the 1st of January, 1864, one year before the close of the war. They made satinets for about a year, until cotton became so expensive that a change was made, in 1865, to all wool goods. At that time a cotton warp with 1,600 ends of single No. 16 yarn cost $.26 yard, or over $2 per pound. The change of product necessitated extensive changes in the weaving and finishing machinery, and the old cam looms were thrown out. Crompton narrow looms taking their place. In 1869 Charles H. Perry was thrown from a sleigh and killed. Josiah purchased the interests of his heirs, and has been sole proprietor since that time. In 1872 he began the manufacture of a double and twist fabric in imitation of worsted, and the mill gained a high reputation on those goods, running on them many years. Mr. Perry was among the first to use silk and worsted in striped goods; this was in about 1872. In 1882 he began substituting Knowles broad looms for the narrow looms and by 1885 all of the three-quarter looms had disappeared. With the exception of a few sets of cards all of the machinery in the mill in 1857 has been thrown out to make room for improved equipment, and to-day the plant is compact and well appointed in all respects.

Though Mr. Perry is still at the head of the business, and takes an active part in its management, he has of late years wisely devoted more time to leisure and recreation, the active management of the details of manufacturing devolving upon the shoulders of his son-in-law, Eben G. Parsons, who superintends the mill.

As a result of judicious management Perryville is a superior type of the New England factory village. The ownership of the property has continued for 129 years; the Perrys have operated the mills there without interruption since they were built. The friendly relations of those early days, when the mill owner and employe worked side by side, have been retained up to the present time, a circumstance due in large measure to the high character of the present proprietor. Mr. Perry has been personally identified with both the old and the new factory systems, and it is his wisdom and strict sense of justice which make the friendly feelings and mutual sympathy between mill owner and mill hand a living force there today. At the same time, while thus much of the old has been retained, no mill can boast of more progressive, up-to-date methods of manufacturing cloth to clothe the million. There is none of the objectionable air of paternalism about the place, so often noticed when a whole village is the property of one man, and Perryville may well be studied with profit as an example of what progress and conservatism may do hand in hand. The credit of this is due to the common sense shrewdness and democratic character of Josiah Perry. He is a plain, unassuming, companionable man, as well as successful manufacturer. He has been chosen to represent his district in the State Legislature, and in 1900 was Presidential elector, casting his vote for the late President McKinley. He is a representative New England character, a type of the farsighted successful manufacturer who favors progress in every direction, and yet keeps a hold upon the traditions of his ancestry and a reverence for the customs of his early days, with the Puritan conscience that puts a guiding check on selfish ambition and gives free rein to good impulses and native charity.

Mr. Perry was married, in 1862, to Miss Martha J. Elliott, and they have had three children, Mary Josephine (who is now Mrs. Eben G. Parsons), Fanny Elliott (deceased) and Anna Larned.

ISAAC MERRITT AGARD, of Rockville, Conn. Tolland county has been the home of the Agard family for two hundred years, and in the town of Stafford, where some of the family have dwelt and been of that sturdy New England type hood and womanhood that has given character to this section, there is yet living the aged Nathan Agard, father of Isaac Merritt Agard, who for more than a dozen years has been the efficient principal of the Rockville high school.

The first settler of the Agard family of whom we find any record was (I) John Agard or Egard, whose widow Esther in 1686 married Samuel Storrs, the progenitor of that family in America. Samuel Storrs was baptized in Suttomcum-Lound, Nottinghamshire, England, in 1640 and was the son of Thomas Storrs of that place. He came to Barnstable, Mass., in 1662, and in 1666 married Mary, daughter of Thomas Huckins, of Barnstable. She died in 1682, and Mr. Storrs married for his second wife the widow of John Agard. The three children by the second marriage were born at Barnstable. In about 1698 Mr. Storrs moved to Mansfield, Conn., and was one of the proprietors of the town. In "A Report of the Record Commissioners Containing Boston Births, Baptisms, Marriages and Deaths 1630-1699" is the following entry under 1683. "John of John and Esther Agard, born July 16," and as these names are the same as those of the widow whom Samuel Storrs married two and one-half years later and of her son, and as they nowhere else occur in any record we have seen, it seems probable that the Mrs. Esther Agard was afterward the "Widow" Agard who became the second wife of Samuel Storrs.

(II) John Agard, son of the Widow Agard, came with his mother and step-father to Mansfield, Conn., about 1698. He married June 8, 1709, and his wife, Mehitable, bore him a family of seven children, James, John, Joshua, Benjamin, Mehitable, Hezekiah and Judah. The fourth son, (III) Benjamin, who was born July 31, 1716, in Mansfield, married Elizabeth Hall, and they had the following children: Benjamin, born Oct. 20, 1750; Nathan, April 29, 1754; Caleb and Joshua (twins), in December, 1755, of whom Joshua was a resident many years of Willington, Conn., and deacon of the Baptist Church; John, who was born in August, 1760, and died in infancy; John, April 11, 1762; Mehitable, June 8, 1770. Benjamin, the eldest of these children, was born in Mansfield but settled in Stafford prior to February, 1778. There he became the father of a large family and died while still in his prime. His first wife was Lydia Dawn, who bore one child that died in infancy. His second wife was Sarah Hiscock, daughter of Nathan Hiscock, who had three sons and four daughters,—Nathan, David, Stephen, Hannah, Lydia, Molly, Sarah,—was a farmer and one of the pioneers of Stafford, and lived to the age of one hundred years.

The children of (IV) Benjamin and Sarah (Hiscock) Agard were: Nathan, born Feb. 18, 1778; Lydia, who married Eleazer Abbey and lived in Middlebury, Vt.; Chloe, who married Sylvanus Conant and lived in Mansfield; Sally, who married Jesse Turner and lived in Mansfield; Polly (twin sister of Sally) who married John Hall and lived in Stafford; Benjamin, who was the father of a large family and lived in Stafford; Nancy, who married Rufus Davidson, of Wales, Mass.; Hannah, who married Jasper Needham, also of Wales. Nathan, the eldest of these children, married Hannah, daughter of Ephraim and Hannah Hall, April 25, 1811, who was born Jan. 21, 1783, and died July 24, 1859. He spent his entire life in Stafford and died Oct. 3, 1868, aged nearly ninety-one years. By trade he was an iron forger and at one time worked at the forge in the old iron works at what is now Staffordville, but spent much of his life on his farm. He was a very religious man, but not a church member. His political affiliations were at first with the Whig party, but later he became a Free Soil Abolitionist and, when the Republican party came into existence, became one of its staunch supporters. Physically he was a strong, well-built man, and as a citizen was much respected.

(V) Nathan and Hannah (Hall) Agard had five children: Isaac, born Feb. 15, 1812, who married Sarah A. Fairbank, of Union, Conn., went West and settled in Litchfield, Mich., where he died Oct. 26, 1848, and where his son, Lewis B. Agard, is one of the prominent men; Ransal Hall, born Jan. 9, 1815, who married Maria Sumner, and was the father of William A. and Edwin S. Agard, of Tolland, Conn.; Nathan, born Sept. 16, 1817; Mason, born March 22, 1821, who married Elizabeth H. L. Chapman, of Tolland, and is living in South Manchester, Conn.; Hannah, who was born May 2, 1823, and died Sept. 25, 1848, unmarried.

(VI) Nathan, the third son of Nathan and Hannah (Hall) Agard, received his early education in the public schools of his native town, and later attended Wilbraham Academy. For many years he taught in the public schools of Connecticut and Massachusetts during the winter season, engaging in other work during the summer. As a teacher he had a very successful career, but later he lived on the farm in Stafford, where he was born. When a young man he became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, but in the days of anti-slavery agitation joined the Wesleyan Methodist Church, of which he was a very active member. He was early a Free Soil Abolitionist, then a Republican, but of recent years his convictions regarding the liquor question have made him a Prohibitionist. He has always taken great interest in temperance work. He was one of the forty-five members of the "Ninth District Independent Temperance Society," organized in Stafford in 1836, and in 1838 was secretary of that organization. Oct. 30, 1850, he married Chastina Jane Lamson, born in Lunenburg, Vt., Dec. 28, 1827, and they have lived on the old homestead in Stafford over fifty years and are much respected. Her father, Reuben Lamson, was born June 26, 1797, in Lunenburg, Vt., and her mother, Abigail (Goodall) Lamson, Oct. 18, 1805, in Alton, N. H. The parents of Reuben Lamson were Reuben and Susanna (Murry) Lamson, the former born Nov. 10, 1755, in Ipswich, Mass., and the latter, May 5, 1760, in Rye, N. H. Chastina Jane was the third child in a family of ten children. One of her six brothers, Ansel, was graduated at Harvard College and became a teacher; another, Horace Samuel, is a physician in Providence, R. I.; a sister, Mary Velina, married James C. Jacobs, a physician, resides with her husband in Providence, and of their two sons, Walter Ballou and Horace E. Jacobs, the former is a professor in Brown University, and the latter a teacher in the Classical high school of that city.

Nathan and Chastina Jane (Lamson) Agard have four children: Sarah Jane, born March 18, 1853, who is a graduate of Mount Holyoke College, from which college she has also received the M. A. degree, and who is a teacher of large experience; Isaac Merritt, born Dec. 3, 1854; Mary Chastina, born April 6, 1859, who is also a teacher, having graduated at Monson Academy and studied at Smith College; Leroy Nathan, born Dec. 2, 1861, residing in Stafford, who is a builder by trade, but frequently teaches in the public schools.

(VII) Isaac Merritt Agard was reared on the old homestead where he was born. On this rough New England farm he learned habits of thrift and industry, and had the advantage of obtaining much of his early education from his father. He also attended the public school in the Hall District and the village school at Staffordville, and subsequently entered Monson Academy and was there prepared for college. He was graduated with honors at Amherst College in 1879 and received the M. A. degree from the same college in 1884. During the years 1886-1888 he took through correspondence two courses of pedagogy in the Chautauqua College of Liberal Arts under the direction of Dr. J. W. Dickinson, who was then secretary of the Massachusetts board of education, and he is now connected with the University of Wooster as a non-resident student and a candidate for the Ph. D. degree. Mr. Agard began his career as a teacher in the winter of 1874-1875, while still preparing for college, teaching an ungraded school at South Manchester, Conn. In the winter of 1879-1880 he taught the higher department of the school at Gilbertville, Mass.; in 1880-1881 he taught the higher department of the graded school at West Stockbridge, Mass.; from 1881 to 1886 he was first assistant in the Northampton (Mass.) high school, and in the last winter of this period he also had charge of the evening school in that city. In November and December, 1886, he was in temporary charge of a private school for boys at Pittsfield, Mass., and from January, 1887, to the summer of 1888, was principal of the Bath-on-the-Hudson, (N. Y.) Union Free School. Since September, 1888, he has been the efficient principal of the Rockville high school, his position also including the supervision of the east district graded school of the town of Vernon. Thoroughly equipped for his work and possessed of an energy and ambition characteristic of his New England ancestry, he has steadily kept pace with the advance in his profession and has attained high rank in his calling. His tact and scholarly attainments, together with his high character, have made him not only a successful teacher, but also a useful man in social and civil life. He is an earnest member of the Union Congregational Church of Christ at Rockville, of which he is a junior deacon, and for several years was superintendent of the Sunday-school of that church. He has also served as president of the Rockville Auxiliary Bible Society. In politics he was early an enthusiastic Republican, but later gave his support to the Prohibition party movement. While not a politician, he has decided convictions regarding matters of public policy, and prefers to take an independent position rather than be closely associated with any party. In 1897 and again in 1898 he was elected vice-president of the Connecticut Association of Classical and High School Teachers, and in 1899 and again in 1900 was elected president of the same association. While in college he wrote the Ivy Ode for his class, and from boyhood has been an occasional contributor to the local press.

On Aug. 26, 1881, Mr. Agard was married at Staffordville to Ida Gerana, daughter of James Munroe and Mary Eliza (Needham) Chaffee, of Staffordville, and to this union have been born three children: Clarence Merritt, born March 26, 1883; Irving Howard, born Jan. 8, 1888; and Walter Raymond, born Jan. 16, 1894.

JUDGE GEORGE FLINT. Most of the early New England families are of pure English descent, and especially those who settled in and about Boston and Salem. We have, however, in the Flint family, representatives from the Welsh strain of Anglo-Saxon blood. The gentleman whose name forms the caption for this article is a worthy representative of the family, living in the town of Thompson, Windham county, where he has been for years the efficient probate judge of the town, and one of its leading agriculturists. He is at the present time living in the enjoyment of a well-earned rest, having the confidence and esteem of the friends whom he has made by a life of unexampled probity and uprightness.

George Flint was born in Worcester county, Mass., Oct. 17, 1832. As stated, he is able to trace his lineage in direct line from one of the early settlers of Salem, Thomas Flint, who, well authenticated tradition says, came from Wales to America in the early part of the seventeenth century. He is of record in the town of Salem in 1650, but is believed to have arrived in America much earlier, as certain evidences point with much force to the possibility of his mother having been here as early as 1642. It is certainly true that Thomas Flint was among the first settlers of Salem village, that part now known as South Danvers. The Christian name of his wife is known to have been Ann. His death occurred on April 15, 1663. His children are of record as follows: (1) Thomas. (2) Elizabeth was born April 30, 1650. (3) George, born Jan. 6, 1652, settled in Reading, Mass., and married (first) Elizabeth, daughter of Nathaniel and Elizabeth Hutchinson; she was born Aug. 11, 1662, and died March 6, 1697. His second wife, whom he married March 2, 1699, was Mrs. Susannah Gardner, who died in March, 1720. George Flint died June 23, 1720. He was the father of ten children, all by the first marriage; and one of his sons, Nathaniel, born Jan. 4, 1694, married Dec. 20, 1720, Mary Stearns, of Lynn, Mass., and in 1722 moved to Tolland, Conn.; he was the father of ten children. (4) John, born Oct. 3, 1655, lived in Salem Village, where he died in the year 1730; his wife's name was Elizabeth. Two of his sons, John and Joshua, settled in Windham, Conn., about the year 1716. John, the first of these, was born Feb. 8, 1681, and married for his first wife, May 5, 1709, Christian Reed, who died Sept. 27, 1721. He then married, March 14, 1722, Lydia, daughter of Jonathan and Susannah Gennings (or Jennings), whose birth occurred in 1695. To the first marriage were born Mary, Samuel, John and Rufus; the second wife became the mother of Joseph, Jonathan, Nathaniel, Sibyl, Gideon, Mary, Abigail and Lydia. Joshua, the other brother mentioned above, settled in Windham county. He was born Oct. 28, 1689, married in October, 1715, Deborah Ingalls, of Andover, and had twelve children. (5) Anna, born Dec. 25, 1657, died in April, 1663. (6) Joseph, born in 1662, was married Aug. 6, 1685, to Abigail Howard. They passed their lives in Salem village, and were the parents of eleven children, of whom Nathaniel, born Dec. 11, 1688, settled in Windham, Conn., about 1716. On Feb. 17, 1715, he (first) married Sarah Cutler, of Salem, who died Dec. 20, 1726. He then married on May 22, 1727, Mary Davis, who died Feb. 22, 1728. His third wife was May Abbe. The four children of Nathaniel, all born to the first marriage, were: Sarah, Nathaniel, Abigail and Eunice.

There is record of the children of a John Flint and his wife Martha (Davis), baptized in the old Thompson Church, as follows: Davis, July 29, 1739; John, July 26, 1741; Aaron, April 8, 1744; Martha, Sept. 21, 1746; Davis (2), March 29, 1749; John (2), Aug. 9, 1752; Aaron (2), Sept. 29, 1754; and Joseph, June 23, 1756.

John Flint, son of John, was the grandfather of Judge George Flint. He grew to manhood and became a large landowner and farmer in Thompson Center, where he spent his long and useful life. He participated in the War of the Revolution as a privateer on the high seas, a branch of the service which according to the best historians, did equally as effective work in securing independence as the land forces. John Flint died in Thompson, and was buried in the cemetery at that place. He married Rhoda Keith, whose remains also lie in the Thompson cemetery, and they became the parents of seven children, namely: Betsy, born May 6, 1786, married Benjamin Wilson, and died at Douglass, Mass., in 1809; Polly, born March 27, 1788, married Andrew Sherman, and died in 1814; John, born March 19, 1791, participated in the war of 1812, and died in 1832; Rhoda was born June 29, 1793; Lydia, born Jan. 24, 1796, married Abel Bump; Jessie K. was born Sept. 21, 1798; Noadiah was born March 21, 1801.

Noadiah Flint was the honored father of Judge George Flint. He was reared amid the environments of a refined Christian home and received a good district-school education. He grew up on the homestead farm, and on attaining his majority went to Killingly, where he entered the mills at that place, working principally in the carding department, until ill health compelled him to relinquish that kind of work. He then went to Worcester county, Mass., locating at North Oxford, and spent a year in a mill. In 1833 he returned to Thompson and spent five years in the mills of this locality, in 1838 buying the farm on which he spent the balance of his life. He died in 1882, and the remains of himself and wife repose in Putnam Heights cemetery. Mr. Flint was a man of quiet habits and of singularly correct life, his influence being given to the betterment of society along all proper lines. His political affiliations early in life were those of a Whig, and he naturally drifted into the Republican party upon its organization, continuing to support it by his vote to the date of his death. In religious connection he held membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church, as did also his wife. He was not a man to seek public office, but during his life time cheerfully administered some of the unpaid offices of trust in the town of Thompson.

Mr. Flint was married in Killingly, Conn., March 22, 1829, to Sarah S. Carey, a native of Johnston, R. I., and daughter of Chad. Carey, a descendant of John Carey, who settled in Johnston in the year 1635. To the marriage of Noadiah and Sarah S. Flint were born three children, the eldest dying in infancy, unnamed; George was the second; and William H. is now living at Thompson. The latter became the father of Mrs. George D. Ross, Mary and Mrs. S. Alice Clements. The mother of this family survived her husband seven years, dying at the ripe age of eighty-three years, in 1889. She was a woman of blessed memory, strong in her conjugal relations, one who made the home the brightest spot on earth for her family.

Judge George Flint passed the days of his youth in aiding in the labors of the farm and acquiring a fairly good elementary education in the district schools of Thompson, where the family had moved when he was less than one year old. He left school at an early age, and thus cannot be said to be an educated man in the sense of having had elaborate scholastic training, but being possessed of a keen and observant mind, and early acquiring a healthy thirst for knowledge, he in time became educated in the very best sense of the word, and is looked upon as being one of the best read men in the town of Thompson. Judge Flint has occupied himself largely in agricultural pursuits, remaining on the old homestead and tenderly caring for his parents until they passed away. His own health finally breaking down owing to the rigor of farm labor, he gave up the pursuit of agriculture in 1901, sold his farm, and has since then been enjoying a retired and quiet life. His public life was distinguished by close application to the duties of his office and a splendid fidelity to the trust imposed in him. His first connection with the office of probate judge of Thompson was in 1873, and he has been continuously administering the office since that time, a period of some thirty years, possibly eclipsing, in length of service, any former incumbent. During this long time he has probated many large estates, in all of which he has given general satisfaction. Judge Flint has also filled the office of selectman for a single term, and for thirty years was a member of the board of relief, during twenty-seven years directing the sittings of the board as chairman. It is unnecessary to say that the honest and upright life which Judge Flint has passed in Thompson has attracted to him a very large circle of staunch friends. In political faith he supports the policies promulgated by the Republican party, to which he has always given the most sturdy support. In his whole career of thirty years in public life the Judge has never asked for a single vote. The impending retirement of Judge Flint from the office of probate judge on account of having reached the age limit is regarded with genuine regret throughout the community, his administration of that office having been of such a high character. The Judge's kind and genial manner has endeared him to all who have come in contact with him.

In 1887 Judge Flint was married, in Thompson, to Gertrude I. Dowling, who was a daughter of William Dowling, and who died in 1889, leaving one child, George Lincoln, who is a student in attendance at Putnam high school. Mrs. Flint was a woman who combined many noble qualities, and was greatly devoted to her husband and son, who, in return, idolized her. Since her death the Judge has lived true to her memory, his home being presided over by Mrs. Lottie Card, sister of his wife.

CHARLES PRENTICE (deceased), of Putnam, Windham county, was descended from a distinguished colonial family. The name is an English one, and appeared originally in America in the form here used. Later branches adopted the spellings Prentiss and Prentis.

The first American representatives of this name were Valentine and Alice Prentice and their son John, all of whom came to America in 1631, in company with Eliot, the "Apostle," and settled at Roxbury, Mass. A second child of Mr. and Mrs. Prentice died during the voyage. Charles Prentice traced his descent in a direct line to (I) Capt. Thomas Prentice, who, it is supposed, was related to Valentine of Roxbury, Robert of Roxbury, and Henry of Cambridge. Capt. Thomas Prentice, born in England in 1621, married there in 1643, and had eight children. May 23, 1653, he was made a freeman in Cambridge, Mass. After a while he moved to Newtown and took up his residence in the eastern part of the town, where the Boston water works tunnel now passes. He came into possession of large tracts of land in various parts of New England: Three hundred acres in the Pequod country were deeded to him by Thomas Day in 1661, the order being recorded to Lieut. Thomas Prentice in the General Court Records of Massachusetts; in 1675 another three hundred acres was granted to him by the General Assembly of Connecticut. He spent the greater part of his mature life in Newtown, but in 1709 moved to Stonington, Conn., where he owned much property. He lived to the advanced age of eighty-nine and died in Newtown, on Sunday, July 6, 1710, as the result of a fall from his horse, while returning from church. His wife, Grace, died in Newtown Oct. 9, 1692. Mr. Prentice left no will, but he had settled his own estate in 1705 by gift deeds to his heirs. To his grandson, Thomas Prentice, he gave a house and land in Newtown; to Samuel Prentice, another grandson, who is mentioned later, his mansion house and a hundred acres of land in the southern part of Newtown.

As a military man Mr. Prentice was exceedingly prominent. In 1656, when about thirty-five years old, he was chosen lieutenant of a troop of horse, and in 1662, Captain. By their sudden attacks and impetuous charges he and his troop became a terror to the Indians in his vicinity. One daring incident recorded is of their rescue from the dark-hued enemy, in 1675, of Vincent Druce, a badly wounded trooper. So kindly was the feeling that existed between this trooper and his captain that Mr. Druce, shortly before his death, which occurred Nov. 29, 1677, called his superior officer to witness his will. June 24, 1675, Mr. Prentice was made a captain in King Philip's war, in which he rendered effective service, especially in the Narragansett fight. His acquaintance with the Indian character made him of special service to the community in dealing with the enemy. He was one of the commissioners, appointed in 1675, to put to service captive Indian children, and he became the special friend and councilor of converted Indians, who, in 1691, petitioned the General Court to appoint him their overseer and magistrate. Additional proofs of his popularity are shown by the facts that in 1672 and 1674 he represented Newtown in the General Court; that in 1675, after the burning of Lancaster, Mass., by King Philip and the Indians, he was appointed commissioner for the rebuilding of that place; and that, in 1689, he and his troops were sent to Rhode Island to arrest Sir Edmund Andros.

(II) Thomas Prentice, Jr., second son of Capt. Thomas, born Jan. 22, 1649, became a member of his father's troop of horse. During his lifetime he accumulated considerable property, and, upon his death, left to his heirs an estate valued at three hundred and fifty-four pounds and five shillings. March 20, 1675, he married Sarah Stanton, who was born in 1655, daughter of Capt. Thomas Stanton, the well-known Indian interpreter. Surviving her husband, who died April 19, 1685, in his thirty-seventh year, she later married Capt. William Denison. She died in 1713 at the age of fifty-nine. Mr. and Mrs. Prentice had four children.

(III) Samuel Prentice, Sr., the third son, born about 1680, married Esther Hammond, daughter of Nathaniel Hammond, of Newtown, Mass. Mr. and Mrs. Prentice had ten children. Among their grandchildren was Judge Samuel Prentice, of Montpelier, Vt. Falling heir to a part of the vast estate in Stonington owned by Capt. Thomas, Samuel, Sr., made his home in that place. The old house in which he lived, a substantial two-story building, 28 feet by 42 feet, is still standing, part of it being over one hundred and fifty years old. Mr. Prentice lived to the age of forty-eight and died April 24, 1728.

(IV) Joseph Prentice, born in Newtown, Mass., Jan. 26, 1704, married, Nov. 10, 1725, Mary Wheeler, and they had nine children. (V) Elisha Prentice, fourth son of Joseph, born in Newton, Jan. 1, 1737, married, and had six children. His wife's given name was Lydia. (VI) Capt. Elisha Prentice (2) third son of Elisha, and grandfather of Charles, was born Aug. 30, 1764, and probably resided at Griswold, Conn., for some time, where he was a Revolutionary pensioner. He was married to Deborah Weeden, of Preston, Conn., and they had ten children: Nancy, Abby, Daniel, Elisha, Debby, Sally, Charles, Frederick, Mary, and John Perdy. Capt. Prentice died in 1840 in his seventy-fifth year.

(VII) John Perdy Prentice, born Jan. 31, 1818, in Griswold, Conn., moved about 1838 to Pomfret, where he engaged in farming. March 26, 1835, he married Rebecca Lester, of Griswold, who was born May 5, 1806. She died in Pomfret, Feb. 17, 1845, and Nov. 27, 1845, Mr. Prentice married Caroline A. Davison, of Brooklyn, Conn. By the first marriage there were five children: George Lester, born Feb. 3, 1836; Tirzah, born Nov. 12, 1837, married to Uriah Carpenter, who died in Minnesota, May 6, 1871; James Lester, born Aug. 22, 1839, now a truck gardener in Danielson, Conn., who married Lucy Cushing, and had two children, Stephen and Lizzie; Charles, mentioned below; Rebecca L., born Sept. 13, 1843, who died July 2, 1844. By the second marriage there were two children, twins, Edward N. and Edwin B., who were born Aug. 28, 1846; the first went West and died there, Jan. 11, 1874; the second married, Oct. 19, 1871, Mary A. Taylor. He died in Webster, Mass., Feb. 1, 1875.

Mr. Prentice owned one of the finest farms in Pomfret and was eminently successful as an agriculturist. He died in Pomfret, July 2, 1863, after a short illness caused by breaking his spine in being thrown from a wagon. A member of the Congregational Church, Mr. Prentice was a strongly religious man and greatly opposed to war. He considered the Rebellion a great blot on our history. In politics, however, he was a staunch Republican.

(VIII) Charles Prentice, for many years a prominent business man of Putnam, through kindness and square dealing won the lasting esteem of a large body of citizens. He was born in Brooklyn, Aug. 27, 1841, but when about a year old, he was taken by his parents to Pomfret, and passed his boyhood and youth in that place. There he attended school till the age of seventeen, and later assisted his father on the farm. His first years of active busi-less life were periods of valuable experience. He started in a thread factory at Mansfield, where he turned spools for several months; then, with the object of learning a trade, hired out as clerk in a jewelry store at Providence, R. I. Deciding, however, after a short experience there, that he preferred other business, he soon went to Springfield, and secured a position in the armory. There he remained until the death of his father, when he was called home to take charge of the farm. March 13, 1864, he married Ann Maria Williams, daughter of Orrin and Maria (Carpenter) Williams, farming people of Putnam. In early life Mr. Williams worked as overseer in cotton mills. Mr. and Mrs. Prentice had one child, Minnie Rebecca, who was born in Putnam, July 29, 1867. She married, July 29, 1891, William David Goodwin, of Woodstock, and they settled at Pittsfield, Mass., where he is assistant principal of the high school. They have three children: Arthur Prentice, born Aug. 14, 1892; Celia Williams, Feb. 18, 1894; and Clarence Babcock, Sept. 7, 1896.

Mr. Prentice, after a year on the home farm, went to Putnam and hired a sawmill, which he managed for several years. Then, turning his attention to stonemasonry, he became a contractor for the construction of cellars and large building foundations, and engaged in this line very successfully for a number of years. During this time, seeing the city's need of an ice cart and street sprinkler, he started both these conveyances and carried on a profitable business with them till 1890, when he closed out. Edward Fly and his brother George were at times partners with him. Strict attention to business and wise financial management finally enabled Mr. Prentice to purchase the Phosphate Manufacturing Business of Bosworth Bros. But as this industry disagreed with his health he sold out at the end of the year and invested in woodlands, which he turned to account by removing the timber and selling it, at good profits. While thus engaged he started the first wood yard in the city. In 1893, however, he discontinued this business, erected a mill on Bullock street, and, in partnership with John A. Dady, under the firm name of "Dady and Prentice," began the manufacture of silk goods. This he continued until 1895, when, on account of failing health, he sold his interest to his partner and practically retired. For eight years Mr. Prentice's constitution had been breaking down and he died in Putnam, July 17, 1897. He is buried in the Carpenter family cemetery of that place.

Personally Mr. Prentice was an active, energetic man, always pleasant both at home and abroad; and his business dealings were characterized by the strictest integrity. Religiously inclined, he belonged to the Baptist Church, and acted on the church committee and as teacher in the Sunday-school for many years. His wife is still a member of the church and of the Ladies' and the Missionary Societies. Fraternally Mr. Prentice belonged to the A. O. U.

W. of Putnam. Though disinclined to office seeking, through the merited esteem of his Republican fellow citizens, he was elected to the offices of selectman and justice of the peace, filling these places very acceptably. He also served on the grand jury. What he attained in life was largely due to his energetic character and kindly consideration of others.

Mrs. Ann M. (Williams) Prentice is a descendant of Roger Williams. She is a daughter of Orrin Williams, son of Ebenezer. Ebenezer Williams, son of Abner, according to the town records of East Greenwich, R. I., was married, Oct. 31, 1793, to Lydia, daughter of John Spencer. In Austin's "Genealogical Dictionary of Rhode Island" are given five generations of the descendants of Roger Williams, and of these there appears one Abner, in the fifth generation. The date of his birth is not given, but that of a child next older is, and is Aug. 16, 1759. This Abner Williams was a descendant in the fifth generation from Roger Williams of Plymouth and Salem, Mass., and Providence, R. I., his lineage being through Joseph, and Lydia (Olney) Williams, of Providence; James and Elizabeth (Blackman) Williams, of Cranston; and Nathaniel and Anne (Hawkins) Williams, of Cranston. Abner was a son of Nathaniel, and this is in keeping with the family tradition that Ebenezer was in the sixth generation from Roger Williams.

Roger Williams was born in England in 1599, and was graduated from Pembroke College, Cambridge, in 1627, receiving the degree of B. A. He came to Boston in the ship "Lion" in 1631, and in that year was settled as minister at Salem, and in the summer was assistant to the pastor, Ralph Smith, at Plymouth. Later he was pastor of the church at Salem. He was banished from the colony in 1635 and in 1636 settled in Providence, R. I. His wife's given name was Mary. Mr. Williams died in 1683.

TOURTELLOTTE. The Tourtellottes of the towns of Thompson and Putnam, Conn., are descended from the Rhode Island family of that name. Abraham Tourtellot, a mariner of Bordeaux, France, arrived in 1687 at Boston in the ship "Friendship," from London. His brother Benjamin, who accompanied him, died on the voyage. Abraham Tourtellot married Mary (or Marie) Bernon, daughter of Gabriel and Esther (LeRoy) Bernon, and was of Roxbury, Mass., and in 1697 at Newport, R. I., with his father-in-law. His children were: (1) Gabriel, of Newport, born Sept. 24, 1694, was lost at sea with his father while on a voyage from that point on a vessel of which he was master. (2) Esther, born June 12, 1696, married, Jan. 19, 1716, Israel Harding. (3) Abraham, of Newport and Gloucester, married (first) Lydia Ballard, born March 29, 1700, and (second) June 29, 1743, Mrs. Hannah Corps, and (third) Mrs. Welthian Williams. Abraham Tourtellot (2) was a joiner by trade. He became a freeman of Providence in 1722 and in the same year purchased land in that town. He was deputy to the Colonial General Court in 1747. His death occurred Nov. 23, 1762. His children, according to the town records, were: Mary, born March 20, 1721; Lydia, June 24, 1723; Esther; Abraham, Feb. 27, 1725; Jonathan, Sept. 15, 1728; Benjamin, Nov. 30, 1730; Sarah; Stephen; William; Jesse; Daniel; and Anne, the five last named being born to the second marriage. There were no children of the third union. The widow of the first Abraham Tourtellot resided in Gloucester with her son Abraham until the close of her life.

It is set forth in "The Huguenots in France and America" (1843) that Gabriel Bernon was a Protestant merchant of an ancient and honorable family of Rochelle, where he was born April 6, 1644, a son of Andre Bernon and his wife, Susanne Guillomard. His zeal in the Protestant cause had rendered him obnoxious to the authorities for some time previous to the revocation of the edict of Nantes, and he was imprisoned for two years. He left his native city and took refuge in England. He came to America soon after 1687, and to Providence, R. I., in 1698, and then removed into the Narragansett country, where the ruins of his home are yet traceable. Previous to his first arrival in Providence he purchased a part of the property in a plantation at Oxford, Mass., where may still be seen remains of a fort constructed by him for defense against the Indians. To this Oxford settlement, the creek which passes through Thompson, Conn., and discharges itself into the Quinebaug, called French river, is indebted for its name. Gabriel Bernon's first wife was formerly Esther Le Roy, daughter of Francois Le Roy, of Rochelle. He married a second wife, Mary Harris, at Providence. She was a granddaughter of William Harris, who came with Roger Williams to Watchet. The only son of Gabriel Bernon died when young, and he is now represented only by the descendants of a numerous family of daughters. One of the daughters by the first wife married Benjamin Whipple, of North Providence; another married a Helme, in the Narragansett country; and one by the second wife married a Crawford, of Providence.

Abraham Tourtellot (3), son of Abraham (2), born Feb. 27, 1725, married Phebe Thornton, at Scituate, R. I., and with his family removed to the town of Thompson, Conn., settling there, according to Miss Larned's History of Windham County, about 1770. His children were: Mary, born in 1747; Michael, Feb. 4, 1748 (died in 1815); Bernon, Oct. 9, 1750 (died in April, 1838); Isaac, Nov. 20, 1752; Israel, Dec. 16, 1754; Joseph, May 29, 1756 (married Abigail Carroll, and died Aug. 6, 1842); Amasa, Feb. 4, 1758 (died in 1772); Dinah, Jan. 4, 1760 (married John Jacobs, and died in 1819); Anna, 1761; Ezek, 1763; James, 1764; Joshua, 1766 (married Hannah Carroll, and died July 6, 1836); Zilpha, 1767; Stephen, 1769; and Esther, 1770. The father of this family died in May, 1779.

A number of the Tourtellots performed service in the War of the Revolution, one of whom, Abraham, served respectively as ensign, lieutenant and captain in Capt. Blackmar's Company, Col. Daniel Hitchcock's Regiment, as a part of the Army of Observation from Providence in 1775; in Capt. Hoppin's Company, Col. Zippitt's Regiment, in 1776; and in Col. Archibald Cray's Regiment, in 1776. Reuben Tourtellot was also a member of Capt. Hoppin's Company, in 1776, and of Col. Cray's Regiment in that year, and the same name appears as a recruit from North Providence in 1782. A Joseph Tourtellot served for a time in 1775 in a company commanded by Capt. Joseph Elliot, of Killingly, Conn. This Joseph's name appears on the roll of United States pensioners of Connecticut in 1832 and 1840, his residence being given in 1840 as at Thompson, Conn., and his age as eighty years. The name of a William Tourtellot also appears in Rhode Island as identified with service in the Revolution. The name of Reuben Tourtellot as a private in the Rhode Island Line appears on the United States Pension Roll of 1822 and as a resident of Penobscot county, Maine; and Orono and Lieut. Abraham Tourtellot's names appear on the roll as pensioned in 1819, for Rhode Island service. Both lived in Penobscot county, Maine. Abraham died Dec. 6, 1820, aged seventy-two years. A branch of the Rhode Island family of Tourtellots settled in Maine.

HON. JEROME TOURTELLOTTE, of Putnam, former member of the General Assembly of the State, and for twenty and more years treasurer of the Putnam Savings Bank, has for many years been one of the substantial men and prominent citizens of Putnam and that section of Connecticut.

In several lines Col. Tourtellotte descends from the early emigrant settlers of New England. Born June 11, 1837, in the town of Thompson, Conn., he is a son of the late Joseph Davison and Dian (Munyan) Tourtellotte, and on his father's side descendant of Abraham Tourtellot, mentioned in the foregoing, his lineage being through Abraham (2), Abraham (3), Israel, Jesse and Joseph Davison Tourtellotte.

Israel Tourtellotte, son of Abraham (3), of Thompson (Conn.) settler, and the great-grandfather of Jerome Tourtellotte, of Putnam, was born Dec. 16, 1754, and died March 4, 1846. He came to Thompson, Conn., with his father's family about 1770, and married (first) a Jacobs and (second) Johnson. His children were: Sarah, Arsenath, Nancy, Jesse, John and Jacob. Of these, Sarah married Archelias Fuller, from Maine, but who later resided in Boston and became a man of wealth through dealing heavily in foreign merchandise. Arsenath married Adin Randall. Nancy married a Morris, and for her second husband Maro J. U am; her children were Mary Ann, Maro J. and William.

Jerome Tourtellotte,

Jesse Tourtellotte, son of Israel, was born in 1779, and married Lois Dike, baptized June 20, 1784, daughter of Deacon Thomas Dike, of Thompson, and his wife Dorothy (Davison), and their children were: Lyman, William, Hull, Joseph Davison, James Dike, George (who died in childhood), Louisa, Lydia and Lucy. Jesse Tourtellotte died Sept. 19, 1836, and his wife passed away June 9, 1867.

Joseph Davison Tourtellotte, son of Jesse, was born May 11, 1811, in Thompson, and died at Putnam Heights, Conn., Oct. 28, 1898. He married Diana Munyan, of Thompson, Conn., who died Jan. 9, 1887, and their children were: Amy M., Jerome, Marshall Irwin, James Edgar, Georgianna Frances and Orrin E.

The Connecticut ancestors of Jerome Tourtellotte, who is the subject proper of this article, were farmers, and to rural pursuits he was reared. At sixteen years of age he began learning a trade, which, however, he did not follow very long. He received such an elementary education as the neighborhood schools afforded and the conditions incident to his early boyhood warranted. On the breaking out of the Civil war, in 1861, young Tourtellotte was among the first to respond to the call of President Lincoln for troops in defense of the Union, enlisting April 22, 1861, in Rifle Company B, 2d Conn. V. I., under Capt. Frank S. Chester, of Norwich, and Col. Alfred H. Terry, of New Haven, which company was known in the State organization as Rifle Company A. Mr. Tourtellotte with his command was present at the first battle of Bull Run, Va., July 21, 1861, and was mustered out with his regiment Aug. 7, 1861. Returning to his home in Connecticut Mr. Tourtellotte was active in recruiting Company K, 7th Conn. V. I., enlisting himself Aug. 26, 1861. He was commissioned Sept. 2d, as first lieutenant, and went to the front with his command, and throughout the four years of that memorable struggle he shared the fortunes of war with his comrades of the 7th. On March 21, 1862, he was promoted to captain. He was engaged in the first assault on Fort Wagner, in Charleston Harbor, S. C., July 11, 1863, where he was severely wounded, left on the field and taken prisoner. For the following twenty months he was confined in Southern prisons, chiefly at Columbia, S. C., being paroled Feb. 28, 1865. Capt. Tourtellotte was commissioned major March 21, 1865, and promoted to lieutenant-colonel July 24, 1865. He was finally discharged with his regiment Aug. 11th, of that year.

The war over, Col. Tourtellotte returned to his Connecticut home with an honorable war record, and turned his attention to civil pursuits. From March, 1866, to July, 1873, he most efficiently filled the position of outside superintendent of the A. & W. Sprague Manufacturing Co. at Cranston, R. I. He then returned to Putnam and until 1880 was engaged in the manufacture of slippers. In 1880 he was chosen treasurer of the Putnam Savings Bank, a relation he has since sustained satisfactorily to all parties interested. It goes without saying that a man with such a record as Col. Tourtellotte holds the confidence, esteem and respect of the community in which he has so long lived. In 1875 he was chosen by his fellow townsmen a member of the General Assembly, and again in 1880.

On Nov. 18, 1874, Col. Tourtellotte was married, in the town of Cranston, R. I., to Eliza Emily Husband, daughter of Edward and Sarah (Booth) Husband, and to them have come three sons: Leroy Edward, born Jan. 20, 1877; Arthur, Oct. 31, 1881; and Harry, Dec. 14, 1884. Mrs. Tourtellotte's father was a native of England and came to the United States in 1826, locating at Taunton, Mass. He was a sketch-maker and designer in cotton goods and calicos. His death occurred at Cranston, R. I., when he was sixty-two years of age. His wife died at the age of seventy-five years.

On his mother's side Col. Tourtellotte descends from Edward Munyan, who came from England and from Salem, Mass., to the town of Thompson, Conn., about 1722; and also from Anthony Dix, Dike or Dicks, one of the first settlers of Plymouth, Mass., who came to the colony in the ship "Ann" in 1623. Deacon Thomas Dike, Col. Tourtellotte's great-grandfather, was a soldier of the Revolution, serving as sergeant in the 11th Connecticut Regiment.

JAMES. This family, located for the last half century in Killingly, Windham Co., Conn., was formerly of Rhode Island, where the name, although never a numerous one, has been prominently identified with the interests of that State in public affairs and especially in the line of manufacturing. The head of the family was the late Alanson James, whose son, Rowland R., is now identified with the mercantile and banking interests of Danielson.

One William James, of Portsmouth, was a free-man on the list of 1655. He married in 1677 Susanna Martin, daughter of Joseph, and their children were: Joseph, William, Sarah and John. Of the families of these there is little of record in the State. John James married (first) Ann Taylor, daughter of John and Abigail Taylor. She died in 1727, and he married (second) Lydia Peckham, daughter of John and Mary Peckham. John James was of Newport, R. I., and his only child recorded by Arnold in his "Genealogical Register of Rhode Island" is Martin, born in 1735.

A branch of the James family of Rhode Island, probably of the above origin, and from which descended the Killingly, Conn., family, was John and Margaret James, of Richmond. One of their sons, Silas James, born March 20, 1758, married a wife named Phebe, and several of them became men of distinction. Notable among these was Hon. Charles Tillinghast James, United States Senator from Rhode Island from 1851 to 1857, who was also an extensive builder in various States of the Union, was an inventor and operated cotton mills.

Silas James was a soldier from the town of Greenwich, R. I., in the war of the Revolution, and both he and his wife in turn received a pension from the government. It is related of him in history, that upon one occasion he carried Gen. Washington on his back across a flooded road, during the blockading of the British army at Boston. The General was dismounted and Mr. James was a large, strong man, and truly loyal.

Paul James, another son of John and Margaret, born Sept. 20, 1755, is probably the Paul James who was a member of Col. Tappin's regiment, in 1776, and this great-grandfather of Rowland R. James, of Danielson, Conn., was also a valiant soldier.

Thomas James, the grandfather of Rowland R., was born Sept. 17, 1785, and was a resident of the town of Richmond, R. I. His sister Amy married Philip Kenyon. Thomas James married Elizabeth Tabor, who died at the age of eighty-eight years, in Griswold, Conn. She probably descended from the old Tabor or Taber family of Rhode Island, the progenitor of which was Philip Tabor, who was of record in Watertown, Mass., as early as 1634, having on May 9th of that year been made a freeman, and who was deputy to the General Court in 1639-40. He married (first) Lydia, daughter of John Masters; his second wife was named Jane. He was admitted a freeman of Portsmouth, R. I., in 1656 and was subsequently of Providence and perhaps other points in the State.

The children of Thomas and Elizabeth James were six in number. (1) Clark W., a sea captain, married and left a family consisting of two daughters and a son, the latter of whom resides at Worcester, Mass. (2) Sarah married Rouse Kenyon, of Scotland, Conn., and a son and daughter survive her. (3) Joseph resided in West Troy, N. Y. (4) Amy married Benjamin Teft of Carolina Mills, R. I., and her children were: Franklin, deceased; Sarah; and James, of Anthony, R. I. (5) Benjamin lived in Rhode Island, became a sea-faring man, and died at the age of twenty-eight, on a vessel rounding Cape Horn, and was buried at sea. (6) Alanson was the father of Rowland R. James, of Danielson.

Alanson James was born Sept. 9, 1813, at Mumford's Mills, R. I. His youth was spent in Rhode Island and as he was in childhood thrown upon his own resources, he had no educational advantages, in fact, did not learn to read until he was sixty years of age. However, Mr. James was a most intelligent and well informed man, in spite of his early disadvantages. When only seven years old he was put at farm work and followed that occupation through a long and worthy life. In March, 1855, he located in Killingly, and purchased a farm near Dayville, engaging in agriculture there for some years, but later bought a farm in Danielson. Later in life he disposed of this farm and moved into the borough, where he lived retired, having been both a successful farmer and fortunate and judicious purchaser of real estate. In politics he was a well informed Republican, and took a deep interest in the movements of his party.

In Richmond, R. I., Alanson James married Oliva James, who took the name of James from her mother's second marriage; she was born Sept. 28, 1805, and died July 28, 1897. Mr. James died Aug. 29, 1898. Both parents became members of the Baptist Church, but after coming to Danielson, united with the Methodist Church, in which they took an active part. Their children were: Newman W. born Aug. 31, 1836, at Exeter, R. I., who is engaged in the grocery business in Providence, and has these children: Walter A. (a resident of Danielson, member of the James Grocery Company), Arthur R. and Luther A.; Rowland R., of this biography; and Albert L., born Feb. 8, 1839, who died at the age of three and one-half years.

ROWLAND R. JAMES was born Feb. 16, 1838, in Cranston, R. I., and attended the district schools until the age of eight years. His education was then interrupted by his entrance into a cotton mill, where he was obliged to work from daylight to eight and nine in the evening, and this life he followed until he was twenty-one years of age, with the exception of three terms of four months each, when he attended school in Killingly, and one term at the West Killingly Academy. Mr. James taught four terms of school, one in South Killingly, two at Killingly Center and one at Woodstock Valley.

On Aug. 9, 1862, Mr. James became a Union soldier, enlisting as private in Co. K, 18th Reg. C. V. I. He was promoted to corporal, and was discharged June 27, 1865, the last year of the war being detailed color guard. For the first year his regiment was given guard duty in Maryland, after which they saw hard service. On June 15, 1863, at the battle of Winchester, he, with nine companions of his regiment, was captured and confined in Libby Prison and Belle Isle. After thirty days they were paroled and sent back to camp, and in time they were declared exchanged, and Mr. James gladly returned to his regiment. In 1864 under Sheridan Mr. James took part in the operations in West Virginia, and was also with "Little Phil" in his raids through the Shenandoah valley. In the fall of 1864 the regiment was retired to guard duty at Charlottesville, Va., and Mr. James was discharged at Harper's Ferry, Va., June 27, 1865.

Prior to July, 1867, Mr. James was a clerk for six months in C. L. Young's grocery store, and for fifteen months worked in a store and market for Sylvanus Gleason. Then in company with his brother, Newman W. James, under the firm name of James Brothers, he bought the grocery business of Mr. Gleason and five years later they bought the grocery and crockery business of Christopher Cran-all and moved to the Crandall block. There they remained for five years and then took possession of the store in the building which has since borne the name of the James Block. In the spring of 1883 the firm was dissolved and the business was continued by R. R. James until May 17, 1890, when he sold to Hammell & Brooks. On March 17, 1894, he opened his present first-class and attractive store in the James Block, under the name of the James Grocery Company, having associated with him his nephew, Walter A. James.

For a period of twenty years Mr. James was a director of the First National Bank, continuing to the time it was merged into the Windham County National Bank. For a like period he has been a trustee of the Windham County Savings Bank and for the past three years has been its vice-president. Mr. James is a trustee of the Shubel Hutchin's Fund, and is regarded as one of the most judicious and careful financiers of the community. In politics Mr. James is a staunch Republican, having cast his first vote for President Lincoln. For three years he was a member of the board of burgesses, for one year was assessor of the borough and for two years was assessor of the town, and has also served on the board of relief. Socially he is a member of the McGregor Post, No. 27, G. A. R. He and his wife are members of the First Baptist Church of Danielson, and Mr. James has been treasurer of the church for the last eight years.

On Nov. 29, 1866, Mr. James was united in marriage with Miss Olive A. Steere, a native of Thompson, Conn., daughter of Origen and Ann C. (Leffingwell) Steere, and a granddaughter of Prosper Leffingwell, a resident of Killingly, and a member of one of the early families of the town. To this union were born: Albert L., born Jan. 21, 1869, who received his business training at Bryant & Stratton's, and now holds a responsible position with Aldrichs, Eldrich & Co., of Providence, R. I.; and Grace E., born Feb. 18, 1872, who for seven years filled the position of teacher of stenography and typewriting in the Bryant & Stratton Business College, and Dec. 4, 1900, married Oscar F. Bellows, a civil engineer, a graduate of Brown University, who is now constructing engineer in the war department and is now (1903) located at Fort Ontario, Oswego, New York.

A history of Mr. James' business career is but another example of what can be done by pluck, industry and good business principles. His start in life was as a poor boy, but by putting to their best use the sterling qualities with which he was endowed, he has risen to his present prominent and responsible position and is one of the representative men of Danielson, Connecticut.

STEPHEN C. GARDNIER, one of the prosperous and representative men of Mansfield, Tolland county, is now retired from active business life and is enjoying the fruits of his labors as a machinist and farmer.

The grandfather of Stephen, Benjamin W. Gardnier, was a soldier of the Revolution and resided at Kingston, R. I. After his discharge, he saw service along the Rhode Island coast, and lived to the age of eighty-four. Mr. Gardnier, our subject, remembers distinctly sitting upon the old man's knee and listening with delight to the wonderful stories of the sufferings of the brave soldiers during the great struggle for independence. For his first wife Benjamin married a Miss Waite, of Kingston, R. I., and after her death he married a Miss Browning, but his children were all by his first marriage: Jeremiah, a farmer at North Kingston, R. I.; Clark; Wilbur, who went to the town of Babington, Luzerne Co., Pa., and died there a wealthy man, a farmer and lawyer; Laten, a horse dealer of Utica, N. Y.; Benjamin; Sarah, who married Elder Corey, and settled near Albany, N. Y.; Lydia, who married a Mr. Browning and died in South Kingston, Rhode Island.

Benjamin (2), the father of Stephen C., was reared to farm work in Rhode Island, remaining at home until his marriage, when he moved to Connecticut, and for several years engaged in farming. Later he went to Mansfield, Conn., settling on the Turner farm, near Merrow Station. There he resided for several years, but later went to Natick, R. I., being employed as a laborer. After several years, he returned to Mansfield, located on the same farm and remained the rest of his life, dying Sept. 29, 1847, aged sixty-eight. During the war of 1812, he served bravely, seeing service in the vicinity of New London, Conn. His political affiliations were with the Democratic party, and he held various town offices. In North Kingston, R. I., he was married to Mary T. Congdon, daughter of Judge Stephen, of Kingston, the latter being a prominent and wealthy citizen of Kingston, judge of the Supreme Court for many years and a member of the Baptist Church for over forty years. Mrs. Benjamin Gardnier died Nov. 21, 1866, aged sixty-five. The children born to herself and husband were: Mary T., widow of George Northrop, a farmer, residing at North Kingston, R. I.; Tabitha, who was second wife of Henry Gardnier, a blacksmith, and died in North Kingston; Lydia, widow of Jeremiah Northrop, who lives in North Kingston, R. I.; Ann, who died in young womanhood; Stephen C.; Frances, who married Fred Newcomb and resided in Tolland, Conn., but who is now a widow, and living in Kingston, R. I.; William, a farmer residing in Ashford, Conn., who married Phila Reynolds; Sarah, the first wife of Henry Gardnier; Experience, who married Henry Newcomb, a cabinetmaker and carpenter, and removed to Luzerne county, Pa., where he died, and where she now resides; Susan, who married Oliver Peck, a railroad conductor, removed to Illinois, and there died.

Stephen C. Gardner was born Oct. 22, 1822, in Exeter, R. I., and was seven months old when his parents removed to Mansfield, and seven years old when they went to Natick, R. I. As he was one of a very large family, and his parents poor, the little fellow was compelled to go to work when but a child, being first employed in Sprague's factory at Natick, attending to two breakers, for which he received one dollar per week. Later he went to Fitchville, R. I., and was employed on hand mules in the old factory known as the Antney factory, where his wages were $1.50 per week. Soon after, he was sent to the home of his uncle, Wilbur Gardner, in Luzerne county, Pa., but in a short time became so homesick, that he ran away and began a 300 mile journey home, without a penny. Although he did not even know the right direction when he started, he went along, working whenever he found an opportunity, in order to earn sufficient money to pay for his food, and was three months on the way. Not only did he do this, but when he reached home he was the possessor of several dollars, which he gave to his mother. After his return home, he was placed in the family of a Quaker, Briar Brown by name, and later was employed by an Asa Arnold, another Quaker, at East Greenwich. While living with these two men, Mr. Gardner received his only educational advantages, being allowed to attend school for a few months. Asa Arnold was a machinist and inventor, having invented the compound motion for Eclipse speeders, and the boy was apprenticed to him to learn the trade. The first year Mr. Gardner received $40 and his clothes; $75 the second year, and after two years and eight months, he went to Providence, R. I., where he was employed in the Stonington railroad shops at Fox Point. Here he ran a large lathe and was there for several years, during which time he was locomotive fireman and engineer of a switch engine and engineer between Providence and Stonington. Among other things, he fired the first four-wheel engine built in America, called the "Reformer," constructed for that railroad by Rogers, Ketcham and Grovers, at Paterson, N. J. The locomotives at that time burned wood and required two firemen. Mr. Gardner also worked under Master Mechanic Rutter, who devised and built the "Lantern Hill," the first long passenger coach ever constructed.

During the war Mr. Gardner was employed by this company, and was offered the position of master mechanic, and later ran the "Enfield," a new engine, for a short time. The next change was made to the employ of the New York Central, at a time when part of its rails were strap iron; he worked as engineer and in the shops, remaining in the employ of this railroad for eighteen years, during all that time faithfully performing his duties, and at times being called upon to act as extra engineer. The next four years were spent in the employ of the railroad which ran between Black Rock and Paris, Canada, as engineer and machinist; then he removed to Hartford before the road from Hartford to New Haven was built, and began work in the machine shops for the Springfield and Hartford Railroad, under E. M. Reed, master mechanic, the shop being located near where the Capitol now stands.

After some time spent in these shops, Mr. Gardner returned to Hartford and was employed as a machinist in that city, remaining there until an accident compelled him to abandon his calling, and he removed to Mansfield and purchased the "Demock place," near Merrow, a farm of 140 acres; he remained there several years, later purchasing the adjoining farm, on the east of his property, where he now lives, and remained there for several years. Then he disposed of his original farm and purchased of Elder Arnold his present property of fifty acres, upon which he has made substantial improvements, remodeling the house, barn, etc., and now has one of the best cultivated and well-kept farms in the vicinity. In addition to his farm, Mr. Gardner owns and is now erecting a considerable number of residences at Kingston, Rhode Island.

On July 3, 1848, he was married, in Oswego, N. Y., to M. Antoinette Remely, born Jan. 29, 1829, who died March 18, 1868. Mr. Gardner was again married, his second choice being Amy Arnold of Mansfield. His children were born of his first marriage, and are: George, born June 3, 1850, who died Sept. 1, 1852; Charles, born Jan. 19, 1853, who died Sept. 30, 1855; a daughter who died on the day of birth; William C., born April 30, 1858, a farmer, who resided on his father's farm, held the office of tax collector of Mansfield and died Nov. 8, 1897, unmarried; Viola, born Dec. 25, 1856, an expert needle artist of New York City; Elizabeth B., born Dec. 23, 1860, who married Jessen Snow and now a resident at La Fayette with her father.

Mr. Gardner is a Republican in politics, but in his busy life has had no time to devote to office seeking. Socially, he is a member of Uriah Lodge No. 24, A. F. & A. M. The history of such a man is not only interesting, but it is also instructive, proving as it does how a boy can make his way in the world if he only possesses integrity, grit and ability, is not afraid of work and gladly turns his hand to whatever lies nearest. No man in that portion of the State is more highly respected than Mr. Gardner, and he may well look back upon his well-spent life with pride.

WILLIAM ROSS is one of the best-known and most substantial citizens of Chaplin, Conn. The Ross family is one of the oldest in Windham county and, while not as numerous as in former days, is still identified with the best interests of that portion of the State in various lines, and prominent in religious, political and social circles.

The first authentic record of the family found by the biographer is the statement that on Nov. 27, 1704, Daniel Ross, of Ipswich, Mass., sold fifty acres of land in Windham, Conn., to his brother

William Ross

Joseph Ross. Joseph Ross came to what was then Scotland Society, Windham, where he followed the occupation of farmer for the rest of his life. His marriage, on Sept. 16, 1716, was to Sarah Utley, and they had ten children.

Joseph Ross (2), the eldest child of Joseph Ross, was born Dec. 28, 1717, and died at the age of twenty-three years, leaving a widow, formerly Mary Pain, who was born May 31, 1721.

Lieut. Ebenezer Ross, the only son of Joseph (2), was born March 24, 1741, and died March 26, 1810. He was a resident of Pomfret, Conn., and served in the Revolutionary war, and was during that time an intimate friend of Gen. Israel Putnam. He was married June 9, 1768, to Mary Clark, who was born March 21, 1747, daughter of Nathaniel Clark. Later she became the wife of Deacon Benjamin Chaplin, who was one of the incorporators of the town of Chaplin, which was named in his honor. The children of Ebenezer Ross were: Royal, born on March 18, 1769; Lucy, Oct. 16, 1770; Elnathan, June 15, 1772; Molly, March 17, 1774; Lucy, April 7, 1776; Ebenezer, July 17, 1779; John, July 2, 1781; and Abel, April 23, 1784.

Elnathan Ross, son of Lieut. Ebenezer, and the grandfather of William, was born June 15, 1772, became a farmer and resided for several years in Mansfield, Conn., later coming to Chaplin, where he passed the remainder of his life. He attained prominence in the town, and died Jan. 30, 1814. The wife of Elnathan Ross was formerly Olive Storrs, who was born Dec. 7, 1774, a native of Mansfield, and died April 7, 1864.

Thomas and Mary Storrs, of Suttoncum-hound, Nottinghamshire, England, had a son Samuel, who was baptized in 1640, came to America and settled in Barnstable, Mass., in 1663, and in 1666 married Mary, daughter of Thomas and Mary (Wells) Huckins, natives of Barnstable. Mary Storrs died in 1683, and Samuel married, in 1685, Widow Esther (or Hester) Agard. About 1698 Samuel Storrs removed to Mansfield, Conn., of which he and his son Samuel were among the original proprietors. Samuel died in Mansfield in 1719.

Thomas Storrs, son of Samuel the settler, was born Oct. 27, 1686, in Barnstable, and went with his father to Mansfield, Conn., about 1698. There, on March 14, 1708, he married Mehitable (last name not known). For many years he was clerk for the proprietors of the town, was town clerk and justice of the peace, holding also other public trusts, and was a representative at the General Court for forty-three sessions, between 1716 and 1747. He was a capable and prominent man. His death occurred April 4, 1775, and his wife Margaret died March 10, 1776.

Josiah Storrs, son of Thomas, was born March 25, 1714, and was married Nov. 9, 1743, to Mary, daughter of Jonathan and Mary Sergeant, of Mansfield. Mr. Storrs lived in the eastern part of the town, where his farm is still in the possession of his descendants. His wife died on Oct. 27, 1754, and his own death occurred Aug. 9, 1796.

Ebenezer Storrs, son of Josiah, was born Aug. 26, 1744, and was married Feb. 4, 1770, to Lois, daughter of Nathan Southworth.

Olive Storrs, a daughter of Ebenezer, was born Dec. 7, 1774, and was married Feb. 25, 1795, to Elnathan Ross, of Chaplin. She was the grandmother of William Ross.

The children born to the grandparents of William Ross were as follows: Roxana, who was born in 1796, married a Mr. Robinson, and removed to the State of New York, dying Sept. 22, 1837; Harriet, born Aug. 11, 1797, married Elnathan Hunt, and also removed to the State of New York; Ebenezer S., born Nov. 16, 1798, married a Miss Wentworth, and lived at Mount Hope, in Mansfield, Conn.; Olive, born Aug. 22, 1800, married Roswell Bill, and they removed to Hartford, later to Chaplin, where they died; Schuyler, born Dec. 1, 1801, removed to Buffalo, N. Y., and died there (he was a captain on the Erie canal); Earl, born Sept. 6, 1803, removed to Vermont, where he died; Lydia S., born March 14, 1805, married Amasa Rhodes, and lived and died in Chaplin; Almyra, born Aug. 4, 1806, died March 15, 1827, unmarried; William, born Nov. 24, 1807, was the father of our subject; Caroline, born Feb. 20, 1810, married a Mr. Wyman, and, like her sisters, removed to the State of New York, near Pennyan; Austin, born Sept. 10, 1812, was an extensive farmer at Florence, Mass., where he died in 1901.

William Ross, the father of William, was a native of Chaplin, where the chief part of his life was passed. He received no other educational advantages than those offered by the common schools of that day in his neighborhood. When six years of age he went to live with his uncle, Abel Ross, in Chaplin, and remained with him until his twenty-first year, soon after which he went to reside in Ashford, in the home of Gen. Palmer, remaining there two years. In the spring of 1832 Mr. Ross married Miranda, daughter of Hamilton and Lucy (Williams) Grant, residents of Ashford, the former an old Revolutionary soldier. The day following his marriage he returned to Chaplin and settled down on what was known as the Avery farm, and there he lived until his death. Rev. David Avery, who owned this place, was the first Congregational minister in Chaplin, Conn. This valuable property is now in the possession of his only son, William.

In his early political life Mr. Ross was a Whig, and later he became a Republican. He gave some attention to public affairs, faithfully serving his town and county in the offices of assessor and selectman. In 1846 he was elected to the State Legislature. For years he was an earnest and exemplary member of the Congregational Church, and he was a most liberal supporter of all Christian enterprises. The death of Mr. Ross occurred Aug. 7, 1885, and that of his widow on May 22, in the following year,

In business Mr. Ross was upright and honorable, possessing that excellent tact and judgment which make a business life successful. His means were large, and he was able to leave a valuable estate to his son.

William Ross, the only child of his parents, was born Jan. 10, 1833, on the site of his present home. The old house which had sheltered so many families had been torn down during the father's lifetime, and the present handsome edifice erected. William Ross acquired his education in the district schools and in a select school at Chaplin Center. Being the only son of his parents, he inherited his father's large interests, and has passed his life in managing them, displaying inherent business ability in this way. In connection with his farming interests he has dealt extensively in cattle all over the county, and he has gained a wide acquaintance in the pursuit of that business. The two large farms belonging to him, in Chaplin, comprise 308 acres, and he also possesses large real-estate holdings in Willimantic, where he has some remunerative tenements, and also a large silk factory building, one of the best built factories in that city.

The political sentiments of Mr. Ross have ever been with the Republican party, and he has had many offices of trust and honor conferred upon him, for he has never sought any preferment from his party; instead he has almost always refused to accept them. His service on the board of relief has been longer than that of any other official, and as assessor he gave satisfaction to all concerned. Many offices have been pressed upon him which he has declined on account of his large property interests, which constantly claim close attention, but he has been justice of the peace for a great many years, his excellent judgment making him a superior officer in this position. In his attendance upon and liberal support of the Chaplin Congregational Church Mr. Ross testifies to his interest in the progress and extension of religion, while his public spirit is displayed in every movement for aiding his town, county or State.

EDWARD M. CORBIN. Emerson has aptly said that "Nature arms each man with some faculty which enables him to do easily some feat impossible to any other." The truth of this statement is verified day after day in the ordinary vocations of life; there are no two with the same work to do. In taking into consideration the life history of Edward M. Corbin and in noting the sterling ancestry which has given him his own sterling characteristics, one must be impressed with the idea that he is one of the world's workers who has reached a distinct and legitimate potential, making each day sufficient unto itself by doing the work and fulfilling the duty then presented. He is to-day numbered among the representative business men of the city of Putnam, Windham county, and is a member of a family which has been identified with the annals of New England history from the early colonial epoch, the original American ancestor having come hither from England; records still extant show that one of the direct progenitors of our subject had taken up his residence in Connecticut as early as the middle of the seventeenth century. Thus there comes to the biographer in this connection the added satisfaction of tracing a lineage which is one typical of honest worth, patriotism, loyalty and useful and productive activity, as one generation has followed another on to the stage of life. In the perpetuation of such records a work of this character exercises its highest function.

Henry Fielder Corbin, the father of Edwin M., was born in the town of Union, Tolland Co., Conn., April 27, 1829, and is still living there on his ancestral homestead. He is a son of Captain Samuel Corbin, who was born in Dudley, Mass., Feb. 11, 1792, and who, on March 30, 1815, was united in marriage to Charlotte Chapin, who was born Oct. 29, 1792, the daughter of Rev. Nathaniel and Lovisa (Sexton) Chapin, of Enfield, Conn. Captain Samuel Corbin, after attaining his legal majority, settled on a farm adjoining that of his father and the same is now the home of his son, Henry F. In the early days he was identified with the state militia, being captain of his company and thus gaining his title. He was a member of the board of selectmen for a number of years and in 1852 represented his district in the lower house of the State Legislature, being also called upon to serve in other offices of local trust and responsibility. He was a man of marked business acumen, devoting his attention throughout life to the great basic art of agriculture and so living as to command the uniform confidence and esteem of his fellow men. He was a man of strong physique, somewhat below the average stature, but markedly vigorous and active. He was a regular attendant of the Congregational Church in the village of Union and was ever ready to aid in all enterprises projected for the general good, giving an unequivocal support to the causes of religion, education and all other worthy objects. In politics he was originally an old-line Whig, but upon the organization of the Republican party transferred his allegiance to it, and ever afterward was a zealous advocate of its principles and policies. He was somewhat reserved in manner, but invariably urbane and courteous, and had a lively appreciation of the ridiculous, thus keenly enjoying a joke. He died March 8, 1872, at the venerable age of eight years, as the result of an attack of paralysis, having enjoyed excellent health until within a short time prior to his demise.

Of the children of Captain Samuel and Charlotte (Chapin) Corbin, the following is the record: (1) Samuel Aurelius, born Jan. 28, 1816, died Jun. 10, 1817. (2) Charlotte Juliette died May 12, 1828. (3) Samuel Morillo, born Dec. 15, 1818, was married May 10, 1841, to Ann Maria Stowell, of Clarksburg, Md., and died July 16, 1849, in the city of Baltimore, where he had conducted a book and stationery business. (4) Aurelius Orville, born April 7, 1821, married, March 29, 1848, Ruth Blodgett, of Union, Conn., and he died in Springfield, Mass., in December, 1879, having been a prominent architect and builder of that city. (5) Lovisa Rhoda, born March 16, 1823, is the widow of Jonathan T. Cummings, who was a stone mason of Mansfield, Conn.; their marriage was solemnized Nov. 6, 1860, and she is now living at Staffordville. (6) Charles Augustus, born Dec. 16, 1824, was married Jan. 17, 1849, to Lovisa Lawson, of Union, Windham county, the daughter of Deacon Paul Lawson; they lived at East Hartford, then at Vernon and later at Wilbraham, Mass., and he died at Springfield, that State, where his widow still maintains her home, his vocation having been that of a farmer. (7) Philo Roderrick, born Jan. 25, 1827, was married May 14, 1855, to Emily P. Converse, of Stafford, and he died at Galesburg, Ill., a carpenter and builder by vocation. (8) Henry Fielder is the subject of further review below. (9) Charlotte Juliette, born Feb. 23, 1834, was married to Isaac Johnson, of Sturbridge, Mass., and later of Woodstock, Conn., and they are now residing in California, where Mr. Johnson is engaged in agricultural pursuits, having devoted the earlier years of his business life to the manufacture of shoes.

Philip Corbin, father of Samuel, and the son of Lemuel, came from Dudley, Mass., to Union, Tolland Co., Conn., in 1793, and as early as 1795 purchased land of James Thompson. He was a man of more than ordinary mental and physical vigor, and his course was ever guided by a stern and unbending integrity, which made him a man of influence in the community and one who ever commanded respect and confidence. He devoted his active life to agricultural pursuits and became the owner of a large tract of valuable land in Tolland county. In the early days, when there was a distinctive demand for potash, he manufactured this product upon quite an extensive scale, disposing of the same at Norwich. He at one time also owned an interest in a sawmill at Mashapaug. He served for a number of years in the office of selectman, and in 1814 he represented his town in the Connecticut Legislature, his term extending over two years. He was a prominent and influential member of the Congregational Church at Union, and was a member of the committee having in charge the erection of the present church edifice. Philip Corbin married Rhoda Healy, of Dudley, Mass., and he was summoned into eternal rest, May 2, 1845, at the age of eighty years, his wife having passed away June 15, 1840, at the age of seventy-two. He was an extensive farmer, and in connection with this enterprise also conducted for a number of years a small general-merchandise store. Of his six children we now incorporate the following brief record: Samuel, born Feb. 11, 1792, at Dudley, Mass.; Polly, born May 28, 1795, in Union, Conn., who became the wife of Joseph C. Griggs; Philip, Jr., born in Union, April 4, 1797, who was married Nov. 29, 1820, to Lois Chaffee, of Ashford, this State, her death occurring Sept. 9, 1872, while he passed to his reward July 24, 1881; Healy, born June 8, 1799, who was married Oct. 13, 1825, to Nancy Coye, daughter of David Coye, and who died Oct. 21, 1878, at Brimfield, Mass.; Augustus, born Sept. 18, 1801, who married Pamela Preston, of Willington, Conn., was a farmer by occupation; Herman, born May 20, 1806, who was three times married—first to Calista Knowlton, second, to Maria M. Sherman, and third to Mrs. Sarah E. (Hollingsworth) Kenyon, and who died at Monson, Mass., July 12, 1890, having devoted his life to agricultural pursuits.

In tracing back the lineage of the Corbin family it is interesting to note that the original American progenitor, so far as authentic record is obtainable, was Clement Corbin, who was a resident of Brookline, a suburb of the city of Boston, in 1637. He was born in 1616 and removed to Woodstock, Windham Co., Conn., in 1687, and it is practically thus assured that he was one of the first settlers in that section, it being even claimed that he was the very first. He married Dorcas Buckminster, and their son James, through whom the direct line is traced through this review, was born March 31, 1668, and he became the father of Philip Corbin, born Jan. 5, 1708. The latter married Dorothy Barts, Jan. 13, 1731, and their son Lemuel was born Feb. 19, 1739, or 1740; he married Rebecca Davis, and his death occurred at Dudley, Mass., May 7, 1825.

Henry Fielder Corbin was married Nov. 8, 1853, to Miss Philinda Whipple Buck, who was born at Pomfret, Conn., Jan. 2, 1831, the daughter of Aaron and Mercy (Sprague) Buck, both of whom passed away a number of years ago, Mr. Buck having been a successful farmer and a man of influence in his community. Henry F. and Philinda Corbin became the parents of two children: Edward Morillo, to whom this sketch is dedicated; and Ella Maria, who was born Oct. 27, 1861. She married Aug. 18, 1886, Arthur Channing Barrows, who is a successful teacher in the schools of Providence, R. I., and they are the parents of two children: Florence Louise, born March 19, 1888; and Raymond Corbin, March 8, 1889.

Henry F. Corbin was born on the homestead in Union, and there received his education, assisting in the work of the farm during the summer months and attending school winters until he had attained the age of twenty years. He then assumed charge of the home farm, where he has ever since been engaged in agricultural operations, the farm being in the south part of the town. It comprised about sixty acres when it came into his possession, but he has since added to it by the purchase of adjoining property until he now has a finely improved and highly productive place of one hundred and twenty-seven acres; he gives his attention to diversified agriculture and also makes a specialty of dairying, finding a ready market for his butter in the city of Stafford. He and his wife are prominently identified with Mashapaug Lake Grange, No. 101, Patrons of Husbandry, of which he is past master and in which he has also held the office of overseer, while his wife has held preferment as incumbent of the office of Pomona. Both are devoted members of the Congregational Church at Union, in which he has held various official positions in connection with the church organization and collateral societies, while Mrs. Corbin is a zealous worker in the Ladies' Aid Society, of which she formerly served most efficiently as president. Always an uncompromising Republican in his political allegiance, Henry F. Corbin has held a high position in the party councils and has been called upon to serve in positions of distinctive trust and responsibility, having been a member of the lower house of the State Legislature during the General Assembly of 1867, and having been again elected to this office thirty years later, in 1897, in which latter assembly he served as a member of a number of important committees, including that on Cities and Boroughs, proving a discriminating and influential member of the legislative body. He was also a member of the board of selectmen of Union for a term of three years, was for several years incumbent of the office of constable, was assessor for two years, collector of taxes a number of terms, and also a member of the board of review on several different occasions. From this it may be seen that he is held in high honor in the community, being essentially public-spirited and doing all in his power to forward the best interests of his town, county and State, along lines of legitimate advancement and material prosperity. The cause of education has ever elicited his hearty support, and he has served several years as a member of the school committee of his district.

We now turn more definitely to the life history of Edward M. Corbin. He was born on the old homestead, in Union, Aug. 5, 1854, and after receiving his elementary education in the public schools, he attended a select school taught by Miss Ellen Wheeler, while still later he was a student in a similar school presided over by Miss Sarah Paul, a very competent and faithful instructor; his technical scholastic work was completed under the tuition of John O. Booth, of Union Center. He left school at the age of eighteen years and thereafter was employed for a portion of the time on the home farm, and the balance in various positions, until he had attained his legal majority, his experiences having given him valuable lessons in connection with proper business methods and quickened his energies and his desire to win success through his own efforts. At that age Mr. Corbin went to Woonsocket, R. I., where he entered the employ of the Woonsocket Rubber Company, devoting his attention to the manufacture of boxes, and there he remained until December, 1878—period of two years.

He then took a position as salesman and bookkeeper for Myron Kinney, who was engaged in the lumber business at Putnam, and during his four years' association with this concern, gained that intimate knowledge and practical experience which have stood him so well in hand in the line of work to which he has since devoted his attention—that of architect, carpenter and contractor and builder. In the fall of 1882 he came to Putnam and assumed the position of bookkeeper for E. M. Wheaton, the leading contractor and builder of the city, later acting as salesman also and finally being made foreman of the outside work, in which capacity he was retained until March, 1895, when was effected the organization of the Wheaton Building & Lumber Company; Mr. Corbin became one of the incorporators of the concern, under the laws of the State, and he was elected to the dual office of secretary and treasurer, which he has ever since retained, Mr. Wheaton being president of the company. In their factory, which is equipped with the most modern machinery and accessories, they employ about twenty-five skilled mechanics in the manufacturing of interior finishings, builders' supplies, sash, doors, blinds, and similar products, while they also control a large and important enterprise in the line of general contracting and building, for their field of operations is wide and the scope of the enterprise is constantly expanding through their fidelity and high-class workmanship, the name of the concern being a voucher for absolute reliability. At the time of this writing (1903) the concern is engaged in the erection of government barracks on Lovell Island, at Fort Standish, Mass., involving a contract amounting to several thousands of dollars, while they also had the contract for the inside finishing of the fine high school building in South Boston, Mass.—these being two of many important contracts which they have secured, while in many towns and cities may be found monuments to their skill and ability as builders.

Mr. Corbin has made a particular study of the noble art of architecture and has drawn the plans and specifications for many of the most substantial and attractive modern buildings in Putnam and elsewhere, while he is now the regular architect of his company and is known as a thoroughly practical and scientific man in his profession. In his political proclivities Mr. Corbin has been a stalwart supporter of the Republican party from the time of attaining his majority, and though he has never sought official preferment, he has served as constable since taking up his residence in Putnam. He is also a veteran fireman of the city, as he has been connected with the local department for a period of five years, and has shown in this, as in divers other ways, his distinctive interest in the welfare of his city. His religious faith is that in which he was reared, and he is a prominent member of the Second Congregational Church of Putnam, of which he has served as treasurer since January, 1899, while

Hugh C. Murray

900 he was elected a deacon and has since been incumbent of this position. He has been secretary of the Sunday-school since 1897, and there is no department of the church work in which both he and his wife do not maintain a lively interest, their influence, zeal and tangible aid being duly appreciated by the pastor, and the congregation of which they are members.

On May 1, 1880, was solemnized the marriage of Edward M. Corbin to Miss Sarah Hoyle, the daughter of George B. and Hannah (Standish) Hoyle, of Putnam, and this union has been blessed with three children, namely: Frederick Morillo, who was born July 29, 1882, a graduate of the Putnam high school, of the class of 1901, who is now engaged in the study of architecture under the effective direction of his father; Harold Standish, born March 1, 1888, a member of the class of 1903 in the Putnam high school, where he is taking a commercial course, preparing himself for the vocation of stenographer and bookkeeper; and Harlie Inez, born Nov. 26, 1890, now a student in the grammar school.

It would be but repetition at this point to portray Mr. Corbin as a man of broad intelligence and genuine public spirit, for these characteristics have been revealed in the lines of this review. Strong in his individuality, he never lacks the courage of his convictions; and there are, as dominating elements in this individuality, a lively human sympathy and an abiding charity and an integrity which has gained him uniform esteem and confidence.

HUGH CLARK MURRAY presents in his own career a most fertile theme for the historical writer. In his business career success has crowned his efforts to a marked degree, and he has become one of the largest individual dry goods merchants in Willimantic. It may truly be said of him that he is never too much occupied with his own cares not to be ready to respond to any call for time or money on behalf of the general progress of the community in which his useful life is passing; personally, he is a pleasant and courteous gentleman, and to meet him is a privilege. When Mr. Murray first came to Willimantic, there were eleven dry goods stores, and now there are but four: of these his remains, and bears an enviable reputation throughout Windham county and the adjacent regions.

Mr. Murray came to Willimantic from leading dry goods houses in Boston and Providence, in March, 1879, and opened a small store in the Card building, which he removed to the corner store of the Opera House on its completion in 1880. There his business steadily increased until all that had originally constituted five stores were surrendered to its demands, but fourteen years later it had outgrown the Opera House corner, and Mr. Murray determined to build on a scale of provision that would take care of his business for years to come. The Murray Building was put up, and in it on March 17, 1894, Mr. Murray opened his Boston Store. The Murray Building is an imposing three-story brick structure on the corner of Main and Church streets, the center of the city, within a stone's throw of the Railroad Station, and it has done more than anything else in recent years to improve the appearance of commercial Willimantic. It has a frontage of seventy feet on Main street, and ninety feet on Church street; the different floors are well studded and lighted; and throughout the building is substantial. It is heated by steam, and has both gas and electric lights; the Lamson ball cash carrier system connects all departments with the counting room on the main floor, and every modern device for expediting business is employed. The stock is in keeping with the handsome store; it is new and fresh, and consists of millinery, furniture, carpets and similar goods in addition to an unusually fine and well selected assortment of dry goods. A passenger elevator runs from the basement to the top floor; a grand stairway leads from each floor to the one below; and the four floors are all devoted to the extensive and increasing business of the house.

Mr. Murray was born March 1, 1849, at Catrine, Ayrshire, Scotland, a son of Thomas and Mary (McNinn) Murray, who lived and died in Scotland. Hugh was one of a large family born to them, and was the only one of the children to come to the United States. There are no relatives of his name in this country. Mr. Murray had his education in the excellent local schools of his time and community, which he left at the early age of twelve years to become a clerk in the dry goods house of Archibald Thompson, a merchant at Catrine, where he received two shillings a week as his pay. When he was somewhat older he secured a position as a clerk in Glasgow, and remained in that city until 1871. That year he sought a field more satisfactory to him in the United States, coming from Liverpool, on the steamer "Baltic." In Boston he found his first employment as a clerk for Hogg, Brown & Taylor, then located on the corner of Washington and Temple streets. From Boston, after a stay of some time, he went to Providence, where he entered the employ of the firm of Collender, Macauslan & Troup. With that noted firm he remained until his advent in Willimantic. Mr. Murray came to this city with but a limited capital, but he had a gilt-edged credit and it was never difficult for him to secure any goods he wished. His former employers knew him well, and his own experience illustrated the saying that "a good name is a golden girdle." His credit has never been allowed to come in question, and through all his successful career he has met every engagement to the letter.

Mr. Murray visited his Scottish home in 1890, and again in 1900, his second trip including a stay at the Paris Exposition. In 1884 Mr. Murray cast his first vote in this country, and voted for James G. Blaine. Since that year he has continued to vote the Republican ticket. In the field of politics he has never gone farther than to cast his ballot, but has, rather, firmly declined all honors in that direction, devoting himself strictly and absolutely to his business.

Mr. Murray was married in December, 1884, to Miss Mary E. Brown, of Willimantic, a daughter of Robert Brown. She died in 1889, leaving no children, and in November, 1897, Mr. Murray was married to Miss Jane Porteous, of Norwich, Conn., a native of Scotland. Her brother, John Porteous, is a member of the extensive mercantile house of Porteous & Mitchell, of Norwich. Mr. Murray is a charter member of Obwebetuck Lodge, No. 16, I. O. O. F., and is a director in the Board of Trade, of which he was one of the original members. He belongs to the Merchants' Exchange, and is the president of the Windham Silk Co., having occupied that position since the formation of the company. His public spirit and enterprise is shown by the fact that he is a stockholder in almost every manufacturing enterprise that is found in Willimantic. Mrs. Murray is a member of the Congregational Church, and both she and her husband command in an unstinted measure the confidence and respect of the community.

THE CARROLL FAMILY, of Windham and New London counties, is one of the oldest families of New England. (I) Nathaniel Carroll, the first of whom we have any definite knowledge, was born in 1638 in Salem, Mass., where he spent his life and where he died. He married Mary Haines, of Beverly, Mass., in 1659, and became the father of seven children, namely: Mary, born July 20, 1661; Nathaniel (2), 1663; Samuel, 1666; Benjamin, 1670; Joseph, 1674; Hannah, 1677; and Edward, 1680.

(II) Nathaniel Carroll (2), son of Nathaniel, was born in 1663, in Salem, Mass., and spent his life in Boxford, Mass., where he was a cordwainer, or leather dresser, and also a sealer of leather. He died in 1724 and was buried in Boxford. In 1683 he was married in Salem, to Priscilla Downing, to which union eight children were born: Mary, in 1687; Hannah, Oct. 29, 1690; Nathaniel (3), Oct. 31, 1691; Samuel, Dec. 5, 1693; Elizabeth, in 1695; Joanna, April 20, 1697; John, Nov. 12, 1701; and Daniel, in 1703.

(III) Nathaniel Carroll (3), son of Nathaniel (2), was born Oct. 31, 1691, in Boxford, Mass. He spent his life in Middleton, Mass., where he was engaged in the leather business and was a sealer of leather, as was his father. He died in Middleton, Mass., and was buried there. In 1715 he married, and his wife, Hannah, bore him six children: Francis, born in 1717; Nathaniel, in 1718; Hannah, in 1721; Abigail, in 1725; Amos in 1728; and Mary, in 1731.

(IV) Amos Carroll, son of Nathaniel (3), was born Jan. 23, 1728, in Middleton, Mass., where he grew to manhood. On Sept. 29, 1748, he married Mary Smith, of Middleton. In 1749 he was deeded a tract of land by his uncle Samuel Carroll, in the town of Killingly, Windham Co., Conn., in that part of Thompson known as the Brandy Hill District. He later removed to East Thompson on the farm known as the Kitt Curliiss farm, where he spent some time, and then, April 5, 1765, he bought the Fort Hill farm, now owned by John E. Doane, in Thompson, where he spent the remainder of his life, engaged in general farming. He was one of the leading men of his day in that section of the county. He turned out at the Lexington Alarm, April 19, 1775, and in 1788 was a lieutenant in the 7th company, 11th Conn. regiment. He died Nov. 23, 1792, and was buried in East Thompson cemetery. His first wife died Dec. 20, 1757, and was buried in East Thompson cemetery. Three children were born to this union: Mary, born in 1749, who died April 7, 1816, wife of Daniel Hemingway; John, born Jan. 5, 1754, who married Hannah Thayer and died March 26, 1823; Ephraim, born Nov. 19, 1757, who married Lucy Clark and died Jan. 28, 1812. For his second wife Amos Carroll married, Dec. 7, 1758, Lucy Hosmer Barrett, a widow, who was born July 27, 1728, and died April 13, 1817; to this union the following children were born: Abigail, born June 9, 1762, who died April 11, 1849, wife of Joseph Tourtelotte, of East Thompson; Wyman, born Feb. 23, 1765; Hannah, born March 2, 1768, who died July 4, 1839, wife of Joshua Tourtelotte, of East Thompson; Elijah, born Jan. 27, 1771, who died April 13, 1848, and who married Pasha Smith; Rachel, born March 25, 1774, died Nov. 23, 1819, wife of John Burrill.

(V) Wyman Carroll, son of Lieut. Amos Carroll, was born on the Fort Hill farm, Feb. 23, 1765, and there grew to manhood, making farming his life occupation. He owned and occupied the Fort Hill farm. He also taught school in that section during the winter season for a period of eighteen years. Taking a deep interest in public matters, he held a prominent place among his townsmen, and was a selectman of the town of Thompson for many years, and also represented the town in the State Legislature. He was often called upon to settle estates. Inheriting from his father a deep and loyal love of his country, he was active in the local militia, and was captain of one of the State's militia companies. In religious belief he was a consistent member of the Baptist Church. He died Nov. 3, 1827, and was buried in the Jacobs cemetery, East Thompson, Conn. On April 17, 1795, he married Sarah Crosby, who was born Nov. 20, 1776, two months after her father's death; she died Dec. 22, 1844, and was buried in the same cemetery with her husband. She was a daughter of Stephen and Hannah (Carroll) Crosby, the former of whom was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, who turned out at the Lexington alarm, and who in 1776 was appointed captain in the 3d battalion, Wadsworth's brigade, under command of Col. Sage, and was killed in the ttle of Harlem Heights, N. Y., Sept. 15, 1776. Eleven children blessed the union of Wyman and Sarah Carroll, as follows: Arthur, born Feb. 27, 1796, who married Mary Munyan, and died June 3, 1834; Lucy, born Oct. 27, 1797, who married Silas Mason Jacobs, and died June 30, 1876; George, born April 5, 1799, who died Oct. 28, 1817; Mary Ann, born April 24, 1801, who married Chandler I. Pratt, and died Oct. 23, 1835; Wyman, born July 3, 1803, who died Sept. 17, 1811; James Hosier, born Aug. 22, 1805, who married Lydia Wilcox, and died Sept. 30, 1835; Maria, born Oct. 28, 1807, who died Oct. 6, 1809; Sarah Crosby, born Nov. 6, 1809, who married Deacon Joseph D. Jacobs, and died April 25, 1887; Betsey Maria, born March 2, 1812, who married Rev. W. L. Brown, a Baptist minister, and died April 23, 1867; Lucius Wyman, born Jan. 22, 1815; and Emily Russell, born Jan. 9, 1818, who married Jonathan Luther, of Worcester, Mass., and died Jan. 5, 1893.

(VI) Lucius Wyman Carroll was born at Thompson, Jan. 22, 1815, and worked on a farm until he was fifteen years old. On March 2, 1830, he moved to Webster, Mass., and entered the employ of Wiswall & Sanford. He always preserved the written contract which his guardian, Stephen Crosby, made with this firm, and which stipulated that he was to receive $15 a year for his services, if he staid one year only. If two years he was to receive $20 for the first year and $35 for the second. He remained with Wiswall & Sanford seven years. Eleven days before he was twenty-one years old he became a partner in the firm of Wiswall, Stockwell & Carroll, having a one-quarter interest in three stores. Mr. Wiswall furnished Mr. Carroll with the funds necessary to establish him in the firm, without security. Mr. Carroll went to Millbury, Mass., where he took charge of one of the firm's stores. On March 22, 1837, Mr. Wiswall died, and Mr. Carroll then returned to Webster, Mass., where, in company with J. P. Stockwell, he put up the first building at Webster depot. For three years he was in partnership with Mr. Stockwell and then carried on the business himself for two years. On Feb. 1, 1843, Mr. Carroll came to Norwich and began the sale of manufacturers' supplies in a store on Water street. He conducted the business alone until 1865, when E. P. Jacobs and Loren A. Gallup were taken into partnership, and the firm name became L. W. Carroll & Co. Mr. Jacobs died in 1874 and Capt. Gallup retired in 1876. Mr. Carroll then took his eldest son, Adams P. Carroll, into the firm, which became L. W. Carroll & Son, which it has since remained. At the time of his death Mr. Carroll was the oldest business man on Water street.

Mr. Carroll was one of the promoters of the water power company, at Taftville and Occum, which resulted in the establishment of large and beneficial interests in Norwich. He also owned a large cotton mill in Griswold. For about forty years Mr. Carroll was identified with the financial interests of the town and city, having been at various times a director in the Thames, Quinebaug and First National Banks, and the Norwich Savings Society. For more than twenty-five years he was the president of the Quinebaug and First National Banks.

For half a century Mr. Carroll was connected with the Central Baptist Church, and most of that time as a member. For a long time he was chairman of the Society committee, and always took a deep interest in church affairs. Though a Republican in politics and duly interested in the welfare of the party, Mr. Carroll never sought public office. At one time he was a member of the court of common council. He was always public-spirited and during the Civil war did his full share to aid the Union cause. Mr. Carroll was unusually active for his years, and possessed a very cheerful disposition. He had a fine memory, a good fund of facts about public events which took place in his life, and talked unusually well. He was always interested in educational matters, and was one of the original incorporators of the Norwich Free Academy. Mr. Carroll died at his home in Norwich, Sept. 25, 1900, and was buried in Yantic cemetery.

Lucius W. Carroll was married May 17, 1843, in Millbury, Mass., to Charlotte Lathe Pope, daughter of the late Jonathan Pope, of Norwich. Mrs. Carroll died Dec. 29, 1897, and was buried in Yantic cemetery. Five children blessed their union: Charlotte Augusta, born Sept. 16, 1844, who died Sept. 24, 1860, and was buried in Yantic cemetery; Charles Lucius, March 10, 1847, who was lost at sea in July, 1864; Adams Pope, June 20, 1850; William Crosby, Jan. 6, 1855, who died May 9, 1855; and George Wyman, May 4, 1859.

ADAMS POPE CARROLL was born in Norwich, Conn., June 20, 1850, and was educated in the Norwich public schools and Norwich Free Academy, where he graduated in 1868, being valedictorian of his class. He completed his education at Brown University, from which he was graduated in 1871 with the degree of Ph. B. After his return from college he became a partner with his father, and so continued up to the latter's death, when he took charge of the business and has conducted it ever since. He is a Republican but would not be classed as a politician. He is a member of the Central Baptist Church, and president of the board of managers, is trustee of the Otis Library, and of the Norwich Savings Society. Mr. Carroll takes a deep interest in genealogy and has made extensive research regarding the Carroll, Crosby, Pope and Adams families.

George Wyman Carroll, youngest son of the late Lucius Wyman Carroll, was born in Norwich, May 4, 1859, and was educated in his native town. For a number of years he was with L. W. Carroll & Son, but he is now engaged in the brokerage business in Norwich. Like all his family he is a Republican, and is also a member of the Baptist church. On Oct. 1, 1884, he married Emma Frances Briggs, who was born Jan. 27, 1861, daughter of the late Hon. Ira Greene Briggs. They have one child, George Wyman, who was educated in the public schools of Norwich, the Norwich Free Academy and at Dr. Holbrook's Military School at Ossinging, New York.

CHARLES JAMES FOX, M. D., of Willimantic, Windham county, is of distinguished American ancestry, a native of Connecticut, and has achieved distinction in the three-fold capacity of physician, writer and public official. Dr. Fox is in the ninth generation from Thomas Fox, who settled Concord, Mass., and from extensive and original researches made by Dr. Roswell Fox, and completed by his son, Dr. Charles J., the following facts are substantiated by the records and authorities:

Sir Stephen Fox was born shortly after Charles I. ascended the English throne, and died shortly after the accession of George I., his son Henry becoming the first Lord Holland. This distinguished character married the eldest daughter of the second Duke of Richmond, her great-grandmother being the Duchess of Portsmouth, showing in ancestral line the blood of Charles II. of England, and Henry IV. of France. To Lord Holland was born a family of three sons, James, Stephen and Thomas, the latter being referred to above.

Samuel Fox, his son, was born in 1650, and died in 1725; his son Samuel, who was born in 1681, moved to North Parish, Montville (Fox's Mills); his son Benjamin, was the father of Joseph, who was born at New London, where he married Hannah Cracker; their son Roswell, born June 2, 1751, became a captain in the Revolutionary war, and fought at Bunker Hill, participating in the most exciting and stirring scenes of the making of a great nation, and he died at Lebanon, Conn., June 2, 1825. He was married Dec. 11, 1785, to Phoebe, a daughter of Jabez Hough, of Bozrah, and granddaughter of Capt. John Hough (2). She was born Oct. 10, 1763, and died March 20, 1841, in Bozrah. Her mother, Phoebe, was the daughter of Lieut. Gibson Harris. Jabez Hough and Phoebe Harris were married March 15, 1754.

David Austin Fox, son of Capt. Roswell, was born Dec. 29, 1803, and died in Bozrah Nov. 6, 1879. He was married, first to Wealthy, a daughter of Nathaniel Saxton, of Lebanon, and she became the mother of three children: Roswell, mentioned below; Eunice, who died when about a year old; and David Austin, Jr., a physician, who was graduated from the University of New York in 1852, and at the present time is living in Clinton, Conn. The mother died in Goshen Society, Dec. 10, 1829. The second wife of David Austin Fox was Sarah H., a daughter of Nehemiah and Sarah, Waterman, and she became the mother of six children. Of the latter is yet living, Sarah Maria, widow of H. H. Starkweather, at one time a member of Congress.

Dr. Roswell Fox was born in Lebanon, Conn., Nov. 14, 1825, and was reared on a farm, having his first schooling in the district school, and making such progress that at the age of seventeen he became a teacher himself. After a time he attended Bacon Academy at Colchester, Conn., and the academy at Wilbraham, Mass. In 1844 he took up the study of medicine in the office of Dr. Pinney at Yantic, and the following year entered Yale College. After a year he repaired to New York, to attend the University of the city, and in 1847 he received his diploma from that institution, and went to Wethersfield, where he made his home until his death, Oct. 25, 1898. For half a century he successfully practiced his profession, and he was held in the highest esteem both as a man and as a member of the medical fraternity.

Dr. Fox was appointed visiting physician of the State Prison located at Wethersfield, of which his father, David A. Fox, was one of the board of directors. In 1896 he gave up his practice to enjoy a little well earned rest before his busy and useful life should come to an end. In 1848 he was married to Miss Ann M. Gager, with whom he lived to celebrate their golden wedding. To them were born two children: (1) Charles J. was born Dec. 12, 1854, in Wethersfield. (2) Edward G., also born in Wethersfield, Aug. 8, 1859, began studying medicine in his father's office in 1878, and the following year entered the New York University. In addition to the prescribed course of three years, he took a special course of study of the heart and lungs, and was graduated in 1883 with high honors. He formed a partnership with his father at Wethersfield, where he has ever since been in successful practice. From 1891 to 1898 he was visiting physician at the State Prison, and on July 1, 1900, was again appointed to that position. He is a prominent member of the State and Hartford County Medical Societies, and of the American Medical Association. In fraternal circles he is a 32d-degree Mason, and belongs to Washington Commandery, K. T., of Hartford. In politics he is a Republican, and in religion a Congregationalist. On Oct. 26, 1892, he was married to Miss Frances S. Wells, of Wethersfield, and they have one son, Kenneth Lewis, born Jan. 30, 1896.

Dr. Roswell Fox entered upon the practice of his profession with a cash capital of fifteen dollars, and gained success by diligent and persistent effort. He was a stanch Democrat, and a liberal supporter of the Congregational Church. His townsmen attested their appreciation of his character and ability by electing him to various offices, among them being selectman and school visitor. Dr. Fox was a member of the State and county medical societies, and took great interest in their proceedings. For twenty years he was president of the Comstock-Ferre Seed Co., of Wethersfield. Socially he belonged to the old Charter Oak Fellowship Lodge, I. O. O. F.

Dr. Charles James Fox was reared in his native town, where he attended both the public and private schools until he entered the Hartford high school, from which he was graduated in 1872. The same year he began the study of medicine in his father's office, and after special courses at the Bellevue and Charity Hospitals, in New York, graduated from the University of New York in 1876 with high honors. He at once became physician-in-chief of the Hartford City Hospital, a position he retained until March, 1877, when he came to Willimantic, opening an office here in April, of the same year, and following his practice to the present time. In the intervening years he has won a standing as one of the ablest and foremost physicians and surgeons of the State. The Journal of the American Medical Association pays him the high and deserved compliment, "as one of the most active and intelligent members of his profession in the State."

Professional rather than political matters have always occupied the attention of Dr. Fox, and out of the many public honors urged upon him by a wide circle of friends, he has accepted only those that were closely allied to the uninterrupted practice of his profession. Dr. Fox is a hard worker and a close student, and enjoys an extensive acquaintance with professional and public men, being well known as a valuable contributor to State, national and international publications. His writings bear the stamp of literary and scientific excellence, always receiving a marked and wide-spread attention. He is a member, and at one time was president, of the Windham County Medical Society, which he represented in the State Medical Society, 1879, 1881, 1884, 1893, 1894, 1895 and in 1898. He is a member of the Connecticut State Medical Association, and was chairman of the committee on Matters of Professional Interest in 1895. In 1891 he was the Windham county member of the Centennial committee to make arrangements for the Centennial of the Connecticut Society held at New Haven in 1893, and has been very frequently chosen to represent the State Medical Societies at the other State organizations. In 1881, and again in 1882, he was elected to represent the American Medical Organizations before the societies of Europe, being a member of the International Medical Congress and also of the American Health Association. Dr. Fox was chairman of the Connecticut delegation to the National American Medical Association held at Atlantic City June 5, 1900, being State delegate to the same body at St. Paul in June, 1901, and was a member of the committee on Organization in the last body. He is a member of the Association of Military Surgeons of the United States, and in 1883 became the first medical examiner of the towns of Windham, Scotland and Chaplin. In 1886 he was appointed, by Gov. Lounsbury, Surgeon-General of the National Guard of Connecticut, and soon became widely known as a capable and efficient officer of that organization. Since 1883 he has been a member of the United States Board of Surgeons at Willimantic, and is now a member of the non-resident staff of the Backus Hospital at Norwich. In June, 1902, he was chosen vice-president of the United States Association of United States Pension Surgeons, and in 1901 he was elected a member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science. In July, 1902, a permanent organization for social purposes was formed of Connecticut members of the American Medical Association, and Dr. Fox was elected its president.

Dr. Fox was a charter member of the Willimantic Board of Trade and in December, 1890, was appointed a member of the Committee of Fifteen to draft a new city charter for Willimantic, and presented it to the General Assembly of 1891. He is a prominent member of the Masonic fraternity, having attained the 32d degree, and being connected with many Masonic bodies, and receiving many honors at the hands of his fellow-craftsmen. He belongs to Eastern Star Lodge, No. 44, F. & A. M.; Trinity Chapter, No. 9; Olive Branch Council No. 10; and St. John's Commandery, No. 11, all these bodies being in Willimantic. The Doctor is Past Grand Prelate of the Grand Commandery of Connecticut, and a permanent member of the Grand Commandery. He was a charter member of Sphinx Temple, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, of Hartford, and he is a member of the Connecticut Sovereign Consistory at Norwich. Dr. Fox was a charter member of Obwebetuck Lodge, No. 16, I. O. O. F., at Willimantic, where he also belongs to the K. P. and the Royal Arcanum, of which he has been medical examiner since its organization. The Doctor belongs to the Connecticut Society of the Sons of the American Revolution, and is a prominent member of the Connecticut Historical Society. He is a member of the Congregational Church, and is a kindly and courteous Christian gentleman, enjoying an extensive and influential acquaintance throughout the State.

On May 18, 1887, Dr. Fox was married to Miss Lillian Winslow, second daughter of Rev. Horace and Charlotte Henrietta (Pettibone) Winslow; she died Sept. 28, 1888.

JOHN WITTER, deceased. During a long and useful life John Witter, of Brooklyn, Windham county, was worthy of the esteem in which he was universally held, being a man of unusual intellectual fiber, endowed with good judgment and always living up to a high standard of Christian citizenship. His death was a distinct loss to his family, his church and his community.

John Witter, late of Brooklyn, was a grandson of Nathan and Keziah (Branch) Witter, who moved from Preston, Conn., in 1754.

Jacob B. Witter, the father of the late John Witter, was born in 1772, on the old Stetson place, in the western part of the town of Brooklyn. Some years after his marriage he located on the farm which is now occupied by his granddaughter, Mrs. Ellen Bolles, and there he passed out of life, March 13, 1839. A man of temperate life, an excellent farmer, he was also noted for a ready wit which made his society sought in all social circles. Jacob B. Witter was a member of the old Episcopal Church, and he was buried in the yard attached to that building.

In 1794 Jacob B. Witter was united in wedlock to Olive Brown, who was born in Canterbury in 1774, and died Oct. 8, 1859, two children being born to this union: John, Feb. 4, 1796; and Orrin, July 15, 1797. The latter became a noted physician and one of the town's most prominent citizens. He studied medicine with Dr. Hutchins, of Brooklyn, and later with Dr. Thomas Hubbard, of Pomfret, completing his studies at Yale Medical College in 1820. During the same year he established himself as a physician, in Chaplin, Conn., and soon gained the confidence and approbation of the people. Two years later, when the town was incorporated, he was chosen the first town clerk, and was later a member of the board of education, and was also made judge of probate in his district. The latter office he held for many years, until age excluded him from service.

For nearly fifty years Dr. Witter continued in practice, retiring about two years previous to his death, which took place Feb. 2, 1869. Dr. Orrin Witter was married to Florinda Preston and two daughters and one son were born to them, one daughter dying in infancy, and the other, Cornelia, marrying Dr. E. C. Holt, of Bennington, N. Y. The son, Dr. Orrin Witter, was born in Chaplin, Conn., April 25, 1835, and married Helen A. Utley, a third of the name, their son, also being a physician. Dr. Witter (2) attended Yale Medical College, and also the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York City, graduating from the latter institution in 1859. He succeeded to the practice of his father and has since conducted the same with remarkable success, in spite of the fact that he has been blind for several years.

The late John Witter was born in Brooklyn, Conn., on the old Evans farm, in the western part of the town, and grew up accustomed to the work and rewards of the farmer boy of the period. His school advantages were in advance of many others, as his father favored education, and he was given an opportunity to attend the public schools and was also sent to a select school. His mind was receptive and he eagerly embraced every occasion to increase his knowledge, becoming one of the most scholarly men of the locality. His attainments were recognized and for more than twenty years he was regarded most favorably as an instructor, not only in his own neighborhood, but also in many of the towns in Massachusetts. Mr. Witter seemed well fitted to be a teacher, for aside from his ability he had a winning manner and a peculiarly happy faculty of imparting instruction. Even so abstract a study as mathematics, he could render interesting, and in this branch of knowledge he was unusually strong, solving without difficulty the most abstruse problems which were sent to him for solution from many sections.

It was not until he had reached middle life, that Mr. Witter became a domestic man, after his marriage locating in Brooklyn, on the farm occupied by his father, and continuing in his professional work until the death of the latter. Then he gave up teaching and spent the remainder of his days engaged in agricultural pursuits, but for a long period he had been a sufferer with cancer of the stomach, and from this his death occurred, Oct. 23, 1868. He was buried in the northern part of old Trinity churchyard, in the shadow of the church where he had long worshipped with his wife and family.

Although Mr. Witter was a staunch Democrat, he had no political ambition, taking only a deep interest in the success of his party and its measures. To satisfy urgent fellow-citizens, he once accepted a term in the State Legislature, when the session was held in New Haven, but his mind was not one fitted to enter upon the intrigues of politics. Always interested in popular education, however, it was in this field that Mr. Witter's ability was conspicuous, and he served on school committees and boards, working with pleasure to the extent of his capacity to found, foster and develop educational interests in his community. His own family enjoyed the best advantages he could provide.

Identified with the Masonic fraternity, he was a brother whom all respected, and in every relation of life Mr. Witter showed the attributes of a high-minded, exemplary citizen. As such he was held in high esteem in the locality, and he left an impress upon his generation.

The marriage of Mr. Witter occurred on April 22, 1835, to Mary A. Bradford, who was born in August, 1802, and was a daughter of Perez Bradford. For many years previous to her death she was a helpless invalid, and after years of patient suffering, passed out of life, Aug. 13, 1877, at the home of her beloved daughter, Mrs. Ellen Bolles, who had tenderly cared for her in her advancing years. Mrs. Witter was a lineal descendant of the old Pilgrim governor, Wm. Bradford, and was in the sixth generation, the only remaining one of that generation. Her beautiful life was an inspiration to others and was a lesson in patience, gentleness and Christian fortitude.

The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Witter were: Olive Elizabeth, who was born Oct. 22, 1836, attended the common and select schools of Brooklyn, and later the Monson Academy, at Monson, Mass. She is now the widow of Rev. Julius H. Ward, an Episcopal clergyman, who died in Boston, Mass., in May, 1897, in the sixtieth year of his age, having filled many charges in that city and also through the State of Maine. For a number of years prior to his death, he was engaged in literary work, being the author of a number of scholarly and interesting books, and also during a long period, filling the chair of literary editor of the Boston Herald. Rev. and Mrs. Ward had two daughters. Mary Olive, who was educated in the leading schools of Boston, Mass., is now the wife of Herbert P. Williams, a son of Dr. Pelham Williams. Herbert P. Williams is the brilliant literary editor of the Boston Herald, and during his vacations his place is ably filled by his accomplished and cultured wife. They have a bright young daughter—Elizabeth Winslow. Grace W. Ward married John Darwin Williams, who is a well-known insurance man in Boston.

Ellen Maria, the second child of Mr. and Mrs. Witter, was born Sept. 3, 1838, and was given the same educational advantages as her sister. She is now the widow of John Bolles, whose death occurred June 30, 1899, at the age of sixty-three years. His father was Armin Bolles, who for many years was clerk of the Windham county court. By trade he was a watchmaker, but followed farming for a number of years and was a well known dealer in antique furniture, rare old china, bric-a-brac, etc., this business being very successfully continued by his widow, who occupies the old Witter homestead in Brooklyn, and is a lady of exceptional business capacity.

The third child of Mr. and Mrs. Witter was John Jacob, who was born Dec. 6, 1841; after an excellent foundation, laid in the common schools of Brooklyn, he was sent for an academical course to Monson Academy, at Monson, Mass., and after graduating at that institution, he entered professional life as a teacher, at the age of seventeen years, at Fort Plain, N. Y., where he is now living a retired life. He married Miss Sarah Potter, daughter of Dr. Uriah Potter, of Fort Plain. Neither he nor Mrs. Bolles are represented by descendants. The family have always possessed the esteem of all with whom they have been brought in contact, and all occupy stations in life, public and social, which reflect honor upon their late distinguished father.

LYON. William Lyon, the original American ancestor of the Woodstock family of that name, was born at Heston, England, Dec. 23, 1620. At the age of fourteen he came to America in the good ship "Hopewell," locating at Roxbury, Mass. He was the son of William Lyon, of Heston, and a descendant of an illustrious family of French extraction, springing from the ancient house of de Leonne, which had its origin in the noble family of the Leonnes of Rome. The American family trace their lineage back in direct line to Sir Roger de Leonne, who was taken to England in 1066 and went into Scotland with King Edgar. For good and faithful services performed by him against Donald Bain, the usurper, he obtained from the King certain lands in Perthshire, which were called after him "Glen Lyon."

William Lyon, the immigrant of Roxbury, was a member of the Ancient Artillery Company in 1645. He was admitted to the communion of the church in 1665. In June, 1646, he was married to Sarah Ruggles, daughter of John Ruggles, who came from the County of Essex, England. The wife died at Roxbury in 1688, and four years later Mr. Lyon died.

The next in line of this family was John Lyon, whose wife was Abigail Polly. The third in line was Deacon William Lyon, born in 1675, whose first wife was Deborah Colburn. After her death, which occurred in 1714, he married Martha Morris. Mr. Lyon died Sept. 27, 1749, having lived in Woodstock since 1686. William Lyon (2), of Woodstock, was born Oct. 26, 1700. His brother, Ebenezer, was born Aug. 13, 1703, and his wife was Rebecca Thorp, of Bristol, whom he married June 28, 1731. She died in 1801, at the age of ninety-five. Elijah, the next in line, son of William (2), was born in 1727, and married Sarah Monger Nov. 26, 1746. William Lyon, of the sixth generation, was born Nov. 11, 1778. His son William was born Oct. 7, 1801.

The Lyon family was conspicuously identified with the struggle for independence, sending the following officers to the army: Capts. Benjamin, Daniel, William, Stephen, and Lieut. Asa Lyon. Some of these served during the entire war and represented the family at Trenton, Long Island, Fort Washington and White Plains. Capt. Benjamin Lyon, with thirty-five men, marched to Boston at the news of the battle of Lexington. Capt. Daniel Lyon followed his example with twenty-seven men. William Lyon was a lieutenant in Capt. Manning's Company at Cambridge. He was also at Trenton in the same capacity and served throughout the war, at one time commanding a company of horse attached to Col. McLellan's Regiment. He began a soldier's career at sixteen years of age, in the old French war. Capt. Stephen Lyon and his company were in the battles of Long Island, Fort Washington and White Plains. Lieut. Lyon was an officer in Putnam's Regiment, and with his company was at the battle of Bunker Hill.

Taking up the history of the family within the past century, the father of George N. Lyon, now a resident of Woodstock, Windham county, was Oliver Watson Lyon, born Aug. 28, 1816. He died at the age of sixty-seven years. By occupation he was a farmer, having earlier in life been a shoemaker. He was very successful as a farmer, having about 125 acres of land. He was a devout member of the Advent Church, and in politics was a stalwart Republican. He was not one who sought office, but was a quiet, unassuming man. Until a short time prior to his death he was in robust health.

Oliver Watson Lyon was married Dec. 9, 1840, to Lydia Ann Shepard, who was a daughter of Whipple and Lydia Ann (Mathewson) Shepard. She was born at Woodstock Feb. 26, 1818, and died Aug. 15, 1900. Their children were as follows: One that died in infancy; George N.; Mary Jane;

Hattie Josephine; William Celar. Mary Jane was born Aug. 19, 1844. In 1876 she married Prescott Perrin Hammond, son of Ezra and Esther Hammond, of Woodstock. Mr. Hammond is a carriage maker, and he is also interested in farming. The children of this marriage were E. Gertrude, born Dec. 6, 1877, at Eastford, Conn., married Jan., 1900, to Samuel N. Brett, the blacksmith of East Woodstock. Esther May, born in Woodstock Oct. 16, 1881. Hattie Josephine, Oliver W. Lyon's fourth child, lives in Worcester, Mass. She was born in Woodstock, Sept. 17, 1846, and married Allen Place, April 13, 1876. William Celar, the fifth child of Oliver W. Lyon, was born Jan. 1, 1850, in Woodstock, and is at present living in Woodstock Valley, where he follows carpentering. He married Abbie Lamb, of Eastford.

The grandfather of George N. Lyon was Warham Lyon, who died at Woodstock, the place of his birth, Dec. 27, 1866, at the age of nearly eighty-one years. He was a soldier in the war of 1812. His wife, Mabel Stacey, of Monson, Mass., died Jan. 24, 1859, in her seventy-fourth year. She was the mother of Oliver Watson; Alfred (deceased Sept. 30, 1885), who married Esther Barlow of West Woodstock, and after her death a widow, Mrs. Gay; Angeline, deceased Feb. 12, 1868, at the age of fifty-two years; Marshall, born Nov. 28, 1821, who died Sept. 10, 1900; Warren, the youngest of the family, who died in 1897, aged seventy-four years.

The great-grandfather of George N. was Warham Lyon, who died May 7, 1823, aged seventy-six years. His first marriage was to Anna Bugbee, who died March 4, 1791. He then married Martha Bugbee, who died March 3, 1828, at the age of sixty-seven. To the first marriage seven children were born. There were no children by the second marriage.

The great-great-grandfather of George N. was Ebenezer Lyon, mentioned above as the son of Deacon William. He was born in 1703, and died in 1767 at Fort Woodstock. He was one of the first settlers of the western part of the town of Woodstock and became one of its foremost citizens. The first West Woodstock brickyards, saw and grist mills were carried on by Ebenezer Lyon, who owned much land in the vicinity of Black Pond. A dam still standing at the outlet of the pond was built by his slaves, the only existing specimen of Woodstock's slave labor. Mr. Lyon was a man of wealth and great influence in his day.

George N. Lyon, one of the worthy living representatives of the family, was born at Woodstock Feb. 25, 1843. He was educated in the public schools of the village, which he attended until eighteen years of age; he then assisted his father on the farm until he reached his majority. Having a mechanical turn of mind he took up the trade of carpentry, working in this capacity for George Moody of Watertown, Mass.; for Leonard Cutler, of Southbridge, and Jeremiah Youngs, of North Grosvenor Dale. He worked on the mills there, being foreman of a group of men. He remained at that point for two years and then returned to his home town, where he passed the following few years. After a short time spent at Putnam, Conn., where he worked at his trade, he returned again to his native place, and purchased the Darnus Barlow homestead in West Woodstock. Here he built his present commodious home and engaged in agricultural pursuits. His farm comprises 125 acres of fine farming land, which yields a good supply of general products. Mr. Lyon makes a specialty of Devonshire cattle; having at the present time a herd of forty of these beautiful animals.

The Lyon family attends the Congregational Church, although Mrs. Lyon is a member of the Baptist organization. Politically Mr. Lyon affiliates with the Republican party, but is not active in that line.

The marriage of George N. Lyon occurred Jan. 10, 1877, to Jessie Etta Britten, daughter of William and Rosanna (Smith) Britten, of Woodstock. Mrs. Lyon's father is still living. The children of this marriage are Maud Eliza, born May 31, 1878; Clarence Oliver, born Feb. 2, 1882; Eugene George, born Sept. 23, 1885.

MARSHALL LYON. This worthy and esteemed member of the Lyon family was a resident for eight decades, of the town of West Woodstock, Windham county, where his estimable widow now survives him. He was born in West Woodstock Nov. 28, 1821, and died Sept. 10, 1900. He was the son of Warham and Mabel (Stacey) Lyon. Marshall Lyon received a good common school education. At maturity he purchased the Darius Barlow place in West Woodstock, which he cultivated for a number of years, finally selling it to his nephew, George N. Lyon. He then returned to the old homestead, where he remained till the time of his death. Mr. Lyon was a deeply religious man, having been converted in early life under the ministrations of the Baptist Church. He later became an attendant on the services of the Advent Church of Woodstock Valley, but for several years previous to his death was unable to leave the house. He had been a healthy man during all his life until his last sickness. He was a strong supporter of Republican principles but contented himself with simply casting his vote for that ticket, not caring for office. If there was any distinguishing characteristic it was possibly in his penchant for hard work, his energetic nature not being satisfied with a simply drifting existence—he liked to drive things. About the farm he was very neat, his motto being "a place for everything, and everything in its place."

Mr. Lyon married Dec. 13, 1871, Miss N. Gertrude Marcy. Mrs. Lyon, who now survives her consort, is a lady of superior intelligence and refinement. She is also of one of the old New England families, being the daughter of Lucius L. Marcy and Diana Chapman, both of West Woodstock, where Mr. Marcy was for a long time a shoemaker, and later a farmer. He and his wife, both deceased, were held in high esteem.

Thus ends the record of a noble family, one which, not only in the past, but in the immediate present, is wielding an influence for good through its individual members. None stand higher in the estimation of the people of their native town.

EUSTACE CHESTER CHAPMAN, whose death, Jan. 24, 1893, closed a life of honor and integrity, was one of the most useful citizens of Rockville, Tolland county.

The coming of the Chapmans (one of the early New England families) to Connecticut dates back to a period more than two and a quarter centuries ago, and their settlement in the territory of the present town of Tolland to approximately one and three-quarters centuries; the various members have been eminently distinguished in both civil and military life.

(I) Edward Chapman, the first American ancestor of one branch of the Tolland Chapmans, came about 1660 to Windsor from England, where he married Elizabeth Fox. He settled in Simsbury, then a part of Windsor, and lost his life at the storming of Narragansett Fort, in December, 1675.

(II) Simon Chapman, son of Edward, born in 1669, lived in Windsor but held lands in Tolland, of which town he was one of the proprietors. He married about 1692, and his son,

(III) Capt. Samuel Chapman, born in 1696, married in 1717 Hannah Strong, and became the progenitor of all the Chapmans in the western part of the town of Tolland, which town began to be settled about 1725. He was the only justice of the peace in Tolland for nine years, and was selectman for eleven years. He died in the service of his country during the French war. Capt. Samuel Chapman's several sons and daughters all married and settled in Tolland, where the sons became the wealthiest men in the town, and were among the most active, public-spirited and influential.

(IV) Col. Samuel Chapman, son of Capt. Samuel Chapman, born in Windsor, a few years prior to his father's settling in Tolland, married in 1750 Sarah White, of Bolton, Conn. He was a very remarkable man, and a very eminent citizen of Tolland. He served as a captain in the French and Indian war, and as colonel of the 22d regiment of Connecticut Militia during the entire war of the Revolution. His was the master spirit that brought the citizens of Tolland into unanimous and energetic action in the Revolutionary contest. His personal courage and astonishing hardihood were proverbial among his soldiers. Few men could be found so unflinching in the moments of danger, and his firmness and energy never faltered under any circumstances. He was rather under the middle stature, had blue eyes, and his voice was remarkable for its loudness and energy. He was a great reader, taciturn and of studious habits. He never laughed, and it is said that a smile seldom lighted his countenance. Col. Chapman was elected to the General Assembly from Tolland forty-three times, when the election was held twice a year, and attended fifteen special sessions of that body. He was a member of the convention in 1788, and voted for the adoption of the present Constitution of the United States. He was several years a selectman, and for twenty-six years (1772-1797) served as justice of the peace.

Among other prominent men of the name in Tolland were: Deacon Elijah Chapman, who was elected several terms to the General Assembly, and also served as selectman; Gen. Elijah Chapman, who several times was a member of the General Assembly and for twenty three years served as sheriff of Tolland county; and Capt. Ashbel, who was also several times in the General Assembly, and a member of the convention, in 1818, which framed the constitution of the State.

(V) Of the five children of Col. Samuel Chapman, Samuel, born in 1757, settled in Ellington, Conn. On Oct. 24, 1782, he married Mary Carlton, and became the father of ten children, among whom was Chester, the father of Eustace C.

(VI) Chester Chapman grew to manhood and in March, 1832, married Abigail Loomis, who bore him four children: Samuel Ashleigh, born Dec. 25, 1832; Mary Carlton, Dec. 19, 1834; John Melvin, Dec. 23, 1836; and Emily Elizabeth, June 17, 1839. Abigail Loomis Chapman died March 16, 1840. On Dec. 29, 1840, Chester Chapman wedded Elizabeth Bull, of Ellington, Conn., and five children came to this second marriage: Eustace Chester, born Sept. 30, 1841; Florence Alicia, Oct. 25, 1842; Leslie Clarence, Feb. 16, 1845; Randolph Butler, Nov. 16, 1848; and Edwin Dayton, July 15, 1851.

(VII) Eustace Chester Chapman was born in Ellington and received his education in the public schools in the neighborhood of his father's farm. Early in life he became familiar with the manifold duties pertaining to an agricultural career, but when he was eighteen he became a clerk in the store of Joseph Selden, at Rockville. He also kept for books for three of the mills at the same time, so continuing until 1870, when he became bookkeeper and teller in the Rockville National Bank. So carefully did he perform his duties there, and so thoroughly did he make a study of finance that in 1873 he was elected to the responsible position of cashier, a position he retained until 1891, when he was elected president. During all the years he was connected with the bank, his administration of its affairs was intelligent, and capable, and, withal, most conservative. For some time he was engaged in insurance business with C. E. Harwood, who had succeeded him as cashier. On the Wednesday preceding his death Mr. Chapman was elected a member of the Governing committee at the formation of the Board of Trade.

Mr. Chapman was a quiet man, one who preferred to keep out of the calcium lights of public service, and while he never shirked the duties of honorable citizenship, he never sought any public office. He had served as assessor and as member of the school board, but only when earnestly solicited by those most interested. In his business dealings Mr. Chapman was plain and straightforward, conscientious and honest. Men trusted him implicitly and relied upon his judgment. Genial by nature, he was easily approached and became naturally the confidant and adviser of countless friends. Like many in whom others confide, he himself was reserved, yet under this reserve lay strong convictions and quick perceptions.

In his religious connection Mr. Chapman was a member of the Union Congregational Church. Like his Puritan ancestors he had an abiding faith in the wisdom and love of the Unseen God, and steadfastly endeavored to do the duty that lay nearest him, leaving the outcome in the hands of the Eternal. In that childlike trust his nature became serene and happy, and he was enabled to cheer the weary laden heart of many a fellow traveler on life's pathway. When he entered into rest, all who knew him mourned.

On Jan. 16, 1873, Eustace Chester Chapman was united in marriage with Louisa B. Corlies, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and their children were: Mary Elizabeth; Etta Corlies; Carlton Dunbar, who died March 12, 1894; and Henry Eustace.

The respect and confidence in which Mr. Chapman was held is best evidenced by the remarks of business men at the time of his death. "I had said to my family, if I am the first to be taken from the home, and any of you ever need advice, go to Eustace Chapman." "He was my ideal of a man, straightforward and honorable to the last degree, and fearless in the performance of his duties, speaking only in favor of those he came in contact with, or not at all." "If honor and usefulness and nobility of character, acquired by steady adherence to duty, constitute a long life, he had filled out fully the allotted three score and ten."

The following resolutions were passed by the Board of Directors of the Rockville National Bank, Jan. 25, 1893:

In TESTIMONY of our profound sorrow over the sudden death of our President, and with a deep sense of the great loss we have sustained, we, the Directors of this Bank, desire to put on record some expression of our sympathy with his family and appreciation of his great worth.

Resolved, That in the death of Mr. Chapman, not only this institution, but the entire community, has sustained an almost irreparable loss. Of quiet, unostentatious and retiring manner, patient and earnest in his application to business, his probity of character, genial disposition, affable manners, and unsullied reputation are characteristics of which we bear willing testimony. He was deeply beloved by those of us who have stood with him in intimate personal relations.

Resolved, That we tender to the sorrowing widow and children the heartfelt sympathy of each member of this Board, some of whom have been intimately associated with him for nearly a generation.

Resolved, That this Board attend the funeral of the deceased, and that the Bank be closed during the funeral services. Also, that a copy of this action be presented to the family of the deceased, entered on the records of the Bank, and published in the city papers.

M. EUGENE LINCOLN is of the eighth generation of his family in the United States. It is a matter of tradition that the family originated in Lincolnshire, England, and one of its representatives settled at Taunton (or Hingham), Mass. His son Samuel came to Norwich, Conn., and removed to Windham. In 1692 he was married to Elizabeth Jacobs, by whom he had the following children: Samuel; Jacob; Thomas; Jonah; Nathaniel, who died in infancy; and Elizabeth.

Samuel Lincoln, eldest member of this family, was born in Windham in 1693, and in 1723 was married to Ruth Huntington, by whom he had the following children: Samuel; John; Nathaniel, who attained the very great age of one hundred and five years and five months; Joseph; Eleazer; and David.

John Lincoln, son of Samuel, was born in 1726, and by his wife, Rebecca, had two children, both of whom died young. On May 30, 1758, he was married to Mrs. Annie Stowell, and their children were: Annie; Eleazer; Jonah and Jerusha, twins; and Olive.

Jonah Lincoln, son of John, was born in 1760. In addition to his extensive farming interests, he was for many years engaged in the manufacture of woolen goods. His factory was at North Windham, and there he made satin cloth for the use of the soldiers during the Revolution; but after the war the making of cloth ceased to be profitable, and the firm lost heavily. His sons were with him in business, which was later carried on by one of them, Stowell, alone. They manufactured felts for paper machines. The "Lincoln dam" at North Windham was originally constructed by John Lincoln, to operate a saw mill. Jonah Lincoln devoted his last years to farming, and was quite well-to-do when he died. In politics he was a John Quincy Adams Democrat, and held many prominent political stations, serving several terms in the State Legislature. His death occurred May 14, 1845. In the organization of the Christian Church at North Windham he was very active, and donated the land for the North Windham Cemetery. Jonah Lincoln was married, in 1783, to Lucy Webb, who was born May 31, 1763, and who died July 23, 1846, at the age of eighty-three years. They had the following family: (1) James was born May 31, 1784. (2) Dan, born July 27, 1786, was married in 1811, to Mehitable Flint. (3) Stowell, born Oct. 28, 1788, married Maria Welch; he was long engaged in manufacturing in North Windham; was a captain in the local artillery, and was very prominent in the affairs of the town, where he died March 29, 1870. (4) John, born Feb. 17, 1791, married Millany Huntington, and spent his life in Berks county, Pa., where he died on the farm to which he had devoted his active years. (5) Ralph, born Dec. 22, 1792, married Almira Trumbull, engaged in mercantile business and kept the postoffice at North Windham; he died June 24, 1876. His son, Frank M., was the father of Mrs. M. Eugene Lincoln. (6) Elisha, born Jan. 12, 1795, married Eliza Aplin, was a life long farmer, and died in Van Buren, Ark., after living in Pennsylvania and Ohio. One of his sons is a prominent wholesale druggist in Little Rock. (7) Lucy, born July 11, 1797, married Benjamin Perry, a carpenter, and died in Windham. (8) Marcia, born Nov. 23, 1799, married Luther Burnham, a farmer. (9) Albert, born Sept. 9, 1802, graduated from West Point, and while on his way to Fort Anthony, now Minneapolis, was taken sick and died Oct. 13, 1822, at St. Louis. (10) Burr, born Oct. 2, 1804, married Elmira Wood, and followed the cloth dressing trade, dying Aug. 9, 1850.

James Lincoln, noted above as the eldest child of Jonah Lincoln, was born at North Windham, and at the age of sixteen years was apprenticed to a Mr. Stowell, of Mansfield, whom he accompanied into the wilder regions of New York, where Mr. Stowell was engaged in mill and bridge construction in the vicinity of Utica. James Lincoln remained with him until he was twenty-one years of age, and then returned to New Boston, now North Windham, where he was married. The greater part of his active life was spent in carpenter work in and around Willimantic, and here he helped in the construction of many of the mills and buildings of the city. All his life he had been very active and robust, but a fall which he had a few years before his death broke down his health, and finally proved fatal, his death taking place at North Windham, when he had reached the age of seventy-three years, and there he was buried. On Nov. 27, 1811, James Lincoln was married in North Windham to Asenath Flint, a daughter of John and Sarah (Tilden) Flint, and a relative of the noted Samuel J. Tilden, of New York. To this union were born: Marvin, born May 6, 1813, married Asenath Brooks, who died Sept. 6, 1898, and he is now residing in Washington, but for some years he was a building contractor in Springfield, Mass., and for forty years he was engaged in the manufacture of artificial limbs at Boston, Mass.; Alma, born Sept. 19, 1815, married William L. Dexter, and after his death, George C. Martin, and is now living in Willimantic; Mary Eliza, born Aug. 29, 1817, is the widow of Thomas Wiggins, and has her home in Willimantic; Lorin, born Dec. 3, 1819, married Elizabeth Parker, and lives in Willimantic; Harriet, born Feb.

8, 1822, died at the age of fifteen years; and Orrin F., born Jan. 30, 1825, married first Mary Eliza Marcy, and, second, Mrs. Olive Morey, and is now living in Eagleville, Connecticut.

Lorin Lincoln was born in North Windham, where he was reared a farmer boy, and had his schooling in the local schools. Soon after he was of age he went into the manufacturing business, in a woolen mill, but soon turned his attention to the getting out of timber for ship building and car construction. In 1868 he became a resident of Willimantic, his second location in this city. With his son, M. Eugene, he engaged in retailing groceries and crockery, doing something in the latter line at wholesale, conducting a very successful business until 1894, when he retired, and is now enjoying that rest and ease which should always crown an active and useful career. Lorin Lincoln was married Feb. 17, 1845, in Ashford, to Miss Elizabeth Parker, who was born March 16, 1825, a daughter of Pardon and Fanny (Freeman) Parker, farming people of Ashford. Mrs. Lincoln died March 20, 1889, and was buried in Willimantic. To this marriage were born two children: Maria Elvira, born in Windham, Jan. 13, 1846, married April 30, 1867, John G. Bill, of Chaplin, and they live in Willimantic, where Mr. Bill is a tin and stove dealer; they have one daughter, Alma Lester, at home. Melvin Eugene, born Feb. 23, 1849.

Mr. Lincoln cast his first presidential vote against William Henry Harrison, and has voted for every Democratic candidate since that time. He has refused to be candidate for office, even declining to qualify when elected. Always has he felt that he was a business man, and had no place in political controversies and activities. His business career has been eminently successful, and from the most modest beginnings he has accumulated a very handsome competence. About 1885 he built his home on North street, and is now passing his last years in the respect and confidence of the community, with his only daughter, Mrs. Bill, in charge of the home.

M. Eugene Lincoln was born in North Windham, and has become one of the prominent and influential business men of Willimantic, where his manly qualities, his tireless energy, and common sense, have long been recognized and admired. His early education was received in the North Windham schools under the instruction of Porter B. Peck, S. W. Burnham and others. At a reunion of the students of Mr. Peck, held not long ago, Mr. Lincoln presided. Being the only son of a farmer, and his help being needed at home, his attendance at the summer school ceased when he was ten years old. When he was about twelve his parents removed to South Chaplin, where he attended district school. Mathematics was his favorite study, and in it he had made marked progress at an early age. For a short time he attended the Natchaug high school in Willimantic, when D. P. Corbin was principal, and at seventeen became a teacher in the Bare Hill district at Chaplin, receiving five dollars a week, and was "boarded around." Teaching he soon abandoned because of the smallness of the pay, and turned his attention to other lines. Between the ages of sixteen and twenty he aided in the operation of his father's farm, and in the milling and teaming business. In those years there was much contracting, teaming and hauling of stone for the construction of the New England Railroad, as well as hauling for the mill. In these exciting industries his energy and activity found vent, and he secured an experience that well-fitted him for the labors of after years. In the spring of 1869, though but twenty years of age, Mr. Lincoln bought the interest of J. H. Gray in the grocery of Burnham & Gray, on Main street, Willimantic. After a year and a half he retired from this firm, and bought the grocery store of Snow & McNeil, in the old brick building on the present site of the "Plaza Hotel." Here Mr. Lincoln was associated with his father, under the firm name of L. & M. E. Lincoln. For four years they continued in business, and then exchanged their stock of groceries for an extensive farm at Brimfield, Mass., to which they planned to remove, changing their plans, however, at the last moment to buy the coal and lumber establishment of Whiting Hayden, on Main street, opposite Bridge street. For seven years they continued in business, when E. A. Smith, of Norwich, was made a member of the firm, it becoming Lincoln, Smith & Co. The new firm purchased the coal and lumber business of Silas F. Loomer, and established a branch at Jewett City, Conn. For three years the firm operated three coal and lumber yards, when Lorin Lincoln retired, the firm becoming Lincoln & Smith, the Hayden yard being discontinued. Some two years later Mr. Smith retired in favor of his partner, and Charles L. Boss bought a half interest in the Willimantic business, that at Jewett City being conducted by Mr. Lincoln individually for ten years, when he disposed of it.

Mr. Lincoln was called to take charge of the Willimantic postoffice, Feb. 17, 1895, having been one of the bondsmen of the late Joel W. Webb, and he entered upon his duties as postmaster under temporary appointment until the next meeting of Congress. He sold his interest in the lumber and coal business May 1, 1895, to Charles L. Boss, and on Dec. 18, of the same year, received his appointment as postmaster for four years. Mr. Lincoln was borough clerk in 1872; the following year he was a grand juror; in 1874 he was constable; and has been burgess and selectman two years. Since 1886 he has been connected with the Willimantic Savings' Institute, first as a trustee, and in 1889 as a director, then as vice-president, and in June, 1897, was made president, a position he still holds. He is an officer of the Board of Trade, and is secretary and manager of the Merchants' Exchange. For a time after his retirement from the postoffice Mr. Lincoln had a meat and provision market in his block on Valley street, which he gave up in April, 1901.

As an owner Mr. Lincoln has probably erected more business and residence buildings in Willimantic than any other man now living, and in their construction he was his own architect and draughtsman, a talent already evinced in his boyhood. On the south side of Valley street he erected and owns a row of buildings, which includes the Armory, the Lincoln Block, and the "Park Central Hotel." He has erected ten buildings in other parts of Willimantic, and is ever ready to cooperate in any measure looking to the public good. He succeeded F. F. Webb in the insurance and real estate business, May 1, 1901.

M. Eugene Lincoln was married Nov. 23, 1871, to Miss Sarah A. Burnham, born in Willimantic, in October, 1852, the youngest daughter of G. W. and Miranda (Smith) Burnham. A sketch of her parents appears elsewhere. Mrs. Lincoln died Jan. 10, 1877, and was buried in Willimantic. She was the mother of one child, Louis Burnham, born March 26, 1876, who is now the treasurer of the Cooperative Savings Society of Connecticut, at Willimantic. On Dec. 19, 1878, Mr. Lincoln was married, second, to Miss Edith M. Lincoln, who was born Jan. 14, 1850, in North Windham, Conn., the only child of Frank M. and Mary (Burnham) Lincoln. To this marriage was born one son, Frank Melvin, July 17, 1880, who conducts a store in Willimantic. Mrs. Lincoln is a member of the Congregational Church, and of the Ladies' Society in connection with that body. She is also a member of Anne Wood Elderkin Chapter, D. A. R. Mr. Lincoln is a charter member of the A. O. U. W. at Willimantic, and is also a charter member of the Royal Arcanum. In 1872 he voted for Horace Greeley, and since that time has been a staunch Democrat. In Willimantic he is known as a successful and reliable business man, and for his intelligence, courtesy and geniality, with his integrity and character have made him many warm friends, whose respect and esteem he enjoys.

NOBLE E. LORD, one of the most extensive farmers of Tolland county, and the largest land holder in Hebron, resides in the northern portion of the town, and dates his ancestry back to colonial times.

The first American ancestor was Thomas Lord who came from England and was one of the earliest settlers of Hartford. Both he and his wife, Dorothy, whom he had married in England, died in Hartford, the wife in 1687 at the ripe age of eight-seventy. All of their eight children were born in England and came to America with their parents, while a late generation of the family located in Marlborough, Conn., where the Lord name is one of the oldest in the town.

George Lord, grandfather of our subject, was a farmer and large land holder in the town of Marlborough, Conn., his residence being in the southern part of the place. There he lived his entire life and died in 1852, at the age of seventy-five, in the faith of the Congregational Church. His first wife, Caroline Crocker, bore him one child, Sherman

McLona

..., who married Ophelia T. Buell, was a farmer and died in Marlborough. The second wife of George Lord was Abigail Everett of Ware, Mass., who survived him until 1861. Their children were: Noble E., father of our subject; Hinman, who married Anna E. Hutchinson, and engaged in farming in Marlborough, but later moved to Hebron, where he died, and where his widow now resides.

Noble Everett Lord, the father of the subject of his sketch, was born in 1804, in Marlborough, Conn., where he resided on the home farm until his marriage, having been reared to farm work. After his marriage, he removed to Hebron and rented the "Perk Mann" farm in the eastern part of the town, where he resided for a little over a year, and he then purchased a farm nearby, where he lived the remainder of his life, dying Oct. 11, 1892. Noble E. Lord was a quiet, hard-working man, who reared a large and creditable family and left to them the heritage of a good name. As he was in moderate circumstances, the rearing of his large family was a heavy expense. In politics he was a Republican, and held many of the minor offices of the town, while in religious matters, he adhered to the tenets of the Congregational faith, being a member of the church of that denomination at Hebron. Noble E. Lord married Betsey F. Buckley, who was born in 1816, a native of Colchester, Conn., daughter of William Buckley, and she died Aug. 12, 1861. To them were born: Joshua B., who married Eunice Otis, was engaged in various kinds of business and was an undertaker of Hartford at the time of his death; George R., who married Mary Boud, was a real estate dealer and resides at Asbury Park, N. J.; Daniel B., who was a graduate of Amherst College, became a Congregational minister and died at West Hartford, Conn.; Fedora E., widow of Edwin Percy, resides in New Haven, Conn.; Sophia J. resides in East Hartford, Conn., unmarried; Noble E.; Prudence A. died young; David died young, and his twin brother died at the age of three days; Lucy died young; Loren M., who married Anna Strong, resides in Hebron, engaged in farming; Flora E. died young.

Noble E. Lord, the immediate subject of this biography, was born Nov. 14, 1844, in the northeastern part of Hebron, and attended the district school as well as one term at the select school kept by Henry T. Bowles in Andover. He remained upon the farm until 1865, when he went to Marlborough, and there operated a farm for an uncle for a season. His father needing him at home (the other brothers having left), Noble returned to the homestead, where he remained until after his marriage, when he purchased the "Skinner farm," in the vicinity. After three years he sold this property, and in 1874 purchased another farm known as the "Gilbert place," upon which he still resides. It then consisted of 135 acres, but Mr. Lord has added largely so it until it now consists of 600 acres. Although he was obliged to go heavily into debt for the property, it is now all cleared, and he has made very extensive improvements upon it, erecting all the farm buildings and remodeling the house. In addition to his own house, he has several others upon the property, which are occupied by his tenants. In addition to carrying on general farming, Mr. Lord is an extensive dealer in stock, and in the past cut down and sold lumber from land he purchased. Mr. Lord also has a good meat route, at times running two wagons through the towns of Bolton, Andover, Hebron and Marlborough. From the lowest step of the ladder of fortune, Mr. Lord has become one of the town's most thorough and progressive farmers and substantial citizens, and is well known through all of Tolland county.

On April 21, 1869, Noble E. Lord was married for the first time, to Miss Addie Griswold, a native of Rocky Hill, Conn., daughter of Albro Griswold, a farmer of that locality, and she died Oct. 11, 1891, aged forty-four. To them were born: Herbert J., a joiner residing in Springfield, Mass., was born Jan. 28, 1870, married Bessie E. Vining, and has one child, Noble E.; Everett G., a farmer of Hebron, was born Oct. 25, 1871, married Grace Pendleton, and has two children, Eleanor P. and Mary A.; Flora E. was born Oct. 17, 1876; Clayton A. was born July 20, 1880; Clarence H. was born May 23, 1884; and Helen A., was born Sept. 24, 1891. On March 7, 1893, Mr. Lord was married to Mary Fancher, of Granby, Conn., a charming lady, who presides over his pleasant home and aids him in dispensing a gracious hospitality. Mrs. Lord, by a former marriage, had one daughter, Flora E. Fancher. Mr. Lord has taken a very prominent part in the politics of Hebron, having held nearly all of the minor offices of the town, and represented it in the State Legislature in 1889, serving during that session upon the committee on Roads & Bridges, and he has ever ably supported the principles of the Republican party both in office and as a private citizen. All of his family are members of the Congregational Church of Hebron, and Mr. Lord is now, and has been for several years, a deacon of that congregation, and he is the oldest deacon as to time of service. His hand is always open, and he gives liberally towards the support of the church and all movements calculated to prove of benefit to Christianity and the general welfare of the town. The pleasant manner of Mr. Lord, combined with his excellent business acumen and upright principles, has won for him highest esteem wherever his affairs have led him, and both he and his family are justly regarded with sincere respect.

BURNAP. Abraham Burnap was a resident of Andover, Tolland county, living in that part of the town then called Coventry. The church records show that Abraham Burnap was a house holder in 1747. At the October session of the General Assembly in 1776 Mr. Burnap represented the town of Coventry. Farming was his life-long occupation.

These were his children: Jerijah, who died in 1834, served in the Revolutionary army, lived to be eighty, and his wife drew a pension; Daniel, the father of Mrs. Hyde, who was born Nov. 1, 1760, died Sept. 26, 1838, at the age of seventy-eight years.

Hinman says that the name of Burnap first appears in Connecticut at Windham, and gives Abraham Burnap as marrying Hannah Adams in 1722.

Weaver in his manuscript refers to an Abraham Burnap, Jr., who was married in 1753 to Irene Wright, by whom he had four children. The records of Coventry give this marriage and the subsequent data of the family. Daniel, a son of Abraham and Irene Burnap, was married in Andover, May 28, 1823, to Mary Kingsbury.

Daniel Burnap, son of Abraham Burnap, Jr., was born in the present town of Andover, and during the Revolution proved himself a most devoted patriot. Too young at the opening of hostilities to enlist, he helped in the gathering of materials from house to house for the manufacture of gunpowder.

Of an adventurous spirit, Daniel Burnap was early anxious to carve out his own career. He left home with but twenty-five cents in his pocket, and went to Norwich, where he apprenticed himself to an English clock maker. His trade was evidently well learned, as a number of clocks still in service bear on their metallic face, "Daniel Burnap, East Windsor." About 1800 he returned to his native town, where he bought land, and built the house now occupied by E. P. Skinner and wife, which is still in an excellent state of preservation. Here Mr. Burnap lived for more than forty years, and was known throughout the neighborhood as a cordial, whole-souled and liberal man, a good neighbor and a valued friend.

Mr. Burnap was one of the first temperance men of his town, and was a member and an earnest worker in the Andover Congregational Church, often acting as chairman at society meetings, and holding the position of treasurer of the Church society many years. When the original fund to support the preaching of the gospel in the Congregational Society was subscribed, Mr. Burnap was the most liberal contributor, donating to it $1,000.

In his politics Mr. Burnap was a Whig, and was active in everything which he thought beneficial to the town. In the General Assembly of 1815 he represented his town, and for many years was justice of the peace, being familiarly hailed as 'Squire Burnap. The trials over which he presided were held in the "long dining room" of his house.

After his return to Andover Mr. Burnap did very little in clock making, and confined his attention to repairing. However, he was an expert silver-smith, and spoons of quaint and curious design are now preserved in the family as highly prized heirlooms. An old-fashioned clock, with works of brass and in a cherry case, the product of his workmanship, is still to be seen in the Hyde home. It is a chime clock, playing every third hour one of a set of six tunes.

Daniel Burnap was twice married, the first time to Deliverance Kingsbury, and the second time to Mary Kingsbury (not relatives). By this second marriage he had the following children: Daniel Kingsbury, born June 28, 1824, died July 12, 1844. He won the first prize in mathematics at Yale, and was in his Sophomore year when he contracted typhus fever. He was brought home and died. Mary Delia, born Oct. 22, 1827, is the wife of E. P. Skinner, a sketch of whom occupies another page. Charlotte Elizabeth was born Aug. 9, 1830. Daniel Burnap died in Andover, and was buried in the old cemetery, where a headstone marks his grave.

Joseph Kingsbury, the father of Mary, second wife of Daniel Burnap, was a son of Jabez Kingsbury, who was born June 21, 1717, married Mary Phelps, and had children: Nathaniel, Ruth, Joseph Jeremiah, Jabez, Mary, Amelia and Annie.

Jabez Kingsbury was a son of Nathaniel Kingsbury, who was born in 1684, married Hannah Denison, at Ipswich, Mass., and became the father of fifteen children. He left Haverhill, Mass., in 1708 and located in Norwich, Conn. Coventry, now the town of Andover, became their home, and there the family has resided to the present time.

Nathaniel Kingsbury, father of Nathaniel, was born about 1656, married Love Ayers, and had the following children: Joseph, Nathaniel, Elizabeth Mary Elizabeth, and Susanna. Joseph and Ruth Kingsbury had the following family: Sophia, Betsy Mary (mentioned above), Harvey, William, Joseph and Royal.

Charlotte Elizabeth Burnap, daughter of Daniel and Mary (Kingsbury) Burnap, married, March 4, 1857, Thomas Colton Parmalee Hyde. Mr. Hyde was a son of Rev. Lavius Hyde, of Bolton, and his name commemorates his parents' regard for the pastors of the Bolton Church—Rev. Thomas White Rev. George Colton and Rev. Philander Parmalee.

The Rev. Lavius Hyde married Abigail Bradley and to them were born: (1) Julia, born at Salisbury, Conn., Sept. 29, 1819, now the widow of Rev. Edward Clark, of Chesterfield. (2) Adaline, born at Salisbury, June 25, 1821, died Feb. 3, 1900. She married James Farrar, of Lincoln, Mass., and was the mother of George, George (2), Samuel, James Mary, Abbie and Edward. (3) Charlotte, born at Stockbridge, Oct. 14, 1823, died at Becket, Mass. at the age of eighteen years. (4) Thomas Colton Parmalee, noted above, born Oct. 28, 1825, died Oct. 26, 1900. (5) Bradley, born Aug. 27, 1827, died March 31, 1832. (6) Edward Rogers, born March 13, 1831, died in infancy. (7) Sarah Amanda, born Oct. 21, 1833, unmarried, lives at Springfield, Mass. (8) Mary Clarissa died at the age of four years. Lavius Hyde, the father of the above family, died at Talcottville, Conn., April 3, 1865.

Thomas C. P. Hyde received his early schooling from his father and an older sister, and at Stockbridge, Mass. For a time he attended Phillips Academy at Andover, Mass., and completed his co lege course at Williams College in 1848, and at the Theological Seminary in 1853. He taught as principal at Spencertown, N. Y., and in 1856 went to Kansas, where he was an active participant in the free soil agitations of the time. Intimately acquainted with John Brown, he carried him on horseback on one occasion during those lawless days when that leader was wounded in an encounter. For a time while in Kansas Mr. Hyde was in the service of the Home Missionary Society. On his return to Andover, Mr. Hyde devoted much of his time to study and mental advancement, spending there the most of his remaining years, and leading a most quiet and useful life.

To Rev. T. C. P. Hyde and wife were born the following children: (1) Erskine Daniel Burnap, born Jan. 9, 1861, married Nellie A. Rose, of Andover. (2) Emily Hollister, born July 20, 1862, died Dec. 1, 1887. (3) Mary Elizabeth, born July 1, 1868, is at home.

The Rev. Lavius Hyde, father of T. C. P. Hyde, was born in Franklin, Conn., Jan. 29, 1789, and was one of ten children born to Joseph Hyde, who resided in the town of Pleasant Hill. His memories of his father, who died of apoplexy when Lavius was fourteen years old, show that Joseph Hyde was a man of character and ability, and cherished a strong affection for his family. Lavius Hyde when a boy was a close student of nature. After the death of his father he made his home with an older brother, a minister at Lee, Mass., where he did farm work, and studied with a view of entering college. He also studied under his brother, and after his return to Franklin continued his classical studies, walking four miles to recite to a son of his pastor, who subsequently became a missionary in Bombay, India.

After his graduation at Williams, Lavius Hyde was principal of an academy at Catskill, N. Y., for a year, and then entered Andover (Mass.) Theological Seminary, graduating in its second class. His first sermon was preached at Washington, Conn., and his first settlement as a pastor was in Salisbury, Conn., March, 1818. This was a large parish, and here he remained nearly five years. Mr. Hyde was married Sept. 28, 1818. In 1823 he settled at Bolton, Conn., and in 1830 at Ellington. After this he was located at Wayland, Mass., where he remained six years, and in 1841 he was installed at Becket, Mass. His wife was the author of several poems that were printed in the hymn books of the time. "Mr. Hyde's social, genial spirit and loving heart adapted him especially to the work of a pastor. He had rare tact in gaining access to minds of almost every description. His intercourse with the young was particularly felicitous. He was eminently a man of prayer, increasing in spirituality as he advanced in age. With many, the first thought on hearing of his sudden death was, 'He walked with God, and he was not: for God took him.'"

OLIVER SCOTT CHAPPEL, who died Nov. 4, 1901, was an extensive farmer and one of the active young business men of the town of Scotland, Windham county, and at his death was serving his second term at first selectman; he had represented the town at Hartford in the session of 1901.

The Chappel family is one of the old Lebanon (Conn.) families, and the name has been honorably represented not only in Lebanon, but in other New England towns and cities, the present generation being of particular note. Oliver Chappel, great-great-grandfather of Oliver S., was a lifetime resident of the town, where he died Nov. 30, 1815, at the age of sixty-three years and eight months.

Oliver Chappel (2), son of Oliver, and great-grandfather of Oliver S., was born in Lebanon June 24, 1779, and died at Auburn, N. Y., Sept. 12, 1853. When a young man he removed to Otsego county, N. Y., and engaged all his life as a farmer. On Nov. 17, 1802, he was married to Rachel Ensworth, of Canterbury, Conn., who was born in 1778. To this union were born: Russell; James, April 29, 1807; Hosmer, April 2, 1809; Polly N., in 1811; and Phoebe, March 10, 1815.

Russell Chappel, son of Oliver (2), was born in Maryland, Otsego Co., N. Y., Oct. 22, 1803, and grew to manhood in his native State. By occupation he was a farmer. Thoroughly interested himself in politics, he was an active worker in party ranks and was once a member of the electoral college. On March 17, 1825, he married Margaret Wayne, a native of Otsego county, and they became the parents of Oliver, born Nov. 29, 1827; Rachel B., born Dec. 8, 1829, who married John Choate, once sheriff of Cuyaga county, N. Y., and is now deceased; Mary, born Feb. 20, 1832, widow of Amos Hamlin, and living in Iowa; John, born Nov. 15, 1836; Scott R., born Feb. 4, 1842, who is in the office employ of the Southern Pacific Railroad Co. at Alameda, Cal.; Jay, born Dec. 11, 1844, freight agent for the Southern Pacific Railroad, at Sacramento, California.

Oliver Chappel, son of Russell and father of Oliver S. was born in New York, where he grew to maturity. He learned the manufacture of mineral waters and carried it on in various parts of the country for years. Soon after his marriage he went to Macon, Ga., where he remained until obliged to leave on account of the strong sectional feeling then prevailing. While in Georgia, he also engaged in the manufacture of brick. During the Civil war he made his home in New Jersey, and returned to the South after the strife was ended. However, he soon came back to New Jersey and engaged in business in that State as well as in New York. Upon locating in Connecticut he purchased a farm on Babcock Hill, in the town of Coventry, and there engaged in farming for five years, when he disposed of his property and removed to Scotland, where he resided until his removal to Willimantic. He was engaged in farming and took an active interest in politics; being a staunch Republican. His standing in the community is high, and he is regarded as a representative of the best class of farmer citizens.

On Sept. 15, 1850, Oliver Chappel was married to Sarah Smith, who was born in New York City April 3, 1833, daughter of Samuel and Emily (Hall) Smith. She died in Scotland Aug. 8, 1900, aged sixty-seven. To this marriage came the following family: Emily L., born in Auburn, N. Y., Jan. 25, 1853, is unmarried and lives in Willimantic; Samuel B., born May 15, 1859, in Macon, Ga., died in Mansfield, Conn., Dec. 2, 1862; Carrie May, born Sept. 15, 1862, died Dec. 8, 1864, in Newark, N. J., and her twin sister, Cora Belle, died Oct. 2, 1863, in Syracuse, N. Y.; Oliver Scott was born in Newark, N. J., Jan. 11, 1867; Elbridge S., born in Savannah, Ga., July 27, 1869, died in Coventry, Conn., Aug. 8, 1893.

Oliver Scott Chappel was born in Newark, N. J., where the family resided until he was twelve years of age, and there he first attended school, and later went to the Brooklyn (N. Y.) grammar school. At the age of seventeen he began business life, engaging in various lines, carefully performing whatever task came to his hand, and doing it all so well that he could not help but succeed. When his parents came to Connecticut he accompanied them, and in 1891 located in Scotland, Conn., where he lived until his death, devoting his attention to farming and dairying. At one time Mr. Chappel turned his attention exclusively to dairying, and had a fine herd of forty head of cattle and eight horses, selling his products in Willimantic, where he had a milk route. All of his buildings were in excellent condition, his house comfortable and his broad acres gave evidence of his industry and thrift.

On Oct. 22, 1890, Mr. Chappel was married, in Willimantic, Conn., to Alice L. Burnham, daughter of Amos B. and Martha (Billings) Burnham, descendants of old Scotland (Conn.) families. Amos B. Burnham was a son of Mason and Hernia (Hall) Burnham, and he died July 14, 1887. Mr. and Mrs. Chappel had the following family; Maude L., born Aug. 14, 1891; Russell R., June 6, 1893; Ruth E., Jan. 9, 1896; Oliver M., April 9, 1898; and Lois G., Jan. 6, 1900.

In political matters Mr. Chappel was a very enthusiastic Republican, taking an active part in local affairs, and had been a member of the board of selectmen for seven years, up to the time of his death, serving as chairman for the last three terms; he held numerous other town offices, giving the most entire satisfaction. In 1901 he represented the town in the State Legislature, and he served as clerk on the committee on Capitol Furniture and Grounds. Socially Mr. Chappel united with Lodge No. 16, I. O. O. F., of Willimantic, in December, 1900, and was connected with the A. O. U. W. for several years. The same careful management which had characterized his private enterprises was displayed in the conduct of public affairs, and in consequence his record as an official was without blemish, while he was regarded as one of the leading men of Scotland. On July 22, 1901, he was appointed, by the county commissioners, prosecuting agent of Windham county. The widow and children now make their home in Willimantic.

CHARLES H. ROGERS, M. D. In these latter days there is a distinct tendency to specializing in all the professions, and in noting the careers of those eminent in the practice of medicine and surgery we find this condition emphasized in a marked degree. All this means the decadence of that noble type, the oldtime family physician, whose practice was general in character and who ministered faithfully and tenderly to the afflicted of all sorts and conditions, bringing to bear a deep humanitarian sympathy and, in the majority of cases, a broad and practical knowledge of the sciences involved in his profession. Of this generous and noble type it is doubtful whether there could be found a more noble representative than the late Dr. Charles H. Rogers, who was a man skilled in his profession, devoted to its work, unbending in his integrity of character and stern in his judgment as to the ethics of life, and yet possessing that tenderness of heart that brought to him the affection of those to whom he ministered, the unequivocal respect of his fellow men and the objective confidence which only sterling worth can beget. His was the faith that made faithful, his a life true to its highest ideals, his a name to be held in perpetual honor, and as one of the venerated and representative physicians and citizens of Windham county, it is imperative that a memoir of his life be incorporated in this volume. The family has long been identified with the annals of New England history, and thus it is the more compatible that this tribute be entered to the memory of one of the honored representatives of an honored name.

The Rogers family was founded at New London early in the history of that town, by (I) James Rogers, whose wife was Elizabeth Rowland. Their son, (II) Samuel Rogers, married Mary Stanton, and had, among others, (III) Jonathan Rogers. The latter married Elizabeth Pemberton, and reared (IV) Joseph Rogers, who married Martha Congdon. (V) Joseph Rogers, son of Joseph and Martha, married Esther Church, and had eleven children. The first, Sophia, married Sanford Congdon and (second) Reuben J. Champion. Sarah, the second, married Peregrine Wheeler. John and Joseph were next. Charles Horton is mentioned below. Martha became the wife of a Mr. Young. David followed, and Eliza, the eighth, married a Mr. Hewitt. Amy Rogers married a Mr. Congdon. Hippocrates and Esther never married. (VI) Charles Horton Rogers married Elizabeth Brown and had three children. The first, Charles Henry, is the subject of a sketch following. Edwin Wiliam was the second, and Mary Maria, the last, became the wife of Henry Pitt, son of Coobe and Flora (Farnham) Cleveland.

Chas. H. Rogers

(VII) Charles Henry Rogers was a native son of Windham county, Conn., having been born in the town of Pomfret, Feb. 6, 1818, and that county continued to be his home and the scene of his faithful and devoted services until he was summoned to "That undiscovered country from whose bourne no traveller returns," his death occurring at his home in Central Village, in the town of Plainfield, May 26, 1897, at the age of seventy-nine years and three months. The Doctor's father, Charles Horton Rogers, was a prominent farmer and woolen manufacturer of that region, being thoroughly versed in the methods of manufacturing this product and in all details incidental to the industry, from the raising of high-grade sheep to the production of the finished cloth, according to the facilities of his day. He served as a soldier during the war of 1812, and after his death his widow, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Brown, received from the government a pension in recognition of his loyal participation in that struggle. She was a woman of devoted Christian character and to her teachings and precepts Dr. Rogers always attributed the fact that he was led into the paths which made for probity of character and righteous living, his loving acknowledgment of her care and solicitude being deep and sincere and her memory being revered by him until the close of his long and useful life.

Dr. Rogers's early educational advantages were limited in scope but he made the most of such as were presented, and then, with the intrinsic strength of a true individuality, he made it possible to win for himself further advantages, of which he was fully appreciative in his youth, having high aims and wishing to fit himself for a sphere of action in which he could accomplish as much good as his talents and powers rendered possible. He began the work of preparing himself for a collegiate course by entering the Hartford grammar school in June, 1838, and there he applied himself with such diligence and assimilative power that, two years later, he was able to enter Yale University, where he completed a four years literary course, being graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, as a member of the class of 1844. He then entered the medical department of the same famous institution and there continued his technical studies under most favorable auspices until his graduation, in 1847, with the coveted degree of Doctor of Medicine. In July of that same year Dr. Rogers entered upon the active practice of his profession by opening an office at West Woodstock, Conn., where he soon attained good standing, owing to his unmistakable professional skill and his pleasing personality. He there remained until 1856, when he removed to Central Village, where he engaged in practice and continued there until the end of his life, with the exception of the interval of service in the war of the Rebellion.

The thundering of Rebel guns against the ramparts of old Fort Sumter roused a ready and responsive protest in his essentially loyal and patriotic nature, and in 1861 he enlisted for service and continued in the army until compelled to resign his position because he was afflicted with chronic diarrhoea, contracted while in the service and complicated by malaria troubles, resulting from his ten months' service at Hatteras Inlet, N. C., where he was in charge of the United States general hospital, with the rank of assistant surgeon. Previously to this he had been detailed to pay the sick and wounded of the Connecticut regiments at Annapolis. While at Hatteras Inlet he was requested by Gen. Williams to act as chief military as well as medical officer, but he declined this honor, feeling that the duties of the position might entail more or less neglect of the sick and suffering. From Hatteras he was ordered to Newbern, N. C., and from that point was sent to Virginia, where he shortly afterward resigned his position, for the reason already noted. He then returned to Central Village, where he ever afterward devoted his time to medical practice, though he continued to suffer more or less from the effects of impaired health resulting from his army service.

Dr. Rogers met with a marked degree of success in his practice, and in all professional matters calling for especially careful and intelligent judgment, in diagnosis, method of treatment and in the handling of critical surgical cases, his services were in much demand throughout a wide range of territory, his advice and counsel being often sought by his professional confreres. He was a man of high intellectuality, and not only did he read extensively and understandingly the best general literature, but even in his declining years he kept in close touch with the advance made in the line of his profession and availed himself of the most approved methods and accessories. A man of deep convictions, Dr. Rogers never lacked the courage necessary to enforce them, and though tenacious of his opinions he was never intolerant or bigoted, and was much beloved in the community where he passed so many years of his life, devoting himself without reservation and with utmost self-abnegation to the service of suffering humanity. He never allowed the rigors of the stern winter, the most inclement weather or the most wearying distance to keep him from the bedside of those who needed his ministrations, and the humblest and poorest received the same kindly care as did those of wealth and prominence, showing that he had not only a generous and kindly nature but a high regard for the responsibilities which his noble profession involved. To many a weary sufferer he brought relief from physical ills; to many a broken heart he gave the balm of consolation. Is it strange that, as a type of the old-time and able practitioner, he held the love and veneration of the community? From those unable to pay for his services he never made an attempt to exact recompense, and his charity and patience were those of a great nature and a true and tender heart. The Doctor was a member of the Windham County Medical Society, the Connecticut State Medical Society and the National Medical Association. Fraternally he was identified with James B. Kilborn Post, No. 77, G. A. R., at Plainfield. He and his wife were for many years devoted members of the Congregational Church of Central Village and were active and zealous in the work of the same. The Doctor was elected clerk of the church board in 1856, and served in that capacity the greater portion of the time until his death. He had the deepest reverence for spiritual realities and the teachings of the Divine Master, and his life was ever in harmony with the faith which he professed. In his political adherence Dr. Rogers originally supported the Republican party, but later became an enthusiastic Prohibitionist, doing all in his power to further its cause, believing that he thus served humanity better than by maintaining allegiance with the older political parties. He served for sixteen years as a member of the school board of his district and was urged to continue in the office, but declined, though he ever continued to take an active interest in all that bore upon the welfare and material progress of the community.

On May 28, 1848, Dr. Rogers was united in marriage to Miss Sarah Carey Morse, who was born in the year 1827, the youngest daughter of Dr. Thomas and Permelia (Briggs) Morse, of West Woodstock, Conn. She was summoned to eternal rest Oct. 16, 1897, at Central Village, having been a devoted wife and helpmeet and a tender mother, while her pure and kindly character was such that she exerted a beneficent influence upon all who came within her sphere, and her memory will remain as a perpetual benediction to those who knew her. Her father, Dr. Morse, was a distinguished physician and was favorably known throughout northeastern Connecticut, where he was engaged in the active practice of his profession for the greater portion of his life. It is related that such was his devotion to his calling that, while in his prime, there was one occasion when, for six weeks in succession, all the sleep he secured was while on horseback making his visits to one patient after another. After he had passed the age of fourscore years he reduced a comminuted fracture of the ankle, riding a distance of five or six miles to reach the bedside of his patient and taking the entire charge of the operation and the subsequent treatment and making the result absolutely successful. His wife was a daughter of Deacon Nathaniel Briggs, of North Woodstock, of whom the following incident is told, as indicating his charity and sterling character: An early frost had destroyed the crops in that section and much hardship was entailed in many cases. He had been favored with an exceptionally large yield of corn, which he sold to his neighbors at the nominal price of one dollar per bushel. Being approached for the purposes of speculation on the basis of the exigent need, he sturdily refused to sell more than one bushel to any individual, saying: "The Lord's hand is in my prosperity, and the corn is for those in actual need." He was of the fourth generation of his family to be represented in the medical profession. The maternal grandfather of Mrs. Rogers was Major Earl Clapp, who was a personal friend of General Washington, with whom he was in service at Valley Forge during the war of the Revolution.

Dr. Charles H. and Sarah C. Rogers became the parents of nine children, and of them is entered the following record: Sarah E., who died in 1867; Mary Permelia, the wife of Calvin H. Lee, of Reading, Mass., where he is superintendent of extensive cotton mills; Charles M., who died in 1860; George P. and Elliott H., who died in infancy; Lillian Susan, the wife of Charles A. Buck, of Burlington, Vt.; Earl C., individually mentioned in appending paragraphs; and two other children who died when but a few days old.

EARL CLINTON ROGERS was born at the old home in Central Village, Windham county, March 16, 1867, and there he received his early educational discipline in the public schools, being reared under the benign influences of a cultured and refined home. Early in life he evinced a desire to start out on his own responsibility, being of a self-reliant and buoyant temperament, and he thus became an apprentice at the trade of carriage-blacksmithing, to which he devoted his attention for a period of about two years. He then, in 1885, purchased a livery stable in his native town and conducted the same successfully for a period of five years, during which he devoted much time and care to the study of veterinary surgery, in which he became expert, his love for that noble animal, the horse, having been an abiding element in his makeup from his youth. In 1890 he went to Narragansett Pier and there opened an office for the practice of his profession, continuing in this line for two years and winning a high reputation and a successful practice. He then turned his attention to the training of standard-bred horses, and later resumed the practice of his profession in Danielson, Conn., where he was thus engaged for some time. From that place Mr. Rogers proceeded to Westerly, R. I., where he purchased a restaurant and conducted business in that line for several months. He disposed of his interests in the enterprise and returned to Narragansett Pier, where he opened what was known as "Clarke's Hotel," which he made a popular resort and which he conducted with much ability and success until 1901, when he purchased the "City Hotel," in Putnam, where he has since catered to an excellent trade, having a representative support from the traveling public and proving an affable and popular host, doing all in his power to make his house attractive and homelike and having a modern and well-equipped hotel property. In national affairs Mr. Rogers gives his support to the principles and policies of the Republican party, but in the local field he maintains an independent attitude, supporting men and measures rather than holding to close partisan lines. Fraternally he is identified with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, or the "best people on earth," as the initials are popularly interpreted. He is well known in that section of the State and there enjoys a marked popularity, as he does also with the traveling public.

On March 4, 1896, Mr. Rogers was united in marriage to Mary Sophia Lattimore, daughter of Joseph and Julia (Glade) Lattimore, of Central Village. They have one son, Joseph Delbert, who was born Nov. 13, 1887, in New Boston, Conn., and who has been formally and legally adopted by Mr. Rogers as his own son.

OTIS SNOW, proprietor of the leading hardware store in Rockville, Tolland county, is the owner of a fine farm in the southern part of the town of Ellington. Mr. Snow is one of the leading citizens of Tolland county, and springs from an old New England family.

Nicholas, Anthony and William Snow came over to New England early. There was a Richard Snow of Woburn, Mass., and a Thomas Snow of Boston. Anthony Snow married Abigail Warren, and lived in Plymouth and Marshfield. He had one son, Josiah, and several daughters.

Nicholas, Anthony and William Snow are supposed to have been related. William was an apprentice, married a Barker, and went to Bridgewater, Mass. Mitchell gives an account of his descendants, which are found later in Providence, Rhode Island.

Nicholas Snow came to New England in the ship "Ann" in 1623. He had a share in the division of land in Plymouth in 1624. In 1654 he settled in Eastham, of which place he was one of the founders. He was a man of considerable note in both towns, was several times a representative in the General Court, etc. He married in Plymouth, Constance Hopkins, daughter of Stephen Hopkins, who came in the "Mayflower" and was the fourteenth signer of the "Mayflower" Compact.

Richard Snow was the earliest of that name living in Woburn. He was taxed there in 1645, the first tax upon record. He had land granted to him by the town in 1647-48, and in 1656 bought a house and twenty acres of land. He seems to have been an industrious, thriving husbandman, and to have maintained a respectable rank in society. He died Nov. 9, 1711. Besides John and James Snow, apparently his sons, born before he came to Woburn to reside, he had born to him afterwards: Daniel, Feb. 4, 1644-45 (died July 18, 1646); Samuel, May 28, 1647; Zachariah, March 29, 1649 (wounded in the Narragansett fight with the Indians, Dec. 19, 1675; died April 14, 1711).

(II) Samuel Snow (1), son of Richard, born May 28, 1647, and his first wife Sarah, had children as follows: Samuel (2), born Feb. 8, 1669-70;

Sarah, May 28, 1672; Daniel, July 9, 1674; Abigail, April 4, 1677; Richard, Dec. 10, 1683; and Hannah, June 8, 1686. The mother died June 8, 1686, and Mr. Snow married, Aug. 9th of that same year, Sarah Parker, of Newtown. To them were born: Deborah, Joanna and Ebenezer. The father died in 1717, and the mother in 1694-95.

(III) Lieut. Samuel Snow (2), son of Samuel (1), born Feb. 8, 1669-70, had by his wife Abigail: Samuel (3), born Aug. 24, 1692; Abigail, Nov. 18, 1694; Sarah, Sept. 14, 1697; Ruth, May 8, 1700; Rebecca, Feb. 11, 1702-03; Elizabeth, Dec. 29, 1705; Benjamin, Aug. 9, 1708; and Joseph, May 18, 1713.

(IV) Samuel Snow (3), son of Lieut. Samuel (2), born Aug. 24, 1692, married June 10, 1718, Sarah Locke, of Lexington, and by her had three children born in Woburn: Samuel (4), Dec. 7, 1719; Oliver, Aug. 28, 1721; and Sarah, Jan. 24, 1723-24. In 1724 Lieut. Samuel Snow (2) and his son Samuel (3) each bought a tract of land in Ashford, Conn., and immediately removed their residence thither from Woburn. At Ashford Lieut. Snow became one of the principal men, was generally moderator at town meetings, and served as selectman, town treasurer, etc., for many years. He died Dec. 19, 1743. His son Samuel (3) also became a prominent character in Ashford, and held some of the important town offices. After his removal to Ashford Samuel (3) had born to him by his wife Sarah, the following named children: Sarah, April 29, 1726; Stephen, July 5, 1730; Sylvanus, March 17, 1732; Elizabeth, July 11, 1734 (died April 1, 1737); Timothy, Sept. 20, 1737 (died April 9, 1749); and Elizabeth, Sept. 28, 1739. The father died Dec. 24, 1756, and his widow died Nov. 16, 1790.

(V) Sylvanus Snow, son of Samuel (3), and grandfather of Otis, was a farmer, and resided in the western part of Ellington. During the winter seasons and on long summer evenings he worked at shoemaking and repairing. He married Sylvia Buckland, who was born in Ellington, daughter of Jonathan Buckland, and survived her husband but a short time. They were the parents of eleven children: Ebenezer (born in 1782), Mary, Sally, Nathan, Joseph (born June 30, 1791), James, Owen, Anna, Levi, Timothy, and William (born in 1806).

(VI) Joseph Snow, son of Sylvanus and father of Otis, was born and grew to manhood in Ellington, being trained to farming. When he became of age he went to Avon, where he was employed by his brother James as a cloth dresser. Returning home after a time, he soon went into Massachusetts with his brother James, and purchased a farm near Ware, which they carried on successfully. Securing more land, they became the owners of an extensive establishment; they also dressed cloth for neighboring weavers. The brothers continued in business many years. Mr. Snow came to Hartford, Conn., and bought "teazles" throughout the country, hauling the same to the Massachusetts weavers. This proved a highly remunerative business, and with the proceeds Mr. Snow bought a hotel at Ware, which he conducted for a short time, and then rented for a period of years. Later in life he returned to Ellington and bought what is now the home of his son Otis, then known as the Abbott homestead, in which Col. Abbott and his son, Capt. Joseph Abbott, lived. Here Mr. Snow died June 1, 1873, at the age of eighty-two years, and was buried at Ellington. At various times Mr. Snow filled local offices, and was a representative from Ellington in the State Legislature. A Democrat, and a man of much public spirit, he was highly spoken of by those who knew him in his active years.

Joseph Snow married Betsey Snell. Her father was born in Ware, Mass., in 1763, and in August, 1780, enlisted from Bridgewater, Mass., becoming a private under Capt. Nathan Packard for three months' service. The following summer he again enlisted, for five months' service, under Col. William Turner. In 1832 he was given a pension by the Government. In 1785 Mr. Snell married Lydia Hathaway. He died in 1838, his wife in 1847. The children living at the time of the mother's death were: Pearl, Nathan and Lucy, of Ware, Mass.; Lydia, wife of Orrin Terrill, of Plainfield, Mass.; Mary, wife of Daniel Gourd, of Bedford, Ohio; and Betsey, wife of Mr. Snow.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Snow had children as follows: Mary A., born in 1822, who married Havilla Buckland. Mr. Buckland was a farmer in East Windsor, where he died. Mrs. Buckland died on the home farm in Ellington. Harriet A., born in 1823, who died unmarried in 1897. Joseph A., born in 1826, who died young. Eliza S., born in 1828, who married John Clark, a farmer, and died in East Windsor in 1888. Ann Maria, born in 1829, who married first Jonathan Buckland, who died in East Windsor. She married (second) John Archer, and resides in Woodbury. Evaline A., born in 1830, who married Oliver Clark, of Wapping, and died in 1876. Sarah Augusta, born in 1833, who died the following year. Otis, who is mentioned below. Ambrose D., born in 1837, who married Adalena L. Chapman, and resides in Vernon, where he is a farmer. Edwin, born in 1840, who died when eighteen years old. Mrs. Joseph Snow died Oct. 24, 1864, at the age of sixty-seven years.

(VII) Otis Snow was born April 27, 1836, in Ware, Mass., where the first eight years of his life were spent, his parents then removing to Ellington, Conn. He attended the Ellington common schools, and was later a pupil of the local school, then a noted one. Assisting his father on the home farm, he made his home with his parents until the death of the father brought the estate up for division. Mr. Snow purchased the interest of the other heirs, and after taking possession made many extensive improvements on the buildings, bringing the farm up to the most modern ideals, and winning for himself high rank among the prosperous and progressive farmers in his locality. At the present time his place consists of 400 acres, splendidly located, with fine buildings. Mr. Snow is largely devoted to stockraising; he plants about twelve acres of tobacco yearly, and is one of the directors of the Ellington Creamery. Mr. Snow also has a fine hardware store in Rockville where he handles all the fancy and regular goods of his line, as well as bicycles, carrying all the standard lines, and keeping a bicycle repairer. The store is in the Fitch Block, and has floor space and basement 30x60 feet.

Mr. Snow is a Democrat. He was a member of the State Legislature in 1876 and 1877, serving on the Committees on Incorporations and Capital Punishment; he was again elected in 1886 and 1887. For several terms he has served on the board of selectmen, and has been on the board of relief and also assessor. He is an attendant upon the services of the Congregational Church, to which his wife belongs, and contributes liberally to its support.

Mr. Snow was married Dec. 24, 1863, to Mary E. Chapman, who was born in Tolland Nov. 23, 1844, daughter of Reuben and Eunice (McKinney) Chapman, farming people of Tolland. To this union have come children as follows: Adella G., born Jan. 21, 1865. She is the wife of Hon. Charles A. Thompson, of Ellington. Edwin H., born Jan. 17, 1866, died March 7, 1866. Fred J., born Aug. 9, 1870. The latter attended the district schools, Rockville high school, and Snell's Business College at Norwich, Conn., and is now manager of the hardware store at Rockville. He was married Sept. 27, 1893, to Mary Doe, a native of Maine, and they have no children. Edith L., born Dec. 16, 1872. She was married Oct. 18, 1899, to Clifton L. Chapman, of Tolland, son of Buel and Amanda (Lewis) Chapman, the former a native of Tolland, the latter of Ellington. Mr. and Mrs. Clifton L. Chapman are now residing at the homestead. They have one child, Mahlon Snow Chapman, born Jan. 17, 1902.

The Chapman family, to which Mrs. Otis Snow belongs, is one of the oldest in this part of the State and descends from Edward Chapman, who came from England and settled in Simsbury, Hartford county, about 1660. He lost his life at the storming of Narragansett Fort in 1675. He married Elizabeth Fox, and Simon Chapman their son was one of the original proprietors of the town. He lived in Windsor, and owned several tracts of land in Tolland.

(I) Capt. Samuel Chapman, born in 1696, settled in 1725, on a forty-acre tract lying near Shenipet Pond. He made many additions thereto, becoming an extensive land owner. In the French and Indian war he made a reputation as a soldier and was killed at Louisburg in 1746. For many years he was the only justice of the peace in Tolland. Hannah Strong his wife, was born in 1692, and they had the following children: Samuel (2), Elijah, Simon, Ruth, Sarah, Hannah, Margaret and Mary. The first named, Col. Samuel, born in 1720, was an eminent man in his day, serving as colonel of the 22d Conn. Militia during the entire period of the Revolutionary war. He was known as the wealthiest man in Tolland, and died in 1803.

(II) Elijah Chapman, son of Capt. Samuel (I), was born about 1726, and died in 1812. In 1765, 1776, 1781 and again in 1782 he was a member of the General Assembly. In 1747 he married Sarah Steele, and their children were: Johanna, born in 1748, who married Joshua Griggs; Reuben; Sarah; Elijah; Asahel; Sarah (2); Ruth; Esther; Roxana; Aaron; Dorcas; and Daniel.

(III) Reuben Chapman, son of Elijah, was born in 1749, and married Mary, daughter of Dr. Samuel Cobb. He bore a gallant part in the Revolutionary struggle, and died in 1776, of consumption, which he contracted while in the service.

(IV) Solomon Chapman, only son of Reuben, was born in 1775, in 1798 married Molly Skinner, and died in 1814. He was the father of the following children: Calvin, born in 1800, who married Ortentia Dorman, and located in Ellington about 1830. In 1855 he removed his family to Binghamton, N. Y., where both he and his wife died. Their only son, Orlow, now deceased, was a lawyer in Binghamton. Amanda, who married Carlos Chapman, both deceased. Lucius, born in 1804, who married Rebecca Willey, of Ellington, where he was long engaged in a store. Solomon, born in 1806, who married Polly A. Allen, and died at East Hampton, Mass., leaving one daughter. He was a physician. Reuben, born Aug. 18, 1808, who was the father of Mrs. Snow. Elijah S., born April 9, 1811, who died in 1879. He married the widow of his brother Reuben, and died in Rockville, where he was leading a retired life. Their only child, Ada, died in 1876, when twenty years old.

(V) Reuben Chapman, son of Solomon, born in Tolland, was a farmer all his life. He died at the early age of forty-one years. He married Eunice McKinney, a native of Ellington, and their children were: Doremus, born August 23, 1833, died in infancy. Doremus (2), born July 29, 1837, died December 18, 1896. Doremus (2) was twice married, first to Sarah Andros, second to Ella Shepherd. Adalena L., born April 10, 1840, married Ambrose Snow, a farmer who resides near the home of his brother Otis Snow, whose name introduces this article. Mary Ellen, born November 23, 1844, wife of Otis Snow. Georgiana, born November 16, 1848, died November 9, 1861.

BATES. One of the oldest and best-known families of New England is the Bates family, of which Andrew J. Bates, the prominent wholesale shoe dealer of New York City and summer resident of Webster, Mass., near the line of Thompson, Conn., is a most worthy representative.

The Bates family is readily traced as far back as the fifteenth century, when Thomas Bates, Esq., was born, in 1485, in Canterbury, England. John, the son of Thomas, died in 1522, in the parish of Allhallow, County of Kent, and Andrew, the son of John, died Sept. 22, 1532. John Bates, son of Andrew, was married Oct. 18, 1546, to Mildred Ward, who died in 1577; he died in 1579. James Bates, yeoman, son of John, married, June 6, 1580, Mary Martin, and died March 2, 1614, at Lydd, England. Clement, son of James, born in 1595, baptized June 22, 1595, in Hertfordshire, England, was the founder of the Bates family in the New World. On April 6, 1635, at the age of forty years, he sailed for America in the good ship "Elizabeth" with his wife and five children, and they were among the first settlers of Hingham, Mass., where he made his home for thirty-six years, and where he died Sept. 17, 1671. He and wife Ann were the parents of five children, namely: James, Clement, Rachel, Joseph and Benjamin.

Joseph Bates, the third son of Clement, was born in England, in 1630, and was but five years old when he came to America, dying at Hingham, Mass., April 30, 1706. On Jan. 9, 1657, he married Esther Hillard, who was born March 25, 1642, in Boston, Mass., and died June 3, 1709.

Joshua Bates, son of Joseph, born Aug. 14, 1671, in Hingham, was married Jan. 15, 1695, to Rachel Tower, born March 16, 1674, who died in her home in Hingham, where he also died Sept. 23, 1757.

Jacob Bates, son of Joshua, born in Hingham Aug. 20, 1710, when a young man moved to Attleboro, Mass., later to Dudley, in Worcester county, and there spent the remainder of his days, dying July 6, 1795, at the advanced age of eighty-five years. On Nov. 19, 1730, he married Mary (or Molly) Clark, born Jan. 12, 1711, who died Jan. 2, 1798, and was interred in the Bates cemetery. She was a daughter of John and Rebecca (Lincoln) Clark, the latter of whom was a daughter of Samuel and Martha Lincoln. John Clark came to Plymouth in the ship "Ann."

John Bates, son of Jacob and Molly (Clark) Bates, born at Hingham, Dec. 4, 1748, removed to Attleboro with his parents, and also resided in Bellingham, Norfolk Co., Mass., but later settled in Dudley, now a part of Webster, where he spent the remainder of his life, dying Dec. 12, 1834; he was buried in the old Bates cemetery. John Bates served as a private through the Revolutionary war, and was a farmer and large landowner. His marriage was to Chloe Fuller, born Aug. 6, 1747, who died July 11, 1825. She was a daughter of Ensign Noah (born Oct. 18, 1714, and died Aug. 10, 1786, an ensign in the militia) and Mary (Cushman) Fuller, whose ancestors came from England in the "Mayflower."

Capt. Alanson Bates, son of John, born Jan. 30, 1772, in Attleboro, Bristol Co., Mass., lived a part of the time in Dudley, but later moved to Webster, where he died Aug. 22, 1842, and was buried in the Bates cemetery. His occupation was farming and stockraising. His title was secured in the State militia. On Nov. 18, 1790, Alanson Bates married Comfort Robinson, born July 18, 1767, who died May 6, 1814, a daughter of Silas and Susanna (Moore) Robinson. The children of Capt. Alanson and Comfort Bates were: Jacob, who died in Webster; Polly, who married a Mr. Bixby, and died in Thompson; Alanson, the father of Capt. Thomas Bates, of Webster; Elhanan, who died in Thompson; Sybil, who married James Haven, and died in Dudley, Mass.; Nelson, the father of Andrew J. Bates; Orison, who died in Webster; Basheba, who married Hiram Mills, of Thompson; and John, who married Mary A. Jacobs, and died in Dudley, Massachusetts.

The second marriage of Capt. Alanson Bates was to Lavina Brown, daughter of Rufus Brown, born in 1792, who died April 6, 1874. The children of this marriage were: Sarepta, who married Issaker Elliott; Love Ann, who married Prince Davis; Maria, who married Asa Mansfield; and Sumner, who went to British Columbia.

Nelson Bates, father of Andrew J., born July 12, 1801, son of Capt. Alanson and Comfort Bates, was a large landowner and farmer in the town of Webster, of which he was a well-known and highly respected citizen. Mr. Bates was a man of Christian character, a worthy member of the M. E. Church. Politically he was a Whig, later a Republican, but was in no sense a politician. After rearing a large and most creditable family Mr. Bates died, on his farm, Feb. 2, 1889, and his remains lie in the Bates cemetery. In Thompson, May 12, 1824, he married Lucia Jacobs, a native of that town, born Dec. 27, 1804, who died Dec. 31, 1895, and is buried in the Bates cemetery. She was a daughter of Ira Jacobs, and, like her husband, was a worthy member of the M. E. Church, being a practical Christian and a devoted wife and mother. She survived the greater number of the friends of her childhood, living to the age of ninety-one years, and passing a happy married life of sixty-five years. The children of Nelson Bates and wife were as follows: Lucinda, born July 4, 1825, married Jonathan Porter, of Porter Plains, Thompson, and died Jan. 28, 1895; Ira Jacobs is mentioned below; Sophia, born Sept. 10, 1829, married Lucius Holmes Sept. 17, 1846; Nelson, born Oct. 2, 1831, a farmer at Dudley, Mass., married Sophia Davis; Ann Jane, born Nov. 14, 1834, married, April 26, 1853, Marvin Dexter Elliott, of Thompson; Abigail, born June 21, 1837, is unmarried; Andrew Jackson is mentioned below; and Abel, born Feb. 7, 1842, married, March 8, 1866, Sarah Louise S. Estherbrook, daughter of John Sessions and Louise (Taft) Estherbrook, resides on the old homestead and has two children, Sumner L. and Elsie Lucia.

IRA JACOBS BATES, brother of Andrew J. Bates, was born April 28, 1827, and was reared and educated in the town of Webster, where he followed the occupation of stonemason for many years. Later he became the owner of Bates' Grove, a notable tract, where families of wealth and leisure own summer cottages, and for a number of years conducted its business affairs, built a number of the ornate residences on this beautiful tract, comprising 125 acres, fronting on a part of the Webster lake, and is also the owner of a part of the sheet of water. Mr. Bates is a man of remarkable business ability and is well known and highly respected. He is a leading member of the M. E. Church at Webster. In politics he is a stanch Republican, has been a member of the board of relief, and has filled the office of assessor.

On March 14, 1849, Mr. Bates married Maria Davis, and children were born to this union as follows: (1) Lucy M., born Jan. 5, 1850, died Aug. 26, 1866. (2) Hezekiah D., born Nov. 20, 1851, resides in Brooklyn, N. Y., where he is connected with the A. J. Bates Co. He married Mary Converse, a daughter of Frank Converse, and they have children—Lula Maria, born in May, 1874; Leroy Franklin, June, 1875; Joel Edmund, June, 1876 (died July 8, 1877); Clinton Jesse, July, 1881; Marion Lucia, September, 1883; and Edna May, October, 1885 (died in 1889). (3) Martha J., born Jan. 5, 1854, married George Bubsen, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and their children are Walter Andrew, born in November, 1881; Emma Lorena, March 10, 1886; Orella, June 16, 188—; and Ira Jacobs, Aug. 26, 1892. (4) Emma F., born Aug. 10, 1856, married Charles Fitts, of Washington, D. C., and their children are Emma Catherine, born March 16, 1890; and Charles W., born March 26, 1895. (5) George W., born Feb. 28, 1858, married Eva Jones, of Dudley. (6) Elmer E., born Sept. 10, 1861, married Hattie Knight. (7) Hattie E., born Jan. 28, 1864, married George Barnes, of Whitneyville, R. I. (8) Minnie L., born Feb. 19, 1867, married Ellsworth Bixby, son of Marion Bixby, of Thompson, and has one son, Raymond. (9) Benjamin E., born Oct. 21, 1869, resides at Whitneyville, R. I. (10) Frank Emerson, born July 25, 1874, was married in October, 1899, to Isabella Spalding, of Whitneyville, and they have one child, Eunice. Mrs. Bates died Oct. 17, 1885, and was buried in the Bates cemetery. On March 12, 1899, Ira Jacobs Bates was married (second) to Mrs. Margaret (Percival) Oldham, who was born in Prince Edward Island, Canada, a daughter of Peter and Mary (Falls) Percival, and was the widow of Henry Oldham. She is a lady of most pleasing personality, a devoted wife and mother, and a valued member of the M. E. Church. No children have been born to her union with Mr. Bates, but she had children born to her first marriage, of whom Henrietta Florence died young; Mary Josephine married George Hanson; Maude is a teacher in the public schools; Harry Percival married Bertha Clark, of Southbridge, Massachusetts.

ANDREW JACKSON BATES, born June 23, 1839, was married Sept. 30, 1862, to Harriet Matilda Bartlett, and they had the following children: Sarah Lucia married Charles Craver, a prominent grain merchant of Binghamton, N. Y., and they have two children, Bates Bartlette and Edgar Asa; Mrs. Craver is a member of Tuscarora Chapter, D. A. R., of Binghamton. Emma married Maxwell Carrington, a resident of East Orange, N. J., and they have one son, Andrew Bates. Edgar Asa is superintendent of the A. J. Bates Shoe factory, at Webster, Mass. Miss Mary E. resides at home. Zella died at the age of fifteen years. Mrs. Bates died June 16, 1887, and was buried in the Bates' Grove cemetery. The second marriage of A. J. Bates took place Oct. 15, 1891, to Emma Gentle Von Nostrand, daughter of Daniel Von Nostrand, of a prominent old Holland family of New York. Mrs. Bates is a lady of extreme culture and high social connection, fully qualified to preside over either of the beautiful homes which Mr. Bates has provided.

GEORGE B. FULLER. The authentic records of the family of which George B. Fuller is a worthy representative reach as far back in American history as 1638.

(I) Ancestor Robert Fuller came from England in the ship "Bevis," and in the year 1638 was a resident of both Salem and Rehoboth, Mass. His marriage was to one Sarah, who died Oct. 14, 1676, and he was married a second time to Margaret Walker, who died Jan. 30, 1700. The children of Robert Fuller were: Jonathan, born in 1640; Elizabeth, born in 1645; John, born in 1647; Samuel, born in 1649; Abigail, born in 1653; and Benjamin (1), born in 1657.

(II) Benjamin Fuller (1), son of Robert, was born in 1657, and in 1685 married his first wife, Mary. For his second wife he married Judith Smith Jan. 23, 1698. His birth was in Salem, Mass. At his majority and at his marriage his father deeded land to him located in Rehoboth, and this became his home until his death, Jan. 27, 1711. His residence was about three miles from Seekonk, where the first settler was buried. Benjamin lived for a time in Salem, Mass., and there several of his children were born, these being: Benjamin (2), born Feb. 25, 1687; John, born in 1689; Mary, born in 1691; Elizabeth, born Feb. 11, 1695; Amos, born Oct. 25, 1699; Joshua, born May 15, 1701; Abiel, (1) born Sept. 29, 1704.

(III) Abiel Fuller (1), son of Benjamin (1), came to Lebanon, Conn., at the age of twenty-two years, and Sept. 1, 1726, bought land of his oldest brother, Benjamin, on which he lived; Abiel died on June 13, 1796, and was a man of remarkable vigor until after his ninetieth year. He was of small stature but sturdy and strong of limb. His activity of mind corresponded with that of his body and he was the dominating spirit in any society, young or old. He carried such a halo of good cheer in his conversation and manner that boys hailed the little white-headed old man of four-score and more as the jolliest companion they could find. Thus said one of those same boys, who was himself ninety years old.

The first marriage of Abiel Fuller (1) was in 1728, to Sarah Closson, who died September 6, 1730. His second marriage was Dec. 19, 1732, to Hannah Porter, who died April 12, 1786. He had children as follows: Abiel and Sarah, twins, born Aug. 29, 1730, the former of whom died young, the latter in 1748; Anna, born May 26, 1736, died in 1814; and Abiel (2), born on March 6, 1739.

(IV) Abiel Fuller (2), Jr., son of Abiel (1), was the great-grandfather of our subject, and was born in Lebanon, Conn. His whole life was spent on the farm which had been left him as a heritage from his father, and which in 1898 was still in the possession of the Fuller family. Abiel Fuller (2) was a very industrious man, of retiring habits and thoroughly respected by all who knew him. His death occurred in 1813, when he was about seventy-five years old. From his marriage with Eleanor Henry, these children were born: Silas, born Sept. 22, 1774, married in 1797 Alinda Clark, of Columbia, Conn.; Paul C., born Aug. 27, 1776, married Nov. 3, 1801, Lydia J. Howard; John H., born in 1780, (first) married Betsey Howard, and (second) Phebe Polly, in 1818; Betsey, born in 1783, married William Braley; Henry C., born Sept. 5, 1785, married Dorothy Clark April 6, 1809; Warren, born in 1790, died young; and William, born April 19, 1792, married Jan. 18, 1816, Nancy C. Polly.

(V) Dr. Silas Fuller, son of Abiel (2) Jr., and the grandfather of our subject, was a man of more than local note, being a scholar and a historian with a great aptitude for using his acquirements in social life. Dr. Fuller was also a most successful physician with an extensive practice. He made a specialty of nervous diseases, his psychological studies greatly benefiting those under his care and influence. In 1837 he went to Hartford, where he took charge of the "Retreat for the Insane" conducting this establishment for a period of ten years with distinguished success in treating and managing the afflicted. His services were also of great benefit as a surgeon in the war of 1812. He was married in 1797 to Alinda Clark and a family of ten children were born to them, five of whom died in childhood. The survivors were: Nelson, born in December, 1798, who died in 1814 when about to enter Yale; Warren A., M. D., born in November, 1800, who married Nancy A. Collins; Zerviah C., born Jan. 25, 1804, who married Dr. George B. Hawley and died in 1833; Jonathan Clark, born in November, 1808, who married Nov. 28, 1833, Nancy A. Holbrook; and Samuel B., M. D., born in October, 1812, who married July 13, 1837, Lemira Little, and had children—Charles C., Samuel and Helen W. All of the children of Dr. Silas Fuller were born in Columbia, Tolland county, in the house on the Green long known as the Dr. Fuller place.

(VI) Jonathan Clark Fuller the father of our subject, received his entire education in the home schools, and while still a young man began clerking. He soon, however, engaged in merchandising for himself on Columbia Green. He died at Liberty Hill aged seventy-three years. Politically he was a Democrat. Both he and wife were members of the Congregational Church, in which Mrs. Fuller was a most devout and ardent worker. To these parents were born: Nancy Adelia, who was born Dec. 4, 1834, and married June 3, 1858, Daniel P. Ticknor. They reside in Willimantic, and have the following children—George; Edith; Sheridan and Carrie E. Daniel Tierman, and George Bennett, twins, who were born Oct. 11, 1836. Daniel first married May 23, 1866, Amelia Post, who died in 1888, and his second marriage was to Ella G. Ford, Jan. 7, 1889. Daniel is a merchant, and is postmaster at Liberty Hill, in Lebanon, and has had three children,—Kathleen T., born in 1890; Lawrence B., born in 1891, who died in infancy; and Howard E., born in 1893.

(VII) George Bennett Fuller the subject of this review, grew up in Columbia, and in 1854 at the age of seventeen accepted a clerkship in Hartford where he was employed for several years by John Farris, music dealer. After this Mr. Fuller traveled as agent for the Treat and Lindley Reed Organ and Steinway piano, making very successful trips through the State. In 1862 he went into trade for himself and for five years carried on a general store directly across the Green from his present store. Then he took up his residence at his present location in a building owned by Seth Collins; later he bought the property which was burned in 1889. Immediately following this misfortune Mr. Fuller built his present store, where ever since he has carried on a very prosperous business and built up an enviable commercial record for integrity. From 1860 to 1890 Mr. Fuller was organist of his church and served as leader of the Church and Sunday-school choirs from 1868 till 1890 when ill health obliged him to resign. He has also been a successful teacher of the organ, piano, and of vocal music. Mr. Fuller owns considerable real estate in Columbia, which he superintends although he does not actively engage in farming.

In politics Mr. Fuller is a Republican, although his first vote was cast for a Democratic candidate. For more than thirty years he has been postmaster, although not continuously. His first service was under President Lincoln. In 1884, he served his town in the State Legislature, and for a number of years was town clerk. Both he and his wife are members of the Congregational Church, and he is a member of the Masonic order, Lyon Lodge.

Mr. Fuller was married May 6, 1862, to Jane E. Clark, a daughter of Lyman C. and Cynthia (Yeomans) Clark. To this marriage these children were born: Lillian Irene, born Jan. 5, 1864, who married in 1889 Frederick H. Avery of East Hartford, Conn., and has one son; Jennie L., born Nov. 5, 1865, who married in 1886, George F. Taylor, one of the active business men of Willimantic, and has two children: Raymond C., born Jan. 24, 1871, who died Dec. 20, 1878; Lena May, born Aug. 7, 1874, who married in 1898, Otto B. Robinson of Willimantic. Mrs. Robinson is a vocalist, having been church singer in Asylum Hill Church in Hartford, also in the Willimantic Congregational Church.

Lyman C. Clark, the father of Mrs. Fuller was a lifetime resident of Columbia, where he engaged in farming and milling. His widow who died Feb. 10, 1903 at the advanced age of eighty-five years, six months and six days was a daughter of David and Sally (Little) Yeomans, who were married Nov. 4, 1801.

The children of Mr. and Mrs. Yeomans were: William A. born June 14, 1805, married Harriet R. Dewey, born April 8, 1817; Sarah Ann, born Sept. 9, 1810, died Dec. 25, 1842, unmarried; and Cynthia, born Aug. 4, 1817, married Lyman C. Clark, mother of one child, born Aug. 26, 1839—Jane Elizabeth, who became Mrs. Fuller.

ELBRIDGE KNOWLTON LEONARD, M. D. What men commonly designate as luck is the prerogative of valiant souls, and in the full perspective of the true values of human existence we ever find that the genius of success and prolific individuality is the heroism and exaltation of personal integrity and the determinate application of one's powers along the line of maximum usefulness. Thus it comes that every worthy life has its distinct elements of heroism, and in reviewing in even a cursory way the career of the honored subject of this memoir we find both lesson and incentive, since the record is one bespeaking a high sense of stewardship and one betokening the loftiest of ideals. Dr. Leonard was one of the able and loved physicians of Rockville, Tolland county, a man who "stood four square to every wind that blows," and the simple story of his noble and useful life may well be treasured in the hearts of descendants in all the days to come.

Dr. Leonard was a native son of Connecticut, having been born in Stafford, Tolland county, Dec. 13, 1833, and his death occurred at his home in Rockville, June 13, 1900. The Leonard family is of stanch English extraction, and the name has been identified with the annals of American history from the early Colonial epoch. The original American progenitors were two brothers, James and Henry Leonard, who emigrated from England in early Colonial times, the latter settling in New Jersey, while the former, the ancestor of the entire family in New England, took up his abode in the old town of Raynham, Mass., where he passed the remainder of his life. From him the line is traced to Elbridge K. through the following successive heads of the several generations: Uriah, William, Jacob, Jacob, Jr., Rufus and Jenks W. The last mentioned married Lucy F. Pease, of Monson, Mass., and in their family of children Dr. Leonard was the fourth son. His father died in the year 1836, when the Doctor was but three years of age, and his boyhood days were passed in the home of his paternal grandparents, in Monson, where he received his preliminary educational discipline in the common schools, and thus laid the foundation for that broad erudition which later years of application brought to him, for he was distinctively a man of scholarly attainments, study ever proving a joy and solace to him, though he was never a helluo librorum, and made his study and investigation count for practical good in connection with his active life work. After leaving the common schools he entered the Westfield Academy, where he completed a regular course of study and did much to mature his literary technique. A man of distinctive individuality, it was but natural that he should early formulate definite plans for his future career, and thus we find him turning his attention to that beneficent profession in which he later attained so signal success, his gentle and kindly nature and deep human sympathy and tolerance making him peculiarly eligible for the vocation of the physician. He entered the Eclectic Medical College of Pennsylvania, at Philadelphia, and graduated in January, 1857. On returning to Connecticut to take up the practice of medicine, he found some antagonism, resulting from his diploma not being fully recognized by a fellow practitioner. While this technicality in no manner detracted from his professional standing, Dr. Leonard was too proud to allow even the slightest cause, whether just or unjust, to exist for such accusation, so he took the course at Yale Medical School, from which he graduated in 1866, receiving his diploma and the degree of M. D. He was now well fortified for his chosen life work, but like many another of the sturdy sons of New England, he had utilized his entire financial resources in securing his education, having the prescience to realize the practical value of the investment. In 1857 he was married, and in the fall of the same year he started for the West, believing that a good field for his early professional endeavors and being led to the choice of location in Illinois from the fact that one of his brothers had there taken up his residence. He established his home in Metamora, Woodford Co., that State, where he entered upon the practice of his profession, his novitiate being of brief duration, since his evident ability and gracious personality soon gained to him public confidence and esteem. During a residence of something more than five years in that locality, however, the Doctor held his profession to a large extent in abeyance, as the prospects for immediate and necessary financial returns seemed better in connection with farming, to which he largely devoted his attention during the interval noted. In January, 1863, he returned to Connecticut and located at West Stafford, in his native county, where he engaged in the active practice of his profession. Two years later he removed to Broadbrook, Hartford county, where he continued successfully the work of his profession until 1879, when he took up his residence in Rockville, which was to continue the scene of his earnest and devoted labors until he was finally called from the sphere of life's activities. Of this period of his life another writer has said: "He soon had a lucrative practice, his skill being readily recognized. He was a broad-minded practitioner and soon gained a reputation which placed him in the front rank of physicians in this section of the State. He was a valued member of the Tolland County Medical Society, of which he was at one time president, having also held the office of clerk of the same, and in 1884 he was a delegate to the National Medical Convention in Washington, D. C." It should also be stated in this connection that he was a member of the Connecticut State Medical Society, and that he was at all times a close student, keeping in touch with the advances made in the sciences of medicine and surgery, and ever retaining the respect and high regard of his professional confreres, for he was ever a scrupulous observer of the unwritten code of ethics and was kindly and considerate in all the relations of life.

The sphere of Dr. Leonard's usefulness was by no means confined to his profession, for he was animated with a high appreciation of the duties of citizenship, and his exceptional judgment and talents led to his being called to positions of public trust and responsibility. Ever an ardent supporter of the principles of the Republican party, he had been an active worker in its cause prior to his removal to Rockville. In 1876 he represented the town of East Windsor in the Lower House of the State Legislature, and it is needless to say that his services in the connection were of no perfunctory or secondary order. For eight years he served as town clerk and treasurer of East Windsor, and was also a member of the local board of school visitors in Rockville, having been particularly zealous in promoting educational advantages, and while he was not active in politics after locating there he ever continued to take a lively interest in national and State affairs, having a broad and exact information in regard to matters of public polity and ever being able to defend his convictions.

Upon coming to Rockville Dr. Leonard established his office at the corner of Union and Ward streets, and later built a home on the south side of Union street, near the corner of Ward, where he remained for a number of years, while he later lived elsewhere on Union street until 1892, when, in company with his son, Parley B., he built the attractive and commodious double residence on Elm street, where he had his office and home until the time of his death, and where his widow still resides. The Doctor was an honored member of the Masonic fraternity, having been affiliated with Fayette Lodge, No. 69, A. F. & A. M., at the time of his demise, while he was also an honorary member of Court Hearts of Oak, No. 16, Foresters of America, at Rockville, of which he was medical adviser for many years. At this point it seems apropos to offer extracts from tributes to the life and character of Dr. Leonard which appeared in the local press at the time of his death:

"Dr. Leonard was the oldest practitioner in the city and one of the oldest in eastern Connecticut. In his death Rockville loses one of its loyal and honored citizens and the medical fraternity one of its valued and respected members. He was conservative and unpretentious, a man of sound judgment, sterling worth and strictest integrity; conscientious and devoted to his profession, and, withal, kind-hearted and unselfish, ever willing to minister to the suffering, even when he well knew no recompense would be forthcoming. Dr. Leonard assisted Dr. Storrs, of Hartford, in the operation in this city a few weeks since when the latter took blood poisoning, resulting in his death. It is thought that Dr. Leonard's case of blood poisoning came from the same operation, this being his opinion at the time he was taken ill and also the opinion of the other physicians in the city."

Concerning his funeral and the hold he had upon popular love and esteem another paper spoke as follows: "The scene as the friends passed out of the door after taking a last look at the remains was touching indeed. Strong men and women, though connected by no bonds of kinship, were seen to weep, as reflections of past kindnesses came to their minds, and young children could scarcely contain themselves as they realized that their friend in affliction was to be laid away. It may not be out of place to note here a little incident as illustrating somewhat the sympathetic character of the deceased. A patient who had been under his charge and whose finances were too limited to enable him to withstand a large doctor's bill, had been attended by him free of charge, and so interested was he in the patient that when he was obliged to turn his patients over to another physician it was with a request that this particular one should continue to be treated free. Although the patient was hardly supposed to be able to be out, yet he was present at the funeral, seemingly unwilling to deprive himself of a last look at his deceased friend. Another illustration of the strong friendship which had been won by this good man was that in the case of a small boy who had once been his patient. The boy, firm in the belief that the Doctor had saved his life, begged the privilege of placing a bunch of flowers on the casket of his deceased friend. And so it is that a good man has gone; that the man who had been instrumental in saving others could not save himself, and the city, the town and the people at large have lost, and that in a deep sense of personal bereavement."

Standing in the full white light of a life and character like this, what more need be said? Words lose their significance and praise or adulation seem impertinent and sacrilegious. Thus in conclusion of this brief memoir of Dr. Leonard we will enter a brief record concerning the domestic chapter in his life, a chapter in which is revealed in the most ideal way the true beauty and nobility of the man, but one from which it would be irreverent to more than lift the curtain.

At West Stafford, Conn., June 26, 1857, Dr. Leonard was united in marriage to Miss Marietta P. Anderson, who was born and reared in West Stafford, being a daughter of Bostwick and Sarepta (Truesdell) Anderson, the latter of whom was a daughter of Parley and Annie (Stimpson) Truesdell. Bostwick Anderson was born in Holland, Conn., a son of Timothy Anderson, the maiden name of whose wife was Patridge. Timothy Anderson was a farmer by vocation, and of his children who attained years of maturity we enter a brief record, as follows: Orlin was prominently engaged in the manufacturing business, having been for a number of years a resident of Ware, Mass., where he died; Bostwick and Melina were twins, and the latter died unmarried; Timothy, Jr., a farmer by vocation, died in Monson, Mass.; William died in Rhode Island; Louisa, who never married, is also deceased; and Laura, who became the wife of Ira Peck, resided in Monson, Mass. Bostwick Anderson, who was known and honored as a man of sterling character, devoted practically his entire life to agricultural pursuits, having resided both in Stafford and West Stafford, Conn., but finally removing to Monson, Mass., where he died in 1881, at the venerable age of eighty-four years; his wife passed away at the age of forty-five. They became the parents of nine children, as follows: Anna, widow of Leander Whiting, is a resident of Athol, Mass.; Timothy, who was a farmer in Stafford, Conn., died at the age of about thirty-three; Parley, a farmer, died in Monson, Mass.; Marietta P. is the widow of Dr. Leonard; Laura and Valerous died in childhood, as did also Ellen, the next in order of birth; Martha was first married to George Carroll, and after his death to George King, whom she survives, making her home in Springfield, Mass.; and Malina died, unmarried, at the age of twenty-one.

Mrs. Leonard was reared in Stafford, securing her early educational training in the local schools and then entering Monson (Mass.) Academy, where she continued her studies one term, being then recalled to her home by reason of illness in the family. She taught two terms of school in Monson and one in what is now Hampden, Mass., her popularity and success in the work being somewhat out of proportion with her stipend, since at one time she had charge of fifty pupils and received in consideration of her efforts the sum of two dollars per week and her board, following the old-time plan of "boarding round." She is a woman of gracious refinement, and her sympathy and devotion proved a great aid to her husband during the long years of their married life. She still resides in the old home, and is solaced by the love and regard of her children and the large circle of friends gained during the years of her residence in Rockville. She is a devout member of the Union Congregational Church. Dr. and Mrs. Leonard became the parents of three children, namely: Lucy Ella, who was born in Metamora, Ill., and who died at the age of eleven years; Parley B., mentioned below; and Rufus Harry, who was born in Broadbrook, Conn., now manager of the Rockville branch of the Armour Packing & Provision Co.

PARLEY B. LEONARD is one of Rockville's well-known and representative citizens. He was the first incumbent of the office of city clerk of Rockville and is now serving as first selectman of the township of Vernon. He was born in Metamora, Woodford Co., Ill., Oct. 26, 1860, and was but a child at the time of his parents' return to Connecticut. His earliest scholastic discipline was received in the schools at Broadbrook, where his parents then lived, and after attending the public schools he continued his education in a private school conducted by Miss Abbie Bissell. Thereafter he was for a time a student in Hitchcock Academy, at Brimfield, Mass., and his specific educational work was completed in the Rockville high school. When a young man in his teens he became a clerk in the drug establishment of Heber Townsend, in Rockville, and he remained in the employ of Mr. Townsend for a number of years, within which time the latter opened the first drug store in the Henry block, shortly after its completion. After leaving the employ of Mr. Townsend Mr. Leonard was a clerk in the Sill drug store until April, 1882, when he entered the employ of Belding Bros. & Co., in the capacity of timekeeper and assistant bookkeeper, while at the expiration of two years he was promoted to the position of head bookkeeper, in which capacity he has ever since continued to render most effective service, being known as a fine accountant and discriminating business man. He is a director of the Rock Manufacturing Co., Rockville. In politics he has ever been stanchly arrayed in support of the Republican party, and he has taken an active interest in local affairs of a public nature, while he was early called upon to serve in public office, having first been elected town auditor, of which position he was the incumbent several years. In 1889, upon the incorporation of Rockville under city charter, he was elected its first clerk, and in 1894 he was elected a member of the board of selectmen of the town of Vernon, while in 1897 he was elected first selectman, in which responsible position he has since continued to serve, being known as an efficient and painstaking official and as one whose integrity of purpose is beyond cavil. He is one of the prominent workers in the local ranks of his party, and keeps closely in touch with the questions and issues of the day. Fraternally he is identified with the Foresters, and is auditor of his lodge.

On Nov. 19, 1884, Mr. Leonard was united in marriage, in Rockville, to Miss Mary E. Fitton, who was born in Cavendish, Vt., Dec. 16, 1862, the eldest child of Crosley and Caroline R. (Tarbell) Fitton, who are individually mentioned on other pages of this work. Mr. and Mrs. Leonard have three children, whose names, with respective dates of birth, are as follows: Crosley E., Oct. 13, 1885; Ella Carrie, July 19, 1895; and Carrie F., Aug. 4, 1898. The family home is the fine double house of which mention has already been made.

PHINEAS W. TURNER, a prominent silk manufacturer, and for many years postmaster at Turnerville, town of Hebron, Tolland county, passed away Jan. 4, 1903, at that place. He was long one of the best known men in Hebron, with all whose affairs he was actively identified.

Mr. Turner was one of the family of eight children born to Anson and Hannah (Gurley) Turner, and was born in 1819, upon the farm of his grandfather in Coventry, on the Willimantic river, near Spring Manor. There the family resided for a number of years, later removing to the mother's home, the old Gurley place in Mansfield. Though Mr. Turner was prominent in his later years, and built up the village which bore his name, he was a self-made man in the best sense of the word, beginning life as a poor farm lad. Mr. Turner received only an ordinary common school education, but inherited from his mother the strong intellect and taste for reading which compensated largely for the lack of a more liberal education in his youth. Like many a farmer's boy he aspired to a business life, and began selling silk for Marshall Dimock and Nathan Rixford of Mansfield, two pioneers of that industry. This first attempt was disappointing and he returned to the farm, buying a large flock of sheep, intending to become a farmer. Soon after he was urged by the same people to sell for them again, and as sheep-raising had not proved profitable he reluctantly accepted the offer, and, making New York City his headquarters, was so successful that he felt that he was entitled to a partnership in the firm. This, however, they refused to give him, thinking him too ambitious, but as a result, in 1850 he entered into partnership with Ebenezer R. Gurley, of Mansfield, which continued for many years. Their beginning was in a small mill of Deacon Clark's near Tolland street, but soon outgrowing the facilities there a larger mill was rented in Mansfield Hollow. In the meantime Mr. Turner's brother, Henry F. Turner, had joined the partnership, taking charge of the salesroom at New York, while Phineas W. Turner in 1852 took active charge of the manufacture. Here was located, on the same stream, another factory owned by Edmund Golding, and a bitter lawsuit over water rights, Mr. Turner's first one, came on, attracting much attention at the time, but it was finally won by him as were all other suits in which he became involved in after life. Business increasing, and being unable to purchase the rented property at the Hollow, from Major Swift, the owner, another change was necessary. The old Furnace property at Hebron, including the water rights to the North Pond, being for sale, engaged Mr. Turner's attention. This was an excellent water privilege, which in those days was regarded as a necessity for manufacturing. Mr. Turner bought the property and established his business there in 1853, the entire plant then consisting of a grist mill, saw mill and an old blast furnace building and two dwellings. A new mill was soon built, houses and other mills added, till to-day the village consists of three silk mills, a store and about thirty dwellings.

The next need was a post office and Turnerville being on the old stage route from Colchester to Andover, one was established during the administration of President Buchanan. Mr. Turner was appointed postmaster, his commission being signed by Montgomery Blair, postmaster general. This office he held until his death, excepting during President Cleveland's second term, when he was ousted by a political maneuver and against the wishes of nine-tenths of the patrons of the office. This was the only public office Mr. Turner ever held, although he was deeply interested in the political and civil life of the community and the State, and was a lifelong ardent Republican.

During the Civil war, Mr. Turner attended personally to securing men to fill the quota of the town. As time advanced the need of railroad facilities was sorely felt and Mr. Turner became deeply interested in the building of the Air Line road, the final success of which was largely due to his efforts and financial assistance. Of almost unlimited determination of purpose, and confident of success in whatever he undertook, Mr. Turner staked his entire fortune in the road to his almost utter ruin. He was vice-president of the road and one of the first locomotives bore his name. In fact, he furnished a part of the money needed for the purchase of the engine and as evidence of his interest in the road and confidence in its success, he personally secured the town of Hebron for one-sixth of the amount voted by the town in aid of the road.

Mr. Turner's later years were spent in close attention to his silk business, combined with the care of his large farm, in which he took much pride, and he was assisted by his son, who, although in business in Willimantic, spent a large portion of his time with him. Few men in this section of the State were as well known or exercised so wide influence.

Mr. Turner married, in 1846, Catharine E. daughter of Joshua Tilden, and had one son, Arthur G. Turner, also a silk manufacturer at Willimantic, now married and residing there. Mr. Turner's widow and son survive him, as well as a brother, Henry F. Turner, of New York City.

JAMES. A branch of the James family has dwelt in Tolland county for upward of a hundred years, and, as nearly as can be traced, originated with Benjamin James, who came from England in the ship "William and Mary" in 1665, settling in Narragansett Bay, on Prudence Island. He is said to have had a brother who accompanied him to this country but either returned to England or went to the Virginia Plantations soon after. Recent research among the members of the James family in California, who are descended from the Jameses of southern Pennsylvania, gives strength to the presumption that this brother went to Virginia and was the progenitor of the Pennsylvania branch. Of the family of Benjamin (1) nothing is known of his wife or of his children other than that he had a son Benjamin.

Benjamin James (2), son of Benjamin, was born on Prudence Island, and married a Miss Heymes, of Newport, the daughter of a colonist. Their children were: Benjamin, Nathan, Remington, a daughter and Rhoda.

Benjamin James (3), son of Benjamin (2), born in 1771, married, Feb. 8, 1794, Cynthia Russell, of Ashford, Conn. Mr. James came from Ashford to the town of Union, in Tolland county, and March 3, 1795, bought land of William Williams. He died in 1848. His children were: Diana, born Oct. 15, 1794, died March 6, 1796; Benjamin Reynolds, born Nov. 22, 1796, died Dec. 14, 1819; Hannah D., born June 10, 1801, married, Feb. 15, 1827, Ephraim S. Carpenter; Rhoda, born March 27, 1803, married, Dec. 25, 1823, David Fuller, and lived and died in Willington, Conn.; Rebecca, born March 17, 1805, married Joseph Walker and lived and died in Union, Conn.; Betsey, born March 30, 1807, had scarlet fever in childhood, which left her deaf and dumb; Josiah R., born Sept. 12, 1809, died about 1900 in Union (he was a teamster); Aaron R., born Sept. 26, 1811, married Jerusha Bowen, lived in Stafford, Middletown and Rockville and died in Windsorville, Conn., in January, 1896; Elisha Benjamin Reynolds was born in 1814.

Elisha Benjamin Reynolds James, son of Benjamin (3), was born Jan. 28, 1814, in the town of Union, Conn. He had a common-school education and learned the trade of shoemaker. He married, March 28, 1841, Mary Ann Thomas, born in April, 1814, daughter of Roland G. and Dorcas (Main) Thomas, of Willington, Conn. In 1844 he removed from Willington to Colchester, in order to give his children educational advantages at Bacon Academy. During his residence there the rubber business had become extensively carried on, and he was employed at that. In August, 1854, he moved to Rockville, where for upward of twenty years he was an esteemed and respected citizen. Mr. James located on Park street, and until his death resided in the home now occupied by his son, the immediate subject of this sketch. For some time he was employed in the Florence mill, and later engaged in the furniture and undertaking business. For several years, up to the time of his death, which occurred March 24, 1876, he was in charge of Grove Hill cemetery.

H. L. James.

The death of his widow occurred Jan. 29, 1878, and the remains of both rest in the cemetery the beautifying of which had been such a labor of interest to Mr. James.

Elisha Benjamin Reynolds James was an Abolitionist of the strongest type, a conscientious man who lived up to his professions. While living in Colchester he was one of six of that faith, and his home was a shelter for escaping slaves, being, in fact, an "underground railroad" station. He was a man of wide sympathy and tender heart, and many benefited by his kindness. For many years he was a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Both he and his wife belonged to the Methodist Church, in which he was a trustee, and in which they were valued and beloved.

Mr. and Mrs. James had the following children: Herbert Llewellyn; Sarah M., born Oct. 18, 1843, married, Dec. 17, 1878, Lebbeus Ensworth Smith, a resident of Putnam, where he conducts a furniture and undertaking business; and Albert E., born Dec. 4, 1851, died Aug. 4, 1854.

THE THOMAS FAMILY, from which Herbert L. James has descended in the maternal line, has an ancestry which can be traced as far back as 1680. Its coat of arms signifies a noble lineage, and is thus described: "Per pale azure and gules, on a chevron engrailed, two griffins passant, combatant, counter charged on a chief wavy azure; three cinque foils argent. Crest: Out of a mural crown argent a demi seahorse, gules, crined, or, charged on the shoulder with a cinque foil, arg. In the paws an anchor, erect, sable, resting in the mural crown. Motto: 'I Dhuw bo'r diolch.'"

Benjamin Thomas, the ancestor of the family in America, came from Wales between 1680 and 1685. As far as known there was but one son.

Benjamin Thomas (2), son of Benjamin, was born in 1726, and married a maiden by the name of Kibbe, by whom he had sixteen daughters. His second wife was Johanna Rhodes, of Massachusetts, and their children were: Roland G., Dorothy, Benjamin, Jairus and Asa. Of these,

Roland G. Thomas married Dorcas, daughter of Abraham Main, and they had the following named children: Mary Ann, who married Elisha B. R. James; Sarah Ann, who married Amasa Morse; and Dwight Asa, who went West and supposedly lied there.

Of the other children of Benjamin (2), Dorothy married (first) a Mr. Ward, and had one son, L. T., who died in 1902; her second husband was John Kenny, and their four children were John, Jerry, James and Sarah, the last named marrying Charles Hickox; John resides in New Haven, Conn.; James married Mary Eliot, and formerly lived at Glastonbury, removing to Oregon in the early eighties (of his five children, Franklin A., Herbert, Lizzie, Ben and Robert, the eldest, Franklin A., was for some time a prominent newspaper man of Portland, and for the past four years has been the manager for all the territory west of Denver for the Waterman Pen people. He married Alice M. Chase, and has two children).

Asa Thomas, son of Benjamin (2), was born in 1806, and was one of the early settlers of Rockville, being employed by George Kellogg when the original Rock mill was built. The father (Benjamin) was seventy-eight years old when Asa was born, and he was the youngest of over twenty children. Asa spent the latter part of his life in Mansfield. He married Laura Goodale, and they had four children, namely: Lizzie G., Johanna E., Lucy and Benjamin G. Of these, Lizzie married Hiram Skinner and lived and died in Bolton, Conn. Johanna E. married James Gilfillan, ex-United States Treasurer, now of New York City. Lucy married a Mr. Skinner, and lived and died in Stoughton, Mass. Benjamin G. lives in Mansfield, Connecticut.

HERBERT LLEWELLYN JAMES, son of the late Elisha Benjamin Reynolds James, is a native of Connecticut, born Jan. 13, 1842, in the town of Willington, Tolland county, on what is known as the "Russell Farm." He attended Bacon Academy, at Colchester, and the high schools of Middletown and Rockville. He entered the weaving room of the Florence mill, in Rockville, during the summer of 1856, and, in June, 1857, began a business career in Rockville, as a clerk in the Florence Mills. Mr. James remained in a clerical position in these mills for some ten years, being then advanced to agent of the mills, and he retained his connection with the Florence mills till August, 1881. On April 1, 1881, he became treasurer of the Rock Manufacturing Co., and also its secretary and the general manager of its business affairs, retaining that position up to December, 1901, when he retired from active business. Mr. James is one of the foremost business men of Rockville, and for years has been an influential man in his section of the State. He is president of the Rockville Railroad Company, a director in the First National and Savings Banks of Rockville, and was one of the incorporators of the latter institution. In his political affiliations he is, and has been from the time of casting his first vote, a Republican. His interest in politics is keen, but he is a business man before being a politician and has never sought any political office.

On Oct. 10, 1865, in Windsorville, Conn., Mr. James was married to Miss Ann Frances Leavitt, who died Feb. 12, 1890. She was born Feb. 18, 1844, in Bath, Maine, daughter of Caleb and Delina (Robertson) Leavitt. To this marriage came three children, namely: Howard Kellogg, born July 20, 1867, and two daughters who died in infancy, Clara L. and Mary Frances.

In the Leavitts is found another of the old history-making families of New England. The family arms are thus mentioned in the old and authentic records: "Leavitt Arms: Argent, a series of crosses crosslet fetchee. A lion ramp.

sable. Crest: a demi-lion ramp. arg. crowned, or, holding a cross crosslet fitchée of the first."

John Leavitt came from England to Dorchester, Mass., in 1634. He removed soon after to Hingham, Mass., and land was granted him by patent. In 1636 he was made a freeman of Hingham, and was a representative at the General Court from 1656 to 1664, and selectman during 1661-63-65-68-72-74-75. He was twice married, the name of his first wife being unknown; the second was Sarah. The children of John were: Israel, born in 1648, who married Lydia Jackson, and had three children; and two others, unnamed.

Israel Leavitt (2), son of Israel, was born at Hingham Aug. 1, 1680. His brother John is mentioned. Israel married Mary Bates in 1716.

Caleb Leavitt, son of Israel and Mary, born in 1730, married Sarah Beal, and their children were: Elijah, David and Caleb.

Caleb Leavitt (2), born Oct. 15, 1780, married Nancy Sewall, of Bath, Maine, and their children were Caleb and Nancy.

Caleb Leavitt (3), born at Bath, Maine, May 21, 1808, died in Rockville, Conn., May 1, 1897. He married Delina Robertson, and their three children were: Alice F., Ann Frances and Martha S.

Among the distinguished members of this family was Caleb Leavitt, who was born in 1730. He was conspicuous during the Revolutionary war, his record being one of bravery and continued and deserved promotion. On May 4, 1756, he is found to have been a private under Col. Richard Gridley. He was among those who went from Hingham to Albany to take part in the Crown Point campaign, on May 4, 1759. As a private he was with Capt. Jotham Gay in the expedition of Gov. Pownall from Boston to the mouth of the Penobscot river to build a fort, and he also took part in the Halifax expedition, in 1757. From May, 1775, to January, 1776, he was first corporal, then second lieutenant, and then was made first lieutenant in Capt. James Lincoln's Company, was in garrison at the siege of Boston, and responded to the Lexington Alarm. In October, 1776, in the same command, he was on duty at Hull and Nantucket for eight months. In September, 1777, he took part in Gen. Hancock's Rhode Island expedition, and from August to November, 1778, he was a member of Capt. Stowe's Company.

On March 24, 1896, Herbert L. James was married, in Brooklyn, N. Y., to Mrs. Ella Reed Cruttenden, widow of George T. Cruttenden, and they occupy the old homestead on Park street, in Rockville. Both belong to the Union Congregational Church.

HOWARD KELLOGG JAMES, the only son of Herbert L. James, was born at Ketch Mills (Windsorville), Conn., July 20, 1867. On March 23, 1897, in California, he married Miss Mattie E. Meserole, eldest daughter of George F. Meserole, of the well-known family of that name of Brooklyn, N. Y.

This family is of Huguenot extraction. Howard K. James has been a journalist for some years, and is at present a practicing attorney-at-law in San Francisco, having been admitted to the bar of that State in 1897, and to the United States courts the following year. He is also the able editor of a trade journal in San Francisco and secretary of the California Retail Merchants' Association. He resides at Alameda, Cal., is an influential member of the Republican party in that city, and is a commissioner of the Superior court of Alameda county. He has a son, Richard Leavitt James, born in Oakland, Cal., April 21, 1898.

Returning to Herbert L. James, of Rockville, it may justly be affirmed that few in this locality occupy a more prominent position among the leading, self-made men of that city. On his own merits, without influence of wealth in relatives, he has won his way from the bottom to the top of the ladder. As a business man Mr. James is one of the upright, reliable men who so stand on business questions that it is not difficult to meet them. What he is to-day he will be to-morrow, outspoken in praise or blame, and always ready to meet any promise or fill to the letter any obligation. His sense of justice not only causes him to treat others right but also to demand the same in return. It seems to the biographer that no better close could be made to this brief sketch than to add the family coat of arms, with its suggestive motto.

"James arms: Azure, a lion rampant between two castles triple-towered in chief, a scaling ladder in base, argent. A border, or, charged with four roses proper and as many spear-heads, alternately. Crest: a lion ramp., arg., collared, holding between the fore paws a rose, proper. The dexter hind paw resting on an escutcheon, argent, charged with a spear head, sable, as in the arms. Motto. Durw a digon—God and Enough."

ELEAZER BENNETT CRANE, a well-known farmer of Chestnut Hill, Mansfield, Tolland county is a worthy descendant of a line of ancestors prominently identified with the country's history, to whom he may well point with pride.

(I) John Crane, of Coventry, is supposed to have been a grandson of Benjamin Crane, of Wethersfield, and is the common ancestor of the Mansfield Cranes. There was a John Crane, a blacksmith who died Oct. 21, 1694, aged thirty-one years. On October 27, 1692, he married Abigail Butler, by whom he had one child, Josiah, born March 22, 1694. It is supposed, but not proven, that John Crane had had by a previous marriage, a son John born in 1689. Eleazer Bennett Crane is able to trace his ancestry back to this (II) John Crane, supposed to be the son of the first John Crane, who was born in 1689, and married Abigail Cross, October 20, 1712, who was born in Windham, June 23, 1694, a daughter of Peter Cross, of Mansfield. John Crane was among the early settlers of Coventry ut his place of location prior to the date of removal is not known, although it is supposed by those who are authorities upon such matters that he came from Wethersfield or Windsor, where there are still preserved records of Cranes, but this is not clearly established. However, he was in Coventry as early as 1708, if not before that time, and was one of the accepted inhabitants of the place in 1730, when the first list of freemen was made. Subsequently he removed to Mansfield, but the date is not known. It is supposed that he lived near the Millimantic river, and that his removal to Mansfield was only across the river, the dividing line between the two towns. It is claimed that he is buried in the cemetery east of Eagleville, in the town of Mansfield. This, however, is known certainly, that he was a pious man, the family a respected one and in comfortable circumstances. John Crane's will was probated March 19, 1765, and inventoried £146, 7s, 6d; he died in Mansfield, March 1, 1765, and his wife in September of the same year, and both are buried in the Gurleyville cemetery. Their children were: John, born Sept. 8, 1713, died Sept. 20, 1713; Abigail, born Oct. 20, 1714, who was the second wife of Lieut. Thomas Barrows, and died Aug. 3, 1750; John, born Oct. 25, 1716, who married Sarah Chamberlain, resided in Mansfield and later removed to the town of Becket, Mass.; Ebenezer, born July 4, 1720, who married Sarah Curtis and after her death, Morey Neff, and resided in Lebanon and Mansfield; Mary, born May 22, 1722, who married Samuel Allen; Samuel, born April 23, 1724; Hezekiah; Deborah, born Aug. 1, 1729, who died young; Daniel, born Jan. 29, 1728, died Jan. 4, 1739; Ruth, born Dec. 22, 1730, who married a Mr. Padlock.

(III) Hezekiah Crane, of the above family, was born Oct. 10, 1725, married Tamesin, daughter of Elisha Eldbridge, of Mansfield, June 6, 1749, and she died March 15, 1771, while he passed away Jan. 8, 1795. All of his life was spent in Mansfield and he was the executor of his father's will, being supposed to have lived on the homestead, his father and mother spending their declining years with him. He served in the Revolutionary war, in 1777 under Gen. Gates and in 1778 in Capt. Roswell Grant's company. To himself and his wife were born: Hezekiah; Daniel, born April 14, 1752; Ruth, born May 1, 1753, who married a Mr. Clark of Ellington, Conn.; Elisha, born July 13, 1754, who married a Miss Hanks; Tamesin, born Feb. 16, 1756, married Elisha Field, a resident of Woodstock, Vt., who later removed to Houndsville, N. Y., where he died, having served as a drummer in the Civil war; Dorcas, born Aug. 28, 1757, who married a Mr. Howard; Philip, born July 3, 1759, was a fifer in the Revolutionary war, and died while in the army, at East Chester, N. Y., Oct. 9, 1776; Jemina, born Oct. 25, 1761; David E., born Dec. 16, 1763, who removed to Dorset, Vt.; Anne, born Dec. 20, 1766, married to Constant C. Balcomb; Zerviah, born May 28, 1769, who married Chester Southworth.

(IV) Hezekiah, son of Hezekiah (I), was born March 4, 1751, and was the great-grandfather of our subject. On April 14, 1774, he married Rachel, daughter of Isaac Hall, who was born June 1, 1751. Hezekiah Crane resided in Mansfield, where he was a farmer and stockdealer, was a trooper in the Revolutionary war, serving in Capt. Isaac Sergeant's company in 1776, and died of fever at Canton Street, Lawrence Co., N. Y., in 1813. To him and his wife were born: Isaac, born Feb. 20, 1775, who married Sarah Leonard; John, born May 16, 1776, said to have settled in East Hartford; Jesse; Asa, born April 27, 1781, who married Wealthy Babcock and died in Cicero, N. Y., Oct. 2, 1844; Amasa, born July 27, 1782, who married Elizabeth Bugsby, and removed to Thompson township, Sullivan Co., N. Y., where he died; Abigail, born June 11, 1784; Daniel, born July 26, 1786, married to Eunice Conant; Zerviah, born April 3, 1789, who married Thomas Baldwin and removed to New York State; Anna, born Aug. 21, 1792, who was the first wife of Simeon Abbe, of Mansfield.

(V) Jesse Crane, the grandfather of our subject, was born May 9, 1779, in Mansfield, and was a farmer all his life, residing on several different farms in that locality, in the towns of Windham and Mansfield, and spending his last days on Springhill in the town of Mansfield. In politics, he was a Jeffersonian Democrat, a quiet, Christian man, and a member of the Baptist Church. During his lifetime, he dealt quite extensively in stock and was an expert in the judgment of the same. His death occurred April 7, 1862. He was married Sept. 16, 1798, to Rhoda Abbe, born March 2, 1781, a daughter of Solomon A. and Lucy (Johnson) Abbe. There were six children of this marriage: Charles, born Feb. 5, 1799, married Theoda Bennett in 1821, and was a farmer of Mansfield, where he died. Millen, father of our subject, was born Dec. 19, 1802. Origen, born July 25, 1804, married Bridget T. Greene, who was born in Richmond, R. I.; he was educated at the Newton Theological Institution (Baptist) in Massachusetts, preaching in Weston and Grafton, Mass. Being a minister, he often had children placed in his care and at one time had a daughter of ex-Gov. Fenton of New York at his home for educational purposes; upon certain occasions the Governor came to Grafton to see his daughter, and on one of his visits, when they were out in the yard and the Governor in the swing, Mr. Crane gave him a vigorous push and fell over upon his face dead; this occurred April 20, 1860. Abby Ann, born Feb. 19, 1810, married Eleazer Freeman, a carpenter, who with his wife, died in Mansfield. Mary Ann, born May 30, 1813, married first, Enoch Freeman and second, Thomas Alexander, and resided in Mansfield, where her death occurred. Marilla is the widow of Albert Storrs and resides in Mansfield.

(VI) Deacon Millen Crane, father of our subject, was born in Mansfield and grew up on a farm, attending school in the winter. As soon as old enough, for several winters he taught school, working on the farm during the summer months. After his marriage, he removed to the home of his wife's parents (the farm now owned by Eleazer Bennett Crane) where he spent the remainder of his life. During his life he was successful and highly respected; he died Oct. 20, 1863, soon after a visit he paid to his son, Alvin M., at Fortress Monroe, Va., where the young man was stationed during the Civil war. In early life, Deacon Crane was a Democrat, but joined the Republican party when it was formed, and voted with that party the remainder of his life, holding many of the minor offices in Mansfield and representing the town in the Legislature in 1844. In addition, he served as county commissioner for several years and was a liberal supporter of and a regular attendant upon the Baptist Church of Mansfield, being a deacon in the same for over thirty years previous to his death. In his life he was upright, careful, conservative and was respected by all.

On March 3, 1824, he was married to Sarah (or Sally) Bennett, born in Mansfield, the only child of Eleazer and Deborah (Hall) Bennett, the former of whom was a farmer of Mansfield and served in the war of 1812 at New London, Conn. The children of this marriage also were six in number. Sarah Cordelia married Don F. Johnson, a carpenter and contractor, and died in Willimantic. Deborah Bennett married Orrin Shumway and died in young womanhood, he being a machinist of Mansfield. Abby Ann died young. Eleazer Bennett. Alfred B. died young. Alvin M., born Aug. 3, 1839, married first Sarah Adams and second Jane Wilson and resides at Groton, Mass. In 1862, he enlisted in Co. D, 21st C. V. I., and saw service in Virginia and North Carolina, being appointed lieutenant, and later captain to succeed F. S. Long, who was killed before Petersburg, Va. After the war, he returned to Mansfield and in 1866 served one term in the Legislature from Mansfield. In 1869 he was graduated from Brown University and in 1872 from Newton Theological Seminary, having filled charges at Shelburne Falls and Boylston, Mass.; he is now located at Groton, Mass., as a Baptist minister.

(VII) Eleazer Bennett Crane, our subject, was born Sept. 10, 1834, in the home he now occupies; he attended the district school and went one term to a select school kept by J. C. Fitch at South Windham, while during the summer he learned to work upon the farm. All of his life has been spent upon his present property, as he came into possession of it after his parents' death, having tenderly cared for them in their old age. The farm is a fine one, consisting of 180 acres in a good state of cultivation and supplied with excellent buildings. Since he has assumed charge, Mr. Crane has made many improvements, among which is a new barn, built in 1898. In addition to carrying on general farming in connection with his son, Winfield, Mr. Crane carries on an extensive milk business, having a large route through Willimantic, and his property is known as Wolf Rock Dairy Farm.

On Oct. 5, 1859, he was married to Clara, a daughter of Robert A. and Eliza (Ward) Barrows, a native of Mansfield, who was born July 30, 1840. Mr. Barrows was a farmer of Mansfield. To Mr. and Mrs. Crane were born: Winfield S., born June 13, 1862, who married Nellie Barrows, has two children, Winifred and Donald E., and assists his father upon the farm; Alice M., born Sept. 9, 1867, who married Charles Crane, of Willimantic, a member of the building and contracting firm of Latham & Crane; Gertrude, born Oct. 12, 1873, who graduated from the Willimantic High School and Providence Business College and is now a stenographer at Willimantic.

In politics, Mr. Crane is a Republican and has held many local offices; including three terms on the board of selectmen, one term as first selectman and two years as a member. Religiously, he is a member of the Baptist Church of Willimantic. Being able to trace his ancestry back to four soldiers of the Revolution, the family of Mr. Crane are entitled to a place among the Daughters of the American Revolution, and Mrs. Crane and her daughter Gertrude are both associated with Anne Wood Elderkin Chapter of that organization. Both Mr. and Mrs. Crane are very pleasant people, prosperous and highly respected. Their standing in the community is one to be envied, and they dispense a delightful hospitality at their pleasant home, where they enjoy the comforts of life.

GEORGE N. BRIGHAM (deceased) was in his lifetime one of the best-known citizens of Rockville, Tolland county, in which city he held the appointment of postmaster for twenty years, and when he passed to his just reward he left behind him a name to which he had added prestige by his life of probity and successful business ventures. Capt. Brigham was a representative of one of the old and honored families of Connecticut which played an important part in the development and advancement of that Commonwealth from an early date in the history of the country.

George N. Brigham was born May 2, 1831, in South Coventry, Conn., son of Daniel R. and Eliza (Needham) Brigham, who were born in South Coventry Aug. 6, 1795, and in Stafford, Conn., Jan. 6, 1796, respectively. Daniel R. Brigham was a son of Cephas and Amelia (Robertson) Brigham, who lived and died on a farm in South Coventry. Eliza (Needham) Brigham was a daughter of George and Elizabeth (Frisbie) Needham, who resided between Stafford Springs and Furnace Hollow. She often visited an uncle who resided in South Coventry, and there she met her husband, Daniel R. Brigham.

George A. Brigham

Daniel R. and Eliza Brigham had the following children: Daniel Watson, born April 6, 1821, died in Williamsburg, Brooklyn, N. Y. Henry Gray, born April 13, 1823, died in Rockville, and was buried in Greenwood cemetery, Brooklyn. Emily Wright, born Nov. 1, 1826, died in Hartford, Conn., Jan. 20, 1901, the widow of A. H. Brown. Frederick Benton, born April 13, 1829, died in New York. George N. (our subject) and Edwin G., twins, were born May 2, 1831. All of the children were born in South Coventry, where the honored parents lie buried side by side, the mother having died Dec. 3, 1854, and the father about 1865. His declining years were spent in Rockville, at the home of his son, Edwin G.

George N. Brigham attended the schools of his native town, and when but a boy commenced his business career by entering a mill in Coventry, where he learned the trade of a weaver. About 1850 he removed to Rockville, and was first employed in the old Florence Mill. Later he secured employment in the American and Rock mills, being an employe in the former, in charge of the dressing and spooling departments, when he responded to the call of duty and enlisted, July 16, 1862. Prior to this, in the spring of 1852, Mr. Brigham went to California, via the Isthmus, but after two years returned, having engaged in various occupations, including mining, and gained many valuable experiences. Mr. Brigham entered the service as sergeant of Company D, 14th Conn. V. I., being mustered in Aug. 20, 1862. On Nov. 16, 1863, he was promoted to the rank of second lieutenant of Company I, 14th Conn. V. I. On March 28, 1864, he again received promotion, becoming first lieutenant of Company B, 14th Conn. V. I., of which company he was made captain in June of the same year. During his term of service Capt. Brigham was wounded, at the battle of Gettysburg, July 3, 1863, at Morton's Ford Va., and at Ream's Station, Va., Aug. 25, 1864. On account of ill health he was honorably discharged Dec. 8, 1864, and returned to Rockville. However, on account of his enfeebled condition, he was not able to resume his former occupation. Under Johnson's administration he was appointed post master at Rockville, which office he held for twenty years, and when the weight of years and his ill health made his retirement necessary, his grateful fellow townsmen gathered at his home, and, in speeches and appropriate offerings, testified their appreciation of his services as a soldier and a government official, as well as a private citizen. In addition to discharging his duties as postmaster he served, to the entire satisfaction of his constituents, as tax collector and member of the school board, and filled other local offices; he was a member of the school board at the time of his death, which occurred March 25, 1896. His body was interred in Grove Hill cemetery, where a handsome monument marks his last resting place.

During his honorable and useful life Capt. Brigham was a consistent member of the Union Congregational Church, serving in many capacities, and at the time of his death was chairman of the society's committee. He was also a member of the Golden Cross. He was a charter member of Burpee Post, G. A. R., and took a leading part in the work of that organization, as well as in a number of secret societies. In 1870 he erected the comfortable home on Brooklyn street where his death occurred.

In October, 1854, Capt. Brigham was married, at New Britain, Conn., to Miss Sarah Pratt Bodge, a native of Lebanon, Conn., born Aug. 27, 1831, daughter of Henry and Mary (Markham) Bodge. Mrs. Brigham died at Rockville Oct. 22, 1878, and is buried in Grove Hill cemetery. She was the mother of four children: Charles Henry, born Oct. 22, 1855, died Jan. 25, 1893, at New Haven, Conn.; he was married. Frank Markham is mentioned below. Mary E. and Martyn E., twins, born May 21, 1870, died in infancy. The second marriage of Capt. Brigham was to Miss Mary Elizabeth Bodge, a sister of his former wife, who was born Feb. 20, 1834, in Lebanon, and is still living. She is prominent in the Union Congregational Church, and, indeed, throughout the community, where her many excellent attributes have gained her hosts of friends.

Henry Bodge was born March 11, 1804, a son of Joseph Bodge, while his wife, Mary (Markham) Bodge, was born in East Hampton, Conn., in 1800, a daughter of Nathaniel and Mary (Strong) Markham. Henry Bodge was a carpenter and joiner, and lived in Rockville for a number of years. He died in 1893, his wife in 1856, and both are buried in Grove Hill cemetery. Their only son, Charles Henry Bodge, was one of the first to be interred in that beautiful cemetery, in 1848.

FRANK MARKHAM BRIGHAM was born Feb. 20, 1858, in Rockville, where he was reared and educated, attending the public schools. From 1876 until the expiration of his father's fifth term he served in the post office, and in 1887 became a member of the firm of Foster & Brigham, clothiers, becoming sole proprietor in June, 1896, since which time he has successfully conducted the enterprise alone, and is now the leader in his line in Rockville.

On Nov. 16, 1887, Mr. Brigham married Miss Minnie C. Sill of Rockville, a native of Andover, Conn., daughter of Isaac Watts Newton and Almira (Bolles) Sill, natives of North Lyme and Columbia, Conn., respectively. Isaac Watts Newton Sill died at Andover, Conn., where he was a deacon in the Congregational Church, in which his father, Isaac Watts Still, was a deacon for over fifty years. Mrs. Sill died in Rockville, whither she removed after her husband's death. Mr. and Mrs. Brigham have had the following children. Persis E. (who died in childhood), Christine Sill, Marion F., Teressa M., George Newton and Lucille Markham.

In politics Mr. Brigham is one of the staunch Republicans of Rockville. Fraternally he is a member of the I. O. O. F.; Fayette Lodge, F. & A. M.; and the S. of A. R. Both Mr. and Mrs. Brigham are consistent members of the Union Congregational Church. Mr. Brigham is one of the representative business men of the city, and he and his charming wife reside in the beautiful home he erected on North Park street, where they dispense an enjoyable hospitality, and are surrounded by the comforts of life.

LARNED. Since the early days of the New England Colonies, the records have borne the names of members of the Larned family. Of the branch that settled in Windham county, Conn., Ellen Douglas Larned, the beloved historian of the county, is one of the few survivors. The ancestral line is as follows:

(I) William Larned (Learned or Larnet) and wife Goodith (Goditha), from Bermondsey Parish, County of Surrey, England, were admitted to the church of Charlestown, Mass., in 1632.

(II) Isaac Larned, son of William, was born in Bermondsey Parish, Feb. 25, 1623, and lived in Woburn, Watertown and Chelmsford. He died Nov. 27, 1657. On July 9, 1676, he wedded Mary, daughter of Isaac Stearns, of Watertown.

(III) Isaac Larned, son of Isaac, was born at Chelmsford, Sept. 16, 1655, and he settled at Framingham, Mass. He was a soldier in the Narragansett war. His death occurred Sept. 15, 1737. On July 23, 1679, he married Sarah Bigelow, who was descended from William the Conqueror, through the marriage of his daughter, Gundrida, to William, Earl de Warren.

(IV) William Larned, son of Isaac, was the ancestor in direct line of the branches of the family in Rhode Island and Connecticut. He was born at Chelmsford, Mass., Feb. 12, 1688, and in 1712 he removed to Killingly. For a time he resided in Sutton, Mass., but returned to Thompson Parish, Killingly, in 1730. He served as deacon of the church, selectman and town treasurer. On Nov. 24, 1714, he married Hannah, daughter of Simon Bryant, and at his death, June 11, 1744, he left seven sons.

(V) Samuel Larned, son of William, was born Dec. 28, 1718. His home was in South Neighborhood, Thompson Parish (now in Putnam). During the French and Indian war he served as lieutenant of Co. 6, Third Regiment, Eliphalet Dyer, colonel; Israel Putnam, major; Dr. David Holmes, captain. His death occurred Feb. 5, 1770. His wife, Rachel, whom he married Dec. 29, 1741, was a daughter of Henry Green, Jr., of Malden and Killingly.

(VI) Daniel Larned, son of Samuel, was born Nov. 16, 1743, and engaged largely in trade, buying produce for the West Indies market. When Thompson became a town in 1785, he was one of the leading citizens, and he represented the town in the convention at Hartford that ratified the Federal Constitution in 1788. He was very active in military affairs, serving in the field repeatedly during the Revolutionary war, rising by rapid promotion from ensign in the 11th Conn. Regiment to general of the 5th Brigade. He died Dec. 29, 1797, and was buried under arms with military and Masonic honors. On April 4, 1771, he married Rebekah, daughter of Benjamin and Mary (Rhodes) Wilkinson, of Rhode Island and Thompson. Mrs. Rebekah Larned, in maternal lines, was descended from Roger Williams, William Wickenden, and other noted Rhode Island worthies; she was a woman of great force of character, and conducted her husband's business affairs and defended the home during his absence on military duty. She died Jan. 22, 1821, the mother of eight sons and two daughters.

(VII) George Larned, second son of Gen. Daniel and Rebekah Larned, was born March 13, 1776. He was named by his father's military company, which greeted him upon the day of his birth. Early he became noted for quickness of apprehension, and, according to his teacher, learned the Greek alphabet in two hours. Certain it is that fully equipped, he entered Brown's University at the age of twelve years. After his graduation, in 1792, he studied law, with Gen. Moses Cleaveland, of Canterbury, and at Litchfield Law School. Completing his legal course, he entered upon the practice of his profession in Mohawk Valley, N. Y., near Newport, with brilliant prospects of success. He was recalled to Connecticut by the death of his father, and his remaining years were passed in his native town, winning a high position at the Windham County Bar. He was especially noted for his skill as a pleader, and for his fairness of judgment, being known widely as "the honest lawyer." An old-time Federalist, he was ever closely identified with State and national politics, and his opinions on important questions were clear and decided. He repeatedly represented his town in the State Legislature, and in 1818 he was a member of the Constitutional Convention, and one of the three Windham county delegates chosen "to draft the Constitution." As a Whig, he fought Anti-Masonry and the Jackson administration with its anti-tariff and subversive banking policies, and with equal ardor he joined in the anti-slavery crusade of the succeeding Republicans. In private life he was genial and companionable, ready with song or story, a lover of hospitality and good cheer. To the Wilkinson memory inherited from his mother, we are indebted for many interesting facts and anecdotes relating to Windham county history. He was an omnivorous reader, laying up a vast fund of information, ever ready to be given out for the benefit of others. His physical powers were remarkable, and his mind was unimpaired until past fourscore years. He died June 9, 1858. Esquire Larned was twice married, first on May 17, 1805, to Anna Dorinda Brown, and second, Dec. 5, 1816, to Anna Spalding Gay. He had ten children—three sons and seven daughters: (1) William Augustus, born June 23, 1806, graduated from Yale College in 1826. He served as a tutor, and studied for the ministry, but was disabled by bronchitis. In 1839 he accepted the professorship of English Language and Literature at Yale, and he died at New Haven, Feb. 2, 1862. (2) Frances A., who married Hiram Blashfield, died in Michigan, April 6, 1842. (3) Susan M., who married Stephen Crosby, Thompson, died April 18, 1849. (4) Hannah G. married Edward Shaw, and died at her home in Putnam, March 27, 1891. (5) George, born Jan. 13, 1818, died Dec. 27, 1830. (6) Joseph Gay, born April 29, 1819, graduated from Yale College in 1839, and was a tutor there from 1842 to 1847. He engaged in the practice of law in New Haven, and then moved to New York City, where he assisted in introducing steam fire engines, served as inspector of ironclads, and was generally prominent in public affairs. As a Free-Soiler, he assisted in the organization of that party in New Haven, and later was a Republican. He died suddenly June 3, 1870. (7) Rebecca W. married Thomas P. Green, and died at Canastota, N. Y., Oct. 11, 1875. (8) Sophia G. married Dr. George Hadley, and died in Buffalo, N. Y., Jan. 3, 1884. (10) Mary D., born Dec. 24, 1830, died Nov. 6, 1842.

ELLEN DOUGLAS LARNED, ninth child of George Larned, was born July 13, 1825, and since 1891, she has been the sole surviving member of the family. Her life has mainly been passed in Thompson village in the usual round of household, church and social duties. To these, however, have been added historical researches in her own county, resulting in a work of permanent interest and value, the "History of Windham County, Conn." (two Vols., 1880), and embodying the fruit of fourteen years of labor. It has won for her a reputation for accuracy, thoroughness, and literary skill beyond county limits. A supplementary volume of "Historic Gleanings," in the same field, published in 1899, includes a number of interesting papers, illustrative of various phases of Colonial and early national life. Miss Larned has also contributed a number of historic sketches for the Connecticut Magazine, and has assisted at many church and town centennial and bi-centennial commemorations.

Familiarity with county and town affairs has naturally led to more specific interest in families. The greatly increased demand for genealogical researches since the confederation of the Sons and Daughters of the American Revolution, makes this familiarity very helpful to others, and Miss Larned has had the privilege of assisting many candidates in tracing their lineage and establishing their claims to membership. A series of papers published in the "Monthly Record of the Congregational Church of Thompson," comprised genealogical sketches of most of the early families of the town. The general and hearty recognition called out by these various services has been peculiarly grateful to the county historian, whose highest aspiration has been like one of old—to "dwell among her own people," and to help to maintain local traditions and inherited standards.

JOHN R. CHAMPLIN, who passed away in Norwich, New London Co., Conn., Jan. 6, 1896, was for many years identified with manufacturing interests in Tolland county. He was born March 13, 1835, in the town of Lebanon, New London county, son of Robert and Electa (Chappell) Champlin, of South Kingston, R. I., and Lebanon, Conn., respectively, and grandson of John and Martha (Armstrong) Champlin.

From 1864 until some half dozen years before his death, Mr. Champlin was a resident of South Willington, Tolland Co., Conn., where he was actively engaged in manufacturing, identified with his father-in-law and brother-in-law, the two Gardiner Halls. In about 1888 he removed to Norwich, in which city his death occurred, at his home on Laurel Hill, where his widow continues to live.

Mr. Champlin was a Republican, and was ever active and zealous in advancing the interests of his party, having a taste for politics and public affairs. While a resident of Willington he represented that town in the General Assembly, and for two terms he served Tolland county as one of its county commissioners. After his removal to Norwich he became one of the public-spirited citizens and popular gentlemen of that place. He was a home man, happiest when at home with his wife and children. He was a man of character, a worthy citizen, and held the highest respect and esteem of the community.

In 1859 Mr. Champlin married Orline Hall, daughter of the late Gardiner Hall, and sister of Gardiner Hall, of South Willington, Conn., and three children were born to their union: Robert, who resides in Providence, R. I., married Mary Esther Burdick, and has one child, John Emulus. Lottie Orline married George Frederick Noyes, and has three children, John Champlin, Robert Gale and Freda Elizabeth. Lula Grace, who died in November, 1897, married Philip Cook, and left one child, Philip Champlin. Mrs. Champlin and her daughter are members of the Baptist Church.

EBENEZER SLACK YOUNG was for many years associated with milling interests in his native town of Killingly, Windham county, where he was born April 4, 1825. In his business and private life he evinced many meritorious characteristics, which gained him the good will of friends and associates, and a proportionate share of worldly possessions. Notwithstanding the unsatisfactory state of health which shadowed his youth, and later rendered impossible many of his projects, he presented a substantial figure in the commercial world, and wrought exceedingly well whatsoever he set out to accomplish. He was descended from a noble New England ancestry having many branches in Connecticut, which, because of imperfect records, are not clearly defined.

JUDGE EBENEZER YOUNG, son of Elijah, and the father of Ebenezer Slack, spent his entire life in his native town of Killingly. He was a graduate of Yale College, and during his active life practiced law, in addition to manufacturing cotton cloth, at Chestnut Hill, Killingly. He did a great deal for the manufacturing interests of his locality, and maintained the prestige of a profession of which he was a profound master. Around his enthusiasm, recognizing the necessity, centered the building of the dams of Chestnut Hill, and the majority of the enterprises arising in the vicinity owed their promotion to his enterprise and public-spiritedness. The mill at Chestnut Hill was erected by him as early as 1810, and has ever since been in the possession of the family. Originally a Whig, he was afterward a Republican in politics. Among the many town offices which he was called upon to fill was that of probate judge, which he held for many years. He represented his district in Congress from 1829 until 1835, and up to the time of his death was the only citizen of the town to be thus honored, and he was the recipient of continued recognition and appreciation. He was a very able and conscientious member of society, in religion a member of the Congregational Church. To his marriage with Anna Burnett, a native of Scotland, Windham Co., Conn., came the following children who attained maturity: Nathan Brewster; Sarah A., deceased wife of Thomas Backus; Harriet O., now the wife of Charles L. Tiffany, the famous jeweler of New York City; John B., one of the founders of the jewelry firm of Tiffany & Young, later Tiffany, Young & Ellis, and latterly Tiffany & Co., who married Lydia Ballou, and died after his retirement, in Norwich, Conn.; Maria M., widow of George McClure, member of the firm of Tiffany & Co., and at present residing in Boston; Ellen, widow of Frederick L. Peck, of Providence, R. I.; and Ebenezer Slack.

Ebenezer Slack Young acquired his education in Killingly and in New York City, and his first business experience was gained in the employ of Tiffany, Young & Ellis, the jewelry firm of New York, two of the members of the firm being his brother-in-law and brother, respectively. While thus engaged he traveled considerably over different parts of the East, and owing to the ill health which has pursued him from boyhood up he took a trip abroad in the hope of recuperation. After the death of his father he came to East Killingly and took charge of the mill which had been the special care of his sire, and was thus engaged at the time of his death, Dec. 21, 1871. For many winters he sought the boon of health in the Southern States, but it was his fate never to feel the inspiration of sound health. Yet he struggled and kept up his interests to the very last, and left those dependent on him independent. He was very public-spirited, and a staunch Republican, though his precarious physical condition rendered practically impossible any special political activity. In religious connection he was a member of the Congregational Church, and contributed generously toward its charities and general support.

On June 13, 1860, Mr. Young married, in Plainfield, Annette Cutler, who was born in that town Nov. 16, 1838, daughter of Job H. and Mary (Wylie) Cutler; the Cutler family is mentioned at length in the sketch of Joseph W. Cutler. To Mr. and Mrs. Young were born five children, of whom the eldest, (1) Annette Maria, was born April 15, 1861, and graduated from the Danielson high school in 1878; she afterward took a special course in the Lasell Seminary, at Auburndale, Mass. (2) Burnett Cutler, born June 22, 1863, was educated at Fort Edward Academy, N. Y., and is now the owner and operator of the old paternal mill at Chestnut Hill; on Feb. 24, 1897, he married Ella Nora Bartlett. (3) John Eben, born Sept. 13, 1865, was educated at the Cayuga Lake Military Academy and at the Boston School of Technology, from which he graduated in 1888, as a civil engineer; he was for a time employed in Texas, was later an associate editor of the Railway Age, subsequently accepted a position with the Northern Pacific Railway Co., with headquarters at Tacoma, Wash., and at the present time is engaged in the woolen goods business at Portland, Oregon; he bears the distinction of being the first on the coast to engage in the handling of American made woollens. On Oct. 27, 1892, he married Elsie M. Hopkins, daughter of Timothy E. Hopkins, of Danielson, and they have one daughter, Elsa, born Aug. 14, 1902. (4) Susan Wylie, born June 19, 1868, received her education in the Lasell Seminary, later graduating from the Kindergarten Training School, of Providence, R. I. For one year she had charge of the Wilkesbarre Institute, in Pennsylvania, but is now living at home. (5) Mary Louise, born June 28, 1871, attended the Bradford (Mass.) Academy, and is now taking a course in physical culture and gymnastics in Dr. Sargent's School.

CHARLES FRANCIS HARWOOD. For many years the name of Harwood has been an honored and respected one throughout Tolland county, its present worthy representative being Charles Francis Harwood, treasurer of the Stafford Savings Bank and a prominent citizen of Stafford Springs, where he is, in length of service, the oldest banker in the town. During the third of a century that he has been engaged in banking circles, he has seen almost a complete change in the names of the bank's patrons.

Mr. Harwood was born June 25, 1849, in West Stafford, Conn., son of Francis Asbury and Clarissa (Luther) Harwood, the former of whom was born on May 12, 1817, in Ludlow, Mass., and died Jan. 24, 1884, in Stafford Springs. His parents were Orrin and Charlotte (Spellman) Harwood, the former of whom was born in West Stafford, Conn., and lived to be almost a century old, his death occurring in July, 1888; he was born Aug. 8, 1788. By trade he was a shoemaker, and he also carried on farming, although he was only moderately successful, on account of delicate health. At the age of fifty years he called in a physician who told him his end was not far off, but Mr. Harwood lived fifty years longer. He was widely known on account of his devotion to the Methodist Church and was one of its founders in Stafford, his house being the home of the circuit-riders or traveling preachers. Under the early circuit system these circuit riders spent only a part of the time in one location. The class-leader was, to a large extent, the pastor, and upon his efficiency depended largely the success of the work. In his neighborhood Orrin Harwood was a class-leader of power and influence. For years his house was the center of Methodist influence in West Stafford, and he and his descendants have been identified with the interests of that denomination in the locality for a long period.

Orrin Harwood was first married, in 1811, to Charlotte Spellman, born June 21, 1794, and on Dec. 8, 1852, he married Mrs. Polly B. Bartlett. His children were as follows: Juliann, born Dec. 28, 1811, died Dec. 15, 1830. Silvaner, born March 18, 1814, married Abigail Fuller, and died March 12, 1852. Francis Asbury, born May 12, 1817, is mentioned later. Betsey Maria, born Aug. 8, 1819, married Walter Temple, and died in Hampden, Mass. Adeline Davis, born Aug. 21, 1822, married S. Bartlett, and died Sept. 15, 1843. Martha M., born June 27, 1825, married A. S. Poole, and died in Stafford. Charlotte, born Sept. 27, 1828, is the widow of Morris Pease, and lives in Hampden, Mass. Juliann (2), born May 18, 1831, died Sept. 20, 1853. Additional ancestral history of this Harwood family will be found in the biography of Hon. Calvin L. Harwood, a brother of Charles F.

Francis Asbury Harwood, father of Charles F., was born May 12, 1817, in Ludlow, and was married April 7, 1841, to Clarissa Luther, who was born Sept. 9, 1821, daughter of Calvin and Polly Belinda (Hutchinson) Luther. Her death occurred Dec. 13, 1898, in Stafford Springs. For a number of years Mr. Harwood was engaged in farming in West Stafford, but in 1842 he became a resident of Stafford Springs, and soon after began his mercantile career. At first he found but one competitor, L. W. Crane, who owned and conducted a store which was originally established by the Granite Mill Company. This stood near the site of the present "Central House." Mr. Harwood's place of business was at the upper end of Main street, both firms attracting a large trade.

During the war of the Rebellion Mr. Harwood held the very responsible and onerous position of first selectman of the town, and upon him devolved largely the duty of providing for the extraordinary requirements of the time, in so far as they affected Stafford. It required a man of most excellent judgment and signal ability to successfully carry the necessary measures through to the satisfaction of every one. In his political belief, like his father, he adhered to the principles of the Republican party. Several years prior to his death he sold his mercantile business, and thereafter lived a life of retirement. His devotion not only to the mercantile interests, but to all lines of activity which promised progress and benefit to his town, was well known, and he enjoyed the confidence and esteem of his fellow-citizens in a high degree. The Methodist Church was very dear to him, and he was an active worker for it, and one of its trustees at the time of his death.

The children of Francis A. Harwood and his wife were: (1) Calvin L., born June 24, 1844, was married Sept. 26, 1865, to Nellie A. White, of Olean, N. Y. He is now a member of the firm of Harwood, Bishop & Bidwell, wholesale grocers, of Norwich, Conn., has also served that town as mayor, and is one of its prominent citizens, both socially and commercially. Fraternally he is a 32d degree Mason. (2) Charles Francis is our immediate subject.

Charles Francis Harwood attended the common schools in Stafford Springs. From boyhood he was in his father's store in such capacities as his years permitted. In 1864 he entered Wesleyan Academy, at Wilbraham, Mass., for one and a half years and soon after leaving that institution he became associated with his father in the mercantile business at Stafford Springs, continuing there until Jan. 11, 1871, when he was elected teller of the Stafford National Bank. He remained in that position until the suspension of the bank in 1887, a portion of these years being spent as assistant cashier of the institution. When the Stafford Savings Bank was organized, in 1872, Mr. Harwood was chosen bookkeeper, and he held that office until 1887, when he was elected treasurer, which position he still fills. In political faith he is a Republican, but he has declined to accept any office but that of member of the house of Burgesses. In religious connection Mr. Harwood, like his honored ancestors, has devoted his life to the Methodist Church, and has served in it as senior steward for more than thirty years. Fraternally he is a member of Ionic Lodge, No. 110, A. F. & A. M., Stafford Springs; of Orient Chapter, R. A. M., of Stafford Springs, which he has served as its treasurer for more than eighteen years, resigning only a few months ago; of Olive Branch Council, Willimantic; and Columbian Commandery, No. 4, of Norwich. Mr. Harwood has been the treasurer of the Stafford Springs Cemetery Association since 1887 and he has been treasurer of the Business Men's Association for many years, and was one of its original promoters.

The marriage of Mr. Harwood was on Oct. 15, 1874, to Ella Leonore Pember, of Stafford Springs, Conn., who is a daughter of Elisha and Persis (King) Pember, formerly of Rockville, New Britain and Hartford. Mrs. Harwood's parents died in Stafford Springs. Mr. and Mrs. Harwood have one daughter, Grace Emma, a very talented young lady, who graduated from the Stafford high school, and spent two years in study at Abbott Academy, in Andover, Massachusetts.

ALFRED DANA CADY was born May 3, 1822, in West Stafford, Tolland county, and is a son of Garner Cady, who was a son of Isaac Cady.

Garner Cady was born in Pomfret, Conn., and died in West Stafford. His remains rest in the cemetery near Glaziers. When he was about seven years old he was bound out, his father having died, and he was reared in Thompson, Conn. His father had bought a farm in Monson, but was never permitted to live on it, having died the fall of the year after its purchase. The day the son was twenty-one he came to the home place, making the journey on horseback. He settled on Stafford street, where for three years he ran a farm on "shares," with Maj. Phelps, and then bought the Abner Wood place, a farm of a hundred acres, on which his life was spent, and where he died at the age of eighty-seven. In politics he was always a Democrat, and represented Stafford more times in the General Assembly than has any other man to date. In 1825 he was elected a member of the Lower House, and was subsequently re-elected eight times to the same position. Always active in town affairs, he was selectman, justice of the peace, assessor and a member of the board of relief. Though not a member he attended the Universalist Church.

Garner Cady was married to Susannah Johnson, who died in 1825. She was a daughter of Jonathan Johnson, and her remains were laid to rest in the cemetery near Glaziers. They had a family of twelve children. (1) Alvira, who was born in Stafford, Conn., died in Warren, Mass., at the age of ninety-five years. She married Alden Blodgett, who was both a farmer and a school teacher of Stafford. He taught until he was over fifty years of age.

(2) Garner, Jr., born in 1805, in West Stafford, died in 1852. Emily, his wife, was a daughter of Taylor Greene, of Stafford. In his early life Garner, Jr., was a foundryman, but in his later years engaged in the livery business. A runaway horse threw him out and killed him instantly. He was the father of six children, among whom was Lient. Gov. Cady.

(3) Phineas Green, born in Stafford, Conn., died in Springfield, Mass., where he was a molder. His wife, Almada Webber, of Stafford, bore him three children.

(4) Alanson, born in West Stafford, died in North Adams, Mass., where he worked as a machinist, and had a flourishing foundry. Jane Bradford, his wife, bore him ten children.

(5) Hannah, born in West Stafford, died in Hartford, Conn. She married Abijah Blodgett, who, like his father, was town clerk in Stafford, Conn., their united records extending over fifty years. They had no issue.

(6) Maryette was born in West Stafford, where she died unmarried.

(7) Isaac, who was born in West Stafford, died in Stafford. In his early life he was a machinist, but in later years became a farmer. He married Susan Tinker, of Ohio, and lived in Peoria, Ill., where they had five children.

(8) Andrew Jackson, born in West Stafford, lives in North Adams, where he has made his home since he was sixteen years of age, and is now eighty-six. His trade was that of a dresser. His wife, Harriet Stroud, was a native of Stamford, Vt. They have had two children.

(9) Francis Augustus, born in West Stafford, died Feb. 17, 1890, in Ashfield, Mass. For many years he was a merchant, and kept a general country store. His first wife, Harriet Hodges, of North Adams, Mass., bore him two children, and his second wife, Harriet, bore him one.

(10) George Franklin, born March 5, 1820, in Stafford, married Margaret Hyde, of Stafford, by whom he has had two children. His trade is that of a molder. (11) Alfred Dana. (12) Giddings Hyde, born in Stafford, died in Stafford Hollow, at the age of forty-seven, unmarried.

Isaac Cady, born in Thompson, Conn., was the grandfather of Alfred D. and George F. Cady; he married Sabria Green, and died in 1777, during the Revolutionary war, in which he bore a gallant part. He was the father of five children. (1) Henry Green lived and died in Monson. Under old English law he inherited one-half the estate of his father. He married Margaret Foote. (2) Isaac went to Vermont, where he died. His wife was a Miss Winter, of West Stafford. (3) Garner, noted above. (4) Tamer married a Mr. Tupper, of Boston, where they lived and died. (5) A daughter married Jonathan Ellis, of Thompson, Connecticut.

The Cady family history begins with Nicholas Cady, who married Judith Knapp, a daughter of William Knapp, and about 1608 moved to Groton, Massachusetts.

James Cady, son of Nicholas, was born in 1655, at Watertown, removed with his family to Groton, Mass., where he married Hannah, a daughter of Elias Barrow, and died in 1690.

Sergeant John Cady, supposed to be a son of James, born about 1680, lived at different times at Groton, Plainfield, Canterbury, Tolland, Willington, Windsor, and Coventry, Conn., and died at Windsor, Conn., in 1751. He was twice married, and the name of each wife was Elizabeth, the second wife being a member of the Mathers family.

John Cady, a son of Sergeant John, was born in Groton, Mass., Aug. 7, 1699, and was married in 1729 to Hannah Abbott, who came from Tolland. It is tradition that he resided in Coventry, and had three sons, Asabel, Nahum, and Amos.

Garner Cady was a quiet and unassuming man, of most industrious habits, and was an enthusiastic farmer. Not inclined to debate, he was a wide reader, a well informed man and a deep thinker.

Alfred D. Cady was reared in West Stafford, where he received his education, completing his school days with one term at Wilbraham Academy. When he was twenty years old he went to North Adams, Mass., where he was a clerk three years in the store of his brother, Francis A. At the end of that time he came back to the farm, which he made his home until 1866. That year he removed to Stafford Hollow to become proprietor of the "Furnace Hollow Hotel." This he personally conducted until 1875. In 1877 he purchased the "Eastford House," at Eastford, Conn., which he conducted six years, when he bought the "Monson House," at Monson, Mass., of which he was landlord for four months, at the end of this period selling out and returning to Stafford Hollow, as he took a deep interest in the development of that pretty and attractive village. There he built his present residence and five other houses, and is still engaged in the real estate business. He came to Stafford Hollow for the sake of the educational advantages it afforded his children, though he still holds the homestead farm and has other extensive real estate investments. His family attends the Universalist Church, though he himself is a Free Thinker. Mr. Cady is a Democrat, and has been assessor, being chairman for thirteen years. He is probably the best posted man in Stafford upon the value of real estate. He was first selectman three years, and was on the board two years, making five in all. For several terms he was on the board of relief, and has been tax collector and constable for the West Stafford district, and was justice of the peace several years.

Mr. Cady was married, Aug. 23, 1851, to Ruhmah, a daughter of William and Lucinda (Gladings) Cummings, of Stafford. Her father was a farmer. To Mr. and Mrs. Cady came: (1) Florence, born Nov. 21, 1852, who married Almer D. Brown, of Stafford; (2) Arthur Maker, born April 17, 1854, a wealthy member of the firm of Cady & Lumbard, meat and groceries, in Hartford, who married Anna Cross, of Stafford Hollow, and is the father of Esther and Ethel; (3) Effie, born July 9, 1857, who married Richard G. Beebe, of Stafford, and is now living in Los Angeles, Cal.; (4) Herbert Frederick, born Nov. 25, 1860, who married Lottie Weston, and has a general store in Stafford Hollow; (5) Jennie, born June 28, 1864, who married A. W. King, a lawyer of Willimantic, and is the mother of one son, John H.; (6) Chella Blanche, born Nov. 24, 1871, living unmarried in Los Angeles, California.

GEORGE FRANKLIN CADY was born March 5, 1820, in West Stafford, Conn., where he received his education in what was known as Crow Hill District. After leaving school, which he did at the age of sixteen years, he remained at home two years before he went to learn his trade in Springfield, of Lorin and Abner Trask. There he did not remain long, as he became what he called "homesick," and went back to the parental home to remain two years, when he began working for his brother, Alanson Cady, at Southbridge, Mass., where he spent some four years. At the end of that time he began work for William A. Wheeler, who ran a carwheel factory in Worcester, for several years in connection with Nathan Washburn. For a brief time Mr. Cady was employed at Hartford by Woodruff & Beach, and then moved on west to Schenectady, N. Y., where he was employed by Marcus Washburn. At South Coventry he worked for Smith & Washburn, at Worcester for Nathan Washburn, and at Stafford for some two or three years for Howe & Converse. Mr. Cady was engaged in Boston at Hibbard's foundry for some time, and at Jersey City for Barnum & Washburn on car wheels for several months. At Windsor Locks he was engaged for a time.

Mr. Cady gave up the foundry work in 1871 and came back to Stafford, where he has since been engaged in farming. He is a staunch Democrat, and has served as selectman one term, but with that one exception has uniformly declined to accept nominations or hold official position.

Mr. Cady was married March 28, 1844, to Margaret Hyde, who was born Oct. 8, 1824, in Stafford Street, a daughter of Eber and Philena (Converse) Hyde. She died Feb. 22, 1898. To this singularly happy union were born: (1) Anna Adell, born Dec. 27, 1846, who married Theodore Franklin Mead, a machinist of Norwich, Conn., Dec. 27, 1869, and has had three children: Grace Elizabeth: Estella A., who died at the age of two years and five months; and Frank Howard, now engaged with A. C. Eaton, the local druggist; (2) George Albert, born May 29, 1847.

MARTIN CARD, a prosperous farmer and retired meat dealer of South Windham, Windham county, was born April 10, 1821, in Lebanon, Connecticut.

Joseph Card, his grandfather, was a native of Rhode Island, where he grew to manhood. He then located in Lebanon, Conn., and later in Branford, where he died at the age of ninety-two years; he is buried there. Farming was his life occupation, and he also conducted a sawmill while in Lebanon. He was twice married, and reared a family of three sons and three daughters: Clarissa, the eldest, never married; Maria married Erastus Newell, and lived in Lebanon, Conn.; Nancy married Cromwell Kingsley, of Lebanon; William married Sarah Babcock, and had a son, William Card; Thomas was the father of Martin; Charles married Mercy Perry, of New London, Connecticut.

Thomas Card was born in Lebanon, where he grew to manhood and passed most of his days, engaged in farming. During his declining years he lived in Windham, near the Lebanon line, where he was tenderly cared for by his son, Martin, our subject. For thirteen years prior to his death he was blind, but with that exception, although he reached the advanced age of ninety-two, he retained wonderful possession of his faculties. Thomas Card married Hannah Greenman, a native of Mansfield, daughter of John Greenman, and the following named children were born to them: Samuel, of Springfield, Mass.; Ann; Clarissa, who died young; Martin, our subject; Lucy, who died young; Catherine, who married Joseph Hendricks, lived in Bridgeport, and died aged sixty-seven; and Cecelia, who married (first) Darius Wood, (second) Warren Palmer and (third) John Rood, of Windham.

Martin Card attended the district schools of his neighborhood, and began his business career without any assistance from anyone. The first step he took toward making his way in the world was conducting a farm on shares, in Columbia, and by dint of hard work on the farm and making shingles in the winter he first saved $100, to which he added until he was able to purchase some farm property in Lebanon, which he tilled for six years. About this time he engaged in butchering, and for thirty-three years continued in that line, being very successful, as much on account of his great energy as business ability. In one day he killed, unaided, eight three-year old steers. As the years progressed he branched out in his business until he had five wagon routes, and kept two teams busy all the time. In one week, with his son's help, he made nearly $400. Soon after engaging in the meat business he purchased his present farm in Windham, where he has since resided. In recent years he has invested quite extensively in business property, both in Willimantic and Niantic, has accumulated considerable wealth, and is justly proud of his success, as it is the result of his own efforts. In politics Mr. Card has been a Democrat ever since attaining his majority, but he voted for President McKinley at the last election.

On March 30, 1845, Mr. Card married, in Lebanon, Conn., Lydia Smith Fitch, daughter of William Fitch, and granddaughter of Joseph Fitch. The grandfather, Joseph Fitch, died in Lebanon, where he had followed farming, at the age of seventy-nine. He married Esther Murdock, who died comparatively young, and their only child who grew to maturity was William, father of Mrs. Card. He was born in Lebanon, and died when Mrs. Card was but two and one-half years old; he married Abbie Ford, daughter of Jacob and Lydia (Smith) Ford. The latter lived to be ninety-one years old. William Fitch and his wife had two children: Esther, the first, married William Card, and had two children, Edward and Mary Ella, the latter now the wife of Franz Walker, of Lebanon. The second, Lydia S., wife of Martin Card, was born May 27, 1826. Mr. and Mrs. Martin Card had two children: William Clinton, born May 22, 1851, is a boss in Smith, Winchester & Co.'s foundry, South Windham, Conn.; he married Mary Ella Lewis. Miss Lydia Anna, born Feb. 25, 1849, attends to her father's business.

Personally Mr. Card holds a position of high standing among the farmers of this section, is very popular with all classes, and is regarded by all as an influential man and useful citizen.

FLOYD CRANSKA, the enterprising proprietor of the mills which bear his name, was born Sept. 16, 1849, in Thompson, Connecticut.

James Cranska, his father, was born in Portland, Maine, April 17, 1815, and when a young man removed to Thompson, Conn., where he made his home, and for thirty years was engaged in a shoe business. For twenty years he was station agent at Grosvenor Dale, where he also held position as postmaster. Asenath, his wife, was a daughter of Calvin and Caroline Matilda (Blackman) Randall, manager and proprietor of a mill in the eastern part of Thompson. To this union were born five sons and three daughters, as follows: Helen, a resident of Thompson, Conn.; Isabel, the wife of George Ballard, of Thompson; Calvin, superintendent of a shoe factory at Towanda, Penn.; Caroline Matilda, a resident of Thompson; Floyd, of whom this article is written. Frank, connected with the Thames National Bank of Norwich, Conn.; James, a resident of Manchaug, Mass., where he is a book-keeper for B. B. & R. Knight, the largest individual cotton manufacturers in the world, and William, deceased. James Cranska was independent in his political views, although inclined toward the Republican party's principles.

Floyd Cranska received a very good education in the public schools, and in the summer seasons, as soon as he was old enough, he was employed on the farm. On removing to Grosvenor Dale he became assistant station agent, and very soon after was offered and accepted a position as head clerk and paymaster in the Grosvenor Dale Manufacturing Co. After ten years he severed his connection with this company, and in January, 1880, purchased the Gladding Mill at Moosup, where he began the manufacture of cotton yarns for the weaving trade. This mill was built by Joseph S. Gladding in 1833, for the making of cotton cloth, and was a substantial three-story structure, 42x100 feet. It has passed through the hands of James B. Ames, Hale & Miller, and David Harris. Mr. Cranska effected many and valuable improvements in the mill, and introduced machinery for the manufacture of a high grade of fine thread yarns. Its superior quality made a good market and a steady demand for it. In 1886 a stone addition, 42x112 feet, and three stories high, doubling the capacity, was erected. It has over 5,000 spindles, and gives employment to over a hundred people. The fact that no strike has ever occurred in this mill, speaks well for the cordial relations existing between Mr. Cranska and his employes. In July, 1899, Mr. Cranska established a thread finishing plant at Worcester, Mass., under the name of the Cranska Thread Co. Here the entire product of the Moosup mill is finished. The capacity of the Worcester mills is so great that yarns are bought from other spinners for that mill, and the finished product distributed to the trade.

Politically Mr. Cranska is a Republican. While interested in all measures for the public utility he cannot be parted from his absorbing business interests to take any part in political affairs. He is a supporter of the Baptist Church of Moosup, and for seventeen years has been clerk and treasurer of the Society. For fifteen years he has been a member of the Moosup School committee, and is a strenuous worker in everything that relates to the best interests of the community in which he makes his home.

On Oct. 3, 1877, Mr. Cranska was married to Evelyn C., a daughter of Lucius Briggs, agent of the Grosvenor Dale Manufacturing Co. To this union were born: Annie Louise, born Jan. 13, 1879; Lucius Briggs, born Jan. 3, 1880; Caroline Matilda, born April 18, 1884, died March 24, 1889; Harriet Atwood, born June 24, 1886; Evelyn Clara, born July 6, 1888; and Floyd, Jr., born June 25, 1890, died Nov. 6, 1894. Mrs. Evelyn C. Cranska died March 26, 1900.

Jonathan Briggs, the great-grandfather of Mrs. Cranska, was a native of Coventry, R. I., who served through the War of the Revolution, and received a discharge, which was signed by George Washington himself.

Wanton Briggs, son of Jonathan, lived in Coventry, R. I., where he married Mary Tift, of Groton, a daughter of Solomon Tift, who served on the Ocean during the Revolution, and who, when he was taken prisoner by the English, was confined in the prison ship "Jersey." Wanton Briggs was a farmer of Coventry. In the period of his business activity cotton factories were springing up all over New England and particularly in Rhode Island, and he decided to leave the farm and locate somewhere in a factory town. He selected the village owned by the late Gov. Harris, which lay in the confines of Coventry, and there he remained many years, bringing up his children to habits of industry and a knowledge of the cotton business, and three of them followed it very successfully. He had ten children.

Lucius Briggs, the father of Mrs. Cranska, took his place in the mills as soon as his age would permit, and at intervals attended the public schools, spending one year in the Smithville Seminary, at Smithville, R. I. He followed the factory bell until he was nineteen years old, becoming proficient in all branches of cotton manufacturing. At that time he became an apprentice in the industry of building cotton machinery, at which he worked two years. To this succeeded two years of machine repairing in Gov. Harris' mill. Mr. Briggs and his brother, Wanton W., sailed from Warren, R. I., Jan. 28, 1849, in the ship "Hopewell," and reached San Francisco, Aug. 9th, of the same year, in search of gold. After two years spent in mining, teaming and trade, Lucius Briggs decided to return to Rhode Island, while his brother remained some years longer in California. Soon after his marriage, Mr. Briggs was called to Masonville, Conn., to repair the machinery of the cotton company of that town. The engagement was expected to be only temporary, as it was thought the somewhat worn machinery would be easily adjusted. Mr. Briggs liked the place, his employers were pleased with him, and at their solicitation he remained, to be in charge the following spring of all the repairing in the three mills of the company. At the end of the year he was made superintendent of the mills, and local agent for all the interests in the village which the company possessed. At that time William Mason owned a proprietary interest in the company. In about a year after the appointment of Mr. Briggs as superintendent the Hon. William Grosvenor, of Providence, who had married a niece of Mr. Mason, and had acted as agent, bought out Mr. Mason, and secured all the property except a sixteenth interest, which had come into the possession of Mr. Briggs. In 1864 Mr. Briggs and Mr. Grosvenor bought the Fisherville Mill. Greater water rights were secured and the reservoir enlarged from ten to eighty-four acres, and the fall of water increased from eleven to twenty-six and one-half feet. Immense embankments were raised for long distances, and at the approaches of the wheel pits the water was carried above grade by heavy and high retaining walls. Here an immense factory was built of brick, according to a splendid architectural design, capable of holding 60,000 spindles. This machinery was put in operation in 1872, and brought the number of spindles owned and operated by this company up to about 96,000. In the meantime the names of Fisherville and Masonville had given place to Grosvenor Dale for the whole valley. From the day of the new organization to the close of his connection with the company in 1883, Mr. Briggs had full charge of the manufacturing and building, and was the author of all plans for the development and enlargement of this immense industry. He purchased all the machinery, and made all the contracts for building, including the mills, warehouses and several hundred tenement houses for the help employed in the mills.

Mr. Grosvenor, while not a practical millman, was one of the best business men in New England. With a judgment that seldom erred, with an enterprise tempered with caution, but which never resisted or turned back from the greatest undertakings, when once his judgment had approved them, his great means made all enterprises feasible. In Mr. Briggs he had a worthy associate, and that gentleman devoted all his powers of mind and heart to the great industry with which he was connected. Years of intense application had gradually impaired his health, and soon after the completion of his work in the construction of the large mill at North Grosvenor Dale, this became so marked that his physician ordered him abroad. Accordingly he sailed from New York for Liverpool, Dec. 15, 1875, with his daughter, Evelyn, for his companion, and spent six months in England, France, Italy and the Far East, visiting Alexandria, Cairo and other points in Egypt, Constantinople, and minor cities in Turkey, the Ionian Isles, Athens, and various interesting localities in Greece. The following summer he came home much improved in health.

In 1883 it seemed necessary for the company to organize as a corporation, and while agreeing fully as to the propriety of the change, Mr. Briggs did not wish to enter into the corporation, and amicable arrangements were made by which he transferred his interests to Mr. Grosvenor.

Mr. Briggs was half owner in 1889 of the Glasgo Yarn Mills, of Glasgo, Conn., where he was also manager. He was a stockholder and director of the Norwich Bleach and Dye Works; he was owner and director of the Glasgo Thread Co., of Worcester, Mass. Mr. Briggs was a large holder of the stock of the Ponemah Mills, near Norwich, Conn., one of the largest and finest places for manufacturing fine cotton goods in America, if not in the world. For some years before leaving Grosvenor Dale, Mr. Briggs was president of the flourishing Savings Bank at Thompson.

Soon after his return from California, Mr. Briggs was married, according to previous engagement, to Harriet Taylor Atwood. To this marriage were born four children, of whom two, a son and a daughter, died in childhood; Charles W. is in business in New York; and Clara Evelyn is the wife of Floyd Cranska, as noted above. In politics Mr. Briggs was a Republican, and occupied seats in both the Senate and the House of Representatives of Connecticut. He died Jan. 27, 1901, and his wife passed away in 1886.

CONVERSE. The name of Converse has been known in New England since the early settlement of the colonies. The Windham county, Conn., branch of the family was founded in the State by John Day Converse, who was born in East Greenwich, R. I., Aug. 31, 1774, and who died in Thompson, Conn., Oct. 13, 1867. He located in Thompson, Conn., in 1828, and took up a sadly neglected farm. His careful management and tireless industry soon redeemed it, making of it a most desirable homestead. In 1798 he married Abigail Lewis, who was born in Exeter, R. I., July 3, 1775, a daughter of Thomas Lewis, who died Sept. 17, 1859, in Thompson, Conn. Their three children were: John D., Jr., born May 13, 1800, who died Oct. 12, 1802; Alfred, mentioned below; and Mary, born Feb. 18, 1808, who died in Putnam, unmarried, Jan. 6, 1881. Mr. Converse was a captain in the State militia, and was universally called by his title.

Alfred Converse, son of Capt. John D., was born Jan. 20, 1804, in West Greenwich, R. I., and died July 4, 1868, in Thompson, Conn. He was a farmer by vocation and located in Thompson with his father, who had come from Woodstock, where they had lived about six years, and in Thompson built the house which has since been known as the Converse homestead. Alfred was a robust, healthy man, was very active, and took great interest in politics, but never cared to hold office. He was well read in general literature, and accepted the faith of the Baptist Church. In September, 1836, he married Eliza Hutchins, who was born in Killingly, Conn., a daughter of Asa and Fannie (Larned) Hutchins, and who died in Thompson, Jan. 11, 1883, the mother of six children, viz.: William Smith, Franklin H., John D., James H., Fannie Larned and Alfred Lewis.

WILLIAM SMITH CONVERSE, eldest son of Alfred, was born in Thompson, Aug. 2, 1840, and received his earlier education in the district schools. Later, for three years he attended a private school taught by Prof. Parker. At the age of eighteen years, he left school and at nineteen began teaching, following that vocation one term in Gloucester, R. I., two terms in North Grosvenordale, Conn., and one year at Quadic. Mr. Converse then leased the Horace Elliott farm in Thompson and conducted it for three years, at the end of which time he leased the farm, where the County Temporary Home is located, and in the fall of 1865 purchased his present farm, to which he removed in April, 1866. This was known as the old William Mason place, and contains 165 acres, under a high state of cultivation. Mr. Converse keeps twelve or fifteen cows, and has delivered his butter to his patrons in Putnam every week for twenty-three years without making a slip. He is a member of the Central Thompson Baptist Church, as are his wife and daughters. Politically he is a Republican, and has served a number of years on the board of relief. On April 1, 1862, William S. Converse was married to Julia Augusta Ballard, of Thompson, daughter of Winthrop H. and Salome (Joslin) Ballard. Three children have blessed this union, namely: Frederick Ballard, Mary Helen and Grace Agnes. Of these Frederick Ballard, born in Putnam, Jan. 22, 1867, was formerly a mechanic but is now a farmer; he married May 27, 1886, Addie Plummer, a daughter of Abner A. Plummer, and they have two children;

Charles Russell, born July 7, 1887; and Marian Louise, born Jan. 30, 1895. Mary Helen, born in Putnam, July 21, 1868, was formerly a school-teacher, but withdrew from the profession on account of ill-health. Grace Agnes, born Dec. 26, 1878, graduated at the Putnam high school, and the Normal school at Willimantic, and is now teaching the grammar school in Thompson.

Franklin Hutchins Converse was born in Thompson, May 3, 1843, was educated in the public school and at Bryant & Stratton's Business College, Providence, R. I. At the age of eighteen he entered the employ of Dexter & Holbrook, wholesale dealers in flour and grain at Worcester, Mass. After a few months he returned home and remained on the farm until he enlisted for three years in Co. D, 18th C. V. The morning he left home (Aug. 2, 1862), he got up at two o'clock and cut two acres of oats by hand, leaving at eight o'clock. At the battle of New Market, Va., May 15, 1864, the Union forces were repulsed; young Converse, by the side of Major Joseph Mathewson, when in the act of firing his gun, was shot through the elbow joint, and the bullet then passed into the abdomen over the hip joint. While the Major was assisting the fallen man he also was wounded. We quote from the "History of the Eighteenth Connecticut Volunteers," by Chaplain Walker, as it shows his grit: "Corporal F. H. Converse, of Co. D, barely escaped being left, a fate that he avoided only by his own almost superhuman exertions. He was severely wounded in the forearm and abdomen. He was almost the last man to leave the barracks. He crawled out of his room (sliding down a wet pair of outside stairs) and was picked up by some men passing with a battery, was placed on a box, and being held on, rode the entire night, and thus escaped capture." He was discharged in March, 1865, but carried the bullet for a number of years. As his side did not heal he went to the Massachusetts General Hospital, where it was found necessary to remove a portion of the bone that had been poisoned by the bullet passing through. In the fall of 1865 he became bookkeeper for the Grosvenordale Company, remaining for three years, when his health compelled him to resign. He then ran a livery and sale stable until in 1875 he removed to Putnam, where he was bookkeeper for Morse Mills store for two years. At present he is totally deaf, and is living in Thompson, engaged in dairy farming, with a large herd of Jersey cows.

Mr. Converse is a Republican in politics, and has served as trial justice, registrar and assessor; he was a member of the State Legislature in 1868 and 1885, serving on the finance committee. June 30, 1874, Mr. Converse married Lucy Idella Common, daughter of Amasa and Sarah (Jordan) Common. Three children have blessed this union: Evelyn Wineford, born in Putnam, Dec. 8, 1876, educated at Putnam high school and Willimantic Normal School; John Bixby, born in Thompson, Dec. 20, 1879, educated in the common schools and the Connecticut Agricultural College; Franklin H., Jr., born in Thompson, Aug. 11, 1886, who died March 25, 1892.

JOHN DAY CONVERSE, son of Alfred, was born in Thompson, Dec. 16, 1844, and received his schooling there. At the age of seventeen he began farming, which was the principal occupation of his life until 1886. In 1870, however, he removed to New York, where he was connected with Wallace, Elliott & Company, wholesale dealers in boots, shoes and rubbers, but ill-health caused his retirement in a few months, and he returned to farming on 160 acres of prime land, the original homestead of his grandfather, where he was born, and which he sold in 1899 to Clark Pierce, of Thompson. Mr. Converse is a member of the Baptist Church of Thompson, in which he has served as deacon over fifteen years, and has been superintendent of the Sunday-school for over twenty-three years. He has been a member of the executive committee of the Connecticut Sunday-school Association for eight years and its treasurer for four years. In politics he is a Republican, and has served as assessor and registrar of voters for a number of years. He is a trustee of the Day Kimball Hospital. In 1878 he served as a member of the State Legislature, being placed on the committee on Military Affairs; from 1880 to 1886 he also served as county commissioner. He became greatly interested in the county temporary homes in 1883, at their inception, was appointed chairman of the board of county commissioners, and was greatly instrumental in organizing the Windham county home on Putnam Heights, which was rented for the purpose, and opened Nov. 1, 1883. In November, 1886, it was transferred to its present location, where large buildings have been erected under the personal supervision of Mr. Converse, since which time he has been superintendent of the home. Accommodations are there constantly afforded to an average of sixty children; and attached to the home is a farm of sixty-five acres, on which are kept ten head of cattle. John Day Converse was married April 28, 1880, to Carrie Sumner, of Thompson, daughter of George and Esther (Blackman) Sumner. The one child of their union, John D., Jr., born in Thompson, Nov. 2, 1884, died Oct. 1, 1885.

James H. Converse, son of Alfred, was born Nov. 27, 1846, in Thompson, was first sent to the Thompson district schools and then attended two terms each at the Putnam high school and at Nichols Academy in Dudley, Mass. At the age of eighteen he began teaching and had schools in East Woodstock, North Grosvenordale and Quadic districts, which he taught one term each. He then tilled the old homestead in Thompson, in partnership with his brother, John D., and in 1880 sold his interest to this brother and purchased the Charles T. Lincoln farm of ninety-six acres in the eastern part of Putnam, better known as the Converse farm; it is well cultivated and presents every appearance of thrift and prosperity. Mr. Converse is a member of the Baptist Church at Thompson, in which he has filled the position of treasurer for many years; in politics he is a Republican, has served as grand juror in Thompson, and he is a member of the Putnam Arcanum. On April 13, 1873, James H. Converse married Martha Jane Lincoln, daughter of Charles T. and Catherine (Deane) Lincoln, the latter of whom was formerly in the livery business and ran a stage from Putnam, Conn., to Providence, R. I., but later became a farmer. These parents are now deceased, both dying in the same month. The children born of this union were five in number, namely: Charles Alfred, born April 25, 1875, who died when four months old; Henry Lincoln, born July 27, 1876, who married, May 19, 1899, Florence I. Munyan, and has one child, Hazel M., born Nov. 17, 1900; Louis Edwin, born Sept. 22, 1878, in Thompson, connected with the creamery of that town; Mary Abigail, born Jan. 22, 1880, in Thompson, a bookkeeper in the Grosvernordale Mills, residing at home; Katherine Deane, born Dec. 19, 1884, in Putnam, who graduated from the Putnam high school in 1901, and is attending the Normal school at Willimantic.

Fannie Larned Converse, fifth child of Alfred, was born Nov. 7, 1849, in Thompson; she died there, unmarried, May 14, 1879.

Alfred L. Converse, youngest child of Alfred, was born, in Thompson, Jan. 16, 1853, and died in Putnam, Nov. 12, 1901, having moved to the town but a few weeks previously. He was a carriage painter but had conducted the grain and feed trade in Thompson for a number of years prior to his death. He married Ella D. Whittlesey, of Putnam, a daughter of George W. Whittlesey.

EMORY H. DAVIS, M. D. Among the eminent physicians of Windham county none stood higher in the profession than did the late Dr. Emory H. Davis, of Plainfield.

Dr. Davis was descended from New York and Rhode Island ancestry, and was born Feb. 11, 1845, in Winfield, Herkimer Co., N. Y., son of Jeremiah and Amy (Bennett) Davis, his father being a well-known temperance advocate, having lectured extensively in New York State. The Doctor's early life was spent on a farm, until he was old enough to attend the district and common schools, where he attained high proficiency in the common English branches. Being inclined to study medicine, he entered the office of Dr. Frank S. Burgess, of Moosup, Conn., in 1869, and then matriculated in the Medical Department of the University of Vermont, where he graduated in the class of 1872. He immediately located in Plainfield, Conn., where for twenty-nine years he practiced uninterruptedly his chosen profession, building up a large and lucrative clientage, his practice extending over a large area of territory. For a number of years he had stated days in each week on which he treated patients in Norwich, Providence and Willimantic. Dr. Davis was a member and ex-president of the Windham County Medical Society. He was a member of the State and American Medical Associations, and was frequently elected "Fellow" to the State Society, and a delegate to other State medical associations; he was at the time of his decease one of the censors of this society. He was post surgeon for the town of Plainfield, and was one of the Windham County Board of United States Examining Surgeons, during the Harrison and McKinley administrations.

Dr. Davis was endowed with traits that were most commendable. He was generous, whole-souled; of an even happy temperament, the most genial and most companionable of anyone the writer has ever met. He was noted for his charming personality, and happy smiles on all occasions. All can bear witness that he was the life of the medical meetings whenever he attended; and he was generally present. His special trait was to either hear, or tell, a good story, for really he was the best of story-tellers. He always had one ready for any social occasion. His ever-ready wit and good humor, combined with that keen repartee, made him popular and his friends legion. He was an epicure, and always enjoyed a good dinner, whether as a host or as a guest, his elegant menus and generous hospitality giving him a wide reputation as the "prince of entertainers." He always had a high sense of humor. He loved nature in all that was beautiful, and was passionately fond of the arts, vocal and instrumental music, and flowers. His love for music led him to introduce some of the most gifted singers and musicians heard anywhere, and in frequent concerts and readings, held under his direction, Plainfield was favored in a very high degree. He was an enthusiast in sports of all kinds. Another rare attribute was his excellent taste, as shown in "Davis Villa" and its surroundings. The spacious and well-kept lawns without, and the modern improvements within, all exemplified a unique accompaniment of his being. In his town he was always on the right side, an advocate of good roads and all public improvements. He planted elm trees on both sides of the street leading from the railroad to the post office, which, if cared for, will be of immense benefit to the neighborhood in coming years. He was a leader in the Village Improvement Society. Plainfield was the most delightful place in all the world to him, and his constant study was how to beautify and make it attractive. In politics he was always a loyal Republican, and enthusiastically upheld the principles of that party. The writer would like to describe more fully the natural personality as well as individuality of Dr. Davis, but words and language fail to express these choice attributes of his worth.

Dr. Davis was a worthy member of the Masonic fraternity, the Odd Fellows and the Patrons of Husbandry, in all of which social organizations he was deeply interested. The medical reputation of Dr. Davis was built upon a foundation of solidity. No one ever sought his aid in vain; rich or poor, he went to all to comfort all, and, if possible, to relieve all. In whatever household he was summoned as a physician he left it as a dear and confidential friend. Did a patient, alarmed without cause, need encouragement, his ever present, genial smile carried at once the sunshine of hope into that patient's heart and put all whims to flight. He was not a believer in creeds or denominations of any kind, but sincerely adopted and boldly advocated the philosophy of spiritualism.

E. W. Davis

But there are deeds which shall not pass away,
And names that must not wither, though the earth
Forgets her empires with a just decay.

"His life was gentle, and the elements so mixed in him that nature might stand up and say to all the world 'This was a man'."

Dr. Davis suddenly passed from earthly life, March 15, 1901, at his residence in Plainfield, Conn., at the age of fifty-six years.

IRA H. LEWIS is one of the oldest citizens of Ellington, Tolland county, and has been prominent in local affairs for many years. His residence is in the eastern part of the town, near Crystal Lake.

Asa Lewis, the father of Ira H., came to Ellington from Woodstock, and in his early life had been a sailor in the coast-wise trade, and afterwards a soldier in the war of 1812. A laboring man, he was engaged as a farm hand when he came to Ellington, and was employed on several places around Crystal Lake, then known as Square Pond. After his marriage he rented several of the farms around the Lake. Later in his life, he removed to Glastonbury, where he died at an advanced age, and was buried in the local cemetery. Phoebe Slater, his wife, was born in Ellington, and was the daughter of Moses and Mary (Johnson) Slater. She survived her husband many years, and died in West Stafford. They had a family of seven children:

(1) Nelson married Mary Maynard, who died soon after. He soon married again and had two daughters and one son; the elder daughter married a Mr. Hall and moved to Ohio, and the younger married a Mr. Skinner, of Hartford. Nelson Lewis spent the latter part of his life in peddling Yankee notions and died in West Stafford, Conn. (2) Phoebe married Norton Brayman, and died at Warehouse Point, Conn. They had three children: the oldest son went to sea and has never been heard from; the other son is somewhere in the South; the daughter, Jane, married Herman Hull, of Hartford. (3) Asa, Jr., was a merchant and hotel-keeper in Eastford, Conn., but died in Hazardville, Conn., in 1887. He married Louisa Lyon, who bore him five daughters: Helen, who married James Law; Sarah, wife of Ashmond Prickett; Miranda, married to Andrew Gordon, all of Hazardville; Elinor, who married a Mr. Perkins, of Hartford; and one who was drowned at the age of four. (4) Ira H. (5) Lydia married Seldon Hare and lived in Ellington. (6) Elial died at the age of eleven years. (7) Mary married Hiram Smith, of West Stafford, and reared a family of two sons and two daughters: both the sons, Seldon and Edgar Smith, were farmers and lived in West Stafford; one daughter married Adolphus Taft, of Ellington, and the other married a Mr. Crowningshield, of Enfield. At the age of seventy the mother of this family had the misfortune to become blind.

Ira H. Lewis was born March 11, 1813, in Ellington, and attended the district school two miles away from his home, following the usual farmer fashion, of work in the summer and school in the winter. When he was fourteen years old his parents moved to South Glastonbury, where he worked in the cotton mills for two years. When he was seventeen years of age he came to Ellington and was apprenticed to Roger Barber to learn the trade of a blacksmith. The term for which he was engaged was four years, and his wages were good for the times. In Hampton he worked for a year at his trade, and a year at Norwich, receiving $15 a month for his services, then regarded as liberal pay. For six years he worked in Hampton in a silver smith shop, engaged in the manufacture of spectacles; after the expiration of this time he went to Crystal Lake, Conn., and put up a blacksmith shop, where he was engaged for ten years. Selling out his shop, he was able to buy a small farm in West Stafford, on which he made his home for eight years, when he again sold out, went back to Crystal Lake, and in company with Sterry H. Taft, put up a wagon shop. The two were together in business until 1865, when Mr. Lewis bought his present farm from Ebenezer Harwood. It was a tract of 110 acres, but after a time he sold twenty acres of this. For many years he was engaged in active farming, though the infirmities of age forbid his active participation in the work of the farm at present.

Ira H. Lewis was married April 5, 1835, in Hampton, Windham county, to Alice A. Foster, who was born April 5, 1815, and was the daughter of Deacon Lyman and Abigail (Cady) Foster. She died Jan. 22, 1892. Their children were: (1) Phebe Ann, born March 8, 1837, died April 26, 1853. (2) Lucius H., born March 21, 1838, married Elmira Sherman, and is now engaged in the clothing business in Hartford. During the Civil war he served in Co. C, 22d C. V. I., making a good record. (3) Charlotte C., born April 25, 1841, married Richard Webster, a farmer of Ellington, and died June 5, 1885. They have one daughter and one son. Nellie, who has had two husbands, Edward Scofield and Edward Palmer, is now living in West Hartford. Her children, all by her first marriage, are: Howard, Flora, Henry and Jennie. Charles, who went West when a young man, has disappeared from the knowledge of his relatives. (4) Lucy S., born Jan. 8, 1844, died May 7, 1855. (5) Amanda C., born Feb. 13, 1847, married Daniel Buell Chapman, of Tolland, in 1865. He died at the age of fifty-six years. Their children were: Herbert D., who died in infancy; Clifton L., who married Edith L. Snow; Norval W., who married Cena Hanson, is living in Tolland, and has four children, Nora A., Carl, Buell and Anna; Alice A., who married Frederick S. Charter and has one child, LeGrand F. S.; Anna L., born June 12, 1873; Charlotte F., who married Palmer Willard, of Wethersfield; Georgiana, who died young; Frank H., who died in 1897; Hattie M.; Mary E., who died in 1885; Herbert E., who died in 1884; Clarence D.; and Louis A. (6) Lyman D. died at the age of eight years. (7) Hattie, born July 24, 1856, is the wife of Alfred U. Charter, and is the mother of the following children: Winfield A., deceased; Perlin L., who was married to Belle Sexton; Harris Harry, who married Edna Dimmick, and has one child, Florine; Grace M., who died in 1881; Everett; Alfred R.; Ora H.; and Hazel A. (8) Jennie, born April 21, 1860, married Eugene Neff, of Tolland, and has three children: Edith, who married Frank Bushee; Bessie, who married Albert Richardson, of Crystal Lake; and Warren, three years old.

Mr. Lewis was a Democrat, and cast his first vote for Andrew Jackson. He was a member of the General Assembly, and served on the committee on Forfeited Rights in 1877 and 1878. For several terms he served on the board of selectmen, and was chairman of the board one term. For over thirty years he was justice of the peace, and only his age prevented his continuance in that position. He has been grand juror and assessor, and has served on the board of relief. Mr. Lewis belongs to the Advent Church at Crystal Lake. Possessing a keen and well informed mind, he bears his years well, and commands the respect of his neighbors to an unusual degree.

GILMAN HENRY BROWN, one of the leading citizens of the town of Putnam, Windham county, has long been identified with and is at present secretary of the Putnam Woolen Company.

This branch of the Brown family is descended from Chad Brown, who came from England in the good ship "Martin" in 1638, bringing with him his wife Elizabeth and their children. They landed at Boston, but as their religious views differed from those of the settlers there, they located in Providence, the same year. Being a surveyor, Mr. Brown was appointed by the town a member of the committee to compile a list of the house lots and of the meadows. The first knowledge of allotted land titles is due to him. His own home lot fronted on "Towne Street," now known as North and South Main street. This lot was 112 feet wide, and extended from Market Square over the hill to what is now Hope street; College street and the college grounds and buildings now include a large part of this lot. Having no churches and no general cemetery, each family buried their dead on their own premises. Chad Brown was buried on his lot, where now the court house stands, but in 1792 his remains, as well as those of his wife, were removed to the North Burial Ground, where a stone was erected to his memory by the town of Providence. He was one of the recognized leaders of that infant colony. With twelve others he signed the first compact of Providence—that precious instrument creating the first State founded upon government "only in civil things." In the limitations imposed by those four words upon the powers of government, lay the greatest contribution of that age to the science of government, and it is now accepted and incorporated in the constitution of every State and of the United States, forever dissolving the union of Church and State. The second compact, often spoken of as the first written form of government there, was drawn up by a committee, of which Chad Brown was a member, and his name is first of those who signed it. This compact continued in force until 1647, when the charter brought over by Roger Williams was adopted. In 1664 Mr. Brown was ordained as the first settled pastor of the First Baptist Church, and he was much revered for his Christian spirit and sound judgment. Among his descendants are many notable names, one of them being that of Grover Cleveland, ex-President of the United States.

(II) Benjamin Brown, a descendant of Chad, was married April 12, 1739, to Priscilla Jillson. Their children, all born in Cumberland, R. I., were: Benjamin, born Dec. 3, 1739; Sarah, born Sept. 19, 1741; James, born Feb. 7, 1743; George, born Feb. 20, 1745; George (2), born March 3, 1746; Priscilla, born May 3, 1748; Oliver, born June 28, 1750; Israel, born Sept. 17, 1752; Ezekiel, born Jan. 21, 1755; and Martha, born July 26, 1757.

(III) Ezekiel Brown, ninth child of Benjamin and Priscilla, grew to manhood and married a Miss Hall. They had three children, Caleb, James and a daughter.

(IV) James Brown, son of Ezekiel, was born Nov. 4, 1788, in Burrillville, R. I., and died in the same place, July 11, 1859. By occupation he was a farmer, and made his home in Pascoag, R. I. Though short in stature, he weighed some 240 pounds, and was quite muscular. Like many large people he was jovial and good natured, with a quick and sparkling wit. Liberal in his religious views, he was affiliated with no denomination but contributed to the support of all. He married Nancy Cooper, who was born Nov. 2, 1779, in the same place as her husband, a daughter of Nathan and Waity (Williams) Cooper, and of the seventh generation in direct line from Roger Williams. She died Feb. 16, 1849, in Burrillville. Mr. and Mrs. James Brown were the parents of the following children, all born in Burrillville; Alzina, born June 6, 1811, who married Benjamin Martin, and died in Woonsocket, R. I., July 19, 1895; Sanford, born Nov. 3, 1813, who married Sarah Ann Matthews, and died in Oakland, Cal., Oct. 25, 1894; Malory Williams, born Oct. 26, 1816, died Aug. 28, 1862, in Burrillville; Lucetta B., born April 13, 1819, who married Marvin Gould about 1845, and died in Norwich, Conn., Nov. 10, 1891; Charles; Alice Perry, born Aug. 15, 1823, who married William Ballou, and died Sept. 4, 1854, in Burrillville.

(V) Charles Brown, son of James and Nancy, was born in Burrillville, May 14, 1821. He was a man of sterling character, who came up by his own exertions through the school of adversity to a plane of comparative affluence. He received his education in what was known as the Brown School of Burrillville, in which he was limited to the ordinary branches, but he was possessed of an observant mind and seized upon every opportunity which afforded him instruction, and when twenty-nine years of age he took a term at an academy in Exbridge, Mass. He learned his trade of machinist under Squire Martin Salisbury, at Pascoag, R. I., at the same time managing the home farm and caring for his parents. He had an inventive turn of mind, and after learning his trade, spent much time in the improvement of the old water wheels in service at that time. He also assisted in building a large mill in Pascoag. Upon his father's death he sold the old homestead, having previously (in 1850) removed to Waterford, R. I., where he had charge of the repairs in Mill No. 3 for several years. He continued to follow his trade until 1858, when he located in Harrisville, R. I., as master mechanic of a woolen mill. Here he remained until 1879, when he gave up mill work entirely, and purchased the Fisher farm, of forty-five acres, in Putnam, Conn., where he has since resided, enjoying a well-earned rest after a long and active life spent in the pursuit of mechanics. He is a member of the Baptist Church, retaining his membership in the Pascoag organization, with which he united when he was twenty-one years of age. He was an active supporter of Whig principles, and naturally became an enthusiastic advocate of the policies of the Republican party. He was active in all lines that meant the uplifting of society, serving while a resident of Burrillville on the district school committee and so as road overseer. Although at the advanced age of eighty-one years, he still (1902) retains his faculties undimmed, but is beginning to break in physical health.

On Nov. 30, 1845, Charles Brown was united in marriage with Sarah Adaline Ross, who was born in Burrillville, Aug. 10, 1821, a daughter of David and Eunice (Caldwell) Ross, of Blackstone, Mass. She died in Putnam, Conn., Jan. 2, 1892. The children born of this union were four in number. (1) Edmund A., born in Burrillville, Sept. 3, 1846, is a bookkeeper for the Putnam Woolen Company. He married Ruth Simmons, and has two children: Mabel C., wife of Harry L. Prentice, son of George L. Prentice, of Putnam; and Howard E., who married Maud Bartlett, of Putnam. (2) Gilman Henry was born in Burrillville, Sept. 4, 1848, and is mentioned below. (3) Charles William, born in Waterford, R. I., Aug. 12, 1852, is at present foreman of the outside department of the Putnam Woolen Company; he married Annie M. Badmington and has a son, Louis R., now studying medicine. (4) James Herbert, born in Millville, Mass., Sept. 10, 1856, is a farmer in Thompson, Conn.; he married Mabel Hughes, and has three children, Irene, Raymond and Merton.

David Ross, father of Mrs. Charles Brown, was born Feb. 4, 1781, son of William and Abigail (Dudley) Ross, of Scotch lineage. He was a harness maker and trunk manufacturer at Harrisville, R. I., but later removed to Blackstone, Mass., where he died, Feb. 20, 1853. He was prominent in public affairs, and served many years as assessor. He was twice married, Eunice Caldwell being his second wife. She was born Sept. 29, 1794, a daughter of John and Susanna (Robinson) Caldwell, and she died May 27, 1873, in Harrisville, R. I., at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Charles Brown.

(VI) Gilman Henry Brown, as stated above, was born in Burrillville, but when he was two years of age the family moved to Waterford, R. I., and four years later to Millville, Mass. He passed his youth in attending school, working on the farm and in the mill, and clerking in a grocery store, all of which prepared him for future usefulness. His education was supplemented by a course at Lapham Institute, Scituate, R. I. This was later added to by a course at Eastman's Business College, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., where he graduated at the age of twenty. Upon leaving school, he became bookkeeper for James O. Inman, a woolen manufacturer at Pascoag, R. I., with whom he stayed for three years and a half. On May 14, 1872, he took charge of the books for the Putnam Woolen Company. After the resignation of the late Silas M. Wheelock as treasurer of the company, and the subsequent election of Mr. E. A. Wheelock as treasurer and manager, Nov. 1, 1886, our subject was selected as Mr. Wheelock's assistant in both departments, and Oct. 16, 1888, he was also elected to succeed Hon. Gilbert W. Phillips, as secretary of the company. His tenure of office in these various departments has continued up to the present time. This latter fact speaks volumes for the manner in which he has conducted the interests entrusted to his care and attention. Indeed he is recognized in and about the mills as "Mr. Wheelock's right hand man," and is thoroughly respected by the many operatives and employees connected with the Putnam Woolen Company.

Mr. Brown is of an essentially social and genial nature and finds enjoyment in connection with different fraternal organizations. He is a member of Quinebaug Lodge, No. 106, A. F. & A. M., of Putnam, of which he is a Past Master. He is also a member of Putnam Chapter, No. 41, R. A. M., of which he has served as secretary, and is now its honored treasurer. He is also a member of Putnam Council, No. 340, Royal Arcanum, in which he has served as collector and orator. Mr. Brown also holds membership in Putnam Lodge, No. 19, A. O. U. W. He has taken an active interest in all of these societies and is devoted to the principles which they exemplify. Though not a church member, Mr. Brown has been for a number of years treasurer of the Universalist Church Society, and a regular attendant and liberal supporter of the church and actively interested in its welfare. Politically he favors the Republican party, which has recognized his fitness and ability by selecting him as a member of the town committee, on which he has served for two years. For five years he has been town auditor, and is now serving a second term as city auditor. The present position which he has attained and maintained with the Putnam Woolen Company is due to the inherent qualities which he possesses, seeking first and foremost the furtherance of their interests. He is without doubt in his particular line the oldest official in Putnam, and his capabilities and good judgment are recognized as valuable adjuncts to the establishment with which he has been so long and favorably connected.

On June 9, 1870, Mr. Brown was married to Adelaide Maria Smith, who was born Dec. 25, 1845, a daughter of Simeon B. and Dorcas A. (Tourtellot) Smith, the former a successful team freighter and stage operator of Gloucester, R. I., where he spent his entire life. There were two children born of this union. George De Forrest, born in Putnam Dec. 13, 1873, attended the Putnam High School and the Worcester Polytechnic Institute, and is now (1902) a moulder at the Putnam Foundry; he married Laura L. Steere, of Harmony, R. I., Nov. 23, 1898. Charles Gilman, born March 7, 1875, died July 29, 1876. The wife and mother died July 5, 1881. On June 19, 1883, Mr. Brown married Helen Augusta Tourtellot, cousin of his first wife, and a daughter of Jesse S. and Malvina (Hopkins) Tourtellot, of Providence, R. I. Jesse S. Tourtellot was a banker at the time of his death, associated with the Butchers' & Drovers' Bank, of Providence, R. I.; he had also been connected with the Gloucester Citizens' Bank, and the People's Bank, of Pawtucket, R. I. Mrs. Brown is a direct descendant of Gabriel Tourtellot, a native of Bourdeaux, who came to America in company with Gabriel Bernon, a merchant whose daughter Marie he married, and he settled in Newport, R. I., from which place he sailed as master of a vessel; his eldest son was lost at sea.

Mr. and Mrs. Brown are prominently identified with the social life of Putnam, and in a pleasant home, which Mr. Brown erected in 1893 on Grove street, they delight to honor their many friends.

EDWIN L. PALMER has long been an important factor in the business circles of Danielson, Windham county. By the exercise of his ability he has not only advanced his individual prosperity, but has materially contributed to the welfare of the borough. By close business application, quickness of perception and determination in execution, he has been a business promoter who has proven himself possessed of remarkable judgment. In addition to the many enterprises in which Mr. Palmer is interested, and which can be but briefly outlined in this sketch, he is warden of the borough, now serving his fourth term, and was formerly county commissioner.

Mr. Palmer was born Feb. 17, 1847, on a small farm near Jewett City, New London Co., Conn., where he remained at work until his eighteenth year. His father died when he was less than five years old and he was thus thrown upon his own resources. In 1865 he came to Danielson and entered the employ of Waldo Bros. as a clerk. In 1871 he engaged in the grocery business at Putnam, as a member of the firm of Palmer & Johnson. About three months later he returned to Danielson and started in the furniture and undertaking business, with Henry M. Danielson as a partner, but one year later sold his interest and engaged as a salesman for E. H. Jacob & Co., and subsequently occupied the positions of salesman for F. A. Shumway & Co., and bookkeeper for the Danielson Cotton Co. In 1875 he opened an office in the Exchange block as real estate and insurance agent, and in 1882 he admitted as a partner, Charles A. Preston, of Providence, who was obliged to retire a year later on account of the serious illness of his wife. In 1884 Sidney W. Crofut, present treasurer of the Society for Savings in Hartford, joined Mr. Palmer as a partner, and this firm was most successful, dissolving in 1886 on account of Mr. Palmer's other and varied interests.

In 1892 Mr. Palmer was instrumental in organizing the Houston Narcotic Cure Co., for inebriates with a capital of $100,000, and at the meeting of the directors was elected general manager of the company. The business management of this was so successful that Mr. Palmer was made general manager of all the Houston Institutes in the New England States.

In 1896 Everett O. Wood, a popular and honored citizen of Danielson, entered into equal partnership with Mr. Palmer in the real-estate business and they have built up one of the largest agencies in eastern Connecticut.

Mr. Palmer's latest success, in which he takes enthusiastic interest and justifiable pride is as president of the Occidental Development Co., which may be best described in the words of an article which was reprinted in the Windham County Transcript, of Danielson, Conn., Oct. 24, 1901.

"The Occidental Development Company was organized Aug. 26, 1899, with but one group of ims, situated near Idaho Springs, and known as the Harrisburg group. Work was begun September, 1899, with but three workmen at the mines, W. Redding and his two sons. The following December the Fraction group was purchased, near Idaho Springs, and development work commenced.

October, 1900, Manager Redding began negotiations to secure the now famous coal lands, and during the fall and winter located and laid claim to 720 acres of Government land, which, after careful survey, the company purchased. At the same time he also located and purchased forty acres of uranium ground in Montrose county, Colo., also some copper claims in the same locality. During the spring of 1901 he secured the Belle of Granite, near Leadville. These were all added to the holdings of the Occidental Development Co., thus making it at once a company of unusual amount of promising claims.

"In the fall of 1900 extensive holdings in Spanish Peaks were secured and the Duplex Gold and Copper Mining Co. was formed with these properties as a basis. Later Manager Redding secured the Tamarack group of copper mines and the Sponulix group of gold mines, near Leadville, and with these properties the Climax Mining Company was formed.

"The above is a history in brief of the Occidental Development Company and much may be said in explanation to its credit, much more in fact than we have room for. To the board of officers belongs the glory and credit which this company now enjoys. With Edwin L. Palmer of Danielson as president; G. Frank Allen, of Fall River, vice-president; J. Irving Davis, of Providence, secretary; Robert C. Miller, of Boston, treasurer; E. V. Redding, general manager; and E. L. Redding, assistant manager, the board of officers constitute a corps of broad-minded, enterprising men, and have gained a reputation that no other company has obtained in so short a time. They have brought the company from the employment of three men at the mines to over 100; from a single group of claims to most extensive and enviable holdings; from a pay-roll of a few dollars a month to over 10,000; from stock worth ten cents a share to stock now selling at a rapid rate for fifty cents a share, and with every prospect of increasing; from a non-paying dividend company to a company paying one cent a share quarterly; from a company with practically no credit to now unlimited credit. This they have accomplished in a remarkably short time and in the following manner: In the first place the Occidental shareholders are kept fully informed of plans and every detail of work and in this way a confidence is inspired that is at all times a tower of strength to the directors and managers. Another feature which has proved a strong factor in the success of the company is the maintaining of its credit by promptly meeting all obligations. Then the courtesy of the financial manager, which is proverbial, is reflected in the entire personnel of his associates.

"Mr. Redding, the general manager of the company, is a man of remarkable judgment and ability, and as a mine manager stands without a rival in the State of Colorado. Previous to his connection with the Occidental Company he was engaged in the coal and railroad business in Ohio, being in charge of from 500 to 1,000 men, but has been connected with gold and silver mining for the past fifteen years. His judgment in selecting properties and his success with development work has been a big factor in placing the Occidental where it stands to-day, and he is being complimented by the highest authorities in mining.

"All three companies managed by practically the same board of officers are now in a flourishing condition, with a promising future. The development work upon the Occidental properties has been pushed with a great deal of vigor. Ore from the Harrisburg and Fraction groups is being constantly shipped, and is averaging from $22 to $30 per ton net, where it was only expected to bring from $7 to $10. Recent shipments from the Fraction have run over $200 per ton.

"The Belle of Granite has exceeded all expectations, and certainly promises to be a grand producer. Results of recent shipments of seventeen tons of ore netted nearly $2,000. The above holdings constitute more than the average companies can offer or produce, and with the Occidental their greatest is yet to come. Their famous coal lands in Huerfano county are a large and important factor and will certainly be the means of continued and larger dividends. Manager Redding has met with many obstacles in opening up this land, but he has now succeeded, his last achievement being the completion of arrangements for the building of the spur track which connects the coal fields direct with the main line of railroads. This spur track is three and one-half miles long, excluding the switches and yard tracks at both ends, and the company owns its own track, engine, cars, etc., at a cost not exceeding $20,000. In this three and one-half miles of track there are six bridges, and in one the centre bent is ninety-two feet high. Ninety-seven curves make the line anything but a straight one. As the road rounds Monument Point, north of the Baker ranch, it is 175 feet above the county road, and it crosses Middle creek on a bridge forty feet high, with a sixty-degree curve. The construction of the roadbed is of a permanent character, not being built with an idea of cheapness and to last simply for a year or two. The ties are of the regular narrow gauge size, and the rails thirty-five pounds to the yard, as heavy as those used by the Rio Grande when they operated the old Veta Pass line. The bridges are of sufficient strength to haul broad gauge cars, and by reducing the curvature this can be done at a very small cost.

Experts, after carefully examining the land, claim that there are over 20,000,000 tons of coal in sight, with prospects of more. With a profit of at least seventy-five cents a ton it is an interesting problem for the stockholders to figure on, with an estimated average of a daily output of over 500 tons. The other properties of the Occidental are all promising well, and this company is destined to be one of the largest and strongest mining companies in the State of Colorado in the near future.

"The Duplex and Climax Mining Companies are rapidly coming to the front, and each shipment of ore shows a rapid increase. The price per share in these companies, which is now at a nominal price, is sure to increase, and the board of officers have every confidence in the final success of these companies."

The following addition was made to the foregoing article when it was re-printed in the Windham County Transcript of Oct. 24, 1901, giving some idea of the standing of Mr. Palmer among his fellow-citizens:

"We wish that we had the time and space to give a more extended description of the different holdings of these companies, for they are certainly deserving of mention. We present to our readers an enlarged half-tone portrait of the president, Edwin L. Palmer, and are proud that we can claim him as a resident of our town, the warden of our borough, and one of our most influential and esteemed business men and citizens. We have every faith to believe that the outcome of these companies will be as predicted and looked for by its officers, and heartily congratulate them upon their remarkable and enviable record and the reputation that they have gained."

Since January, 1900, this company has issued a monthly pamphlet, edited by the president, Mr. Palmer, noting the progress made in the development of the various properties controlled by the company.

The above named enterprise, however, has not by any means absorbed all Mr. Palmer's time and energy. In 1887 he organized the Board of Trade, of which he has been secretary since its inception; he was incorporator of the Killingly Electric Light Co.; is treasurer and manager of the Riverview Association, a land improvement company, and was superintendent of the building of the admirable water plant of the company. Riverview is one of the most important real-estate developments Danielson ever knew. It comprises a tract of something like thirty acres, situated to the northwest of the business center, on an elevation overlooking both the Quinebaug and Five Mile rivers. It has nicely graded, wide and beautiful streets, set out with fine shade trees. It is within three minutes walk of of the railroad station. The purpose of the Riverview Association is to furnish comfortable and modern homes at moderate cost. In connection with F. A. Jacobs, of Danielson, Mr. Palmer was prominent in securing the trolley road which was built from Danielson to Putnam, under the name of the People's Tramway Co.

For seven years, from 1881 to 1887, Mr. Palmer was clerk and treasurer of the borough, and bailiff during the year 1878. From 1895 to 1899 he served as county commissioner. Fraternally he is a member of Moriah Lodge, No. 15, F. & A. M. Warren Chapter, No. 12, R. A. M.; Montgomery Council, No. 2, R. & S. M.; A. D. Lockwood Council, No. 33, O. U. A. M., and in 1895 was State council examiner; and Orient Lodge, No. 37, K. of P., in the organization of which he took an active part, and was the first chancellor. In November, 1869, Mr. Palmer joined the Congregational Church, was superintendent of the Sunday-school from 1888 to 1892, and in addition to being active in the Sunday-school served for ten years as usher. His wife is a member of the same church.

Mr. Palmer has been twice married, first time Sept. 27, 1871, to Phoebe A., daughter of Chester Keech. She died May 6, 1873, without issue. On Oct. 20, 1880, Mr. Palmer was married to Ella M., daughter of Edgar M. Kennedy, and to them have come three children: Harry Edwin, born June 9, 1883, who attended Danielson high school, and is now in charge of the clerical part of his father's business in Danielson; Gladys Joan, born July 12, 1886; Charlotte Agnes, born Nov. 1, 1888.

As stated before, Mr. Palmer is not a native of the borough, but it has been his home since 1865, and he is thoroughly identified with its every interest. From a lad he has persistently and honorably worked his way up, until to-day, because of his unquestionable character and integrity, he is held in high esteem and has the fullest confidence of all who know him. The town of Killingly is proud to point him out as a representative citizen.

The first American representative of the Palmer family was Walter Palmer, who was born in Nottingham, England, in 1598, and who came to Charlestown, Mass., in 1629. He died in 1662. From this emigrant ancestor the line to Edwin L. Palmer is traced through Gershom, William, Wait, Amos, Uriah and Asher.

Amos Palmer, great-grandfather of Edwin L., was born Aug. 27, 1729, and made his home in Exeter, R. I. In November, 1749, he married Mary York, who was born April 30, 1732. Their children were: Amos, born Oct. 4, 1750; Dejah, Nov. 10, 1751; Comfort, Aug. 4, 1753; Ashahel, Jan. 1, 1755; Ezra, Feb. 1, 1757; Stephen, Aug. 28, 1758; Uriah, April 25, 1760; Roorel, Nov. 30, 1761; Ziba, Aug. 15, 1763; Hannah, Dec. 18, 1764; Phineas, Oct. 7, 1766; Joel, May 15, 1769; Mary, March 18, 1772; Eleanor, Aug. 1, 1773; Lydia, Aug. 12, 1775; and Benjamin, Sept. 24, 1777.

Uriah Palmer, son of Amos and Mary, always lived in Exeter, R. I. He married Elizabeth Newton, and they became the parents of the following children: Uriah, who first married Susan Peck-iam, and second Freelope Pratt; Matthew, who married Susan Barber; Noah, who first married Polly Corey, and second, Widow Lydia Champlin; Comfort, who married Nathan Burdick; Mary, who became the first wife of John Barber; Delia, who became the second wife of John Barber; Nathan, who wedded Sally Salisbury; Asher, mentioned below; John, who married Keturah Newson; Ezra, who married Lucy Lewis; Olive, who married Moses Richmond; and Albert, who died at the age of twelve years.

Asher Palmer, son of Uriah and father of Edwin L., was born in Exeter, R. I., in May, 1795. At the age of twenty-one he went to Norwich, Conn., and lived on a farm where now stands the village of Taftville. In 1816 he married Hannah Pettis, who died, the mother of the following children: Sybil A., born in April, 1818, married Henry Sanders, and died in October, 1884; John B., born in January, 1820, married Hannah Howard, and died in 1893; Denison, born May 18, 1821, married Huldah Burdick, and Lydia, born in 1822, married Ransom Burdick, and died in November, 1870. For his second wife Asher Palmer married Joanna P. Ames, who was born in August, 1802, one of the eight children—four sons and four daughters—of Comfort and Joanna (Penney) Ames, of New London, the former of whom was a native of Lisbon, Conn., and a sea captain by occupation; Mr. and Mrs. Ames died in New York City. Besides Mrs. Palmer the children in their family were: George Anderson, who lived in New York; William Henry; Thomas; Alonzo; Rosetta, who married first a Mr. Parmelee and second a Mr. Anderson, of New York; Emeline, who married William Lawrence, of New York; and Julia, who wedded John Marsh and lived in New York City. Mrs. Joanna P. (Ames) Palmer died Aug. 14, 1888. By her marriage with Asher Palmer she became the mother of children as follows: Hannah E., born in March, 1825, married William H. Larkham; Julia E., born in October, 1826, married Nathaniel B. Wilcox; Amanda R., born in May, 1828, became the first wife of George N. Holmes, and died in November, 1866; James B., born in February, 1830, married Sarah Holmes; Jared B., born in November, 1832, died in November, 1851; Emily J., born in October, 1833, never married; Carrie A., born in September, 1835, married Dwight A. Lyon; William A., born in February, 1837, died in August, 1863; Henry F., born in September, 1839, married Emma V. Ward; Sara H., born in October, 1841, is unmarried; Horace A. was born in November, 1843; Edwin L. is mentioned in the preceding pages as the subject proper of this sketch.

COL. JOHN GORDON CAMPBELL MACFARLANE, a well-known citizen of Mansfield, Tolland county, enjoys the distinction of holding the highest rank of any veteran of the Civil war now residing in Tolland county. In connection with the sketch of his brother, James S. Macfarlane, which may be found elsewhere, is published a history of the family.

Col. Macfarlane was born Jan. 10, 1830, in Glasgow, Scotland, where he lived until he was eighteen years old. Whatever education he had at school was secured before he was sixteen years old. For two years he was employed as a clerk in a dry goods store in Glasgow, when he decided to seek a home in the New World, and leaving Glasgow on the sailing vessel, "George Washington," in August, 1848, arrived in New York after a voyage of thirty-five days, anticipating the coming of his parents, whom he met at Shreveville, New Jersey.

Mr. Macfarlane learned the tinner's trade at Mt. Holly, N. J., his wages for the first year being $25, in addition to his board and washing. In 1860 he opened a tin shop at Allentown, N. J., and there the opening of the Civil war found him. His store was removed to Medford, N. J., and there, in answer to the first call of President Lincoln for three-year soldiers, he raised a company, which was accepted by Col. Goslin, the commander of an independent regiment. The most of the regiment had already seen active service, but the company raised by Mr. Macfarlane was fresh from civil life, and had had no experience in the front. Mr. Macfarlane asked that an experienced captain be placed in command of his company, which was known as Co. B, 95th P. V. I., he himself becoming first lieutenant. The company was mustered in at Philadelphia, and after a short interval moved forward with the regiment to Alexandria, Va., where it became a part of the brigade of Gen. John Newton. The following spring it served in the Peninsular campaign of Gen. McClellan. At Mechanicsville was formed the 6th Army Corps, in which was included the 95th Pennsylvania, under command of Major General W. B. Franklin (now of Hartford, Conn.). At the Seven Days' Battle it lost its gallant commander, Col. Goslin, Col. Gustave W. Town becoming its commander. Its loss at the Seven Days' Fight and at Malvern Hill was heavy. From Malvern Hill the regiment marched to Harrison's Landing, Va., where it was reviewed by President Lincoln, and at Fortress Monroe it took boat to Alexandria, Vt. Landing at that point, the troops were rushed into the second battle of Bull Run, the timely arrival of the division of Gen. Franklin undoubtedly saving the Union forces from a second disastrous defeat. The regiment was involved in the Maryland campaign, and at the battle of South Mountain, Sept. 14, 1862, the left wing of the Army of the Potomac, in which was included the 95th Pennsylvania, in Gen. Franklin's Corps, Slossin's Division, carried Crampton's Gap by assault, and won a signal victory.

The 95th captured a 12lb. brass piece from the Rebels, and was hurried off to Antietam, but arrived too late to have a hand in the great battle. From Antietam the regiment was sent to Falmouth, opposite Fredericksburg, where it remained a few days and was then sent to Washington to protect that city against a threatened Rebel raid. The regiment spent some time in Washington, and was then rushed to Gettysburg in time to participate in the last day's fighting, and to assist in the capture of several thousand Rebel prisoners. From Gettysburg the regiment was sent down the Potomac to Snickersville, Va., going from there to Warrenton and Rappahannock Station, where by a shrewd trick four regiments of Rebel soldiers were taken prisoners. The winter of 1863-64 the regiment was encamped on the plantation of John Minor Botts, near Brandy Station. During this winter the terms of enlistment of many of the men expired, and Mr. Macfarlane, who was acting as major, though not commissioned, was sent to Philadelphia to enlist soldiers. He returned to his command with more than a hundred men about the time Gen. Grant came into the command of the Army of the Potomac. The 95th was in the front, and participated in the battles of the Wilderness, and of Spottsylvania, where Col. Edward Carroll, then in Command of the regiment, was killed. Col. Macfarlane came into command with the rank of lieutenant colonel, the full rank of colonel not being given him because the army rules prevented that rank unless the regiment was full. Col. Macfarlane commanded the regiment at the battle of the "Bloody Angle," where Gen. Hancock caught so many men and lost them. This was one of the bloodiest battles of the war, and a recent writer in the Century Magazine who was at that time a corporal in the 95th, speaks admiringly of the conduct and bearing of his commander, Col. Macfarlane, on that terrible day.

From "Bloody Angle" the regiment fought its way to Cold Harbor, and crossing the James river, appeared before Petersburg until Gen. Longstreet made his raid towards Washington... The 95th was ordered with other troops to the relief of the Capital, and arrived there in time to meet the Rebel host and drive them back to Winchester, Va. The regiment went into camp at Georgetown Heights, and while there, Col. Macfarlane's time of enlistment expired, and he was mustered out with many honors.

For a time after Col. Macfarlane's enlistment had expired and he was returned to civil life, it was difficult for him to adjust himself to the changed conditions, but he presently became engaged in the silk business at Mansfield, where he remained many years. At the present time he is farming.

Col. Macfarlane was married for the first time to Harriet A. Davis, who was born in Wrightstown, Burlington Co., N. J., in February, 1832, a daughter of Thomas Davis, a farmer of that community, the wedding occurring Jan. 1, 1852. To this union were born: (1) Sarah Ann, born Oct. 16, 1852, now the widow of Albert Bottum, at one time a very successful silk manufacturer of South Coventry, Conn., where he died, and where she now resides;

(2) Ann Elizabeth, born March 13, 1855, the wife of Joseph Clercy, a silk manufacturer of New York, and the mother of one child, Edith, who died in infancy; (3) Jeanette A., born Dec. 20, 1857, who married Ozo G. Hanks, a merchant at Gurleyville, and is the mother of Eugenia, born April 18, 1878, (now the wife of George Phillips), Raymond P., born May 27, 1881, and Henry G., born Oct. 31, 1888; (4) John T., born Oct. 17, 1859, died Sept. 22, 1870; (5) Frank R., born Dec. 1, 1867, who married Edna Squires, and resides in Clinton, Mass., with his wife, and one child, Edith May; (6) Walter, born Feb. 27, 1870, died Oct. 4, 1870.

Col. Macfarlane is a staunch Republican, and represented Mansfield in the General Assembly in 1873, when he served on the committee on Cities and Boroughs. He has also served as grand juror and justice of the peace. His Masonic affiliations are with Mt. Holly Lodge, A. F. & A. M., at Mt. Holly, N. J.

Col. Macfarlane was married a second time, Sept. 23, 1893, to Jeanette Innes, a native of Crieff, Scotland, who came to the United States when a young woman. Col. Macfarlane draws a pension.

TIMOTHY E. HOPKINS, a prominent citizen of Danielson, Windham county, and a man whose important business interests make him conspicuous both in his own State and in Pennsylvania, descends from one of the oldest established families of New England.

The earliest family records tell of Thomas Hopkins, a son of William Hopkins, who was born in 1616, and resided in Providence, R. I., in 1640. He married Elizabeth Arnold, was one of thirty-nine who signed an agreement for a form of government for the town, and was made a freeman in 1655. He held several offices, among them that of deputy to the General Court in 1665-66-67-72. About the time of the outbreak of King Philip's war he removed to Oyster Bay, N. Y., accompanied by a son who died before his father. Thomas Hopkins died on or before Nov. 10, 1684, at Oyster Bay. His children were: William, born in 1647, who married Abigail Dexter; Thomas, who in 1678 married Mary Smith; and a third son whose wife was named Elizabeth.

Thomas Hopkins (2), son of Thomas the settler, in 1678 married Mary, daughter of John and Elizabeth Smith, and lived at Providence, where he was made a freeman May 1, 1672, and died April 21, 1718, his wife dying in the same year. Their children were: (1) Thomas is mentioned below. (2) William married Deborah, born May 7, 1691, daughter of Isaac Allen, and lived in Scituate, R. I. Their son, Jabesh, was born July 15, 1713. (3) Joseph married (first) Bethiah Allen, and his second wife was named Martha. His children were Joseph, Oziel, Jeremiah, Abner, Jonah and Dorcas. (4) Elizabeth died unmarried Feb. 26, 1731. (5) Mary was married March 8, 1716, to Robert Davis.

Timothy Carl Hopkins

(6) Rachel. (7) Zebedee, born Feb. 22, 1697, married Susanna Jencks, born May 24, 1700, and lived in Scituate, R. I. Their children were: Rachel, born in December, 1725; Susanna, Oct. 5, 1728; Deborah, in 1730; and Zebedee, Nov. 5, 1737. (8) Elisha married, July 13, 1722, Mercy Waide, and lived in Scituate, R. I. (9) Ezekiel and his wife Elizabeth had children—Daniel, Ezekiel, Charles, Nicholas, Abigail, Patience, Mary and Catherine. (10) Amos married, Oct. 29, 1727, Sarah Smith, daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth (Hawkins) Smith, and lived at Scituate, R. I., and Providence. Their children were Amos, Jeremiah and Uriah. (11) Jeremiah died unmarried April 26, 1733. (12) The twelfth and last child was Ann.

Thomas Hopkins (3), son of Thomas (2), also lived in Scituate, R. I. There he died in 1746, and his wife, Elizabeth, passed away Feb. 1, 1751. Their children were as follows: Susanna, born Oct. 8, 1708; Sarah, May 27, 1710; Bethia, Feb. 24, 1713; Thomas, Sept. 9, 1715; Reuben, July 1, 1717; Hanan, July 17, 1719; Mercy, Feb. 5, 1721; Jonathan, Sept. 25, 1722; Mary, Feb. 17, 1724; Timothy, July 25, 1725; Elizabeth, Aug. 9, 1726; and Anne, Jan. 24, 1729.

Timothy Hopkins, son of Thomas (3), born July 25, 1725, married Lillis Hinds or Summers, and their children were: Jonathan, Phoebe, Timothy, Zeviah, Thomas, Frelove and Amey.

Timothy Hopkins (2), son of Timothy, born in August, 1751, died March 18, 1812. On March 7, 1781 (as recorded at Scituate, R. I.), he married Sarah Carver, born April 25, 1762, daughter of Joseph and Sarah (Hartwell) Carver. This Timothy Hopkins was a sergeant in Capt. Stevens's Company, in Col. Daniel Hitchcock's Regiment, of the Army of Observation, in 1775.

This Army of Observation, containing 1,500 men, was ordered by the General Assembly of Rhode Island immediately after the Concord and Lexington fight. "These companies were soon filled up and on their march to join the grand army near Boston." [See Revolutionary Defenses in Rhode Island, by Field, and "The Spirit of '76 in Rhode Island," by Cowell.]

The children of Timothy and Sarah (Carver) Hopkins were: Emory, born Aug. 29, 1783, married Betsey Field, and had children—Horatio W., born Nov. 13, 1806, Nabby, Aug. 31, 1808, and Henry C., Sept. 4, 1810; Lillis, born June 15, 1785, married George Peckham and had children—Abner, born June 18, 1808, Emory, July 31, 1810, and Sarah, March 5, 1822; Augustus, born June 6, 1792, married (first) a Harris and (second) Hannah Brayton, and had children—Nabby P., born March 13, 1818, Horatio L., Feb. 9, 1820, and Lemuel S., March 6, 1822; Carver was born Oct. 26, 1799; and Eunice, born Aug. 18, 1801, married Nehemiah Manchester and lived in Providence.

Carver Hopkins, son of Timothy, was born Oct. 26, 1799, in Scituate, R. I., where he grew to maturity and engaged in an agricultural life for some years. He moved to Burrillville, R. I., and in company with his brother Augustus and his nephew Horace engaged in the manufacture of spindles, a business which grew to large proportions. After the death of Horace Hopkins, Carver retired from that enterprise, but later he erected a mill in Burrillville and for a long period engaged in the manufacture of cotton goods at this point. In politics he was a Whig until 1856, when he became a Republican, continuing so until his death, at Burrillville, Dec. 14, 1868.

Carver Hopkins married Abby K. Manchester, born Aug. 6, 1805, who died July 30, 1880, a consistent member of the Baptist Church. She rests by the side of her husband in the Burrillville cemetery. Children as follows were born to Carver Hopkins and his wife: Israel M., born May 13, 1824, lived in Providence, and died July 8, 1887; Florinda A., born June 24, 1826, is the widow of John A. Field; Sarah C., born Oct. 23, 1828, is the widow of Alden P. Field, of Los Angeles, Cal.; Abby E., born April 25, 1831, is the widow of Charles T. Place, and lives in Danielson, Conn.; Ann Eliza, born July 14, 1833, lives in the old home place in Burrillville, R. I.; Timothy Earle was born Dec. 5, 1835; and Lillis P., born May 14, 1838, married Dr. Lemuel Hammond, of Worcester, Mass., and died Feb. 4, 1897.

Timothy Earle Hopkins was born Dec. 5, 1835, in Burrillville, R. I., where he acquired his elementary education in the district schools. After earning the money to pay for his tuition he took a nine months' course at the New Hampton (N. H.) Academy, and then began work as an apprentice in the machine shop of his uncle Augustus, remaining one year. Going then to Worcester, Mass., he entered a machine shop, where he was engaged until the plant was destroyed by fire, when he returned home and entered the mill owned by his father. In 1858 he went to Millbury, where he worked one year, spending the following summer in Iowa, and upon his return East spent a short period in his uncle's machine shop.

During 1861-62, in company with Duty S. Salisbury, Mr. Hopkins carried on a general store at Burrillville, and when he disposed of his interest there he went to Providence, where he was engaged in mercantile pursuits until 1865. In that year he removed to West Thompson, Conn., and there embarked in the manufacture of cotton goods as a member of the Chase Manufacturing Co., being the treasurer of that company. The business was not a large one, and was discontinued in 1870. Mr. Hopkins then returned to Burrillville, and engaged in the manufacture of woolen goods in the factory which was built by his father, successfully operating that plant until the disastrous floods of 1876 seriously affected him, as it did the majority of other mill owners. Soon after this he moved to Fitchburg, Mass., where until 1880 he continued in the manufacture of woolen goods.

In January, 1880, Mr. Hopkins became a resident of the town of Killingly, Conn., where he continued the manufacture of woolen goods until 1896. In 1886 he organized and had incorporated the Jesse Eddy Manufacturing Co., of Fall River, Mass., serving as treasurer until the plant, which employed 250 people, was sold in 1898 to the American Woolen Co., Mr. Hopkins being a one-half owner in this corporation.

Mr. Hopkins is a man endowed with extraordinary energy and capacity, and in September, 1898, he was the principal factor in the organization of the Pennsylvania Furnace Co., of Reading, Pa., which operates two blast furnaces and turns out 60,000 tons of pig iron annually. Mr. Hopkins is the treasurer of the company. In May, 1885, he was one of the promoters of the Crystal Water Co., of Danielson, becoming its first president, and still holding that honorable position.

Since locating in Danielson Mr. Hopkins has taken a lively interest in public and educational matters. In 1868 he represented the town of Thompson in the Connecticut Legislature. In politics he is an intense Republican and has proved an able leader. At present he is a member of the Republican State Central committee, serving his sixth year in this position. Fraternally he is an active Mason, being a member of Friendship Lodge at Chepachet, R. I.; of Providence Chapter; and of Calvary Commandery, of Providence, Rhode Island.

On May 18, 1859, Mr. Hopkins was married to Marcella S., daughter of James S. Cook, of Burrillville, R. I., and to this union have come: Elsie M., born April 7, 1867, in Thompson, Conn., married John E. Young Oct. 27, 1892, and resides in Portland, Ore.; they have one daughter, Elsa, born Aug. 14, 1902. Earle Carver, born Feb. 8, 1869, at Thompson, Conn., died July 24, 1870. Earle Cook, born May 7, 1872, at Burrillville, R. I., was married March 15, 1898, to Clara Louise Bates, and lives at Reading, Pa., where he is an officer of the Pennsylvania Furnace Company.

FOSTER DANIEL CHILD. Ceaselessly to and fro flies the deft shuttle which weaves the web of human destiny, and into the fabric enter the individuality, the effort, the accomplishment of each man, be his station most lowly or one of majesty, pomp and power. Within the textile folds may be traced the line of each individuality, be it one that lends the beautiful sheen of honest worth and honest endeavor or one that, dark and obscure, finds its way through warp and woof, marring the composite beauty by its blackened threads, ever in evidence of the shadowed and unprolific life. Into the great aggregate each individuality is merged, and yet the essence of each is never lost, be its influence wide-spreading and grateful or narrow and baneful. In his efforts he who essays biography finds much of profit and much of alluring fascination when he would follow out, in even a cursory way, the tracings of a life history, seeking the keynote of each respective personality. These efforts and their resulting transmission can not fail to be of value in the objective way, for in each case the lesson of life may be conned, "line upon line, precept upon precept." He to whose personal and genealogical history we now direct attention is of the seventh generation of his family in America, which fact indicates beyond peradventure that the name is one which became concerned in the affairs of the new world at a period when the colonies were still under the dominion of the British crown. With the annals of the State of Connecticut the name has been inseparably identified for several generations and has ever been a synonym for sterling worth of character and for distinctive honor and usefulness, so that it is with a feeling of respect and satisfaction that the writer takes up for consideration the available data for those who have wrought nobly in the past and those who in the present generation have played equally well their assigned roles in life.

The original American ancestor of the Child family with which we now have to do was, so far as authentic record indicates, one Benjamin Child, and from him the line is traced directly to Foster Daniel Child through Benjamin, Jr., Ephraim, Daniel, Abel and Daniel, the last named being the father of our subject. It will not be necessary at this point to recapitulate the history of the first three generations noted, since all available data concerning the same are incorporated on other pages of this work, whose province is the assembling of the various family records in such a way as to render repetition unnecessary by providing facilities for convenient and ready cross-references, as in the case at hand.

Foster Daniel Child is a native son of Connecticut, having been born in North Woodstock, Windham county, in the same house which is now his home, Aug. 13, 1834. His father, Daniel Child, was born in Woodstock, Dec. 3, 1797, and there his death occurred Oct. 1, 1868. April 9, 1827, he was united in marriage to Miss Lucy Carpenter, a daughter of Cyril Carpenter, of Woodstock, where she was born May 12, 1802, and where she passed her entire life, her death occurring June 21, 1863. The children of this union were seven in number, all born in Woodstock, except the eldest, and concerning them we here enter brief record, in the order of birth. (1) Cyril Carpenter, who was born in Providence, R. I., Feb. 20, 1828, died in the city of Boston, Mass., March 23, 1886, having never married. He was for many years engaged in the shoe business in Boston and later became an interested principal in the Acme Paper Cutter Company, of that city. (2) Oscar Herbert, who was born March 8, 1831, was married on Christmas day, 1857, to Miss Mary L. Appleton, of Boston, and they now reside in one of the attractive suburban districts of that city. (3) Foster Daniel was the next in order of birth. (4) Susan Richmond, who was born March 11, 1837, was for many years a successful teacher, having done particularly effective work in this line in the South in the reconstruction period following the war of the Rebellion. During the winter of 1869-70 she was a teacher in Savannah, Ga., and later was similarly engaged in Wilmington, N. C.; having passed two seasons in the South, she afterward taught in the public schools of the State of Illinois for one year and then returned to her home in Woodstock, where on May 30, 1877, she was united in marriage to Joseph W. Clift, of Marshfield, Mass. Her death occurred in Webster, that State, Oct. 1, 1893. (5) Freeman W. and (6) Amasa C., twins, were born Dec. 15, 1839. The former, who never married, was for a number of years engaged in the shoe business in the West, and his death occurred in the city of Boston, Mass., Dec. 1, 1867. His twin brother, Amasa C., was married, Jan. 13, 1869, to Anna L. Emery, and he died in San Francisco county, Cal., May 9, 1874. (7) Henry Stephen, the youngest of the children, was born Jan. 19, 1844, and married Nellie Skinner, of Eastford, Conn. He died April 19, 1885, at Pasadena, Cal., whither he had gone in the hope of recovering his health.

Daniel Child, the father of these children, was a man of marked business acumen and distinctive energy, and he attained a high degree of success in his operations. He not only was successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits but he devoted special attention to raising and dealing in cattle and also erected a gristmill, which he operated for many years. He identified himself with the Republican party at the time of its organization and was a stalwart Abolitionist in the crucial epoch leading up to the war of the Rebellion. His life was in harmony with the Christian faith to which he held, and he was one of the prominent and influential members of the Congregational Church at North Woodstock, while no citizen of the community enjoyed to a greater degree the confidence and high regard of its people.

Abel Child, grandfather of our subject, was born in Woodstock, Oct. 18, 1752, and there he passed the entire course of his long and useful life, his death occurring Nov. 12, 1807. On March 11, 1779, was solemnized his marriage to Rebecca Alard, who was born in 1760, and who died in 1820, in Woodstock, where were born her eight children, namely; Uriah, Salome, Stephen, Nabby Bridges, Rebecca, Abel, Alvin and Daniel, the last named being the father of Foster Daniel. Abel Child was a son of Daniel Child, of the fourth generation in America, born in Woodstock, Conn., Jan. 1, 1713. On his birthday anniversary in the year 1747, he was united in marriage to Ruth Amidown and after her death he wedded Abigail Bridges; his death occurred in 1776 in Woodstock, with whose interests he had been identified from his youth until he was summoned from the scene of life's activities. His children were: Daniel, who died in childhood; Zerviah; Stephen, married to Mercy Chase; Abel, the grandfather of our subject; Abigail; and Daniel (2). Those who have borne the name in the several generations in Connecticut have typified ideal citizenship and have proved valuable factors in civic affairs.

Foster D. Child, whose genealogical history we have thus briefly reviewed, has passed his entire life in Woodstock, where he received his early educational discipline in the public schools, continuing his studies until he had attained the age of seventeen years, while in the meantime he did not neglect the incidental duties which devolved upon him in connection with the work of the old homestead farm. He was reared by his uncle, Jonathan Carpenter, in whose home he remained from the age of eight years to that of sixteen. After he left school he was for a time employed on the farm of Charles Harris May and later on that of his uncle, Chester Child. At the age of nineteen he began traveling about with his father, who devoted much of his time and attention to the buying and selling of cattle, as has been already noted in this connection, and with this line of work our subject continued to be identified for several years, becoming an excellent judge of stock and gaining valuable business experience. In 1861 Mr. Child decided to try his fortunes in the West, proceeding to Ottawa, Ill., where he was employed as a clerk in the shoe store conducted by his brothers; he remained in that place about a year, after which he went to Davenport, Iowa, where he occupied a similar position for two years in the shoe store of his brother Oscar. At the expiration of this interval he returned to his native county, establishing his headquarters in the town of Thompson, where he successfully engaged in the cattle business for three years, when his father's death caused him to withdraw from this enterprise and to assume charge of the old homestead farm of seventy-five acres, where he has since maintained his home, and where he has shown marked discrimination in securing the best possible returns from the cultivation of the place. He also operated for a number of years the gristmill which had been erected and conducted by his father.

Mr. Child's religious views are in harmony with the faith in which he was reared, and he is a regular attendant and liberal supporter of the Congregational Church in Woodstock, of which his wife is a zealous and devoted member, having been president of the Ladies' Aid Society and having held other official positions in the church. Though entirely free from personal ambition in a political way, Mr. Child has ever been mindful of the duties of citizenship and has exercised his franchise in support of the principles and policies of the Republican party. He is recognized as one of the substantial and progressive business men of his native county, and in addition to his local interests he is one of the stockholders of the Child Acme Paper Cutter Company, of Roxbury, Mass., of whose directorate he is a member.

On March 11, 1863, Mr. Child was united in marriage to Miss Eliza Asenath Ormsbee, daughter of Augustus and Amanda (Jordon) Ormsbee, of Thompson, Conn., both of whom are now deceased. Mr. Child and his wife have no children.

JOHN H. KITE (deceased) was for many years the efficient cashier of the First National Bank of Rockville, and was one of the best known men in banking circles in the State. He was a self-made man in the fullest sense, and the enviable position that he enjoyed as a business man and citizen was the result of his business ability and integrity. From boyhood he was courteous and polite, natural characteristics which had been developed by good training and obedience to the teachings of an excellent mother. Seldom is found, in any community, a man so universally respected, or one who enjoyed to the same extent the implicit confidence of all. He left a good name—one to which posterity can point with pride.

Mr. Kite was born April 27, 1849, in Charlestown, Mass., son of James and Hannah (Avans) Kite, both of whom were natives of England. James Kite was a cabinetmaker by trade. He died when his son John was but a young boy. The family consisted of six children, two sons and four daughters.

When Mr. Kite was about nine years old his mother removed to Rockville, Conn., and there he spent the rest of his youth, and received his principal training in the public schools of the city. Soon after leaving school he entered the grocery and dry-goods store of E. E. Freeman, whose place of business was then located on the site of the present Prescott block, on Park street, in Rockville. There he was employed for a few years, during which time he made many friends by his close attention to business and pleasant manners. His strict integrity and natural business ability attracted the attention of the directors of the First National Bank when they were casting about for a young man to act as teller. When that position became vacant by resignation of William Hooper, April 19, 1870, it was offered to Mr. Kite, a fact in itself highly complimentary. Only a few months later, on Nov. 17, 1870, when the cashiership became vacant by the retirement of Charles Dillingham, Mr. Kite was advanced to that position, than which no higher testimonial of his services could be given; Mr. Kite was not yet twenty-one years old when he became cashier, a position which he filled for thirty-two years, until his death. As in all his former work, he applied himself closely, and studied the details of the business, so that for many years before his death he was looked upon as one of the able financiers in banking circles throughout the State. Under his regime the bank prospered and grew, taking a foremost position among Connecticut financial institutions. Mr. Kite was one of the incorporators of the Savings Bank of Rockville.

An incident in the life of Mr. Kite, as well as in his connection with the First National Bank of Rockville, is briefly stated here: Some years after becoming its cashier he had occasion just about dusk one evening to go to the bank vault, which at that time did not have a time lock on it. As he entered the vault, for some unknown reason he chanced to turn his eyes upward, when he saw a small piece of mortar hanging by the hairs which are an essential part of wall plaster. This at once struck him as somewhat peculiar, therefore he stepped outside and picked up a switch cane, with which he proceeded to investigate. He found a small hole through the top of the vault and he reported to the bank officials and the sheriff. After a lengthy investigation it was found that burglars had pulled up a portion of the carpet in the auditorium of the Methodist Church, which was directly over the vault, and had made an opening in the floor by cutting off a large joist, using an auger to do so, as this would cause less noise than a saw. Through this opening they let themselves down to the top of the vault, and once in there no better place for their operations could have been planned. Here, formed by the enclosure, was a space proportionate to the size of the vault and from two to four feet in height. Here were found saws, bores, augers, chisels and various other necessary tools, besides heavy woolen stockings, overalls and jumpers. The burglars had planned well, but missed, owing no doubt to the real insecurity of the vault, which was built simply of brick and only one or two layers over the top. In removing some brick they no doubt were astonished to find that they were so near to the prize, otherwise they would have planned to have finished the job in one night. Just at this time the vault contained considerably more than its usual amount of cash. No clue to the burglars could be obtained at the time, but it was afterward learned that it was the same gang which had operated at Northampton, Mass. A new vault, said to be one of the most secure and safe ones in the New England States, was soon put in.

Personally Mr. Kite was a most pleasant man to meet, and was courteous and gentlemanly in his bearing. His close attention to the business of the First National Bank was certainly marked, and the affairs of that institution were never looked after by a more competent and interested official. The banking business and its thorough understanding was his constant aim, and in this he succeeded. In financial matters his opinion and advice were highly regarded and often sought. Public life did not appeal to him, and he sought no public office, though several were offered him. After business hours the surroundings of his home afforded him his greatest pleasure, and there he took great pride and interest. He was a self-made man, and an excellent example of what any young man may accomplish by strict integrity and an ambition to advance in life. At no time in his career had he anything more than his own merit and intrinsic worth to help him. Every day of his life added to these valuable assets.

Mr. Kite married, Sept. 18, 1872, in Tolland, Miss Harriet Eaton, daughter of Dr. J. C. and Mercy (Moore) Eaton. Mrs. Kite was born March 2, 1849, in Tolland, where her father, Dr. Eaton, practiced medicine for some years; later he practiced in Stafford Springs, Conn. To Mr. and Mrs. Kite were born three children: (1) Howard Campbell graduated from the Rockville High School, class of 1896, after which he spent three years at the Philadelphia Textile School. He is now connected with the J. J. Regan Manufacturing Co., of Rockville. (2) Grace Lillian graduated from the Rockville High School, class of 1901, completing her education at Mt. Holyoke College. (3) Marjorie Lucille is a student at the Rockville High School. Fraternally Mr. Kite belonged to the A. O. U. W. He passed away May 15, 1902, and was buried in Grove Hill cemetery at Rockville.

ARTHUR ALLYN HYDE, now of Des Moines, Iowa, but formerly a well known resident of Ellington, Tolland Co., Conn., was for many years one of that town's most substantial citizens. He comes from an old and prominent family that has long been identified with the affairs of the town and worthily wears an honored name.

(I) William Hyde, the first American ancestor of the Ellington Hydes, came to New England from old England in 1633, in company with the Rev. Thomas Hooker, the first minister at Hartford. For a short time they remained at Newton, Mass., and then both came to Hartford in 1636. At a later period William Hyde went to Saybrook, where his daughter was married in 1652; still later Mr. Hyde and his son Samuel were among the thirty-five original proprietors of Norwich. There he died in 1681, a man of considerable importance in colonial affairs. The name of his wife is not known, and his two children were Samuel, and Hester, who married John Post.

(II) Samuel Hyde, the first American-born ancestor of Arthur Allyn, was born at Hartford about 1637, and was married in June, 1659, to Jane Lee, of East Saybrook, which is now known as Lyme. Mrs. Hyde was the daughter of Thomas Lee, who came from England in 1641 with his wife and three children. He died on the voyage and the widow located at Saybrook. Samuel Hyde was a farmer at Norwich, where he died in 1677, at the age of forty years. To him and his wife were born the following children: Samuel, born in 1665, married to Elizabeth Calkins; John; William, married to Anne Bushnell; Thomas, married to Mary Backus; Jabez, married to Elizabeth Bushnell; Elizabeth, born in 1660, who was the first white child born in Norwich, and who became the wife of Lieut.

Richard Lord; Phebe, who married Matthew Griswold; Sarah, born in 1675, who died the same year.

(III) John Hyde, born in Norwich in December, 1667, was a farmer, and in 1719 bought a farm of Nathaniel Backus at Wawecus Hill, which remained in the hands of his descendants until 1859. Mr. Hyde died at Norwich, July 26, 1727. Experience Abel, whom he married March 3, 1698, was born at Norwich in December, 1674, and died October 24, 1763. To John and Experience Hyde came the following children: John, born in 1698, who had two wives, Sarah Haskins and Elizabeth Backus; Eleazer, married to Sarah Hewitt; James, who married Sarah Marshall; Matthew; Experience, who married Samuel Gifford; Margaret, married to John Tracy; Esther, married to Thomas Williams; Lucy, who married Asa Waterman; Deborah, who married Ebenezer Thomas.

(IV) Capt. Matthew Hyde was born April 28, 1711, at Norwich, and was married in 1733 to Elizabeth Huntington, who was born in 1712 and was a daughter of Deacon Christopher Huntington, who was the first white male child born in Norwich. Capt. Hyde settled at West Farms, Norwich, now known as Franklin, where his wife died in 1776, and the same year he was married to Hannah Pember, who was born in 1750, and died in Paris, N. Y., March 11, 1839. Capt. Hyde died March 18, 1792. By his first wife he had the following family: Matthew; Eli, born in 1736, who married Rhoda Lathrop; Christopher, born in 1739, who died in 1760, unmarried; James, married to Eunice Backus; Azariah, married to Rebecca Edgerton; Uri, born in 1751, who died ten years later; Lovisa, born in 1743, who died Jan. 4, 1762, unmarried; Deborah, born in 1746, who died in 1785; Elizabeth, born in 1755, who died in 1781. By his second wife Capt. Hyde had the following family: Gustavus, born in 1777, who married Mary Coller; Ira, who married Susan Torrey; Levi, who married Mary Wentworth; Eleazer, married to Mary Brown; James (2), who died in early childhood; Issacher, who died in early youth.

(V) Matthew Hyde, who was born in Norwich, April 27, 1734, settled in Ellington when a young man. He was a farmer, but also an ingenious and successful wood worker. A conscientious opposer to war on scriptural grounds, he did not take part in the American Revolution and even allowed his cattle to be distrained for war taxes, though he would immediately redeem them. There were grave apprehensions in his mind regarding the effects of independence and he greatly feared the larger states would oppress the smaller. It was evident, however, that his actual sympathies were in no respect with the American adherents to the English cause and he was never regarded as an enemy of his country, but retained the respect and confidence of his neighbors through all that dreary struggle.

Mr. Hyde took a prominent part in the affairs of the young State after peace had come; he was the first representative elected to the General Assembly, and he held that position fifteen terms. Appointed a justice of the peace, and chosen town clerk, he held those two offices until his death, a period of more than twenty years. As justice of the peace, he officiated in a town then somewhat famous for its petty lawsuits, his good judgment and unquestioned integrity making him a remarkably useful and influential man, while his high character as a man and a citizen commanded equal respect. His death occurred Sept. 24, 1806, in Ellington, where he was buried.

Matthew Hyde and Roxalana Stoughton were married in 1756. She was born in 1734, and became the mother of the following family: Gustavus S., born in 1758, who died the following year; Gustavus (2), who died in early childhood; Christopher, who died in infancy; Robert, born in 1768, a farmer and a man of note, who succeeded his father as town clerk, acted as justice of the peace many years, was a representative to the General Assembly for a number of terms, and died unmarried in 1859; Daniel, born in 1770, a farmer, and a man of much literary ability, who died in 1867, unmarried; Allyn, the grandfather of Arthur A.; Anne, married to Dr. E. Bissell; Louisa, who died unmarried in July, 1843; Chloe, born in 1775, who died the following year; Chloe (2), who married Asa Wells, and died in Pompey, N. Y., in January, 1872, aged ninety-two. Mrs. Roxalana Hyde was a woman of strong character and sound mind, with a wide literary range. Her reading consisted of the great authors, and when over eighty years of age she was fond of Plutarch, Rollin and works of a similar character.

(VI) Dr. Allyn Hyde was born at Ellington in 1773, and received his degree of M. D. from Yale in 1824. Locating at Ellington, he almost immediately developed a fine practice, and made that place his home as long as his years permitted him to practice his beloved art. The Hydes were always farmers, but they had maintained the highest social standing in a town abounding in wealthy people, and thus Dr. Hyde made his way at once to the front.

Shortly before his death Dr. Hyde and his two brothers went to the polls and voted. They were all over eighty years of age, and their coming together was a local event long remembered. They were all Whigs.

Dr. Hyde was married May 30, 1805, to Jemima Mather, who was born in 1781 at Windsor, and was a daughter of Oliver and Jemima (Ellsworth) Mather, and a niece of Oliver Ellsworth, who became Chief Justice of the United States. Mrs. Jemima Hyde died May 19, 1839, and her husband passed away Aug. 28, 1855. They were the parents of three children: Oliver Mather, the father of Arthur A.; Fanny Ellsworth, born March 29, 1806, who died unmarried, Sept. 10, 1826;

Jemima Mather, born Jan. 20, 1808, who died, unmarried, Oct. 13, 1897.

(VII) Oliver Mather Hyde was born Feb. 21, 1810, in Ellington, where the greater part of his life was spent. After a good English schooling in the Ellington select schools, he removed to Hartford, where he mastered the trade of a silversmith. Coming back to his native town, however, at the age of twenty-one years, he assumed the care of the paternal estate, which became his inheritance on the death of his father. Continuing to manage the extensive holdings, he added materially to what had been left him, and at the time of his death was one of the wealthiest citizens of the town. A neighbor said, "Oliver Hyde's place in our town can never be filled." His death occurred Oct. 6, 1897, after a brief illness, and his remains were buried in Ellington. His long and intimate association with the affairs of Ellington made him an authority on local history. An ardent Republican, in 1867 he represented the town in the State Legislature. For some years he held various local offices, being elected by a unanimous vote of the town several times. In the Congregational Church, of which he was a devout member, he served as treasurer.

Oliver M. Hyde and Mary Thompson were married Nov. 9, 1837. She was a native of Ellington and a daughter of Samuel and Mary (Ellsworth) Thompson. Mrs. Hyde died July 8, 1898. Their Golden Wedding was celebrated in 1887 in the house where their entire married life had been spent. To them were born: Arthur Allyn; Mary Ellsworth, born March 26, 1843, the widow of Seward Smith, an attorney of Des Moines, Iowa, now living in Philadelphia at the home of a daughter; Ellen Mather, born Jan. 22, 1847, the wife of P. P. Buel, and residing at Herndon, Virginia.

(VIII) Arthur Allyn Hyde was born March 13, 1839, in Ellington, where he attended the public school and was a pupil in a select school conducted by Edward Hall. Mr. Hyde enlisted Aug. 25, 1862, in Co. F, 25th C. V. I., under Capt. George H. Napheys, and Col. Geo. P. Bissell. The regiment was formed under a call for nine months, and was mustered in on Long Island, two months after enlistment. It was sent to New Orleans and took part in the campaign against Port Hudson under command of Gen. Banks. In the first engagement in which the regiment participated, on the way to Port Hudson, Mr. Hyde was shot through the leg and was sent to the hospital in New Orleans, where he remained until his regiment came back to the city after the fall of the Rebel stronghold. The command was mustered out at Hartford after a little more than a year's service. Mr. Hyde's military experiences ended with the mustering out of the 25th Connecticut, and he returned to his home at Ellington, occupying the family homestead; this was built in 1810, and remained in the family possession until May, 1901, when Mr. Hyde sold it and moved to Des Moines, Iowa.

Mr. Hyde is a Republican, and though he has had no desire for official honors, yet in the course of his long residence in Ellington, he served on the school committee and on the board of relief. Mr. Hyde is a charter member of Burpee Post, No. 71, G. A. R., the Ellington Grange, and the Congregational Church of Ellington, to which church his family also belonged and he served as its treasurer. Mr. Hyde's was a welcome presence in the Connecticut Army and Navy Club, of which he was a valued and working member, and in all these organizations he has been greatly missed since his removal to the West.

Arthur Allyn Hyde and Miss Louisa Bird were married Oct. 25, 1870. She was born Feb. 22, 1847, at Thorntown, Ind., and is a daughter of Thompson and Anna P. (Knowlton) Bird. The parents of Mrs. Hyde were among the very early settlers of Thorntown, and came into possession of real estate which at the time of their death was valuable, making them wealthy. To this marriage were born the following children: Empson B., born Sept. 6, 1871, who has a responsible position in the Phoenix Insurance Company at Hartford; Oliver T., born Aug. 4, 1875, graduated from Amherst College in 1897, and from the Medical Department of Columbia College, N. Y., in 1901, and is now located at Bellevue Hospital, N. Y.; Fanny E., born Sept. 10, 1877, who married James D. Keyes, Feb. 6, 1901, and is now residing in Des Moines, where Mr. Keyes is engaged in the transfer and storage business; Anna M., born June 9, 1880, who died Aug. 8, 1880.

Mr. Hyde is a genial and pleasant gentleman, his wife is most popular and highly esteemed, and their children are a credit to the hospitable home in which they were reared.

CHARLES STORER HYDE, who is the proud possessor of one of the finest as well as largest farms in the State, has since his young manhood been engaged in farming and dairying. Canterbury, Windham county, has long been the home of the Hyde family, and representatives in each generation have taken prominent part in the management of municipal affairs.

(I) Deacon Samuel Hyde, the first ancestor of this family in America, was born in 1610. He embarked in the ship "Jonathan," at London, bound for Boston, in April, 1639, and was the second settler in the village of Cambridge, about 1640. He and his wife, Temperance, who probably came in the same ship with him, had children as follows: Samuel; Joshua, born March 12, 1642; Job, born in 1643; Sarah, born May 19, 1644; and Elizabeth.

(II) Job Hyde, born in 1643, married Elizabeth, daughter of John Fuller, Sr. They had children, among whom was Jonathan Hides, born (it is supposed) March 22, 1684.

(III) Jonathan Hides married Elizabeth, daughter of Isaac Williams, Jan. 3, 1700. They had children, among whom was Isaac, born Nov. 11, 1700. Jackson's History of Newton, Mass., says that Jonathan was the first one of the Hydes to remove to Canterbury, Connecticut.

(IV) Isaac Hide, son of Jonathan and Elizabeth (Williams) Hides, married Elizabeth Starr, and died probably in 1776. He had a family of ten children, among whom was Nathan, born Sept. 23, 1751, who died April 21, 1827; he married Abigail Waldo. Isaac Hide's legatees in his will are Elizabeth, his wife, and his four sons, Isaac, Comfort, David and Nathan. His daughters were: Elizabeth, who married a Mr. Cleveland; Susannah, who married a Mr. Curtis; and Judah, who married a Mr. Adams.

(V) Comfort Hyde, son of Isaac, was born in Canterbury, Aug. 24, 1737, and followed farming in that town all his life. He married a Miss Faulkner and their children were: Comfort Starr; Sarah; Alfred; Abigail, who married Warren Perkins; and Hannah, who married Willard Sharpe.

(VI) Comfort Starr Hyde was born in Canterbury, Aug. 8, 1784, and, like his father before him, engaged in farming. In all his business affairs he was successful and acquired quite a competency. He was a man of good education who acquired much general information, and he had much to do with the settlement of estates, often acting also as arbitrator in disputes. During the war of 1812 he served two months, participating in the defense of New London, Conn. In political principles he was a Democrat, and he took a deep interest in all public questions. He held nearly all the local town offices, and in 1851 was a member of the Legislature. His ideas were original, and he was ever ready to defend them, although very tolerant of the opinions of others. In religion he was a member of the Universalist Church and he helped to build the church of that denomination at Canterbury. Comfort S. Hyde married Abigail Hough, and they had the following children: John, born Feb. 18, 1813, who married Emily Angel; Juliette, born Sept. 10, 1814; Jirah, born Aug. 23, 1816; and Judith, born Oct. 12, 1826, who married Samuel Burlingame. Comfort Starr Hyde died Aug. 29, 1868, and his wife passed away June 19, 1832.

(VII) Jirah Hyde, father of Charles S., was born on the home farm in Canterbury, in the house in which Charles S. Hyde now lives, Aug. 23, 1816. He was reared on the farm and there passed his entire life. His education was all obtained in the district schools, and by practical experience on the home farm he became a wise and careful agriculturist, ranking as one of the leading farmers in the town. His farm consisted of about 600 acres, but a small portion of which was inherited, the rest being the fruit of his own industry. Like his father, he was often called upon to act in the settlement of estates. Politically he was a Democrat, and for some years served as first selectman and assessor and in 1854 was a representative in the State Legislature. The world of finance was to him an interesting study, and he was for years a director in the Windham County National Bank. He attended the Unitarian Church of Brooklyn, although not a member. Mr. Hyde married Sophia Helen Hyde, who was born in Plainfield, N. Y., July 4, 1830, a daughter of Festus and Hannah M. Hyde, and three children blessed this union: Mary, born Aug. 24, 1852, who married Addison Greenslit; Jirah Festus, born Nov. 14, 1855, a farmer, merchant and lumber dealer in Hampton, Conn., who married L. Mariah Greenslit; and Charles Storer. Jirah Hyde, the father, died Jan. 12, 1890; the mother is still living.

(VIII) Charles Storer Hyde was born in the house in which he now lives, Dec. 30, 1858, and acquired his education in the schools of the Hyde district. At the age of eighteen he left the school-room and began to engage actively in farming; in partnership with his brother he carried on the farm for three years, and then, having attained his majority, he bought out his brother, and carried on the farm himself, renting from his father. He engaged in dairying, keeping about twenty cows, and he was also successful in cattle raising. While quite young to attempt such work, he bent his energies to it, and has met with abundant success. Thus he continued to operate the farm until his father's death in 1890, when he inherited the home place. To the 600 acres it then contained he has added 104 more, making 704 acres in all—the largest farm in that section of Connecticut.

Like his father and grandfather, Mr. Hyde is a Democrat, and although Canterbury is strongly Republican his personal standing is so exceptionally high that he has held many offices in the gift of the town. He has been first selectman; in 1897 was representative in the Legislature, where he gave efficient service on the Fish and Game committee; and was again elected to that body in the fall of 1902. He has been president of the Windham County Agricultural Society for three years. He is a member, as is also his wife, of the Brooklyn Grange, and he has been master for five years. Mr. Hyde was one of the incorporators of the Brooklyn Savings Bank.

On Aug. 23, 1888, Charles Storer Hyde was united in marriage with Miss Addie Cleveland Frink, born Aug. 17, 1863, daughter of Chauncey C. and Martha Ann (Potter) Frink, now of Canterbury, but natives, respectively, of Columbia, Conn., and Rhode Island. Both Mr. and Mrs. Hyde attend the Unitarian Church in Brooklyn. They are genial and hospitable people, and have many friends who esteem them for their genuine worth.

JAMES J. REGAN, deceased. The James J. Regan Manufacturing Company, of Rockville, Tolland county, manufacturers of knit goods, cotton yarns and woven goods, also dealers in wool stocks of all kinds, is the outgrowth of a business established in 1868 by James J. Regan. It was incorporated in June, 1898, at which time Frank J. Regan was made president and treasurer. Though comparatively a young man, Frank J. Regan has had a long and thorough training in the business of which he is the responsible head, having practically grown up in the establishment founded by his father.

James J. Regan was one of the most successful manufacturers of Rockville, Tolland county, and left a name for sound business principles and honesty of dealing that is an honor to his posterity. He was born in Staffordshire, England, in October, 1837, son of James and Catherine (Kelley) Regan, and was about five years old when he accompanied his parents to New Castle, England, where they made their home until they came to the United States, in 1849, first locating in Brooklyn. When the whole family was reunited in America they removed to Mapleville, R. I., and from there came to Connecticut, locating first at Moosup, but later removing to Coventry, where James entered the employ of a woolen manufacturer named Fargo, beginning work as a carder. In a short time his close observation and keen mechanical conception gained for him such a thorough knowledge of the business that he was given charge of the department. Mr. Regan's first "boss" was John Risley, well known to Rockville people, he having been at one time overseer of the Windemere mill. For four busy years Mr. Regan worked in Coventry, and then came to Rockville to open up a business which was destined to become one of the leading industries of the city, making Mr. Regan a power among the mill men of Tolland county.

The beginning of this great business was small, the "old stone mill" being the building used, and but a few hands were needed. A short time later the business was transferred to Dalesville, where Mr. Regan bought a mill and began its operation. This venture did not prove as encouraging as expected, and the old place in Rockville was reopened for a short time. Upon leaving this location Mr. Regan went into the Florence Mill, where he remained several years, but his business so increased that in 1891 he purchased the Glasgo Mill, which he operated until the time of his death. He passed away suddenly while in his office, Aug. 6, 1897.

Mr. Regan invented a flock-cutting machine, which was practically his first effort in the manufacturing line, and was a great improvement upon anything in existence at that time; it has been in use ever since. It was not patented for some years, but has brought a fortune to its owners. Early in the eighties Mr. Regan bought what was known as the Barrows place, on Prospect street, Rockville, which he improved and converted into one of the pleasant homes of that beautiful city, where reside many princes of the manufacturing trade of Connecticut. For forty-five years he was a resident of Rockville, and his success came in a way that caused aim to retain the confidence and respect of his associates in all ranks of life.

Mr. Regan was of a retiring disposition, never sought prominence in city or town affairs, and was never willing to have his name mentioned in a political way. His capacity for work was remarkable, and much of his success was due to his careful and accurate attention to detail; he rarely made a mistake when he made a decision. A member of St. Bernard's Temperance Society, he had been selected as first delegate to the National Convention which convened at Scranton, Pa., four days after his death; he was also connected with the Order of Foresters.

James J. Regan was married in South Coventry to Miss Jane Wilbur, a native of that place, daughter of George Wilbur. Before the days of railroads Mr. Wilbur was engaged in what was known as the "trucking" business, hauling the products of the mills to market and bringing back the raw material. Mrs. Regan died Dec. 28, 1885, at the age of forty-five, the beloved mother of six children, of whom Mary J. married Thomas H. Kehoe, and died in New Britain; Frank J.; Genevieve married William Scanlan, and died in Rockville; Isabella is Mrs. J. H. Hughes, of Rockville; Herbert is assistant treasurer of the Regan Manufacturing Company; Sylvester, the youngest, is a stockholder in that concern.

VALIRUS KIBBE, who enjoys the distinction of being the oldest man in Somers, Tolland county, makes his home in that part of the town known as Woodville. He is a brother of Horatio Kibbe, of Ellington.

Valirus Kibbe was born Oct. 3, 1813, in Somers, son of Valirus and Eunice (Cushman) Kibbe, and moved to Ellington with his parents after he had become a young man. His education was obtained in the Somers district school and in a select school kept by a Mr. Stiles. Until he reached the age of twenty-five years Mr. Kibbe assisted his father in the care and management of the farm, and at that time returned to Somers, where he was employed for a time in a palm-leaf fan and Shaker bonnet shop kept by Enos Pease. After about three years with Mr. Pease Mr. Kibbe bought a part of his present farm, from the estate of his father-in-law. He has increased the acreage from time to time, and for more than half a century has followed the cultivation of the soil at his present home, being very largely interested in general farming; he has also grown tobacco and engaged in dairying on an extensive scale. For many years he was a cattle dealer of wide reputation, and was very successful. Mr. Kibbe is not now doing much work on the farm, which is carried on by his son, John B. Kibbe. Valirus Kibbe and Laura Wood were married April 7, 1842. Mrs. Kibbe was born Nov. 6, 1811, daughter of John and Sally (Bowen) Wood, and died April 2, 1883. To this union came children as follows: (1) Franklin V., born April 9, 1843, is a farmer, and a prominent man in the town of Somers, which he represented in the Legislature in 1899. On Feb. 21, 1865, he married Hannah Hunt, daughter of Simon and Persis (Chaffer) Hunt. She died Dec. 17, 1880, and on March 3, 1881, Mr. Kibbe married Rosella Davis, daughter of Henry and Sophia (Bradway) Davis, of Stafford. By his first wife he had two children: Lottie, born Dec. 10, 1865, who was married to William Preblo, Jan. 20, 1886, and is the mother of one child, Elwin, born Dec. 21, 1888; and Flossie, born May 23, 1872, who is Mrs. William Bumstead. By the second union there are also two children: Inez, born Aug. 3, 1882, who is Mrs. Joel Skidmore, and has one child, born Aug. 16, 1901; and Everett D., born June 16, 1895. (2) Everett W., born March 3, 1846, is a bookkeeper in Chicago. (3) Amelia W., born July 3, 1848, was married April 14, 1871, to Frederick Fielus, a farmer in Somers, and is the mother of: Frederick E., who married Maria Johnson, and has three children, Alice, Walter S. and Chester; Ethel M., who married George Goodwin, and is the mother of Lila and Stanley; and Laura, wife of Francis Bill, who is in the insurance business in Hartford. (4) Elwin M., born Jan. 2, 1851, was a farmer in Somers, and died Dec. 7, 1883. His first wife was Ella Hurlbert, and his second Netta Dorson, by whom he had a son, Elwin, now deceased. (5) John B., born Jan. 11, 1854, married Emma I. Hurlburd, who was born June 17, 1855, daughter of Samuel and Mary (Bradley) Hurlburd, of Somers. Mr. Kibbe is a farmer and a dairyman on the old homestead farm. He is a man of distinction in his own community, in 1896 was elected selectman, and is a director of the Somers Creamery. He and his wife had four children: Alma, born April 27, 1878, who was married July 4, 1900, to Charles Billings, son of Andrew and Sarah (Ryder) Billings, of Springfield, and has one child, Herman Bradford, born March 2, 1902; Ruby L., who was born June 20, 1880; Valirus, born June 7, 1883; and Mary E., born Oct. 26, 1885, a graduate of the Somers high school.

Valirus Kibbe was originally a Whig, and is now a strong Republican. He represented his town in the General Assembly of 1876, serving on the committee on Roads and Bridges. He has also been chairman of the board of selectmen. A supporter of the Congregational Church, he attends its services, and takes much interest in every effort to advance the general moral and religious welfare of the community. Mr. Kibbe has been a hard worker all his life, and has accumulated a very fair property. In his community he is much esteemed as a thoroughly honest and reliable man.

SILAS A. WAITE. Because of his forceful character, shrewd business insight, public spirit and moral worth, Silas A. Waite became a power in the general affairs of Oneco, and one of the most energetic and successful men of Windham county. He possessed that thrift and appreciation of money and opportunity which we are wont to associate with all men who have risen on their own merits, and his conservatism was such that he worked only in stable and beneficial lines. Like many of the foremost citizens of his town he was born in Rhode Island, the date of his birth being Jan. 21, 1839, and his native city Newport. His death occurred Sept. 17, 1899, and with his passing went one of the reliable business and social elements of the community.

When fourteen years of age Silas A. Waite came to Oneco, and the following year entered the mill of the Oneco Manufacturing Company, where he learned the trade of machinist from his father. He was subsequently employed at Natick, R. I., in the Baltic mill, and at Willimantic, where he worked with Mr. Conant in the machine shop connected with the Willimantic Linen Company. For the following nine years he was engaged in the grocery business in Oneco, and for the next seven years he engaged in the lumber business, which he carried on extensively and profitably. As a soldier he served during the Civil war in the 26th C. V. I., enlisting in 1862, and receiving his discharge Aug. 17, 1863. He was wounded in the arm at Port Hudson, where his regiment met with severe reverses. The residence occupied by his family at the time of his death was formerly a part of the Sprague property, and he improved and cultivated his place until it was among the neatest and most desirable in the county. He was one of the largest land owners in Sterling, and besides his farm and general possessions he was the owner of numerous properties and dwelling houses in Oneco. He was a Republican in national politics, and aside from being a member of the board of selectmen for many years represented his town in the General Assembly in 1892-93. He was a member of Protective Lodge, I. O. O. F., and the Encampment at Central Village, and was also associated with Kilborn Post, G. A. R., of the same town.

On Sept. 27, 1858, Mr. Waite married Ellen E. Vaughn, and of this union there were three children, all of whom died during childhood.

Of the Vaughn family it may be said that John, the paternal grandfather of Mrs. Waite, was a resident of Sterling, and, though he died when a comparatively young man, was twice married, and was the father of the following children: Job, a farmer of North Sterling, who married Abby Dorrance, by whom he had a daughter, Jennie, now a resident of Plainfield, Conn.; William, the father of Mrs. Waite; Eunice, deceased wife of Randall Wilcox, of Providence, R. I.; and Eliza (born of the second marriage of her father), deceased wife of James Briggs, of Providence.

William Vaughn was born April 24, 1814, and in Sterling married Emeline, daughter of Olney and Nancy (Youngs) Perkins, lifelong residents of Sterling. Olney Perkins owned and occupied a farm located between Oneco and Sterling, and he was both prosperous and influential. His children were: Eliza, deceased when young; Emeline, the mother of Mrs. Waite; Mary, deceased wife of Alfred Kenyon; Ruby, the wife of Dennison Gallup; Julia, deceased, unmarried; Horace, who lived and died in Sterling, and married Mary Remington of Rhode Island; and Albert, deceased, formerly the husband of Nancy Kennedy, of Sterling. When a young man William Vaughn learned the carpenter's trade, which occupation he followed for many years. He finally purchased a farm between Oneco and Sterling, and his latter years were devoted to the farm's improvement and cultivation. His death occurred April 11, 1894. He was first a Whig and then a Republican, although he was not active in official service, preferring to devote all of his time to his varied interests. To William Vaughn and his wife Emeline were born seven children: (1) Harriet Maria, who was born July 10, 1838, and died May 10, 1872, married Andrew Wilcox, and had the following children: Ellen Maria, born July 9, 1862, the wife of Albert Babcock; and Merrell, born Dec. 22, 1863, a resident of Sterling. (2) Ellen Elizabeth was born Oct. 16, 1840. (3) Sarah Jane, born Feb. 11, 1845, married William Kenyon, Jan. 9, 1868, the latter dying Jan. 24, 1898. Of this union there were the following children: William, born Nov. 10, 1868, who married Emma Stone; Irving B., born Aug. 12, 1870, who married Addie Mays, and lives in Bridgeport, Conn.; Allison, born Oct. 8, 1872, who married Helen Burlingame; Ernest, born Sept. 29, 1875; Maud, born Aug. 1, 1878, who died at the age of two months; and Bertha, born June 20, 1882. (4) Mary Eliza, born Aug. 17, 1848, married Alonzo M. Kennedy, of Central Falls, R. I., and they have had the following children: Mabel, born June 16, 1873; Grace, born in July, 1875, who died at the age of nineteen years; Edgar, born in September, 1877; Herbert, born in July, 1883; and Walter, born in 1884. (5) Anna F. was born June 11, 1851, and died July 6, 1854. (6) Alice J. was born March 4, 1854, married Henry Brown, of Moosup, Conn., and has one daughter, Maud Alice, born Aug. 8, 1884. (7) Walter was born Dec. 27, 1859, is a prosperous farmer of Sterling, and married Louise Currey.

Since her husband's death Mrs. Waite has managed and overseen the splendidly improved farm, and has shown great business sagacity and wise control. She is one of the best known women in the neighborhood, where her kindly disposition and gracious personality have won and kept many friends.

HENRY CLINTON ATWOOD, agent, superintendent and treasurer of the Williamsville Manufacturing Co., of Killingly, Windham county, is not only one of the leading citizens of the locality, but is also a representative of one of the oldest families of New England.

The Atwoods of eastern Connecticut are believed to have descended from Harman Atwood, of Sandersted, County of Surrey, England, who was a son of John and a grandson of Nicholas and Olive Atwood. Harman Atwood appears first on record in this country at the time of his admission as an inhabitant of Boston, Mass., in 1642, in which year he was in the employ of Thomas Buttolph, leather dresser, or glover. He was a member of the artillery company in 1644, and in 1645 was made a freeman. On Feb. 24, 1644, he was admitted to the church, and on Aug. 11, 1646, he was married to Ann, daughter of William Copp, who came in the ship "Blessing," in 1635. Harman Atwood died in 1650, his two children, John and Sarah, being baptized, respectively, Sept. 5, 1647, when five days old, and May 26, 1650.

John Atwood, son of Harman, born Sept. 1, 1647, had the following children by his wife, Sarah: John, born May 23, 1671, who died young; James, June 3, 1673; Samuel, May 13, 1687, who died young; and Sarah, Nov. 11, 1688. Sarah, the first wife, died in 1689, and Oct. 27, 1690, he married Widow Mary Smith, daughter of Zachariah Long, of Charlestown, Mass. To this union were born: Mary, Sept. 1, 1691, who died very young; John, Feb. 16, 1693-94; Samuel, in March, 1696, who died prior to 1729; Abigail, Nov. 17, 1699; and Joshua, April 10, 1701, who died in 1770.

John Atwood, the father of this family, was a member of the artillery company in 1673; was admitted to First Church in 1675-76; was a deacon in the old North (Second) Church in 1693, and a lieutenant in the artillery company in 1695. He died Aug. 24, 1714, and his wife Mary passed away March 18, 1728-29. Of the children of Deacon John Atwood two sons only—John and Joshua—and two daughters were living in 1729. There is no record of any of his descendants excepting the family of John.

John Atwood, son of Deacon John, was born Feb. 16, 1693-94, in Boston, Mass., and Oct. 28, 1715, married Hannah Bond, of Haverhill, Mass. Probably about 1716 he moved to Bradford, Mass., where his death occurred. His eight children were: John, William, Zachariah, Joseph, Joshua, Mary, Hannah, and Benjamin. All except Benjamin, whose birth is not recorded, were born between 1716 and 1728.

The next of whom we have record is Great-grandfather John Atwood (probably a son of Nehemiah), who was a resident of Scituate, R. I., where he married Roby Kimball, daughter of Capt. Joseph Kimball, of Scituate, R. I., in whose company John Atwood served as sergeant. His name appears on the rolls of that company dated March 8, 1777. This company marched from Scituate, Feb. 7, 1777, and were in service thirty days, but later John Atwood was sergeant in Capt. Perk's company of the 1st division, Col. John Matthewson's regiment, in the expedition against Rhode Island. [See Rev. Rolls of R. I. Vol. 3, page 82.] John Atwood died in Scituate, R. I., in October, 1802. To John and Roby (Kimball) Atwood were born these children: Kimball, born Dec. 5, 1781; Lydia, who married George B. Hutchins; Dorcas, who married Waterman Field; Abigail, who married Joseph Butler; Rhoda, who married a Randall; Roby, who married James Andrews; and Levina, who married Wilbur Fisk.

Great-grandfather Kimball Atwood, son of John, was born Dec. 5, 1781, in Scituate, and April 4, 1803, married Salinda Colgrove, born April 20, 1786. Both great-grandparents are buried in a family graveyard at Scituate, R. I. Their children were the following: Dorcas, born June 10, 1803, who died young; John, Feb. 16, 1805; William C., March 19, 1807, who died Sept. 29, 1895, married to Juliana Andrews, born Nov. 5, 1806, who died March 24, 1861; Sally, June 22, 1809, died young; Sylindia, Sept. 25, 1811, who died young; Kimball T., Dec. 2, 1819; and Joanna Fisk, Aug. 24, 1826.

John Atwood, eldest son of Kimball, and grandfather of H. C. Atwood, the first of the family to embark in the manufacturing business at Williams-ville, was born Feb. 16, 1805, and died July 31, 1865, aged sixty years and five months. He married Julia A. Battey, born Feb. 24, 1805, who died Aug. 31, 1872, aged sixty-seven years, six months and seven days. Their children were James S., born March 17, 1832, who died Feb. 20, 1885; William Allen, Aug. 4, 1833, who died June 26, 1881; Henry C., who died Oct. 11, 1836, aged fifteen months; and Mary Elizabeth, who died June 25, 1843, aged five years.

Grandfather John Atwood came to Killingly, Conn., shortly after his marriage and entered the Williamsville mill, which was then owned by Caleb Williams, who built the mill in 1827. Later it passed into the hands of Samuel W. Foster. In 1849 John Atwood, who had been identified with the business ever since locating in Killingly, became part owner, and continued active in the business until his death. His descendants are still at the head of this mill.

William Allen Atwood, the father of H. C. Atwood, was liberally educated, passing through the Danielson high school, continuing his studies at Scituate Seminary, R. I., and at Wilbraham, Mass., completing a very thorough academic training at Middleboro, Mass. Soon after he entered the Williamsville mills, then under the superintendence of his father, and when he had made himself familiar with their practical workings, soon became an integral part of the business. The failure of his father's health threw much of the responsibility upon his son and on the death of the former, the entire direction of this important manufacturing interest was placed in his hands. Under his watchful eye and excellent management, the business made rapid advancement and at the date of his death had attained a high degree of prosperity. William Atwood was interested in other enterprises and was one of the stockholders in the large mills at Taftville.

On Oct. 4, 1854, William A. Atwood married Carolina A., daughter of Robert K. and Helen (Brown) Hargraves, granddaughter of William Hargraves, who was born Sept. 14, 1834. To this marriage was born a family of four children, viz.: Henry Clinton, Feb. 12, 1856; Bradford Allen, Feb. 9, 1858, who died Aug. 14, 1860; Mary Elizabeth, Nov. 2, 1862, who married G. W. Lynn and died April 23, 1886; and William Edwin, Aug. 21, 1866, who is connected with the Williamsville mill.

Henry Clinton Atwood was born at Williamsville, town of Killingly, where he received his preparatory education. Later he attended the Friends and the University grammar schools at Providence, R. I., later entering Brown University, from which he was graduated in 1878. After returning home, he entered the Company's store, where he continued until his father's death in 1881, when he became agent and superintendent for the Williamsville Manufacturing Co., and since 1890 he has also been its treasurer.

The manufacturing plant, which Mr. Atwood superintends so ably that all the highly perfected machines and skilled workmen work in perfect unison, is one of the great industrial centers of the locality. Its immense main building in the western part of the town presents its four-stories, 417 feet in length and 49 feet in width, as a typical building for the successful carrying on of manufacturing enterprises. In 1860, 165 feet of this imposing structure was erected, the additional 252 feet being built in 1876, the entire building being constructed of stone. It contains 648 looms and 23,000 spindles, the manufacture being cotton shirtings. To manage a great industry of this kind successfully, necessitates many special qualities which Mr. Atwood continually demonstrates are his.

In politics Mr. Atwood is thoroughly identified with the Republican party and his services were recognized in 1884 by his election to the State Legislature to represent the town of Killingly. While there he served on the committee on New Towns and Probate Districts, and was made a member of a very important special committee on Boiler Inspection, it being the design of this committee to formulate laws by which such disasters as the destruction of the "Park Hotel," in Hartford, could be prevented. His fraternal connections are with the Masonic orders in Danielson, viz.: Moriah Lodge, No. 15, A. F. & A. M.; Warren Chapter, No. 12, R. A. M.; Montgomery Council, No. 2, R. & S. M., his interest in all being active. Mr. Atwood is also a member of the Rhode Island branch of the Sons of the American Revolution.

On Oct. 22, 1878, Mr. Atwood was married to Miss Lillian B. Whitford, of Apponaug, R. I., daughter of Thomas W. and Mary Ellen (Cole) Whitford; to this union have been born two sons, namely: Clinton William, Oct. 5, 1886; and Harold Bradford, July 25, 1891.

Mr. Atwood is well known over a wide extent of country, his trade relations being of the pleasantest nature, while to his army of employees he is a man of discrimination and justice. He is a liberal and discerning patron of education and has long been regarded as one of the prominent citizens of the town of Killingly.

ANTHONY McMURDY GIBSON, for many years a most highly respected citizen of Rockville, Tolland county, where he resided from 1869 until his death, was a cultured and refined gentleman of the old school, courteous and affable in his bearing, upright in his dealings and clean and wholesome in his character. Mr. Gibson was a great reader, possessed marked literary tastes, and wrote very good poetry for his own delight. He was a linguist of no small attainments, and was versed in a number of languages. In early life he did not succeed in securing the education he desired, as his interrupted schooling called him into active labors at a time he would rather have been pursuing a wider information. In later years by study and application he acquired an education that put to shame the learning of many a school man.

Mr. Gibson came from good old North of Ireland stock, and was born at Albany, N. Y., Dec. 9, 1825, son of John and Isabella (McMurdy) Gibson. The father was a native of County Cavan, Ireland, born about 1800, and accompanied his parents, James and Mary Gibson, to this country. In the United States he was married to Miss Isabella McMurdy, a native of Newburgh, N. Y. One son, William J., of Cottage City, Mass., still survives. The McMurdys were Scottish people.

Anthony M. Gibson was reared in Albany, N. Y., where he attended the Lancaster street school, and after that the Boys' Academy, in that day a noted institution. For a short time he was a student of the college at Middlebury, Vt., whence he was called home by the circumstances of his father's business. That gentleman had extensive sawmill interests, and was the principal owner of the Woodruff Planing Machine Patent. Of this patent and its possibilities great things were expected. When not eighteen years old young Gibson was put in charge of a planing mill at Troy, N. Y., by his father, and at a later period was in the lumber depot at Albany, which he left in 1847. For several years he was at Gibson, N. Y., which town was named after his father, who had extensive lumber interests there. In 1856 a very disastrous fire destroyed much property and inflicted a severe blow upon the Gibson interests. After the fire our subject left Gibson and returned to Albany, where he engaged in a saw and planing mill business in company with his brother John. This business was sold out to the New York Central Railway Company, which needed the site for enlarged freight facilities. Mr. Gibson was very prominent in the lumber interests of New York some forty years ago.

Anthony Mc Murdy Gibson

On May 27, 1867, Mr. Gibson was married to Mrs. Sarah Dewing, widow of Dr. Hezekiah Dewing, daughter of Allen and Orra (Park) Hammond, and sister of A. Park Hammond, secretary and treasurer of the New England Manufacturing Company, of Rockville. A sketch of her father appears elsewhere. Mrs. Gibson was born Sept. 19, 1829, in Vernon, Conn., and was brought to Rockville when a child. She attended school in Rockville, had a brief course at Westfield Academy, in Westfield, Mass., was for two terms a student at Mrs. Bang's Select School, in Springfield, and completed her schooling at Miss Campbell's School, in the same city. Allen Hammond, her father, had been a school teacher when a young man, and strongly approved of his daughter teaching school, which he deemed a grand experience for anyone; she taught one term in the school house which stood on the site of the Henry block, and a number of her pupils became prominent in after years. Mrs. Gibson was first married, Nov. 14, 1849, in her father's home, Rev. Andrew Sharp officiating, to Dr. Hezekiah Dewing, of Canterbury, Conn. Dr. Dewing practiced medicine in Rockville until his death, May 22, 1854. Mrs. Gibson is a member of the Union Congregational Church.

Mr. Gibson resided in Albany for two years after his marriage, when he removed to Rockville, which was his home until his death. For some years he was bookkeeper for George G. Hammond, in the wool business in Rockville, and later he took the position of bookkeeper for the New England Manufacturing Company, being for some years at the New England Mill under the old regime. After its reorganization he continued in the same capacity until February, 1891, after which he lived retired. In 1884 Mr. Gibson located on Union street, where he ever afterward made his home, and there he passed away March 5, 1901, after a brief illness. In politics he was a Republican, but he took little interest in party affairs beyond the casting of his vote for good men. Educational matters, however, commanded his entire attention, and he served for years on the school board. The following extract from the Rockville Journal of March 8, 1901, served to show somewhat the high opinion which his fellow citizens entertained of him:

In the death of Mr. Gibson, Rockville loses one of its highly esteemed citizens, a man of broad culture, refinement and education; one who stood prominent in the educational, social and religious life of the community. He possessed many noble traits of character, a lovable disposition, gentle demeanor and sympathetic nature; a man of scholarly attainments and high ideals, his was the life that leads to better things, an inspiration to his fellowman to be pure in thought and deed. He was a devout Christian and an attendant at the Congregational Church, although of the Episcopalian faith. Mr. Gibson was a man of deep learning, loved literature, and took delight in writing both verse and prose. He has published several books of poems of much merit and eminently worthy of his marked poetic talents, giving expression to sentiments that lead to pure thought and high ambitions.

One of his works is "Leisure Hour Lyrics," containing much beautiful verse. This valuable volume is dedicated to his wife. It contains pictures of "Gaynook," his homestead at No. 103 Union street, as well as groups of family and relatives. He was a lover of nature and particularly fond of flowers, of which he had numberless varieties growing in the yard surrounding his house. He took great delight in floriculture, his favorite flower being the pansy, of which he grew a beautiful variety. His yard in summer was the envy of all.

MICHAEL NELLIGAN (deceased) was probably the best-known Irish-American citizen of Willimantic, Windham county, where he ranked among the leading business men of the city. He was for fifty-three years a resident of the United States—years marked by hard work, honest dealing and, as his means increased, a generosity beyond even the generous hearts of his compatriots in Willimantic.

The name Nelligan, according to tradition, is a corruption of O'Neal. There lived in Ireland in the closing years of the eighteenth century several brothers of very unusual strength and physical endowments, and many were the athletic contests in which they took part. On one occasion they challenged the entire community to a contest, and, after prolonged trials, O'Neal was pronounced victor; there was a second contest, and O'Neal was again the victor; a third, with the same result. The "O'Neal again" was shortened into what it seemed, Nelligan. The victors asked that Nelligan might be made the family name, and the judge so ordered. So the name originated.

Michael Nelligan was born at Castle Island, County Kerry, Sept. 14, 1825, a son of Timothy and Mary (Cullane) Nelligan. The elder Nelligans were farmers, and in this work young Michael was reared, and being the eldest, much work was put upon him at a very early age. The advantages of the school, such as they were in his time, were offered to him, and being an ambitious and energetic young man, he sought an improvement in his circumstances. Leaving Cork for Liverpool on St. Patrick's Day, 1849, he at once took passage there for the United States, and after a weary voyage of six weeks on the wide ocean, landed in New York, May 1, 1849. Very soon he found employment in Mansfield, Conn., at the time of the building of the New London & Northern railroad, being employed in its construction. In this work he was engaged about a year, and then concluded to take work elsewhere, as he had been accustomed to better associations. He was offered a much better position in railroad work, but concluded to cut loose entirely. He spent a year with Mr. Bascom, a farmer at Northfield, Mass., and was then employed by a farmer in Warwick, Mass., who also owned and operated a tannery and was engaged in lumbering. Mr. Nelligan had good wages, and saving some money, in the course of a short time became quite forehanded. His parents and others of the family were brought by him from Ireland to Willimantic, where preparations had been made for their coming. Going to New York, he met his father and mother; Daniel, who died in Willimantic; Bridget, who is now the widow of Garret Donahue, of Staffordville, Conn.; Eliza, who is Mrs. Michael Casey, of Willimantic; Julia, who died unmarried in Willimantic, as did her sister Mary, who died about two years after coming to this country. The father died in Willimantic at the age of seventy years, and was buried there; the mother died at the age of sixty years, before the establishment of a Catholic cemetery, and her remains were taken to Norwich, Connecticut.

After seeing his people nicely settled in Willimantic Michael Nelligan returned to his work at Warwick, Mass., but soon removed to Coventry, Conn., where he was working when he married Miss Margaret Grady, a native of Ireland. Previous to this marriage Mr. Nelligan had bought a farm about a mile from the church in Coventry, and on this tract they began housekeeping. As he was reared on a farm this was a congenial and familiar occupation to Mr. Nelligan.

On April 1, 1860, he removed to Willimantic, and in May of that year built the family home, on the corner of Jackson street and Valley Extension. The heavy timbers for this building he had cut on his own farm, and had them sawed at a mill close by. In Willimantic he began on that site a mercantile business, first in groceries alone, subsequently adding liquors, which he carried for a time and then abandoned, continuing in the grocery trade exclusively. Feeling that he needed the help of a partner, he formed a partnership with George Casey, his nephew, under an agreement as to the profits in his business. This young man died, and was succeeded by another Casey. When Mr. Nelligan was ready to retire he gave to his nephew his remaining interest in the store, and went out of active business, his time, however, being fully occupied by his extensive property and other interests.

Mr. Nelligan was twice married. By his first wife he became the father of the following family: Mary, who died at the age of nine years; Rose, who died at the age of twenty-seven years; Julia, who died in girlhood; Michael, Jr., who died at the age of twenty years—a promising young man, who had received a good education, and had just taken up the study of law, when he died in less than a year from consumption; and John, who died when not six years old. After the death of the first wife, Mr. Nelligan married Joanna Keating, of Willimantic, by whom he had one child, Agnes, who is now at home. Mr. Nelligan was a staunch Democrat, and was elected first alderman from the Third ward, his plurality being greater than those of all the other members of the council, a fact which gave substantial indication of his standing and popularity. Mr. Nelligan was often requested to become a candidate for different offices but he always declined, holding that "when he was in business he should give his attention to that; and if he retired he should stay retired."

Mr. Nelligan was well situated, had a comfortable home, and his generous treatment of the poor and needy reflected great credit upon his name. He found life full of pleasure and enjoyed himself, especially taking pleasures in good horses, having owned and driven some of the best horses in the city in his more active life. At the time of his death, Nov. 17, 1902, he was known as one of the clean and wholesome men of his city, a kind friend, a good neighbor, and a generous and open-handed helper of every good work.

ROBERT WILCOX HOOPER. Any history of the representative citizens of Willimantic, Windham county, would be very incomplete unless it should contain this name of one of the oldest, most venerable and familiarly known in that great thread manufacturing center, where he is still remembered as the lad who wound the first spool of Willimantic-made thread—then a boy in the employ of the Hopewell Machine Co., in what is now a part of the plant of the Smithville Manufacturing Company.

Robert W. Hooper was born March 24, 1817, in Winchendon, Mass., a son of Linus and Susan (Wilcox) Hooper, the former the son of Perius and Betsy (Fry) Hooper. Mrs. Susan Hooper was three times married, Mr. Hooper being her second husband.

Linus Hooper was born in Bridgewater, Mass., where his progenitors had long been settled. He was a man of but limited means, and lived at several towns in Massachusetts—Winchendon, Ashburnham, Gardner, Petersham and Dana. In 1826 he moved to Manchester, Conn., from which point he went to Vernon, and then to Bolton, where he died in 1830, aged about forty-four, his death resulting from an accident while engaged in chopping down a tree in Bolton. His remains were interred in Dobsonville, Conn. He had always been a hard-working and industrious man.

Robert W. Hooper as a boy had but little schooling, and his education has been practically hammered out in the rough school of life. Today he possesses a remarkable memory, and this was a trait that marked him from a boy, claiming to remember when a babe, and he has many anecdotes of his first days at school. In Bolton he attended a school of which Mr. Thrall was teacher. It was about 1831 that Mr. Hooper came to Willimantic, his mother coming with him, but soon going to Pawtucket, R. I., and after living for a time, in New Hampshire, she spent her last days in Pawtucket, where she died and was buried. After Mr. Hooper came to Willimantic he attended evening writing school, and at the age of ten years began mill work, at four shillings a week, in the Windham Manufacturing Co.'s plant. When he was eighteen years old his mother gave him "his time," as she had with her other boys. In those days "pay day" came but once in three months, and the first thirteen dollars he could spare he loaned out at six per cent. interest, being greatly impressed afterward by the ease with which interest money was earned. When twenty years old, he had accumulated $400, which he had all in silver, preferring that to paper.

In the plant of the Hopewell Manufacturing Co. Mr. Hooper accidentally discovered methods of putting the gloss on thread, and was a pioneer in that work, which soon became a common art. He remained in this little mill until the failure of the company made a change necessary. One of the firm went to Hartford, and was engaged in the manufacture of wood screws, and Mr. Hooper was with him for some time. When Whiting Booth, who had secured control of the old mill, had revived it, and had offered Mr. Hooper a place in it, that gentleman returned to Willimantic, and worked for Mr. Booth about a year as the overseer of the spinning room, at a dollar and a quarter a day. At the end of that time Mr. Hooper went into a new line of business, an agency for a chain pump—then first made in America, and a great novelty. In this work he did well, and for some six years pushed the sale of the pumps with most gratifying success. In 1857 a stock of dry goods, owned by Henry and Louis Feldman, who had failed, came into his hands to be closed out, and the work was so successful and congenial, that in company with George Alpaugh he formed the firm of Alpaugh & Hooper, engaging in the dry goods business in the Franklin Building on Main street, then a modern and up-to-date structure. This building was destroyed by fire March 4, 1868, in one of the worst conflagrations ever known in Willimantic. The following year Mr. Hooper built the present Franklin Block, and there for many years Alpaugh & Hooper conducted the largest dry goods business in Willimantic, Mr. Alpaugh retiring after a long period, and Mr. Hooper being left to conduct the business alone. In 1886 he sold out to Pease & Edwards, and since that time has lived retired from business, save as his own interests demand attention.

In 1837 Mr. Hooper was married to Miss Susan Prentice, a native of Lisbon, Conn., and daughter of Henry and Sophia (Morgan) Prentice. They became the parents of one child, Caroline, who married James Youngs, and died, her only child being also deceased. Mr. Hooper voted for William Henry Harrison, and though he has never been a politician, was on one occasion elected constable, a position he filled very conscientiously and faithfully, though it had come to him utterly unsolicited. He united with the first lodge of the I. O. O. F. ever formed in Willimantic, which lodge was later abandoned.

When Mr. Hooper came to Willimantic, all his possessions were found in the suit of clothes which he wore. Yet he had a stout heart and willing hands, and never lacked for bread to eat. In the history of the improvements and growth of the city his name is important. Although he is now past eighty-six, his years rest lightly on him, and the saying of Dr. Holmes, "better to be eighty years young than thirty years old" is well illustrated in his case.

JAMES MORTON REID, one of the most substantial and upright citizens of Willimantic, is a native of Scotland, born March 2, 1828, in Ochiltree, Ayrshire. He is a son of James and Helen (Morton) Reid, and his ancestors have resided for ten generations in the vicinity of his birthplace. According to the thrifty customs of his native land, he was early made acquainted with useful labor, though meanwhile his mind was not neglected, and he had such educational opportunities as were afforded by the public school of his native place. After entering upon mill work, he took two courses in chemistry, to better fit himself for the responsible positions he was ambitious to fill.

His father was in business as a dyer and bleacher, and the son naturally took up the same line. At the age of fifteen years the latter went to the town of Paisley, where he served an apprenticeship in this field, and here he displayed those qualities which have made him valuable among cloth manufacturers in both the Old and New Worlds. By steady application and an intelligent use of those faculties with which Nature had blessed him, he rose rapidly, and came in time to be manager of the same establishment in which he began as an apprentice. He was subsequently manager of a similar plant in the same town.

In 1853 Mr. Reid came to the United States, sailing from Glasgow on the clipper ship "Statesman," and landing at New York after a voyage of thirty days. He proceeded very soon to Lawrence, Mass., where he readily found an engagement with the Pemberton Mills. At this time he was able to show a thorough knowledge of his business, and he was quickly made chemist of this large plant, where he continued until December, 1861. While Mr. Reid was employed at the Pemberton Mills he had a most fortunate escape with his life, at the time when a large part of the mills collapsed and many of the employees lost their lives or limbs or were otherwise seriously injured. It happened that Mr. Reid, though close by, was outside of the building at the moment of the crash.

On the first of January, 1862, Mr. Reid accepted the position of chemist with the Willimantic Linen Co., and from that date until the autumn of 1891 he continued to fill this responsible position with credit to himself and complete satisfaction to his employers. His industry, ability and integrity are thoroughly established by the fact of this long continued service with one corporation in the same capacity. While he is not in any sense a politician, Mr. Reid has always felt an intelligent interest in the progress of public affairs, and has endeavored to perform the manifest duty of the good citizen by voting for his principles. A consistent believer in the fundamental ideas of the Republican party, he has always sustained it in State and National matters, while maintaining an independent position in local matters, where no great economic principles are at stake. Of conservative tastes, he has invariably refused to become a candidate for public office.

On Sept. 7, 1854, Mr. Reid was married in Lawrence, Mass., to Miss Mary J. Barr, who was born near Arlington (then West Cambridge), Mass., Feb. 25, 1833, a daughter of Thomas and Jean (McAuslan) Barr, both natives of Scotland. The eldest child of Mr. and Mrs. Reid, Helen Morton, was born Sept. 1, 1855, and died April 4, 1876, in Williamantic. The second, Alice Jean, resides with her parents. In 1876 Mr. Reid completed his handsome and commodious home, on South Main street, Williamantic, and since his retirement in 1891, he has here enjoyed the justly-merited rest from arduous labor to which his years of active industry entitle him. A man of the highest ideals, his sturdy character and sound judgment have ever held for him the greatest respect and confidence among his acquaintances.

DAVID SILAS CURTIS, designer and assistant agent of the Grosvenor Dale mills, was born Sept. 17, 1869, in Stoddard, New Hampshire.

David Curtis, his grandfather, whose ancestors came from the Isle of Man and located in New Hampshire, was a native of Windsor, that State. His father, who was a soldier in the Revolutionary war and took part in the Battle of Bunker Hill, made his home in Windsor. David Curtis was a captain in the State militia, and owned considerable land in his locality. His years numbered ninety-five at his death, and he was laid away in Windsor near his home. In politics he belonged to the Democratic party. His religious views were embraced by the Golden Rule.

George L. Curtis, son of David and father of David Silas, was born Nov. 22, 1828, in Windsor, where he grew to manhood on a farm, and attended the public schools of that section. When he became of age he went to Stoddard, N. H., where he accepted a position as shipper in a glass factory, remaining there until 1856. That year he started into business for himself, forming a partnership with B. F. Messer, for the manufacture of glass bottles, the business being operated under the firm name of Messer & Curtis, and they so continued until 1872, when Mr. Curtis sold his interest. He then embarked in the wholesale grocery business at Nashua, N. H., which he conducted with fair success for seven years, when he sold out and returned to Stoddard. Mr. Curtis was a man of many gifts, and when he started into business again in Stoddard, it was in the lumber and real estate business, this occupying his attention until the time of his death, Dec. 29, 1882. He was interred at Keene, New Hampshire.

Mr. Curtis was a man who was noted for his high moral character and estimable qualities of heart and mind. He was an ardent supporter of the Democratic party, and filled many offices of trust and responsibility with the sterling honesty which was one of his characteristics. He was a selectman, represented his town in the Legislature, was active in the State militia, holding the office of lieutenant, and in every way came up to a high standard of citizenship. His religious connection was with the Congregational Church.

George L. Curtis was married in Stoddard, N. H., to Alma L. Messenger, daughter of Silas and Arvilla (Copeland) Messenger, and sister of Rev. Frank M. Messenger, of North Grosvenor Dale. The five children born to this union were: Annette died young. Frank P., who graduated from Dartmouth College, is now engaged in a grocery business at Greenfield, Mass.; he married Mary Cheever. Lester B. died in 1902, at the age of forty-six years. Grace married M. W. Bond, of Alston, Mass. David Silas completes the family. Mrs. Curtis died in November, 1897, and was interred by the side of her husband. She was a lovely Christian woman, devoted to home and family, and a consistent member of the M. E. Church.

David Silas Curtis was educated in the public schools of Stoddard, N. H., and took a finishing course at Moody's School at Mt. Hermon, Mass. When he reached manhood he started out to make a career for himself, as an agent for the Aetna Life Insurance Company, of Hartford, at Keene, N. H., and there spent two years. In 1890 he came to Connecticut, and accepted a position as clerk with the Grosvenor Dale Mill Company, and was later promoted to paymaster. In 1893 his abilities were recognized by his employers, and he was appointed designer and assistant agent, and the past nine years have but increased his usefulness to the company, by whom he is esteemed and appreciated. His upright character is well known, while his business ability has been displayed on many occasions. His genial manner makes easy his association with the employes and wins him friends wherever he goes.

In 1891 Mr. Curtis was married, in Keene, N. H., to Miss Grace Fisher, a lady of culture and refinement, who has proven a sympathetic assistant to her husband both in business and social life and in the religious work in which he has been much interested. Her parents were J. B. and Lucretia (O'Higgins) Fisher, the former of whom was a prominent man in business and public life in Keene, N. H. The three children born to this union are: Mary, Mildred and David Silas, Jr. For a number of years Mr. Curtis supported the Democratic party, but is now a very zealous member of the Prohibition party, and exerts a wide influence in its ranks. He has been very prominently identified with the great religious movement of the Holiness Society, now known as the Peniel Holiness Church. As a local preacher in that denomination he is well known, as he is an eloquent and forceful speaker and a man whose upright life and character command the respect of the community. Mr. Curtis is one of those who cherish high ideals and endeavor with manly effort to live up to them, and to lead others in the same direction.

GRISWOLD BURNHAM, the oldest native-born citizen residing in the town of Hebron, Tolland county, where his unaffected manliness and sterling character command the respect of his neighbors to a marked degree, is, barring a slight impairment of his hearing, as active and well preserved as most men fifteen years his junior.

The grandfather of Griswold Burnham was a cabinet maker of Colchester, Conn., and some of his handiwork is still in the possession of his descendants. Starting to England to look up property that was supposed to have been inherited by his family, he was lost to the knowledge of his people, nothing ever being heard from him after he left the American shore. Katherine Trumbull, his wife, was born in Lebanon, Conn., a member of the famous Trumbull family, and a sister of the noted Governor, Jonathan Trumbull. She died at the home of her only child, Joseph Trumbull, in Hebron, July 2, 1803, being at the time of her death seventy-two years old.

Captain Joseph Trumbull Burnham was born in Colchester, Feb. 3, 1773, and was bound out when a boy to a Mr. Wells in Colchester, to learn the carpenter trade, remaining until he reached his majority. He was employed at his trade in Colchester until his marriage, when he removed to Hebron to locate on a small piece of land which he had purchased a short distance east of the Green. There he put up a small house, and, following his trade, also cultivated his land. Becoming prosperous he bought additional land and built a larger house. The farm was operated by hired help, and Mr. Burnham devoted his attention to carpenter work, becoming widely known, and doing work as far north as Ellington, at one time employing as many as twenty men. Being a splendid mechanic himself, and endowed with much push and energy, his work was always completed in the time and manner specified. For many years he lived on the farm now occupied by Griswold Burnham, and at one time he owned over 300 acres in Hebron, including several tenements, and 450 acres of wooded land in Huron county, Ohio, which was afterward given by him to his sons, who were among the earliest settlers in that region. Capt. Burnham was once offered the land on which Cleveland, Ohio, is built for sixty-seven cents an acre, but refused to buy it because it was so very swampy. He was fond of visiting his children in Ohio, and regularly every two years for a long period was accustomed to drive through after haying, visiting friends in New York on the way, consuming about two months in the journey, and frequently trading horses. His death, which occurred at Hebron Green, March 1, 1852, was the result of a fall, in which his hip was broken; his health had been perfect, and his prospects for a long life were fine. In his politics Mr. Burnham was a Democrat, and for many years was a captain in the local militia, being known as "Captain Burnham." He belonged to the Hebron Congregational Church.

Captain Burnham was united in marriage to Jerusha Kellogg, who was born April 12, 1777, in Hartford, Conn., a daughter of Moses Kellogg, who was of Scotch descent, for many years a hatter in Hartford. In his last years he bought a farm in the western part of Hebron, part of which was in the town of Hebron, and part in Marlborough. Mrs. Burnham died April 24, 1815, the mother of the following children: Lydia, born Aug. 15, 1796, married Jonathan Peters, a farmer, and accompanied him to Milan, Ohio, making the journey by ox-cart, and she died at an advanced age. Moses, born June 7, 1798, married Susan Norton, was a farmer, and located first in Berlin Heights, Ohio, and afterward in Indiana, where he died; Ellsworth, born Oct. 18, 1800, married Maria Walker, with whom he settled at Berlin Heights, Ohio, but in his old age lived in Saginaw, Mich., where he died at the home of a daughter, when over eighty-three; Jerusha, born Feb. 9, 1803, married Horace Wilson, of Berlin Heights, Ohio, who owned a farm now in the city limits of Detroit, Mich., which he sold and then moved in to Branch county, but died while on his way to Detroit, and his widow died in Missouri after marrying a Mr. Baker; Maria, born May 23, 1805, married Russell Atherton, a joiner of Bolton, and they removed to Berlin Heights, Ohio, where he died in early manhood; Caroline, born Oct. 13, 1808, became the second wife of Ichabod Skinner, a wealthy man who lived on a farm now included in the city limits of Cleveland; J. Trumbull, born in July, 1810, married Harriet Gilbert, was a joiner by trade, following that occupation first at Berlin Heights, Ohio, and afterward at Quincy, Mich., where he died Jan. 24, 1852; Emily, born in February, 1812, married P. H. L. Chesbrough, and died in Willimantic; and Griswold was born Feb. 28, 1813.

Captain Burnham was married July 4, 1816, to Mrs. Violetta (Phelps) Mann, widow of Enoch Mann, and she died April 10, 1838. She was the mother of nine children by Mr. Mann, and to Captain Burnham she bore the following family: Lucy Ann, born in 1817, married Joel Wilcox, a carpenter and farmer of Hebron, where she died Nov. 9, 1854; Matilda, born in 1818, married Harvey Crane, a farmer, and died in Hebron; Susan, born in 1820, married Josiah Buell, a farmer, and died in Hebron.

Griswold Burnham was born on the site of his present home, and received limited educational advantages, attending school but a few months in his earlier years. There was much hard work for him on the farm, where he remained until he was twenty-one years old. At this time Griswold determined to join his brother in the West, and to improve his education. He started from the old home with a horse and wagon, and two hundred dollars, which he had sewed into his shirt, bound for Branch county, Mich. The journey took a month, and in its course he spent a few days in the home of a brother in Berlin Heights, Ohio. His journey continued through Toledo, then consisting of a house and barn, through the Black Swamp, to Branch county, his destination. There he bought from the government two eighty-acre tracts, with what money was left out of his original two hundred dollars. At once he applied himself to the clearing of the land, and bought and sold land and cattle. For two years he was located in that country, meeting with success, and was in a fair way to become rich. The pioneer life was a pleasure to him. On a trip into Ohio to buy cattle to stock his farm, he was taken sick with the fever and ague, then a formidable disease, and at once hastened to his old Connecticut home, by way of the lake and Buffalo and the Erie Canal to Albany, completing the trip to Hartford by stage. At home he gradually shook off the fever, and at his father's solicitation he bought the home farm. Returning to Michigan, he sold out his land, which is now a part of Quincy, Mich., and he made the homeward journey on horseback. In buying the home farm Mr. Burnham incurred a heavy debt, which, however, he soon lifted, and for many years he was counted one of the most prosperous and successful farmers in Tolland county. An extensive dealer in stock, he kept many head on his farm. He has been successful in his work, and has made what he owns by his own efforts. Several years ago he gave up hard work, and although at an advanced age, he often drives with horse and carriage to visit friends at Niantic thirty miles away.

On March 26, 1838, Mr. Burnham was married to Eliza J. Swan, who was born April 7, 1817, in East Haddam, Conn., a daughter of Jabez Swan and his wife, whose maiden name was Arnold. Mrs. Burnham died Jan. 6, 1882. To this union were born: Catherine E., born Feb. 18, 1839, married Wellington Gott, of Colchester, Sept. 5, 1860, by whom she had one child, Florence G., who died in early womanhood, and she (Mrs. Gott) died March 4, 1901; Charles G., born Aug. 17, 1840, is manager of a large stock farm at Merrill, Mich., and married Aug. 20, 1862, Mary E. Leonard, by whom he had one child, Amelia, who died young; Amelia A., born June 20, 1849, died May 26, 1864; Trumbull, born Aug. 4, 1851, who was for many years a farmer in Hebron, but is at present engaged in the meat business in Willimantic, married Eunie F. Treat, and had two children: Trumbull G. (born April 18, 1884), and Florence (born March 11, 1890, died Oct. 28, 1894); Frederick, born March 6, 1854, married Mary E. Raymond, Nov. 14, 1877, who died in 1884, leaving one child, Raymond.

Mr. Burnham was in early life a Jacksonian Democrat, but in later years has been a Republican. His first presidential vote was cast for Andrew Jackson, and he also voted for him on his second candidacy. In 1855 he represented the town in the General Assembly at Hartford. Mr. Burnham belongs to Hebron Congregational Church, as did also his wife, who first joined the church at Haddam. The house in which Mr. Burnham lives was erected by him in 1856.

HANFORD LAVIERE HUNT, a prominent and representative business man of Willimantic, Windham county, descends from old New England families by both lines of ancestry. Through his mother he descends from Deacon Thomas Parker, being in the ninth generation of that family; as he is also in the ninth generation from William Hunt, who settled in Concord, Massachusetts.

William Hunt was born in England in 1605, and early located in Concord. He married Elizabeth Best in England, and they probably had two children at the time they sailed for Boston. From Boston they removed in 1640 to Concord, where Mrs. Hunt died in 1661. Mr. Hunt was married, second, in 1664, to Mrs. Mercie (Hurd) Rice at Marlboro, whither he had removed, and where he died in October, 1667. From William Hunt to our subject the line is as follows: Isaac: Isaac (2); Isaac (3); Isaac (4); Uriah, of Boylston, Mass.; David; Jonas; and Hanford L.

Isaac Hunt, the son of William, was born in 1647, was married May 14, 1667, to Mary Stone, and lived and died in Concord, his death occurring Dec. 12, 1680.

Isaac Hunt (2), son of Isaac, was born Nov. 18, 1675, married Mary Willard, and lived in Sudbury, Mass., where he died Dec. 6, 1717.

Isaac Hunt (3), son of Isaac (2), married Martha Goodnow, Dec. 8, 1721, and lived in Sudbury, where he died Aug. 22, 1781.

Isaac Hunt (4), son of Isaac (3), was born about 1730, married Abigail Hayden June 28, 1754, and Martha Goodnow, June 23, 1791. He lived in Sudbury, and died April 20, 1808.

Uriah Hunt, son of Isaac (4), was born March 15, 1760, and was married Dec. 15, 1779, to Lavina Dakin. He lived in Boylston, where he died Jan. 7, 1829.

David Hunt, son of Uriah, was born at Sudbury, Feb. 12, 1784, and he lived to a ripe old age, dying Jan. 21, 1875. His wife, Nancy Cutting, was born July 30, 1784. Mr. Hunt was a farmer, and had his residence in Boylston, Mass., for many years.

Jonas Hunt, son of David, was born in Boylston, Mass., April 29, 1810, and was taken by his parents to Clinton, Mass., when he was very young, where he mastered the trade of a machinist, being one of the earliest employees of the Bigelow Carpet Co., entering the employ of that organization from its predecessor, the Clinton Lace Co. He was a staunch Republican, and for a time belonged to the Know Nothing or American party. He was very active up to his eighty-first year, and was at work when he suffered a paralytic stroke, and he died about a year later, Aug. 20, 1892; his wife, Eliza Parker, died April 20th of the same year, the last survivor of a family of thirteen children. She was a descendant of Deacon Thomas Parker by the following line: Deacon Thomas Parker; Lieut. Hananiah; John; Andrew; Thomas; Deacon Ebenezer; Quincy, the father of Mrs. Jonas Hunt. Jonas Hunt and his wife were members of the Congregational Church, and were buried at Clinton, Mass. To them were born the following children: (1) Elizabeth Laroche, born in Providence, R. I., Oct. 14, 1842, married in Clinton, Oct. 2, 1873, Salem Wilder, who was born in Templeton, Aug. 30, 1842, the son of Thomas W. and Martha B. Wilder, and they have one child, Ethel Louise, born Jan. 1, 1879; he is a belt maker and lives in Clinton. (2) Hanford L. is the subject proper of this article. (3) Alice Louise, born Oct. 16, 1848, is a teacher of art in Ann Arbor, Mich. (4) Marv E., born Dec. 29, 1854, was married June 22, 1882, to Eben H. Bailey, of Rowley, Mass., and lives in Boston, where Mr. Bailey is engaged as a composer of music.

Deacon Thomas Parker came to America on the "Susan and Ellen," which left London March 11, 1635. He settled at Lynn in the latter part of the same year, where he was made a freeman May 17, 1637. Later he removed to Reading, Mass., where he was one of the first settlers. He took an active part in the establishment of the church built there in 1644, and was made a deacon. In 1661 he was a selectman, and continued irregularly for five years more. A man of property and influence, his name often appears on petitions of the town to the General Court. His death occurred Aug. 12, 1683, nine days after the making of his will, and he was buried at Reading. His marriage occurred about Christmas, 1635, and Amy, his wife, died Jan. 15, 1690.

Lieut. Hananiah Parker, son of Deacon Thomas, was born in 1638. His home was made on land which bordered on his father's farm. He was made a freeman Oct. 15, 1679, and belonged to the Reading military company, of which he was chosen ensign in 1680, and lieutenant four years later. For seven years he represented Reading in the General Court at Boston. Elizabeth Browne, who was born in Reading, Dec. 10, 1647, became his wife Sept. 30, 1663, and died Feb. 27, 1697. His second marriage occurred Dec. 12, 1700, when Mrs. Mary (Bursham) Bright, the daughter of William Bursham, and the widow of Deacon John Bright, of Watertown, became his wife. Lieut. Parker died March 10, 1724, and his widow Jan. 4, 1736. His children were all born to his first marriage.

John Parker, son of Lieut. Hananiah and Elizabeth (Browne) Parker, was born in Reading, Aug. 3, 1664, and settled on a part of the original Deacon Thomas Parker farm at Reading. In 1712 he removed to Lexington, where he followed the trade of a joiner, making from wood the rude farm implements of the time, as well as furniture and other things useful and curious. At reading he was constable for many years and he died at Lexington, Jan. 22, 1741. Deliverance Dodge, who was born in March, 1661, became his wife Oct. 2, 1689, and died at an unknown date.

Andrew Parker, son of John, was born Feb. 14, 1693, and removed with his parents to Lexington when he was nineteen years of age. He was a man of large physique and great strength, and followed the trade of a wood worker. It is noted of him that he lived in the reign of five British sovereigns. He was married Aug. 2, 1720, to Sarah Whitney, who was baptized April 22, 1703. They were admitted to the church in 1728. He died April 8, 1776; and she, Dec. 18, 1774.

Thomas Parker, son of John, was baptized Dec. 24, 1727, in Lexington, where he was married March 8, 1750, to Jane Parrot, who was born in 1729 in Chelmsford. He owned part of his father's homestead in Lexington, and like all of his name in that community was intensely devoted to the cause of the Revolution, serving as quarter-master of the military company in Lexington in 1774. In the years 1776 and 1777 when the duties imposed upon the town officers were fraught with great danger and responsibility, Mr. Parker was chosen both years as selectman, and he was one of the twenty-six signers of the Lexington Declaration of Independence. Full well he knew the responsibilities of such a step, but he was ready to meet the danger should the English ever be able to re-establish their authority. Thomas Parker dealt in real estate and accumulated a very handsome property. In 1777 he bought land in Princeton, Mass., where he made his home, and here he died in 1799. His widow died in 1814, and was buried in Princeton.

Deacon Ebenezer Parker, son of Thomas, was born in Lexington Aug. 13, 1751, and was corporal of the local company of minute men. In the battle of Concord, and in the harassing of the English upon their retreat he bore a gallant part. At the battle of Bunker Hill he was one of the detachment of sixty men who guarded Charlestown "Neck." In company with his father he removed to Princeton, where he subsequently became very prominent as a land owner, having farms in Massachusetts, Vermont and New Hampshire. He was a deacon in the church at Princeton. From 1782 he served as assessor for nearly twenty years; from 1786 to 1805 he served as selectman, and in 1796, 1797 and 1800 he was representative from the district of Princeton, Rutland and Oakham. He died Oct. 19, 1839. Deacon Parker was married Dec. 3, 1772, to Dorcas Monroe, who was born Nov. 14, 1750, from one of the foremost families of Lexington. She died Nov. 28, 1798, and the second Mrs. Parker was Mary (Binney), widow of Mr. Rice; she died March 22, 1816.

Quincy Parker, son of Deacon Ebenezer, was born April 28, 1775, in Lexington, where his home was continued for many years, until his removal to his father's estate in Rindge, N. H. His death occurred Sept. 27, 1828. Patience Brooks, of Princeton, who became his wife, remained his widow, and removed to Providence, R. I., where she died May 12, 1864, at the age of eighty-six years.

Eliza Parker, daughter of Quincy, was born in Princeton, Mass., Oct. 20, 1815, married Jonas Hunt, and became the mother of Hanford L. Hunt. Her brother, Joseph Parker, was a noted machinist of Clinton, Massachusetts.

Hanford Laviere Hunt was born May 11, 1846, in Clinton, Mass., where he was reared and educated and had his home until he was twenty-one years of age. When he was fifteen he entered the Bigelow Carpet Works at Clinton, at a time when long hours ruled. There he followed the trade of machinist, and continued at it steadily until he reached his majority, and in October, 1868, became a clerk in the new clothing store of F. A. Wells & Co., at Norwich. In 1870 Mr. Hunt came to Willimantic as a clerk for W. L. Harrington & Co., their store belonging to a syndicate in which F. A. Wells & Co. were also interested. On April 23, 1873, Mr. Hunt was made manager of the store of J. H. Dudley, at Winsted, Conn., also belonging to the Foster Syndicate. He remained in Winsted until April 1, 1876, when he returned to Willimantic, and became identified with W. L. Harrington & Co. in the clothing business, their store occupying a part of the site of the "Plaza" hotel. Mr. Harrington died in 1883, and the business was continued by A. B. Palmer, who had previously been with Mr. Harrington, as a capitalist, rather than as a practical clothing man. He was also prominently connected with the Willimantic Linen Co. Mr. Hunt took charge of the business end of the store for Mr. Palmer, and continued in its management until December, 1887, when Mr. Palmer died. The firm of H. L. Hunt & Co., consisting of Mr. Hunt and A. E. Tillson, was then formed to take over the business, and since November, 1892, has been established at the corner of Church and Main streets.

Mr. Hunt cast his first vote for Gen. Grant, and has been a Republican to the present time. His family is identified with the Congregational Church, of which Mrs. Hunt is a member, and takes a prominent part in the Sunday School. She is secretary of the Ladies' Society connected with the Church, where she also acts as treasurer. She is active in the Woman's Club of Willimantic, has served as its secretary, and at the present time is its president. Mr. Hunt began life with only his own strength to depend on. As a young man he was reliable and trustworthy, and early exhibited the characteristics of a successful business man. Throughout his entire career his character has been unquestioned, and his industry and ability notable.

On Aug. 25, 1874, Mr. Hunt was married in Southbridge, Mass., to Miss Flora E. Booth, who was born at Baldwinsville, N. Y., and was graduated from the Seminary at Fulton, N. Y., in 1867. She is the youngest child of Thomas and Elizabeth (Atkinson) Booth. This family is of English extraction, and William Booth, the grandfather of Mrs. Hunt, was born in Leeds, Eng., Jan. 6, 1784, son of Stephen and Mary Booth. Thomas Booth, the father of Mrs. Hunt, was engaged in the business of fitting-out woolen mills, and lived in New York State and Rhode Island. Mr. and Mrs. Hunt have two sons: (1) Harry L., born Nov. 22, 1877, in Willimantic, was graduated from the high school in 1896, and, taking a course in draughting at the Boston School of Technology, is now draughtsman for Coulter & McKenzie, of Bridgeport; he belongs to the I. O. O. F. (2) William, born March 3, 1880, died the same year.

FRANK SILAS RICHMOND, a veteran of the Civil War and trusted employee for a number of years of the Grosvenor Dale Company, is a highly respected citizen of the town of Thompson, and he was born in Hopkinton, Washington Co., R. I., June 4, 1844.

George Washington Richmond, his father, was a native of Cape Cod, Mass., where he grew to manhood and learned the trade of weaving. When a young man he moved to Washington county, R. I., where he continued to follow his calling until the year 1859, when he came to Connecticut, locating first at Putnam, where he was engaged at his trade for four years, and then in North Grosvenor Dale, where he was an employee of the Grosvenor Dale Company during the remainder of his life. He died in 1879, at the age of sixty-six years, and lies buried in Putnam cemetery. In political faith he was in his earlier years a Whig, and naturally supported Republican principles later. In religious affiliation he was a member of the Baptist Church, as was also his wife. He married, in Washington county, R. I., Waity Barber, daughter of Jerard Barber. They became the parents of two children, Frank S. and Allen Barber, the latter dying in New York in 1902. The mother died in 1894, at the ripe age of seventy-three years, and was buried beside her husband in Putnam cemetery.

Frank S. Richmond received his early education in Hopkinton, R. I., and later in the Putnam District schools. He was engaged at farming with his grandfather, Silas Richmond, in Washington county, R. I., up to the time of the Civil War. In February, 1862, at Killingly, he answered the call of President Lincoln for more troops, and became a member of Co. D, 1st Heavy Artillery, under Col. Robert Tyler and Captain Cook. This company proceeded immediately to the front, and was engaged in many of the sanguinary battles of the war. Mr. Richmond participated in the battles about Yorktown, and in the Peninsular campaign, and after completing his term of enlistment of two years re-enlisted in August, 1864, being subsequently promoted to second lieutenant of the 13th United States Colored Heavy Artillery, which became a part of the Army of the Cumberland. He continued in the service in this position up to the close of the war, receiving his honorable discharge at Louisville, Ky., and returning home with the consciousness of having done his full duty in maintaining unsullied the flag of his country. Upon his arrival home he came to Grosvenor Dale, where he was appointed superintendent of the Grosvenor Dale Farm, a position which he filled for a period of two years. He was then overseer of spinning at the mills for twenty-three years continuously, giving the greatest satisfaction to his employers. In 1888 he was appointed supply clerk of the Grosvenor Dale Company, in which position he has continued, being looked upon as one of the most valuable and trusted employees of the concern.

Frank S. Richmond

In October, 1866, in Putnam, Mr. Richmond married Emma E. Allen, who was born in Whitinsville, Mass., daughter of James Allen. To the marriage six children have been born: George A., bookkeeper at Norwich, Conn.; Charles, who died young; Mary H., who married P. P. Tourtellotte, a son of Hon. Oscar Tourtellotte, of North Grosvenor Dale; Edward, deceased; Albert, deceased; and Alice, who married Lewis Walker, of North Grosvenor Dale.

Mr. Richmond takes an active part in the social life of his community, being a member of A. G. Warner Post, No. 54, G. A. R., at Putnam; Cornerstone Lodge, No. 122, A. F. & A. M., of North Grosvenor Dale, of which he is a charter member; and of Israel Putnam Chapter, R. A. M., at Putnam. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church of North Grosvenor Dale, in which organization he is a steward, and a teacher in the Sunday-school. In political affairs he supports Republican principles. In the local public life he has served as grand juror, justice of the peace and a notary public, the latter by appointment of Gov. McLean. Mr. Richmond has been a respected and honored resident of Thompson through the years of an active manhood, where his many fine qualities have caused him to be universally esteemed among a large circle of friends. The regard in which he and his family are held is uniform.

LEMUEL WOODWARD CLEVELAND, now living a life of retirement in quiet Plainfield Street, Windham county, is a descendant of old Colonial stock. The Clevelands for a number of generations were residents of Canterbury, while the Woodwards are an old Plainfield family.

Bethabra Cleveland, the grandfather of Lemuel W., was born in 1763 in Canterbury, where he was reared and where he was married Dec. 3, 1794, to Marjory Pellett, who was born in Canterbury in 1770, daughter of Thomas and Mary Pellett, and died in Ware, Mass., May 11, 1847. After their marriage they moved to Ware, Mass., where Mr. Cleveland died April 15, 1835, at the age of seventy-

one. He was a man of much character and force. He was the father of the following family: (1) Nancy, born Sept. 4, 1795, died unmarried April 15, 1763. (2) Hiram, born Jan. 8, 1798, married a Miss Robinson, by whom he had two sons, Charles and George, who lived in Pawtucket, R. I. (3) Thomas, born Sept. 14, 1801, married, and died in Providence, R. I. (4) Luther, the father of Lemuel W., born Oct. 25, 1806, died Sept. 12, 1853. (5) Emeline, born Sept. 25, 1809, married a Mr. Lambertson, and lived in Ware, Massachusetts.

Luther Cleveland was born in Canterbury, Conn., where his father was engaged in farming. He received a good education in the Plainfield schools, and at the Plainfield Academy, and accompanied his father to Ware, Mass., but the greater part of his life was spent in Plainfield, where he became a prosperous and honored member of the community. He took an active part in church affairs, and a lively interest in local politics, and held various offices in the town. For many years he was choir leader in the Congregational Church at Plainfield, and at the time of his death was clerk and treasurer of the school fund. He was a Whig in political faith. On Oct. 15, 1834, Mr. Cleveland married Lydia C. Woodward, and to them were born the following children: (1) Frances, born Dec. 20, 1837, died Dec. 25, 1893. She was married Oct. 23, 1861, to John Dean Browne, a native of Plainfield, and a resident of Hartford, where he is president of the Connecticut Fire Insurance Company. They had two daughters, Alice C. (wife of Francis R. Cooley, of Hartford), and Virginia Frances (who is unmarried). (2) Lemuel Woodward and (3) Julia Woodward, twins, were born Nov. 19, 1841. She died April 18, 1897.

Lemuel W. Cleveland was born in Plainfield Nov. 19, 1841, and acquired his education at the home schools and at the Plainfield Academy. He has always lived a life of retirement in the town of his birth. Thirty years ago he united with the Plainfield Congregational Church, and from boyhood has been connected with the choir, of which for some dozen years he has been leader, and, while modest and unassuming, his work has been characterized by fidelity and thoroughness; his services have always been cheerfully given. He has also held various offices in the Plainfield Ecclesiastical Society, of which he has long been a valued member. In politics he is a staunch Republican.

The CLEVELAND Family history in America begins with the advent at Woburn, Mass., of Moses Cleveland, who came from England about 1635. He was married Sept. 26, 1648, to Ann Winn, by whom he had seven sons and four daughters: (1) Moses, born Sept. 1, 1651, married Ruth Norton, and settled, in 1687, on Martha's Vineyard. (2) Hannah, born Aug. 4, 1653, married Thomas Hensher. (3) Aaron, born Jan. 10, 1655, married Dorcas Wilson. (4) Samuel, ancestor of Lemuel W. Cleveland, was born June 9, 1657. (5) Miriam, born July 10, 1659, married a Mr. Fosdick, of Charlestown, Mass. (6) Joanna, born Sept. 19, 1661, died July 2, 1667. (7) Edward, born May 20, 1663, married Rebecca Payne, of Kingston, R. I., and is the ancestor of the Hampton families of the name. (8) Josiah, born Feb. 26, 1667, married Mary Bates, and came to Canterbury in 1703. (9) Isaac, born May 11, 1669, married Elizabeth Curtis, and came to Canterbury in 1701. (10) Joanna (2), born April 5, 1670, married a Mr. Keyes. (11) Enoch, born Aug. 1, 1671.

Samuel Cleveland, noted above, came in 1694 to Canterbury, where he married Margaret Fitch, July 25, 1699. They had two children: (1) Abigail was born April 23, 1700. (2) Timothy was born Aug. 25, 1702. The mother of these dying, Mr. Cleveland was married Dec. 10, 1719, to Sarah Buzwell, by whom he had: (3) Eleazer, born May 26, 1722; (4) David, June 1, 1724; (5) Hopeful, Sept. 17, 1726. Mr. Cleveland died Oct. 1, 1727.

Timothy Cleveland, son of Samuel, died in 1784. He married Dorothy Hyde, who died in 1769.

Timothy Cleveland, son of Timothy, was born in 1734, and died in 1804. He married Esther Fish, who was born in 1736, and died in 1804. Their son, Bethiabra, has been already noted as the grandfather of Lemuel W.

The WOODWARD Family annals open with the coming of Richard Woodward to America. He was born in England in 1589, and embarked at Ipswich, England, Oct. 10, 1634, for America, on the ship "Elizabeth." He settled at Watertown, Mass. The given name of his wife was Rose.

George Woodward, who was born in England in 1621, was brought to this country, where he was reared and where he married. He died May 31, 1671.

John Woodward, son of the foregoing George and his wife Mary, was born in Watertown, Mass., March 20, 1651, and died in 1728. His second wife was Sarah Bancroft. His sons, Daniel and Joseph, removed to Canterbury, Conn. Of these, Daniel Woodward reared a family, and among his children was Daniel Woodward (2), who was born in 1713, and died in 1772. He married Hannah Cray, of Plainfield, who was born in 1720, and died in 1789.

Elias Woodward, son of Daniel (2), born in 1741, died April 10, 1825. He married Bethiah Clift, who was born in 1744, and died in 1795. Their children, according to an old family Bible, were: (1) Frederick B., who was born in 1763, and died at sea Nov. 21, 1793; (2) Hannah, born in 1768, who married a Mr. Tyler, of Cincinnati, Ohio, and died in January, 1833; (3) Nathaniel, born in 1769, who died in South Carolina in October, 1793; (4) Henry, twin of Nathaniel, who also died in South Carolina, Nov. 10, 1795; (5) Elisha, born in 1771, who died in South Carolina June 5, 1803; (6) William, born in 1776, who died at the age of seventy-two in Cincinnati, where he had accumulated a fortune in real estate (he founded Woodward College, which is now used as one of the city schools); (7) Lemuel, born in 1778, who was the father of Mrs. Cleveland, mother of Lemuel W.; (8) Betsy, born in 1789, who died July 27, 1810; (9) Polly, who died in Plainfield; and (10) Rebecca, who lived in Plainfield. It is supposed that there were others in the family, but their names do not appear.

Lemuel Woodward was a farmer in the Pequaket District of Plainfield, and in later life located in the Middle District of the town, where he died June 16, 1851. Bridge Gallup, his wife, was born in 1788, and died in 1869. To this union were born: (1) Lydia C., the mother of Lemuel W. Cleveland, was married to Luther Cleveland Oct. 15, 1834, by Rev. Samuel Rockwell, of the Congregational Church, and died in February, 1890. (2) Julia married David Gallup, who served as lieutenant governor of the State, and died in Hartford. Her remains rest in the Cedar Hill cemetery. (3) Lucy Rowland married Joseph Hutchins, Oct. 26, 1846, and died Oct. 12, 1897, at the age of seventy-six years. (4) Lemuel died in Cincinnati, at the age of twenty-one years.

ELISHA HARLOW HOLMES, secretary and treasurer of the Willimantic Machine Company, and a member of the firm known as the Radial Thread Buff Company, is one of the active business men of Willimantic, Windham county.

Elisha H. Holmes, his father, came to Windham in 1818, and followed his trade of cabinet-maker, also engaging in farming. Later he had a grist and plaster mill at South Windham. At one time he engaged largely in dredging operations, both in salt water and the Great Lakes. His death, which occurred Sept. 21, 1886, was regarded as a loss throughout the community. In politics he was a Democrat, and he represented the town of Windham in the State Legislature, also holding local offices. His wife, Lydia, was a daughter of Amos Dennison Allen, a cabinet-maker of Windham, with whom Mr. Holmes learned his trade.

Elisha Harlow Holmes was born in South Windham, Conn., July 13, 1844. At first he attended private schools in South Windham, but later went to the Highland Military School, at Worcester, Mass. Growing up at home, he entered his father's mill, and also assisted him in his various other enterprises, and at his parent's death succeeded him. For some time Mr. Holmes was interested in a machine shop at Norwich, operated by the Allen Manufacturing Company, of which he was secretary, and he also continued to carry on the grist and plaster mill at South Windham until 1889. Later he embarked in a mercantile business at South Windham, continuing in same for some years. For a number of years he was connected with the Dime Savings Bank of Willimantic, as treasurer, and since it was discontinued has assisted the receivers.

In 1889 was formed the Willimantic Machine Company, of which he is secretary and treasurer and a member of the board of directors, and to this business he devotes the greater part of his time. The business is one of the very successful institutions of the "Thread Company," being so great as to necessitate the employment of a number of skilled workmen, about fifty people in all, in the production of silk and thread machinery.

Mr. Holmes is also a member of the Radial Thread Buff Company, of South Windham. The buildings occupied are nearly all of brick, and are located adjacent to the tracks of the New London Northern railroad at South Windham. They are lighted by gas made on the premises, and the works are operated by a twenty-horse-power engine. The products are old-style and patent buffs for polishing silver, bronze and all metals requiring high polish, and the machinery used in their production is of original design, adapted especially for the work. This machinery is unique in its construction, and embodies ideas on which Mr. Binns was granted patents in 1884. The patent buff wheel, while superior to the old style and unlike any other, is made with less labor, at less expense, and its manner of construction is such that almost no waste of material results. The wheels made by this concern are now used by platers, cutlers and manufacturers generally on fine work, throughout the United States and Canada; each year shows an increase in the demand for them, and from a dozen to fifteen people are employed in their manufacture.

On May 7, 1866, Mr. Holmes was married, by Rev. Clayton Eddy, of St. Paul's Church, Windham, to Miss Sarah Wheeler Johnson, a native of Windham, who was born May 24, 1844, daughter of William M. and Lydia (Wheeler) Johnson, and died April 15, 1899. Children as follows were born to this union: Richard Johnson, Sept. 2, 1869; Alice Lydia, Nov. 9, 1872; Grace Sarah, June 3, 1874 (married April 25, 1900, George Frederick Stiles); Florence Jane, Aug. 7, 1885. In 1871 Mr. Holmes erected a handsome home on Main street, in South Windham, where he has since resided. The beautiful trees on that street were set out by Mr. Holmes' father.

Mrs. Holmes was descended from Hosea Wheeler, who was born Sept. 20, 1749, and married, Feb. 18, 1772, Bridget Grant. Asa Wheeler, son of Hosea, born Sept. 20, 1774, was married in 1796 to Polly Brown, daughter of Samuel Brown, of Stonington. Lydia H. Wheeler, a daughter of Asa and Polly Wheeler, was born in North Stonington, Conn., Oct. 29, 1813, was married Jan. 8, 1836, by Rev. Joseph Ayer, to William Martin Johnson, and died Aug. 19, 1879. To this union were born: Charles S., Aug. 7, 1837, died April 9, 1898; Martha Jane, Feb. 9, 1839, died Sept. 24, 1879 (she married, Jan. 11, 1860, James Griffin Martin, of Chaplin, Conn.); Sarah Wheeler (wife of Elisha H. Holmes), May 24, 1844, died April 15, 1899.

Ever since Mr. Holmes was made a voter in the old Windham hotel, where the elections were held, he has been a staunch Democrat, and taken an active part in all local affairs. On account of his political zeal and his unquestioned ability, he is recognized as one of the party leaders in both South Windham and Willimantic, where he spends much of his time, attending to his interests in that city, and for nine consecutive years he has served on the school board; has been assessor; selectman; member of the board of relief; on the high school committee; and notary public.

Possessing as he does, in marked degree, those qualities requisite to success, Mr. Holmes has been enabled to push his way forward, and now stands prominent among the representative men of his county. There is no enterprise looking toward the betterment of the public welfare that does not find a firm advocate in Mr. Holmes, and much of the commercial prosperity of both South Windham and Willimantic is directly due to the influence and example of this most successful man. As a kind husband and father, pleasant in manner, keen and reliable, as well as strictly honorable in his business dealings, with an untarnished record as a public official, Mr. Holmes commands the respect and admiration of those who know him either in a business way, or socially, and he serves as an excellent example to the rising generation.

SAMUEL LEWIS BURLINGHAM, the efficient manager of the Holland Silk Co., of Willimantic, Windham county, is one of the most prominent business men and leading citizens of that place.

Mr. Burlingham is a native of Connecticut, born in Killingly March 1, 1845, son of Lewis and Eliza (Robbins) Burlingham, the former of whom was born Sept. 4, 1820, in Otsego county, N. Y., during what proved to be a temporary residence there for his parents, and was young when he came to this State, which remained his home during life. He resided in Willimantic for a number of years after 1857, and engaged in mill work. He had previously been a very competent overseer in cotton factories at Danielson and Grosvenor Dale, and for some time carried on the business of roll coverer. Later he removed to Scotland, Conn., on account of failing health, and there his last years were spent, his death occurring from an attack of pneumonia, Jan. 19, 1890, at the age of about sixty-nine years. His burial was in Willimantic. Mrs. Eliza (Robbins) Burlingham was a native of Brooklyn, Conn., daughter of John Robbins, a farmer of that locality, and she died in Scotland Aug. 19, 1888, also aged about sixty-nine years, and was laid to rest by the side of her husband at Willimantic. They were highly respected people, and devout members of the Methodist Church, the father being very prominent in that body. In politics he was a Republican, and at one time ably represented Windham in the Legislature, and was judge of probate at Willimantic. Although he was early thrown upon his own resources, and received only the meager education afforded by the common schools of his time, he possessed the energy and ability to rise superior to circumstances, acquired more than a passing knowledge of men and affairs, accumulated means, and won the high esteem of his fellow-citizens. His name is recorded among those who have made a lasting impress for good upon his day and generation. Physically larger than most men, his mental equipment was equally developed. Until within a few years of his decease he was a man of robust health. Three children made up the family of Mr. and Mrs. Burlingham, namely: Samuel Lewis; Ida Melissa, who died at the age of two and one-half years; and William H., an employe of the Holland Silk Co. (his two children are Lewis H. and Bessie M.).

Samuel Lewis Burlingham attended the public schools of Danielson, Conn., until about twelve years of age, and then accompanied his parents, in 1857, to Willimantic, where he finished his schooling in what was then known as the First district school, which was under the charge of John D. Wheeler. Before he was twenty years old he completed his school course, and almost immediately began work under his father, who was conducting a roll-covering shop, in Willimantic, and there began his business career. On March 27, 1866, Mr. Burlingham became an employe of what is now known as the Holland Silk Co., as a boss finisher, and at this time the mill on the northeast corner of Church and Valley streets had just been completed. Perhaps where others might have failed, he succeeded, for he possessed just those attributes which are found in every successful career—honesty, perseverance and industry. He set himself the task not only of learning the duties of his own position, but the details of the entire business, and succeeded so well that in March, 1870, at the death of Mr. Holland, he was considered the most competent man to fill the important position of manager of this large and expanding business. With his acceptance of this office began a career of prosperity for the company, which, during his thirty years of management, has continually increased, never having been materially affected by either the financial or labor agitations which have either wrecked or crippled other organizations. The Holland Silk Co. is counted as one of the most prosperous and substantial concerns in Willimantic, and this is largely due to the business acumen and personal characteristics of its able manager.

Mr. Burlingham cast his first Presidential vote for Gen. U. S. Grant, and is a staunch Republican, although from choice he has rather avoided political service, consenting, however, to become a member of the Willimantic board of burgesses. He is identified with some of the leading financial institutions of the city, is director in the Windham National Bank and also in the Willimantic Savings Institute. His business ability has caused him to be regarded as one of the shrewd, careful, conservative and most reliable business men of his city, whose judgment is taken as final on almost all weighty matters pertaining to business or finance. He attributes his success in life to close attention to whatever he took in hand, and to having a clearly defined purpose and persistence to follow it out. He has been gifted by Nature with a sureness of judgment and a broadness of mind which has enabled him to attain to the position which he so capably fills in Willimantic.

On Nov. 22, 1866, Mr. Burlingham was united in marriage with Miss Adelaide L. Burnham, of Willimantic, who was born Jan. 15, 1845, at Windham Center, daughter of Edwin E. and Amanda (Lincoln) Burnham. Through both paternal and maternal lines Mrs. Burlingham descended from two of the oldest families in Windham county. In 1875 Mr. Burlingham built his handsome residence on the corner of Church and Prospect streets, and there has been his home ever since. In manner courteous and pleasant, he wins many personal friends, while his business integrity places him on a high plane in the commercial world.

MARCUS MONROE JOHNSON (deceased), in his lifetime a most successful thread manufacturer, is remembered as a man of much ability, high character and stainless reputation. He was born Dec. 27, 1839, in Willington, Conn., son of Marcus and Bethia (Martin) Johnson.

Abel Johnson, the grandfather of Marcus M., was a farmer, and he stood high in the estimation of the community in which his life was passed. He married Deborah Preston, by whom he became the father of Elisha, Merrick, Marcus, Abel, Truman, Truman (2), Eunice, Sophia and Eliza.

Marcus Johnson, son of Abel and father of Marcus M., was a farmer, but in his early life worked in a glass factory. He married Bethia Martin, a daughter of Elisha Martin, of Mansfield, but at an earlier day of Rochester, N. Y. When he was forty-two years old his career was untimely ended by death at Willington, where he left a widow and two children, Eunice, who lives in Willimantic, and Marcus Monroe.

Marcus M. Johnson attended the district school in Willington, and when about fourteen years old accompanied his mother to Colchester to become a student in Bacon Academy, an old and noted Connecticut school. After spending a year in Colchester they returned to Willington, from which point young Johnson went to Wethersfield, Conn., to become a member of the family of his uncle, Elisha Johnson, a prominent man at that time in Wethersfield. There young Johnson attended the Wethersfield Academy, and when a young man clerked for a time in a country store. As a traveling salesman for Johnson & Robbins, of Wethersfield, he sold seeds through a wide stretch of country. He spent a year in Providence during the Civil War as an attendant at a hospital. His uncle, Elisha Johnson, was greatly interested in his success, and did much in those days to help him along. Mr. Johnson formed a partnership with his brother-in-law, Gardiner Hall, Jr., of Willington, and engaged in the manufacture of spool cotton thread. The two continued together for four years, when Gardiner Hall, Sr., bought our subject's interest, and the latter made thread a year in Stafford Springs, and then engaged in the cloth carding business.

The National Thread Company was organized in 1873 by Marcus M. Johnson, Elisha Johnson, Merrick Johnson, James L. Merrick and Joseph S. Merrick, for the manufacture of spool cotton thread. The company began under very favorable auspices, but passed through serious reverses before it was established on a firm and lasting basis. In 1882 the stone mill at Mansfield Hollow was erected, and at the time of its building was regarded as the most substantial and complete in Tolland county. There Mr. Johnson won his reputation as one of the ablest manufacturers in New England, for many years being the head and front of the entire business. As principal owner and thoroughly skilled in every detail of the business, it grew and prospered under his hands in a manner to excite the admiration of mill men who were familiar with the difficulties through which the enterprise had passed. In 1899 the company passed into the hands of the American Thread Company, and with the successful transfer of the business and property the active career of Mr. Johnson came to a conclusion. His interest in his employes and kindly feeling for them was marked by the fact that their retention in service was one of the conditions of the transfer. Many of his employes had been with him for years, and few changes were made by him in the operative force with which he began.

Mr. Johnson's career in the business world, while it was somewhat chequered and uncertain, was a successful one, and much credit should be given him for the pertinacity and skill with which he overcame many serious obstacles. Profoundly absorbed in his business, he had little liking for the frivolous and shallow recreations of life, and for many years seldom had a vacation, feeling it best to be in closest touch with his business. Careful and cautious, he avoided impulsive actions, and did not begin until every step and process was before him, proving persistent and continuous, however, to the last degree, when he was thoroughly ready. An approachable and genial man, he readily met those who had business with him, and at once put them at their ease. His judgment carried weight and his approval gave great force to any proposition. While his sympathy was with the Republican party, he was often solicited to become a candidate on the Democratic ticket for important positions in which his business skill and personal integrity would have been of vast value to the community. At one time he did consent to serve as selectman of Willington, but his business so confined him that he was never willing to take another position.

On Oct. 22, 1863, Mr. Johnson was married, in Willimantic, to Emeline Hall, who was born in that town Nov. 24, 1839, a daughter of Gardiner and Zeviah E. (Essex) Hall, mention of whom may be found elsewhere. Mr. Hall and his wife removed to Stafford Hollow when Mrs. Johnson was but a child, and there she had her first schooling. She attended school in Rockville and at South Willington, was a pupil in a select school in Willington Center, and finished her education in Portsmouth, near Newport, R. I. To Mr. and Mrs. Johnson came the following family: (1) Stella E., born in Willimantic, graduated from the Natchaug high school, and completed a course in business college at Providence, becoming an excellent teacher in Mansfield, and later assisting her father; she married Calvin R. Mills, lives near Providence, and is the mother of one daughter, Grace Evelyn. (2) Mabel Hall, born in South Willington, Conn., attended the Natchaug high school, later the famous Wilbraham Academy and took a special course in drawing and painting in Boston. (3) Alice M., born in Willington, was the valedictorian of the class of 1886 from the Willimantic high school, continued her studies in Wilbraham Academy, and later graduated from the New England School of Oratory; she is now Mrs. E. Frank Bugbee, of Willimantic. (4) Bertha May, born at Mansfield Hollow, Conn., graduated from Wilbraham Academy, and took a special course at the New England Conservatory of Music.

The death of Mr. Johnson came under very pathetic circumstances at Digby, Nova Scotia, Aug. 17, 1900. His family had accompanied him to that point hoping to benefit his health, but he died of apoplexy almost immediately on his arrival. His remains were brought back for interment at Willimantic, where the home of the family had been recently established. In 1899 Mr. Johnson bought the Morrison place, which he had extensively and completely remodeled, making it the finest residence in the city. With his methodical character every detail of his extensive and complicated business interests had been arranged in view of his sudden demise. Mr. Johnson was reared a Baptist, but became an attendant and supporter of the Congregational Church. Mrs. Johnson is a member of the Anne Wood Elderkin Chapter, D. A. R., as also are the daughters, Mabel and Alice.

OLIVER S. FRANCIS. Generic history must in every instance trace back to its essence in the specific, and this essence in the history of human life and human achievement is ever sprung from some objective prototype—some individual or class of individuals, whose actions and efforts have formed the background of the general history. The general record is thus the reflex of the individual, while there must be incidental reference to environment, with its modifying or broadening influences. It is in this sense that biography becomes the nucleus of all history, making clear beyond peradventure the progress, the opulent achievement, begotten of individual life and individual accomplishment. In rendering, then, the history of any people or nation, there is a scientific historical necessity for biography, and in tracing the growth and development of any community or any institution the impression must be deepened and the salient points emphasized by tracing simultaneously the life history of those whose efforts have conserved this advancement. In the case at hand we have to do with one who has been conspicuously identified with the business and civic life of Windham county, and whose genealogy betokens that he is a representative of a family whose association with the annals of American history has been intimate and honorable from the early Colonial epoch. Such men and such ancestral prestige fully justify the compilation of works of this nature, that a worthy and accurate record may be perpetuated for future generations.

Oliver S. Francis, who is now living retired from active business pursuits, was for many years engaged in mercantile business in South Canterbury, Windham county, attaining marked success in his efforts, and gaining precedence as a progressive and public-spirited citizen. He was born in Griswold, New London Co., Conn., June 7, 1829, the thirteenth in the order of birth of the fifteen children of John and Esther (Walden) Francis, and one of the seven who are living at the present time. The Francis family is of French origin, and it is practically well authenticated that the first representative of the name in America was one of the Huguenot emigres who fled from France to escape the religious persecutions incidental to the revocation of the edict of Nantes. Of the remote ancestors it will not be necessary to make further detailed mention in this article, but we shall give a digest of the family history from the time of our subject's grandfather, David Francis.

David Francis was born in Connecticut June 15, 1766, and he died at Price Village, N. Y., Sept. 21, 1820. On Dec. 20, 1781, he enlisted as a soldier in the Continental army and was thereafter in active service for a period of three years. In the publication entitled "Record of Connecticut Men of the War of the Revolution," his name and data concerning his military services are to be found on page 365, and, as is indicated on page 641, of the same record, he received from the Government a pension in 1818. David Francis married Clarissa Everett, who was born Oct. 1, 1770, and died Jan. 31, 1849. Of their six children we incorporate the following brief record: Betsy was born Oct. 11, 1788; John (father of our subject) was born in the town of Windham, Conn., Oct. 22, 1792; Erastus was born Sept. 2, 1796; Irena was born March 11, 1798; Roxey was born April 6, 1803; and Hiram D. was born Jan. 12, 1809. Of these, Roxey married a Mr. Walton in 1825; her death occurred in 1845. Betsy married Seth Sherwood, and her death occurred in 1851. Hiram D. became a prominent resident of Corry, Pa., where he died, and his descendants are now living in Columbus, that State.

John Francis, father of Oliver S., was united in marriage in 1812, to Esther Walden, daughter of John and Lyetia (Palmer) Walden, of Windham, where she was born Oct. 17, 1788. She was a direct descendant, in the maternal line, of Walter Palmer, the pilgrim, who settled in Stonington, Conn., in 1653. Following are the names of the children of John and Esther Francis, together with their respective dates of birth: John N., Dec. 19, 1812; Frederick N., April 15, 1814; Nathaniel E., Sept. 15, 1815; Emma, Feb. 27, 1817; Susannah A., Sept. 29, 1818; a son that died in infancy, March 16, 1820; Henry and Harriet (twins), May 2, 1821; David Palmer, Jan. 22, 1823; Mary Esther, Jan. 14, 1825; Edwin A., Aug. 24, 1826; Sarah C., Nov. 11, 1827; Oliver S. (subject of this sketch), June 7, 1829; Fanny E., March 2, 1831; and Thomas Congdon, June 13, 1832. The marriages of these children of John and Esther Francis are recorded as follows: Frederick N. married Melittia Northrop, of Michigan, in 1837. John N. and his wife, Adell, of Louisville, Ky., were married the same year. Emma became the wife of Norman Park, of Canterbury, Nov. 10, 1839. Mary E. was twice married, first, on March 7, 1842, to Daniel P. Wheeler, and after his death to J. D. Hoyt Chamberlain of Buffalo, N. Y., on April 2, 1864. Henry married Mary Thompson, of Norwich, Conn., March 16, 1843. Harriet married Luther Sanger, of Canterbury, June 7, 1847. Fanny E. married Jesse Tourtelott, of Thompson, Conn., Jan. 13, 1850. David Palmer first married Nancy W. Pinkham, and after her death Carrie C. Hull, as will be noted in an individual reference to him later on. Oliver S. married Sally A. Brown, of Jewett City, in January, 1853, and after her death wedded Mrs. Martha Davis, of Canterbury, as will be noted in his individual sketch. Edwin A. married Adeline Moxley, of New Milford, Pa., Dec. 23, 1858, and after her death was married to Marcia L. Williams, of Colchester, Conn. Thomas C. was also twice married, first to Mary Rogers, of Jewett City, Conn., April 6, 1864, and second to Jane Bennett, of the same city.

In this family of fifteen children there have been eight deaths, viz.: The sixth child was a son who lived only a few weeks, dying April 4, 1820. Nathaniel E. died in Michigan, Oct. 5, 1838. Sarah C. died in Canterbury, Aug. 17, 1848. Harriet (Mrs. Sanger) died in Canterbury, Sept. 18, 1855. Emma (Mrs. Park) died in the same town, Oct. 13, 1860. David P. died in New London, April 4, 1883. Susannah A. died in Lisbon, Conn., Nov. 28, 1893, and Thomas C. died in the same town, July 11, 1897.

John Francis, the father, was born in Windham, as has already been duly noted, and when he was a boy his parents, on their removal to Erie, N. Y., left him in the care of his uncle, John Francis, who removed from Foston to Windham, Conn., in 1796, and who married Irene Walden, after which he settled in Canterbury. John and Esther Francis passed the early part of their married life in Griswold, Conn., where he devoted his attention to improving and cultivating land on shares. Finally he removed thence to Canterbury, taking up his abode in the old Francis homestead, which had been presented to him by his uncle, before mentioned, and which is still standing, though it was erected in the seventeenth century. John Francis was a man of sterling character, and of vigorous and receptive intellectuality, so that he became a leader in thought and action in the community where he lived and labored to such goodly ends. Through reading and practical association he became well versed in the law, and he was called upon to adjust disputed titles to lands, to settle family quarrels, and to act as chief adviser in the settling up of estates, implicit confidence being reposed in his integrity of purpose and his discriminating judgment. He was in tenure of important town offices year after year, and the spacious south room in the old homestead has been the scene of many marriages solemnized by him, in his capacity as justice of the peace. His mature judgment and his clear knowledge in regard to legal points brought to him the title of "Judge," by which he was familiarly known. In politics he was a Democrat of the old school, and he never wavered in his allegiance to his principles, while here, as in all other affairs, he had the courage of his convictions and the power to defend them, as his opinions were invariably fortified by calm judgment and due investigation and study. He reared a family of eight sons and six daughters, all of whom profited by his precepts and example and have done him credit by their worthy lives, while he could well feel that in his children he had abundant riches. His religious faith was that of the Congregational Church, and he was a devout follower of the Divine Master, making his life one of signal usefulness and honor, while he ever commanded the confidence and esteem of all with whom he came in contact. He was summoned into eternal rest at the age of seventy-five years, and his wife passed away at the age of seventy-eight. Both are laid to rest in the Carey cemetery.

In connection it is certainly incumbent that we incorporate a brief sketch of the life of Dr. David Palmer Francis, brother of Oliver S., whose name introduces this article. Mention has been made of the place and date of the Doctor's birth. As a youth he soon discovered that his fortune and reputation must be achieved through his own efforts, for his father, though one of the representative men of the community, was so burdened with the maintenance of a large family that he could not assist his son in securing more than a common-school education.

The sturdy and self-reliant spirit of the young man was sufficient to enable him to devise plans and to carry them into execution, so that he did not falter in his resolution to prepare himself for the medical profession. In order to accumulate the means which would permit him to properly prosecute his technical studies, he began teaching school at the age of sixteen years. His first professional reading was carried on in the office of Dr. Palmer, of Canterbury, and thus he gained a helpful insight into the mysteries of the science of medicine. He then entered Berkshire Medical College, at Pittsfield, Mass., where he was graduated in 1845. After his graduation he settled in New London, his sole capital at the time being a few books, his professional knowledge and the sum of fifty cents. He thereafter made New London his home, attained an enviable reputation as a physician and surgeon, and amassed a fortune. Dr. Francis was a thorough student, feeling that to keep abreast of his profession he must have a catholicity of thought that would allow him to examine and use all beneficial discoveries. By his skill and energy he became a leading member of the medical fraternity.

On June 17, 1852, Dr. Francis was married to Miss Nancy W. Pinkham, daughter of Capt. Nathaniel Pinkham, of Boothbay, Maine. She died in September, 1855, and the Doctor then determined to visit Europe, and there obtain a broader knowledge of the medical science. He studied in London and Paris, attending the lectures of eminent medical instructors, and gaining valuable experience in the hospitals. On his return to his home he greatly increased his prestige and became one of the leading physicians of Connecticut. He was generous and kindly, never failing to respond to the call of the suffering, even when no recompense was to be expected, and thus he had a firm hold upon popular affection and esteem in the community. In November, 1864, Dr. Francis contracted a second marriage, with Miss Carrie C. Hull, of New York City, who survives him. His early religious training made Dr. Francis cling to the faith of the Congregational Church, though his mind was too broad in its grasp to be narrowed by the ruling of any creed. In politics he was a staunch Democrat of the Jacksonian type. As his liberality of thought made him adjure the sway of creed, so also did it keep him from being bound by such medical laws as seemed to him stultifying and devoid of helpfulness, and thus he made use of all truths and scientific discoveries bearing on his profession, his practice being broad in the use of theories and ideas, and fully in accord with the advanced thought and learning of the day. He died April 4, 1883, after a short illness of typhoid pneumonia. He was a true friend to the afflicted, and a prominent and highly honored citizen of his native State.

We now revert to the more salient features in the personal career of Oliver S. Francis, the immediate subject of this sketch. He was born in Griswold, Conn., June 7, 1829, and was a mere child, when, in the early thirties, his parents removed to Canterbury, his father purchasing a farm of 100 acres in the Baldwin District. John Francis, as has been mentioned, was a prominent and influential citizen of the county, and in addition to serving in minor offices, acted as selectman of his town, and for eight consecutive years was incumbent of the office of judge of probate. Oliver was reared on the homestead farm, and his early educational discipline was secured in the district schools. Though he devoted his attention to agricultural pursuits in his early manhood, during the greater part of his active business life he was engaged in merchandising in South Canterbury. For a full quarter of a century Mr. Francis conducted a general store at that place, where he also served as postmaster and station agent. In 1896 he disposed of his mercantile enterprise, and has since been retired from active business, enjoying that dignified repose which is the just reward of a life of well directed endeavor in connection with legitimate enterprise. For five or six years Mr. Francis resided in Plainfield, and during a portion of that interval he was employed as a clerk in the mercantile establishment of Hill & Battey, at Moosup.

In his political proclivities Mr. Francis has ever been an uncompromising Democrat, and he has always taken an active interest in local affairs of a public nature. He has been called upon to serve in numerous offices of local trust and responsibility, including those of selectman and constable, and has proved a faithful and discriminating executive. During the time of his father's incumbency as judge of probate he held the position of clerk of the court. In 1897 he represented the town of Canterbury in the State Legislature, being assigned to the Labor committee, and proving an able and active member of the legislative body of the commonwealth. He clings to the religious faith in which he was reared, being an attendant of the Congregational Church, but he is tolerant in his views, caring more for spiritual truths than for insistent dogma.

Mr. Francis has been twice married. In January, 1853, at Gristwold, he was united to Miss Sally Ann Brown, daughter of John and Susan (Freeman) Brown. She died at the age of fifty-two years, leaving three children, namely: Sarah, wife of Elias Patrick, of South Canterbury; Emma, who died at the age of thirty-two years; and John, a successful farmer of Plainfield, Windham county, who married Miss Susan Rood, and has three children.

For his second wife Mr. Francis wedded Mrs. Martha (Hyde) Davis, widow of Dwight Davis, and daughter of George Hyde, a member of one of the prominent old families of Windham county. He was born Feb. 1, 1806, son of Albe and Henrietta (Chandler) Hyde, the former of whom was born June 1, 1769, son of Isaac (Jr.) and Sarah (Marshall) Hyde. Isaac Hyde, Jr., was born April 24, 1735, son of Capt. Isaac and Elizabeth Hyde, and the former was in turn a son of Caleb and Lydia Hyde.

Mr. Francis has so lived as to gain the warm esteem of those with whom he has come in contact in the various walks of life, and as one of the sterling citizens of the county and State, and as a worthy representative of one of those stanch old families who have contributed to the material and moral advancement of New England during several generations, it is clearly appropriate that this personal and genealogical record find place in this volume, and the same will be of value as a reference and authentic source of information during all years to come.

CYRUS HENRY PENDLETON, M. D., one of the oldest physicians of Tolland county, and one of the most successful practitioners in this part of the State, where he has cared for a good practice for over thirty-six years, descends from one of the old families of New England.

Brian Pendleton was the first of the name to come to the United States, arriving in Watertown, Mass., about 1630, in company with his wife, Eleanor, and children, James and Mary. From Watertown he moved to Ipswich, Mass., in 1648, having made a brief stop at Sudbury, and from Ipswich he removed to what is now Saco, Maine. In 1654, in company with four others, he put a petition before the General Court for permission to lay out the town of Portsmouth, N. H., from which he was presently sent as a deputy to the General Court. In 1655 he had charge of the fortifications of the harbor, and was commissioned major to drill troops and do other military duties. Ten years later Major Pendleton removed to Saco, and built a house and block house at Winter Harbor, which is now called Biddeford Pool, where he dealt extensively in land. In company with others he bought a township, six miles square. In 1674 he bought 700 acres of land, now a part of Westerly, R. I., which became a place of refuge for his descendants. In 1670 Maine was made a royal colony, and Major Pendleton was appointed by King Charles II deputy governor and first counselor. He was also town treasurer, and represented the town in the General Court. In 1675, at the breaking out of the Indian War, the settlers were driven from the Province, and in the following year Major Pendleton returned to Portsmouth, from which point he addressed a petition to King Charles in 1680, the year of his death. His will bears the date of Aug. 9, 1677. His wife Eleanor bore two children: Mary, who was married to Rev. Seth Fletcher, of Wells, Maine, and had one son, Pendleton, who served in the French War of 1697, and was taken prisoner to Quebec, where he died; and James, who was born in England about 1628.

James Pendleton accompanied his parents to America, and finally settled on the land which his father had bought at Westerly, where he died. Mary, his first wife, who died in 1655, bore him three children: James, Mary and Hannah. Mr. Pendleton was married in 1656, to Hannah, daughter of Edmund and Jane Goodnow, of Sudbury, Mass., by whom he had the following children: Brian, born in 1659; Joseph, born in 1661; Edmund, born in 1665; Ann, born in 1667; Caleb, born in 1669; Sarah, born in 1674; Eleanor, born in 1679; Dorothy, born in 1686; and Patience.

Joseph Pendleton, the second member of the above family, born at Sudbury, Mass., was a farmer in Westerly, where he died in 1706. In 1696 he was married to Deborah, daughter of Ephraim Miner, of Stonington, Conn., by whom he had one child, Deborah, born in 1697. Mrs. Pendleton died in 1697, and Mr. Pendleton was married in 1700 to Patience, daughter of William Potts, of New London, Conn., and a cousin of his first wife: she became the mother of the following: Joseph, born about 1702; William, born about 1704; and Joshua, born 1705. Mr. Pendleton died in 1706, and his widow, marrying again, became the mother of a large family.

William Pendleton, noted above, was a resident of Westerly, where he married Lydia, daughter of John Burrows, of Stonington, by whom he had the following children: William; Amos; Frelove, born in 1731; Peleg, born in 1733; John, born in 1735; Benjamin, born in 1738; Lydia A., born in 1740; Joshua, born in 1744; and Ephraim, born in 1746. Mrs. Pendleton died in 1750, and William Pendleton was married the following year to Mary (MacDowell) Chesbrough, widow of Zebulon, and four children were born of this marriage: Lucy, born in 1752; Nathan, born in 1754; Isaac, born in 1756; and Keturah, born in 1761. William Pendleton died in 1786.

Joshua Pendleton, son of William, was a farmer in Westerly, but resided in various places until he located near Norwich, Conn., in 1794. His house was in the town of Norwich, but the most of his farm was in the town of Bozrah. His death occurred in Westerly, April 9, 1824, where he was visiting, but his remains were interred at Norwich, where he belonged to the Baptist Church. On June 6, 1768, Joshua Pendleton was married to Nancy or Anna, daughter of Elisha and Mary Clark, of Westerly. To this union were born: Joshua, born May 25, 1770, who first married his second cousin, Amelia Pendleton, daughter of Maj. Joseph Pendleton, of Westerly, and second Elsie Ann Pendleton, her sister, removed to New York, where he followed farming, and died about 1828; Anna, born June 3, 1772, married Dennison Rogers, a farmer of Norwich, Conn., where she died Aug. 1, 1857; Martha, born March 3, 1774, married Walter Palmer, a farmer, and died Sept. 3, 1861, in Preston, Conn.; Lucy Ann, born March 14, 1776, married Samuel Lathrop, and settled in New York, where she followed farming, and where she died Sept. 14, 1857; Clarissa H., born April 24, 1778, married David Adams, a farmer of Royalton, Vt., where she died April 1, 1854; Polly, born Aug. 16, 1780, married Amos Bennett, a farmer, of Lisbon, Conn., where she died July 20, 1833; William, born May 22, 1782, married Dolly Storey, was a farmer at Preston, Conn., and died March 7, 1866; Elisha C., born May 16, 1784, was a farmer, married Hannah, daughter of Deacon Asa Bowes, and died at Hartford, March 3, 1814, while serving in the War of 1812; Adam, the father of C. H. Pendleton, was born Dec. 4, 1786; and Lydia, born Feb. 4, 1789, married Elisha Bennet, and removed to Trumbull county, Ohio, where she died March 10, 1873.

Adam Pendleton, noted above, was born in Westerly, R. I., and was brought by his parents to Connecticut when he was quite young. A meagre education was acquired by him in the public schools, and he spent a life of hard work on the farm which his father bought. On this farm the old house that stood in the town of Norwich has been torn down, and the new house is in the town of Bozrah. Young Adam remained at home and assisted his father in the management of the home place, caring for his parents in their old age, and when they died bought out the other heirs. His death occurred April 12, 1858. In his politics he was a Democrat, and in his religion a member of the Bozrah Baptist Church. Personally he was much esteemed in the community where his quiet and useful life was passed.

On April 15, 1815, Adam Pendleton was married to Hannah Marsh, who was born in Plainfield, Conn., a daughter of James and Polly (Bennett) Marsh, and who when quite young moved with her parents to Brookfield, N. Y., where they remained until about 1811; that year they located in Sandusky, Ohio, where the parents soon died, leaving Hannah, yet a girl in her teens, the oldest of a family of eight children. The experiences of the little family of children for the ensuing few years was distressing in the extreme as about the time the parents died, the British had captured Detroit, and the settlers at Sandusky were much afraid of a visit from the Indians; signs of their approach were thought evident, and the settlers fled to the woods, where they were exposed to a cold rain for several days. The alarm was false, and after a time Hannah Marsh was able to get her brothers and sisters as far east as Cleveland where she placed several of the children in good families, and with the others made her way back to Brookfield, N. Y., walking and riding as they could secure wagon rides on the way. At a later period she took two of the children and went east to Lisbon, Conn., where she was living at the time of her marriage. As indicated by such a history of her early days she was a woman of much character and determination. Her death occurred March 23, 1872, while on a visit in the home of her son, Cyrus H. Pendleton, in Hebron. Her remains rest beside those of her husband in Yantic Cemetery, at Norwich.

Their children were Benadam, born March 23, 1816, was married June 29, 1840, to Philena J. Hyde, and removed to Natchez, Miss., to engage in the mercantile business with his uncle, Cyrus Marsh, where he died Aug. 1, 1885; Charles M., born Oct. 15, 1818, married Susan E. Bingham, of Norwich, Conn., was a farmer, and lived on the homestead, where he died Aug. 24, 1887; Clarissa L., born Oct. 17, 1822, married Henry A. Bingham, a merchant in Norwich, where he died and she then removed to the homestead farm in Bozrah, where her death occurred Sept. 12, 1868; Cyrus, born March 20, 1825, died Oct. 30, 1829; Cyrus Henry, born Oct. 5, 1830, is mentioned below; and Mary Jane, born July 24, 1832, was a cripple from early youth, and died unmarried Dec. 12, 1898.

Cyrus Henry Pendleton was born on the homestead in Norwich, Conn., where he attended the district school a mile from his home, and while yet in this school, he took up the study of Latin and Algebra. When he was sixteen he attended a select school in the old court house at Norwich, where he studied Greek as well as the other branches. For two years he was a student in Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass., and in the fall of 1852, he entered Amherst College from which he was graduated four years later. In 1858, while visiting in Cleveland, Ohio, he began attending medical lectures in the Medical Department of the Western Reserve University, from which he was graduated with the degree of M. D. in 1860. For about two years he practiced medicine at Montville, Conn., when he removed to Yantic, to take charge of the practice of Dr. Elisha Phinney, who had gone to the front in the Civil War. When Dr. Phinney returned, Dr. Pendleton in the spring of 1864 located at Hebron, and being the only physician in the town, and a very capable one, his practice has extended not only throughout Hebron, but into Marlborough, Bolton, Columbia, Colchester and Lebanon. Dr. Pendleton is beloved by his patients and is esteemed in the community. His treatment of lockjaw has given him more than a local reputation, and in the treatment of that rare disease he has not lost a single case. Widely read, he is a linguist of much ability, reading German, French, Latin, Greek, Hebrew and Irish.

On July 9, 1866, Dr. Pendleton was married to Mary Maria Welles, who was born in Hebron, July 9, 1837, a daughter of Oliver and Lydia (Brown) Welles. Dr. and Mrs. Pendleton are the parents of the following children: Clarissa Louisa, born May 11, 1867, graduated from the Northfield (Mass.) Seminary, taught school, and graduated from the Training School for Nurses at New Haven; Anne Clark, born April 16, 1868, married Nov. 14, 1889, Howard E. Gilbert, a merchant in New York, and they have one child, Helen Earle (born Sept. 2, 1897); Susan Bingham, born May 1, 1870, graduated from the Willimantic Normal School;

Grace Marsh, born April 7, 1872, was married Sept. 20, 1893, to Everett G. Lord, a farmer and meat dealer of Hebron, and they have two children, Eleanor Pendleton (born Aug. 30, 1894), and Mary Adelaide (born Aug. 28, 1897); Cyrus Edmund, born Feb. 11, 1876, graduated from Bacon Academy, at Colchester, and is a member of the class of 1903 in the Medical Department of Yale University; and Winfield, born May 7, 1882, died the day after his birth.

Dr. Pendleton is a Democrat, and in 1867 he was elected town clerk; in 1871-73-80-82 and 1890 he was on the board of selectmen, part of the time being chairman; in 1876 he was elected judge of probate and held the position for two terms; in 1867 was elected school visitor, and has continued in that position the most of the time to the present day. Dr. Pendleton has been town health officer since the creation of that office, and is the town medical examiner. His wife and daughter, Mrs. Lord, are members of the Hebron Congregational Church, and the Doctor is chairman of the Society's Committee. Clarissa and Susan, noted above, are members of St. Peter's Episcopal Church.

AUGUSTUS HOLMES. In any work touching those who have conferred honor and dignity upon the annals of Windham county, Conn., there is no family more insistently demanding recognition than that of which the honored subject of this sketch was a representative, for the name has been identified with the history of this section of the State from the latter part of the seventeenth century to the present day, and during the course of more than two centuries the name here has stood for the most exalted honor and integrity in all the relations of life, while in the several generations have been found those who have taken an active and prominent part in public affairs and in the industrial development of this locality, so that we find peculiar satisfaction in being able to perpetuate in this work the record, brief though it must needs be, of those who have wrought to goodly ends in the past, as well as those of later generations who have seen to it that no blot has appeared on the escutcheon of a noble name.

Augustus Holmes, who was one of the most honored citizens of West Stafford, where he passed his entire life, was born in the ancestral homestead where his widow now resides, the date of his nativity having been June 29, 1827, and in the place so hallowed by the memories and associations of the past, he answered the inexorable summons of death Feb. 27, 1900, at the age of seventy-two years, seven months and twenty-eight days.

(I) Authentic records still extant indicate that the original American ancestor of the Holmes family was John Holmes, who migrated to the new world from England, landing at Plymouth, Massachusetts colony, in the year 1632, while it is practically certain that he subsequently resided both in Roxbury and Dorchester, of that colony. (II) His son John was born in Dorchester in 1663, while April 9, 1690, he was united in marriage to Hannah Newell, of Roxbury. Previously to this event, in 1686, he had located in New Roxbury, Conn., to which place, in the year of his marriage, was given the name of Woodstock. In 1687 he was concerned in the forming of the Woodstock colony, being one of the thirty-six who secured title to seventeen hundred acres of land in what is now Woodstock. He was a civil engineer and surveyor and under his direction the land of the new colony was surveyed, while he was recognized as a leader in local thought and action. Upon the land which fell to his portion he erected a mill for the fulling of cloth, and also a saw mill: he donated the land for the public common in East Woodstock, and the large elms still standing upon this tract were planted to commemorate the victory of Bunker Hill. This worthy ancestor was elected constable and collector at the first town meeting, and no man in the community was more honored or more prominent in public affairs. He died at his home in Woodstock in the year 1713.

(III) David Holmes, son of John (2), was born in the year 1700, and Oct. 25, 1720, he was wedded to Bathshua Sanford, who was born in 1699 and who survived him, subsequently becoming the wife of a man named Edmunds. David Holmes was a deacon in the Congregational Church at Woodstock. The following extract from a history of Tolland county, Conn., is well worthy of reproduction in this connection. "The maiden, Bathshua Sanford, married David, son of John Holmes, who was one of the first settlers of Woodstock, Conn., amid the stirring scenes of pioneer life and Indian warfare which made brave men and women of that period. But among all this noble band no name is more deserving the chaplet of the hero than that of Bathshua Holmes and for her brave deeds history has styled her the heroine of Woodstock. It is recorded, among other feats of bravery, that when the settlers had been driven within the forts by the Indians, with no provision except what was growing in their gardens, she sallied out with her basket, knowing that death and torture were almost certain; but she braved the foe, knowing that no man could be spared from the little band of defenders, and returned with her load of vegetables for the starving garrison, without molestation, although she passed within a few feet of an Indian in ambush. On another occasion she was summoned to the bedside of a sick wife in the settlement, six miles away, and, nothing daunted, she got out of the house by the single window and on snow shoes she traveled the six miles over hill and dale to the aid of the sick. Her grave is in the old meeting-house hill cemetery at West Stafford, Conn., and her gravestone has the following inscription: 'In memory of widow Bathshua Edmunds, formerly widow of Deacon David Holmes, of Woodstock.

She departed this life with great serenity of mind, Dec. 31, 1789, in the ninetieth year of her age, an example of piety through the whole course of her life and much lamented at her death.

'Ye passengers that do pass by Behold the place where now I lie.
I was alive once as you be;
Prepare for death and follow me.'"

(IV) Josiah Holmes, son of Deacon David Holmes, was born March 23, 1725, and he was married three or four times, his son John, born of either the first or second marriage, having been an ardent supporter of the Second Congregational Society, of Stafford, while he also had another son, David. For his third wife he married Sarah (Bennett) Dunton, widow of Samuel Dunton, and their children were Sarah, Rhoda and Mollie. Sarah married Capt. Solvin Converse in March, 1780; Rhoda married Jedediah Cady on Dec. 27, 1782; and Mollie married Abner Cady on the same date. Josiah Holmes died April 9, 1781, and his gravestone has the following quaint inscription: "Death is a debt to nature due, which I have paid, and so must you." John Holmes, son of Josiah, married Esther Cady, daughter of Timothy Cady, of West Stafford, where their graves are to be found in the old cemetery. They had no children.

(V) David Holmes, second son of Josiah, the grandfather of the subject of this sketch, settled on the farm which is now owned by our subject, while his brother John, previously mentioned, was located on the opposite side of the road.

(VI) Josiah Holmes, father of Augustus, was born on this homestead, May 26, 1791, the house, which is now occupied by Mrs. Augustus Holmes, having been erected in 1793, one of the oldest buildings in Stafford, the care and attention bestowed during the passing years having been such as to maintain it practically intact from the ravages of time, so that it stands as a historic landmark in that section. Josiah Holmes (2) died in the old homestead Dec. 15, 1869. He was identified with agriculture during his entire life and was also successfully engaged in the manufacture of charcoal upon a quite extensive scale in the early days, while his energy and enterprise also led him into other collateral vocations. He was a man of fine physical vigor, genial and kindly in his intercourse with his fellow men, and in his locality he was commonly referred to as being a true representative of the "salt of the earth." He was a devoted member of the Congregational Church and his every thought and action were in harmony with the Christian faith which was so significantly his. Though he never sought official preferment, he took an active interest in public affairs of a local nature, while in politics he gave his support to the Republican party from the time of its organization until his death. On Feb. 9, 1819, he was united in marriage to Miss Nellie Case, who was born in Wales, Mass.,

Nov. 4, 1795, and whose death occurred Oct. 20, 1885, at the venerable age of ninety years, her declining years having been passed with her son, Augustus, on the old homestead.

Of the children of Josiah and Nellie (Case) Halmes we enter the following record: Martha, who was born on the 13th of May, 1820, is the wife of Dwight Cushman, who was born in Belcher-town, and they now maintain their home in the city of Hartford, where Mr. Cushman is a retired carriage-maker and wheelwright. Augusta, born on Nov. 11, 1821, became the wife of Timothy Eaton, who was a blacksmith and honored citizen of West Stafford, and there her death occurred, March 10, 1898. Samuel, born Nov. 19, 1823, was a carpenter by trade and he died, unmarried, at the age of thirty years, April 7, 1854. Sanford, born Feb. 5, 1826, was a successful farmer of West Stafford, where he died March 11, 1893; his wife, whose maiden name was Eliza Johnson, survived. Augustus is the immediate subject of this memorial tribute. Marcia Ann, born Oct. 10, 1829, became the wife of Timothy Anderson, a farmer and luniberman of West Stafford, now deceased. She resides in Rockville. Eleanor, born July 1, 1832, became the wife of James Richmond, of Monson, Mass., and they now reside in Cromwell, that State. William, born March 23, 1834, enlisted as a member of the 11th C. V. I. and was taken prisoner and died in April, 1865, while incarcerated in the odious Andersonville prison, at thirty-one years of age; he never married. Almira, born Jan. 11, 1836, is the wife of Alonzo Patten, of West Stafford. Erastus, born March 18, 1838, died in November, 1864, at Florence, South Carolina, in the Union service at the time, as a member of Co. I, 16th C. V. I. Mary, Ellen, born Sept. 8, 1840, is the widow of Edwin Haynes, of West Stafford, who was a carriage-maker by trade, and she now resides in Rockville.

(VII) Augustus Holmes, to whom this sketch is dedicated, was reared on the homestead farm in West Stafford, and he continued his studies in the public schools of the locality until he had attained the age of eighteen years, when he began preparing himself for the active duties of life by entering upon an apprenticeship at the trade of carriage-making. He determined to familiarize himself with every detail of the business and every process involved, and thus he started in at the absolute initiative point, in the selection and securing of the wood to be utilized, and thereafter learned each consecutive detail resulting in the ultimately finished vehicle, his apprenticeship being served under the direction of his brother-in-law, Dwight Cushman. He followed this trade for several years and then learned the carpenter trade, in which he soon became an expert artisan, his former experience proving of distinct value. In this new field of effort he was for a number of years associated with Dwight Johnson, who erected many of the finest residences and public buildings in Stafford and elsewhere, including the Congregational churches in West Stafford and in Ellington. Mr. Holmes continued to be actively engaged in general carpentering and building until 1870, when ill health compelled him to abandon his efforts in this line, and he thereafter had charge of the fine old homestead farm until his death. From 1850 until 1854, inclusive, Mr. Holmes resided in Springfield, where he was associated with William Gilmore in the manufacturing of carriages, and within this period he also was for a time engaged with the Wassen Car Works in special work in the line of his trade. Upon assuming control of the homestead farm he brought to bear his keen business sagacity and progressive methods, by which he attained the maximum returns from his farming enterprise, while it was also his privilege to care for his venerable mother with true filial solicitude during the evening of her life. The homestead, which is one of the most valuable and productive in that section and which is recognized as one of the best landed estates in the county, comprises three hundred acres, and there Mr. Holmes engaged in general farming and in dairying, and the full measure of success which attended his efforts came as the just reward of his toil and endeavor. To his cherished and devoted wife, who was ever his sympathetic helpmeet and earnest coadjutor, he attributed in a degree the prosperity which came to him; their home life was one of ideal character, the mutual love and forbearance making the union one full of happiness and beneficent graciousness.

Mr. Holmes was thoroughly public-spirited and took a lively interest in all that concerned the welfare of the community. In politics he gave an unflinching allegiance to the Republican party, but he never sought or desired the honors of public office. He was a man of strong convictions and deeply appreciated of the values of the spiritual verities as represented in the Christian religion, and while he never became a member of any religious organization, he regularly attended the services of the Congregational Church, of which Mrs. Holmes is a devoted member, and contributed liberally to its support. He became a charter member of the Masonic lodge organized at Stafford, but at the time when his health became seriously impaired he permitted his active affiliation to lapse.

On Nov. 21, 1887, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Holmes to Mrs. Laura Ann (Davis) Gilmore, widow of Russell Gilmore, of Holyoke, and later of South Hadley, Mass. Mr. Gilmore was engaged in farming at the time of his death, but in earlier years he gave his attention to the transfer business on the Connecticut river, in which connection he operated a number of boats. Mrs. Holmes' parents were Solomon B. and Catherine (Ward) Davis, of West Ware, Mass., where Mr. Davis was a prominent and influential farmer, though for a full quarter of a century he was in the employ of the Western Railroad Company. Mrs. Holmes has one daughter by her first marriage, Hattie Augusta, the wife of Martin Pomeroy, a successful farmer of West Stafford. No children were born of the second union. Mr. Holmes passed to his reward honored by all who knew him, for his integrity was beyond question and such was his gracious personality that he won and retained loyal friends, whose confidence and regard he never violated. This sketch offers a brief tribute to one who was signally true to himself and to lofty ideals and whose life and labors counted for good. His name well merits a place on the roll of the representative citizens of his native county.

HON. FAYETTE LAWSON WRIGHT, of Pomfret Center, Windham County, represented the 7th Senatorial district in the Senate of 1901, and is one of the most prominent citizens of the town. He is a lineal descendant of one of the earliest Colonial settlers of New England, Henry Wright. This pioneer of the family in this country came in 1634 to Dorchester, Mass., where he settled and became a member of the First Church. In 1643 he moved to Providence, R. I., obtaining one of the original home lots by purchase from John Throckmorton. He lost his life during King Philip's War. He was a man of strong religious principles and a follower of Roger Williams, whose nearest neighbor he was in Providence from 1643 until 1676.

Benjamin Wright, grandfather of our subject, was a resident of Foster, R. I., where he followed farming all his life and died at nearly ninety years of age, in comfortable circumstances. He was twice married. His ten children were all by his first wife, and were the following: William, a farmer and shoemaker, married Delight Wood and died in Killingly; Benjamin, a farmer, married Lucy Wells, and died in Foster, R. I.; Layton was a tailor, and died in Clayville, R. I.; Sarah married Joseph Hill, and died in Scituate, R. I.; Esther married Dr. Johnson, and died in Scituate, R. I.; James located in Illinois, and died there; Miss Olive made her home in Foster, R. I.; Albin, twin of Olive, is mentioned below; Gardner was a jeweler in Attleboro, Mass.; and Seth died young.

Albin Wright was born Feb. 14, 1818, in Foster, R. I. At twelve years of age he was bound out to a farmer named Burlingame in Coventry, R. I., and remained there for several years. Following this he was employed as a clerk in a store at Scituate, R. I., by Welcome Matterson, who later became his father-in-law. After a few years in the employ of Mr. Matterson, he engaged in mercantile business on his own account, and later established a hotel known as the Rising Sun at Coventry, R. I., which he conducted for a number of years. The sign board of this establishment is in the possession of, and highly prized by, Senator Wright. Mr. Wright was naturally of a mechanical turn of mind, however, and the hotel business did not give his faculties the scope they demanded for exercise. Quitting the hotel, he took up expert loom work at which he worked for some years. He started the looms of several large cotton mills in Connecticut and Rhode Island, among them those at East Greenwich, Centerville, Anthony and Washington, R. I., and Attawaugan, Conn. In 1862, his health failing, he gave up this work and moved to Brooklyn, Conn., locating on the Davis Williams farm on Bush Hill. In 1864 he came to Pomfret, and rented the Spaulding farm in the northwest part of the town, which a year later he purchased to live on the rest of his life. He died Jan. 8, 1869, while visiting in Foster, R. I., and is buried in the Matthewson cemetery at Coventry, R. I. He was a Democrat previous to the Civil war, and cast his first Republican vote for Gov. Sprague, of Rhode Island. He was a staunch war Democrat, supported McClellan for President, and voted the Democrat ticket until his death, but was never an office-seeker. He attended the Congregational Church. He married twice, and had issue by both wives. His first wife was Lucinda A. Matterson, of Scituate, R. I., daughter of Welcome and Betsey (Knight) Matterson. She died in Foster, R. I., Oct. 14, 1853, aged twenty-eight years. Her children were: Amanda L. married Owney Brayton, a farmer of Foster, R. I., and lives on the Wright homestead there; Eugene died young; Delos C., railroad agent at Scituate, R. I., married Julia Graves and died in May, 1879; Clayton F., a prominent farmer of Sterling, Conn., which town he represented in the State Legislature of 1901, after having previously held many of its town offices, married Ameda Ann Crossman; Anna A. is the wife of Daniel Wood, a retired blacksmith of Danielson, Conn.; and Fayette Lawson is the subject of this sketch. Albin Wright's second wife was the sister of his first, Sarah Matterson. She lives in Attleboro, Mass., and was the mother of four children: Byron S. married Susan Blackmore, and resides in Attleboro, Falls, Mass., where he is a jeweler; George F., also a resident of Attleboro and a jeweler, married Alice Hall; Eulalie died young; and Miss Clara resides with her mother.

Fayette Lawson Wright was born Sept. 18, 1853, in Foster, R. I. He attended the district schools of Brooklyn and Pomfret, and Howes Business College at Worcester, Mass., graduating in March, 1876, after which he returned to his father's farm at Pomfret. He assisted in the management of the farm, and also became the local agent for S. L. Allen & Co., of Philadelphia, Penn., manufacturers of agricultural implements, continuing both of these occupations until February, 1882, when he entered the employ of S. Pennock & Sons Co., of Kennett Square, Pa., manufacturers of road machinery, as their traveling salesman. A consolidation of the Pennock concern and the George W. Taft Co., of Abington, Conn., was made Jan.

1, 1885, forming the American Road Machine Company, and Mr. Wright became the manager of this, with headquarters at Boston, Mass., but retaining his residence in Pomfret. The American Company are manufacturers of the Champion road machinery, in whose sale Mr. Wright has visited every State and Territory of the United States, as well as Mexico, Guatemala and the British possessions, meeting with exciting and interesting adventures in this broad range of travel, especially in the unsettled portions. Since 1895 his special charge for the American Road Machine Company, of which he is a director, has been the New England States, with headquarters at No. 36 South Market Street, Boston, Mass. In 1891, Mr. Wright purchased of his father-in-law, Joseph Chandler, his present fine farm known as the Lake Farm and consisting of 300 acres on which he has made extensive improvements, including the erection of a fine barn. The farm contains a fine fish pond. Mr. Wright owns much other land also, his total acreage footing up 1,400 acres, of which 500 acres lie in the town of Woodstock. He is one of the most extensive dairy farmers in Windham county.

Mr. Wright has been the efficient chairman of the Republican town committee since 1895. In 1897 Gov. Cooke appointed him a member of the State Sewerage Commission, on which he served until 1899, when a salaried commission was established and he was succeeded by ex-Gov. Cooke himself. Mr. Wright was elected to the House of Representatives from Pomfret in 1898, and during the following session served as House chairman of the committee on Education. Every report made by him was sustained by both Houses, a record not often made by the chairman of a committee. He was especially active and influential in killing off the bill which aimed to close the State Normal School at Willimantic, one of the most useful institutions in the eastern part of Connecticut. He opposed and defeated the bill which sought to deprive every town in the State of a part of its State appropriation for schools. The passage of this measure would have made it necessary to increase the tax-rate in every town in order to support the schools. Other bills which cut off the State aid to school-district libraries and evening schools, and made it impossible properly to enforce compulsory school laws, were also opposed by him, and they were rejected. His nomination for Senator was a well deserved recognition of his service in the lower branch of the Legislature, and he served his term with credit to himself and his constituency.

Mr. Wright is a gentleman of much enterprise and great public spirit. He is very widely acquainted and everywhere deservedly popular. He is a member of Putnam Lodge, No. 46, A. F. & A. M., of South Woodstock, and of the Pomfret Congregational Church. His home is a hospitable one. He was married May 1, 1879, to Adaliza W. Chandler, daughter of Joseph Chandler, of Pomfret. His children are: Fred Chandler, born April 18, 1880; Joseph Albin, Dec. 4, 1887; and Gladys Williams, Nov. 15, 1891.

The CHANDLER family from which Mrs. Wright descends is one of the oldest of Windham county, and in time past one prominent and numerous. At present Mrs. Wright's father is its only male representative. It traces back in America to William Chandler, who settled in Roxbury, Mass., in 1637, was admitted a freeman in 1640, died Nov. 26, 1641, and is buried in Roxbury. He brought with him from England, his wife Annis and four children. After his death his widow married John Dane, and later her third husband, John Parmeter. She died March 15, 1683.

Deacon John Chandler, born in 1610, son of William above, married Elizabeth Douglas. He removed from Old Roxbury to New Roxbury in 1686, and died in Woodstock, Conn., April 15, 1703.

Capt. Joseph Chandler, born June 4, 1683, was the son of Deacon John. He married Susan Perrin, who died June 22, 1755, in her sixty-eighth year. He died in Pomfret Jan. 5, 1749-50.

Joseph Chandler, son of Capt. Joseph, was born June 16, 1710. He married Elizabeth Sumner, who was born June 30, 1709, and who died Jan. 22, 1797. Joseph was a farmer and saddler in Pomfret, and died July 4, 1780.

Joseph Chandler (2), son of Joseph, and grandson of Capt. Joseph, was born Aug. 30, 1745, and was a farmer, and lived in the northern part of Pomfret. He was called lieutenant, but really had been first sergeant in the First Company, Eleventh Regiment of Connecticut militia, under Capt. Caleb Clark, of New Haven. His wife was Olive Backus, who was born Nov. 21, 1757, in Woodstock, and died in Pomfret Nov. 13, 1832.

Stephen Chandler, son of Joseph (2) and grandfather of Mrs. Wright, was born April 20, 1787, in the northern part of Pomfret, on the farm on which he lived until he grew to manhood. After his marriage he moved to the farm now occupied by Senator Wright, then owned by Lieut. Chandler, Stephen's father. Here he lived the rest of his life in the house which still stands on this site, and which he erected in 1843. He was a successful farmer. He died Nov. 17, 1865. His wife was Abby Holmes, of Pomfret, daughter of Ebenezer Holmes. She was born July 21, 1789, and died March 7, 1860. Her mother's maiden name was Dresser. Stephen Chandler's children were: Elizabeth S., who married Frederick Averill, a successful farmer of Pomfret and she later lived in Putnam, where she died; Joseph, Mrs. Wright's father; Emily S., who married Reuben Van Pelt, an attorney, and died in Yonkers, New York.

Joseph Chandler, son of Stephen, was born July 10, 1817, in Pomfret on the farm where he lives today. He attended the district schools, one winter term of the Brooklyn high school, and an Academy at Dudley, Mass. He was brought up on the farm, in the summer doing full farm duty while in the winter he went to school and did the chores. He left school in his eighteenth year, but remained on the farm for his board and clothes until he was twenty-one, and for fourteen years longer at $100 a year. At the end of this period he took a wife, but still remained on the farm, caring for his parents as well as his wife. After the death of the former he came into possession of the farm himself, and continued its management until he disposed of it in 1891 to Senator Wright, with whom he still lives on the old farm, but now in retirement. It was on April 12, 1853, that he married Mary Storrs Williams, daughter of Samuel H. and Adaliza (Parrott) Williams, of Brooklyn, Conn., born Sept. 8, 1832, died March 28, 1891. Their children were: Adaliza W., born June 24, 1854, is now Mrs. Fayette L. Wright; Joseph Albert, born April 27, 1856, died at home Oct. 13, 1876, from a fever contracted while at the Centennial Exposition in Philadelphia; Abby H., born Sept. 9, 1859, married; May 1, 1879, Noel O. Ballard, a farmer and carpenter of Pomfret, and they have four children, Lilhan A., Olive C., Louise F. and Ruth E.; Elizabeth S., born Feb. 8, 1862, married George H. Wells, a bookkeeper of North Easton, Mass., by whom she has two children, Elsie K. and Harry Chandler; Stephen Backus, born March 28, 1863, is now a stationary engineer living in Franklin, Mass., and has a son, Joseph Albert; and Mary Williams, born April 2, 1868, married Sept. 11, 1895, Seymour Peal, a farmer of Pomfret, and has one child, Roswell Gregory. Mr. Chandler is a Republican in politics. He is a member, as was his wife, of the Congregational Church, to which denomination also belong his daughters, Mrs. Wright, Mrs. Ballard, Mrs. Wells, and Mrs. Peal.

GEORGE W. CUTLER. The care of the poor and indigent, the "submerged tenth," in the battle of life, is a responsible and delicate position to hold, and requires a man of large heart and peculiar gifts. This onerous position is held by the gentleman whose name introduces this article, who has for a number of years been the efficient superintendent of the Thompson town farm. Mr. Cutler comes of good family, and is a gentleman who commands the respect of a large number of friends and acquaintances in Windham county. He was born in Webster Mass. June 22 1841.

William Cutler, father of George W., was born in Thompson, Windham Co., Conn., Jan. 22, 1812, a son of Moses Cutler. His occupation was that of a shoemaker, which he followed until about 1845, when he bought a small farm and combined farming with his other business. He continued this successfully until 1865, with the exception of two years when he was in the grocery business, one year in Webster, and one year in Worcester, Mass. In 1865 he bought a large farm in Thompson, Conn., and devoted the rest of his life to farming, of which he made a success, acquiring a competency. After a long and useful life he died in Thompson in 1901, at the age of eighty-nine years, twenty-two days. He was buried in Webster, Mass. He was of genial disposition, and was a representative man in all those qualities that go to make up good citizenship. In political belief he subscribed to the principles of the Republican party, and he was a consistent member of and worker in the Baptist Church, holding his membership at Brandy Hill. Mr. Cutler was twice married. He first married Mary E. Kingsbury, of Webster, who died in East Thompson in 1883, and is buried with her husband in Webster, Mass. She also was a member of the Baptist Church. Mrs. Cutler was a woman of much force of character and many domestic virtues. She became the mother of two children, George W. and Mary J., the latter deceased at the age of five years. His second wife, Mrs. Mary Hunt Perkins, whom he married in Douglass, Mass., survives him.

George W. Cutler received his education in the common schools of Webster and Worcester, Mass., passing through the lower grades and into the high school before taking up life's duties. He then learned the shoemaker's trade with his father, and followed it in various places, among which was Providence, R. I. In the latter part of his shoemaking days, he was known as a machine operator, running either a pegging machine or standard screw in East Thompson and Putnam, Conn., and Worcester, Webster and Oxford, Mass., being the first one to operate a standard machine in Oxford. After following his trade for a number of years, he became interested in the wood and lumber business, which he carried on for a period of eight years in East Thompson, and in connection with which he also engaged in farming and the poultry raising business. He was engaged successfully at this when appointed in 1896 to his present position, as superintendent of the town farm of 100 acres, a position which carries with it the duty of caring for the poor of the town. In this incumbency he has given perfect satisfaction for the past six years, and is looked upon as a most humane officer. In the selectmen's report for 1899 they say: "We commend Supt. G. W. Cutler and wife for the able management of the town farm for the past two years." Mr. Cutler is a land owner in Thompson, Rhode Island and Massachusetts.

In Oxford, Mass., on Sept. 8, 1859, Mr. Cutler was joined in marriage to Maria F. Emerson, a native of Thompson, daughter of Oren and Mary (Mason) Emerson, who were farming people and land owners in the latter town. The father of Mrs. Cutler died in Thompson and lies buried in the East Thompson cemetery. He was a good citizen, respected by all, and in political faith was a Republican. The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Cutler has not been blessed with offspring, but their fondness for children and kindness of heart led them to take and care for two, Grace May Irons and Clifford Whitney.

Mr. Cutler is rather liberal in politics, exercising his right to vote for the men and measures which more nearly meet his approbation, regardless of party. He is, as has been said before, a popular officer in the responsible position which he holds, and is universally esteemed throughout the county for his good qualities and excellencies of heart and mind.

TILLINGHAST. One of the families of New England which has for generations been prominent in many walks of life, is that of Tillinghast, its representatives having ever been identified with progressive citizenship, loyal adherence to duty and high religious influences since its founder in America made a home here in 1645.

(I) Pardon Tillinghast was born at Seven Cliffs, near Beachy Head (now Eastborn), Sussex, England, in 1622, and became a soldier under Cromwell, taking part in the battle of Marston Moor. In 1645 he emigrated to New England, settling in Providence, R. I., where he was admitted a resident of the town with a quarter interest of the original proprietors of the Providence Purchase. Much of the history of this noted family can be found in the records of the Baptist Churches in the localities in which they lived, for from this earliest American ancestor, who became the pastor of the first Baptist Church in Providence, and the builder of the first meeting-house of that denomination in the Colonies, down to the esteemed living representatives of the family, they have been, almost without exception, active in the work of that religious body.

From 1678 until his death, on Jan. 17, 1718, Pardon Tillinghast preached and performed the ministerial office in the church in Providence, without thought of remuneration. In 1700, at his own expense, he built what is the oldest Baptist Church edifice in America. Mr. Tillinghast was a merchant, and being a man well versed in public matters in his Colony was sent many times as a deputy to the General Court in the town of Providence. For twenty-five years he held positions of trust and confidence. His second wife, Lydia, was probably a daughter of Philip Taber, of Tiverton. By his first wife, whose surname was Butterworth, he had the following named children: Sarah, born in 1654, died when young; John, born in 1657, married Isabel Sayles, and was a resident of Providence and Newport, R. I.; and Mary, born in 1661, married Benjamin Carpenter. To the second marriage came children as follows: Lydia, born in 1666, in 1738 married John Audley; Pardon, born in 1668, married a Miss Keech, and lived in Providence and East Greenwich, R. I.; Philip, born in 1669, in 1692 married Martha Holmes, and was the father of Joseph of Providence; Benjamin, born in 1672, married Sarah Rhodes, and was a merchant at Providence; Abigail, born in 1674, married Nicholas Sheldon; Joseph, born in 1677, married (first) Free love Stafford, (second) Mary Hendron, and was a merchant at Providence and Newport, R. I.; Mercy, born in 1680, married Nicholas Power; Hannah married John Hale; Elizabeth married Philip Taber.

(II) Pardon Tillinghast (2), son of Rev. Pardon, was born Feb. 16, 1668, in Providence, R. I., where he lived to manhood, and he then moved to East Greenwich, where he engaged in farming and died in 1743. His wife's maiden name was Keech. They had a numerous family.

(III) John Tillinghast, second son of Pardon (2), was born in East Greenwich, Rhode Island.

(IV) Charles Tillinghast, the eighth child of John, was born April 5, 1729, at East Greenwich. His first marriage was to Mercy Green, born in 1729, who died in 1759, and his second marriage was to Abigail Allen, born in 1732, died in 1792. Charles Tillinghast located at North Kingston, R. I., about the time of his first marriage, but at the time of his death he lived at Quidnessett Neck, R. I., where he had located about 1771. At the outbreak of the war of Independence he was appointed by the General Assembly an officer to secure soldiers and arms for Washington's army, then gathering near Boston. In this way he became a marked character, and one evening some masked Tories broke into his house after he and his family had retired, took Charles from his bed without permitting him time to dress, hurried him to a boat, and conveyed him to prison on Block Island, where he died in November, 1775, seventeen days after capture, from injuries inflicted by his enemies. The children born to this noble patriot were: By his first marriage—John, born at North Kingston, R. I., in 1757, also died in the hands of the Tories, in November, 1775; Charles, born in 1758, married Hannah Talbot, and died Oct. 10, 1791; Mercy, born in 1759, married Capt. George Spooner, who lost his life at sea; by the second marriage—Deacon Pardon, born in 1765, is mentioned below; Elder Joseph, born Feb. 10, 1767, died in Voluntown, Conn., on March 3, 1715, married Sarah Gorton and his son, Charles A., died in Moosup at an advanced age; Phoebe, born Sept. 15, 1769, married Simon James, and died May 3, 1848; Col. Allen, the first of the children born at Quidnessett Neck, was born in 1772, married Ruth Lewis, and died Aug. 18, 1843; Amy, born May 5, 1774, married Joseph Nichols, and died July 4, 1834.

(V) Deacon Pardon Tillinghast, son of Charles, and grandfather of Judge Waldo Tillinghast, of Plainfield, Conn., was born in North Kingston, R. I., June 8, 1765, and died Nov. 20, 1816, at West Greenwich, R. I. By occupation he was a farmer. For many years he was a deacon in the Baptist Church. On Dec. 18, 1785, he was married to Mary Sweet, daughter of Sylvester Sweet, born Oct. 2, 1770, at Exeter, R. I.; she died Aug. 19, 1854.

Waldo Billingham

Their children were Charles, born Sept. 16, 1787, passed his later years in Griswold, Conn., engaged in farming; Susan, born Sept. 13, 1789, married an Avery; Sylvester, born July 24, 1792, lived in West Greenwich; Mary, born March 28, 1794, married a Tillinghast, of West Greenwich; Allen, born May 26, 1796, lived in Greenwich, R. I.; Pardon, born April 1, 1798, was a resident of Killingly, Conn.; Joseph, born April 26, 1800, lived in West Greenwich, and later at Sterling, Conn.; Abbie, born May 13, 1802, married (first) Pardon Bates, of West Greenwich, by whom she had three children, and (second) a Mr. Bowen, of Woodstock, Conn., by whom she had five children (she died at Killingly); Tabitha, born Sept. 7, 1804, married (first) Allen James, by whom she had three children, and (second) Josiah Love, of Coventry, R. I.; Phoebe, born Aug. 7, 1806, married Caleb Tillinghast, and lived in Plainfield, Conn., dying without issue, June 25, 1875; Thomas, father of Judge Waldo, born April 9, 1810, in West Greenwich, died in Griswold, Conn., Nov. 29, 1871; John, born Oct. 12, 1812, served in the Baptist ministry for almost fifty years, much of the time in Coventry, Rhode Island.

(VI) Thomas Tillinghast was early thrown upon his own resources, as he was but seven years of age when his father died. His educational opportunities were confined to the district schools. When a child he went to live with his brother Allen, in Sterling, Conn., and grew up in that town, giving his attention to farming and milling. The latter occupation pleased him best, and he became the owner of valuable mill properties in both Plainfield and Griswold, and carried on saw and grist milling for some thirty years. He united with the Baptist Church at an early age, and was always a zealous worker, becoming so earnest in his labors that he qualified as an ordained minister and preached for almost forty years. He had no special church, but his labors extended through eastern Connecticut. His death occurred Nov. 29, 1871, in Griswold, Connecticut.

Rev. Thomas Tillinghast was three times married; he reared a family of fourteen children. On Aug. 11, 1830, in West Greenwich, R. I., he married (first) Mary Howard, daughter of Thomas and Mary (Sabin) Howard, of Woodstock, Conn. She died Sept. 29, 1842, leaving five children, as follows: Harriet S., born June 23, 1831, in Woodstock, died June 2, 1875, she married (first) John Kegwin, of Griswold, and (second) George Segar, of Lebanon, Conn., and had three children by each union. Waldo is mentioned below. Henry S., born Nov. 25, 1835, at Killingly, Conn., married Catherine Crane, of New Jersey and had six children; during the Civil war he was a soldier in the Union army; he conducted a hotel business for a time, but is now a farmer at Flushing, L. I. Jared, born June 17, 1838, at Foster, R. I., died at the age of twenty-four years, on June 4, 1862, in Plainfield, Conn. Caleb Edward, born Nov. 24, 1840, at Plainfield, Conn., married, in Hope Valley, R. I., Mary A. Reynolds, and had six children, four of them still living; she died Nov. 1, 1901.

The second marriage of Rev. Thomas Tillinghast, in Voluntown, Conn., was to Laura Kinne, daughter of Avery Kinne, and to this union came the following children: Thomas Avery, born April 5, 1844, in Plainfield, Conn., is a farmer in Brooklyn, Conn.; he married Jane S., daughter of Charles A. Tillinghast, of Moosup, Conn. Laura Jane, born Oct. 11, 1845, married Dr. Raymond Eddy, of East Providence. Mary, born Dec. 2, 1846, in Plainfield, married (first) Clark Corey and (second) Myron Austin, and resides in Brooklyn, N. Y. Emily, born April 28, 1848, at Sterling, Conn., married Dr. Elmer Eddy, of Olneyville, R. I., and died in December, 1899, leaving one child. Fannie K., born June 6, 1850, in Sterling, Conn., married Henry Weaver and lives in St. Louis, Mo.; she has four children. Adaline, born April 22, 1852, married Alfred A. Esten, of Providence, later of New Jersey, where she died Nov. 22, 1887.

The third marriage of Rev. Thomas Tillinghast was to Sarah Dawley, of Griswold, Conn., and the children of this union were: Jared, born March 17, 1864, is a minister in the Methodist Church and at present stationed at Valley Stream, L. I. (he is unmarried); Jeanette, twin of Jared, married Calvin Videon, and resides at Tottenville, Staten Island, N. Y.; and Ernest, born Aug. 4, 1866, married Edith Edwards, and is a farmer of Prince's Bay, New York.

JUDGE WALDO TILLINGHAST, Probate Judge and prominent citizen of Plainfield, Conn., was born June 10, 1833, at Killingly, son of Rev. Thomas and Mary (Howard) Tillinghast. At the age of six years he came to the town of Plainfield, which has been his home ever since. His attendance at school was much interrupted, as it was necessary for him to pass early into active, workaday life, and he was a post-graduate in business before he had reached his majority. His first independent work was done at the age of fourteen years, when he engaged at farming, receiving as wages the munificent sum of $9 per month. His ambition was to secure a good education and he bent every energy in that direction, managing to attend three winters at the Shepard Hill school, seven winters in the Goshen District, and during the succeeding five years, by good management and hard work at farming and teaching, he was enabled to study the higher branches at Plainfield Academy, which at this time was a very popular school. It was under the able management of Rev. William A. Benedict, a noted educator, and the roll mustered one hundred pupils. Among this number were twenty-four Indian boys from the Chickasaw Nation, and during this time two of them died and were buried in the Plainfield cemetery.

Between the ages of fourteen and twenty-one young Tillinghast devoted his summers to farming and his winters to attending or teaching school, his experience as a teacher covering four winter terms, one at South Killingly, two at Scituate, R. I., and one at Griswold. These were busy years, but during that time the character of the youth was developing along with his body and mind, and much of his later success in life may doubtless be attributed to the habits of thrift and self-control which marked those years.

In October, 1885, in association with an uncle, Henry Sabin, Mr. Tillinghast embarked in mercantile business, buying out Mr. Sabin's interest in the following year. For seventeen years Mr. Tillinghast conducted a prosperous business at the same stand, and in 1871 he built the two and one-half story business block in Plainfield which he still occupies, his business connection in that place having continued for forty-seven years. Expansion has taken place in every line, and the volume of the business now managed by Judge Tillinghast is greater in a single month than it was in two years at the beginning. For twenty-eight consecutive years he was the efficient and popular postmaster at Plainfield.

Although so eminently successful in his mercantile enterprises, Judge Tillinghast by no means confines his attention to that line. Few men in the locality have shown more local pride and public spirit, and he has served his town in many official positions. He is now honorably serving his twenty-eighth year as Judge of Probate, twenty-five years in succession. His connection with the office, however, and experience in its work, goes much farther back, as he served as clerk of probate, under the late Hon. David Gallup, for fourteen years. For thirty-nine years he has been a member of the board of education for the town of Plainfield, serving during the past three years as its chairman. In 1901 Judge Tillinghast represented the town in the State Legislature, and served on the important committee on Incorporation. Judge Tillinghast is also something of a farmer, owning and operating an estate of 200 acres, and he has been connected with several business enterprises of his section.

Since he united with the Moosup Baptist Church, in April, 1850, the Judge has been one of its earnest workers and prominent members. For seventeen years he was superintendent of the Sunday-school, and for the past twenty-one years has been the church clerk. The only fraternal society to which he belongs is the American Mechanics of Moosup.

On Oct. 13, 1859, Judge Tillinghast was married, in Plainfield, Conn., to Miss Mary A. Crary, daughter of Charles Wylie and Anne (Borden) Crary, of Fall River, Mass., and to this marriage children as follows were born: Frank Howard, a merchant of Central Village, Conn., is mentioned below, as is also Fred Waldo, who is likewise a merchant, in association with his brother; Arthur C., born June 28, 1872, his father's assistant in the mercantile business, married Martha A. Palmer, of Hope Valley, R. I., and has one daughter, Dorothy Elizabeth, born Jan. 1, 1894; Miss Annie Louise was born May 1, 1875.

FRANK HOWARD TILLINGHAST. In his eldest son Judge Tillinghast for a number of years had a very efficient assistant in the probate office. He was born Sept. 24, 1860, in Plainfield, Conn., and his education was pursued along lines that would best fit him for a practical business career. After completing the course in the village common schools he finished the higher branches at Plainfield Academy, and then took a business course at Schofield's Commercial College, at Providence. When only eighteen years old he took charge of a store located at Packerville, conducting it with success for a period of two years, and then spent one year as his father's assistant in the store in Plainfield.

In 1883, in company with Walter L. Palmer, Mr. Tillinghast bought out the store business of C. W. Lillibridge & Co. at Central Village, and under the firm name of Tillinghast & Palmer conducted the same until July, 1885. For the two succeeding years Mr. Tillinghast managed the business alone. On Jan. 5, 1887, he was joined in a partnership with his brother, Fred W., the firm now being F. H. & F. W. Tillinghast. The business is assuming mammoth proportions, and the energetic partners are constantly expanding and covering new lines. In addition to a most complete and well arranged general stock, the firm now carry a well-selected stock of furniture and carpets, curtains, and furnishings. In 1896 Mr. Tillinghast bought out the undertaking business of E. M. Anthony, at Jewett City, and since then he not only keeps a representative at that place but controls the business in Central Village.

Like his father, Mr. Tillinghast is competent to grapple with many enterprises and fulfills the ideal of a successful man and useful citizen. He is a trustee of the Brooklyn Savings Bank. In politics he is a stanch Republican, for several years was clerk of probate under his father, since 1888 has been town auditor, and has also served as county auditor. In 1892 he was honored by his fellow-citizens with election as representative of the town in the General Assembly, and while in Hartford he did efficient service on the Military committee and on the committee on Capitol Furniture and Grounds, and was also clerk of the county for both senators and representatives. His political career has been noted for good judgment and close attention to the wishes of his constituents.

Mr. Tillinghast is very prominent in Masonry, belonging to Moosup Lodge, No. 113, of which he is worshipful master, Warren Chapter, of Danielson, Montgomery Council, of Danielson, Columbia Commandery, of Norwich, and Sphinx Temple, Mystic Shrine, of Hartford. He is also a member of the A. O. U. W. and of the I. O. O. F. and Encampment of Central Village. In spite of his many pressing duties he finds time to attend to his fraternal claims and is most highly esteemed in these various organizations. For a considerable period he has been a member of Central Village Congregational Church and is chairman of the Society committee.

On Nov. 23, 1882, Mr. Tillinghast was united in marriage with Miss Mary A. Dodge, of Plainfield, and two children have come to this union, namely: Louise Dodge, born July 30, 1889; and Helen Waldo, born Aug. 7, 1896. Mr. Tillinghast is prominent in both business and social circles in Central Village and locality, and is looked upon as one of the leading factors in the progress and development of his section. Energetic, progressive and public-spirited, his influence for the public good is felt in many directions; while his personal qualifications make him one of the most esteemed citizens of his town.

FRED WALDO TILLINGHAST, the popular junior member of the firm of F. H. & F. W. Tillinghast, is the second son of Judge Waldo Tillinghast, of Plainfield, and was born in what is known as the old Crary house on beautiful Plainfield street, that town, Dec. 18, 1865. His educational privileges began with those of the district schools, and ended with Plainfield Academy, in which institution he was a student for several years. His inclinations led him rather into the commercial than the professional world, and, determining to fit himself as thoroughly as possible for this, he entered Schofield's Commercial College, at Providence, one of the best institutions of its kind in New England. He applied himself assiduously to his studies. From early boyhood he had spent his vacations in his father's general store, assisting in various ways, and the practical knowledge gained by that experience, coupled with the thorough theoretical training acquired in the business college, equipped him well for his future work. Upon returning home he was for some time a clerk in his father's store.

At the age of twenty-two Mr. Tillinghast went to Cleveland, Ohio, with the intention of engaging in the insurance business, but he contracted malarial fever, and was obliged to return to the East in 1886; he located in Central Village, and after clerking for a year, on Jan. 5, 1887, became a partner in the firm of F. H. & F. W. Tillinghast.

On July 31, 1890, Mr. Tillinghast was united in marriage with Miss Jennie F. Carey, of Central Village, and they have two sons, Edward C. and Waldo Elbert. In his political belief Mr. Tillinghast is a Republican, and for the last fifteen years has served very acceptably as clerk of probate. He has, however, little time to devote to party work, as his business cares demand almost his entire time. Fraternally he is affiliated with Moosup Lodge, No. 113, F. & A. M., of which he is senior warden; with Warren Chapter and Montgomery Council, of Danielson; and Columbia Commandery, of Norwich. Mr. Tillinghast has, in his business management, fully justified the promise of his early years. He is progressive and public-spirited, yet conservative, and his judgment seldom errs.

THE DODGE FAMILY. The records of the Dodge family, of which Mrs. Frank H. Tillinghast is a member, recall an Amri Dodge, who married Lucy Jensen and died in 1832. Their children were as follows: Alpheus, born Nov. 15, 1785; Barney, born Aug. 14, 1786, in Weston, Mass., who died Feb. 12, 1871; John, born Nov. 20, 1789; Nancy, born June 10, 1792; and Olney, born April 8, 1798.

Barney Dodge married Mary Main, daughter of Joab and Mary (Inman) Main, who had the following children: Ariel, born Sept. 30, 1781; Elisha, born April 27, 1787; Mary, June 12, 1792 (married Barney Dodge and died Oct. 12, 1850); Phila, Oct. 27, 1795; and Bonaparte, Oct. 27, 1798. The children born to Barney Dodge and his wife were: Mary Ann, born Feb. 7, 1811, died Oct. 7, 1860; Henry T., born Dec. 15, 1812, died Jan. 23, 1882; Lucy, born Jan. 14, 1815, died Oct. 21, 1880; John, born July 28, 1817, died in 1818; Phila, born July 5, 1820, died Dec. 15, 1886; Elizabeth, born Jan. 29, 1823, died in 1823; Olney, the father of Mrs. Tillinghast, born Feb. 14, 1824, died Oct. 16, 1889; Barney J. was born June 2, 1829; George M., born June 25, 1831, resides in Valley Falls; Daniel, born Jan. 22, 1834, died April 4, 1889; and William H., born May 17, 1840, resides in Woonsocket, Rhode Island.

On July 31, 1854, Olney Dodge married Susan H. Shepard, and to them came children as follows: Susan E., born July 31, 1855, who married Daniel D. Earle April 22, 1886; Mary A., born Oct. 13, 1860, wife of Mr. Tillinghast; John G., born Oct. 29, 1867; and Charles O., born Jan. 18, 1872.

LUTHER E. DIMOCK, one of the most prosperous and successful farmers in Stafford, Tolland county, takes a justifiable pride in the high grade and superior qualities of all his farm and garden products. He was born April 24, 1844, in West Stafford, and is a son of Abner Dimmick, who was born in 1804, in West Stafford, where he died, March 14, 1863. In the house in which he was born he spent his life, and there he died.

Abner Dimmick was married to Mary (Luther) Bartlett, who was born in Belchertown, Mass. All his life he was a farmer, and was very successful in his time. He was a pillar of the Methodist Church, in which he filled the position of steward most of his life. In his politics he was a devoted Democrat, and next to his Bible came the Hartford Times. Widely and favorably known as a good man and upright citizen, he belonged to the Square Pond (now Crystal Lake) Methodist Church. At every meeting he delighted to speak and pray. In 1853 he was a representative of the town in the General Assembly, had been assessor and selectman, and in other minor positions had demonstrated his ability and integrity. While he reared his children according to the old ideas, he was very insistent upon their having as good an education as the times afforded. Robust and active, he was a hard-working man, and became quite prominent. To Abner Dimmick and his wife were born: (1) Catherine B., who married Theodore H. Hayden, of Florida, and died in 1900; (2) Randolph H., born June 5, 1843, who married Etta Robbins, of Westbrook, Conn., and has his home with his brother; (3) Luther E.

Abner Dimmick, Sr., the grandfather of Luther, was born in Stafford, about the middle of the eighteenth century; he died in West Stafford in 1842. He was a farmer, and married Love Newell, by whom he had the following children: Marvin, who died young; Love, who married Samuel M. Harwood, of West Stafford; Minerva, married to Eber Harwood, of West Stafford; Abigail, married to Eber Euck; Luna, who married Warren Richardson; Abner, Jr., the father of Luther E. Dimock; Hannah, married to Ephraim Newell, of Ellington; Armenia, married to Lyman Martin, of Ellington.

John Dimmick, the great-grandfather of Luther E., was born July 24, 1727, in Stafford, where he died in 1800. He was united in marriage with Nanah Smith, a daughter of Matthew Smith, and became the father of the following family: John, Timothy, Simeon, Hannah, Sylvanus, Amasa, William, Meriam, Abner, Ephraim, Matthew, Joseph and Mary.

Timothy Dimmick, the great-great-grandfather of Luther E., was born in July, 1698, was all his life a farmer, and died in 1783. He was married, Aug. 15, 1723, to Anna Bradford, a descendant of Gov. Bradford, who came to this country on the "Mayflower." They had the following family: Ann, Timothy, John, Joanna, Josiah, Simeon, Sylvanus, Oliver, Daniel, Lucinda and Sallie.

John Dimmick, the father of Timothy of the preceding paragraph, was born in January, 1666, and died Dec. 16, 1738. He married Elizabeth Lumber in Falmouth, Mass., and their children were: Sarah, Hannah, Mary, Theophilus, Timothy, Ebenezer, Thankful and David.

Deacon Shubael Dimmick, the father of the above John, was born Sept. 15, 1644, and died Oct. 29, 1732, in Mansfield. He was married in 1663 to Joanna Bursley, who was born in Mansfield, Conn. Deacon Shubael Dimmick was called ensign in the records of the town of Barnstable, Mass., for June, 1660. In 1693 he removed to Mansfield, Conn., where he was made selectman the day he was made a citizen. In the Windham church he was a member, as he was later, of the first church at Mansfield, which was organized Oct. 18, 1710, and of which he was chosen the first deacon. His residence was in Mansfield Center, and it is a matter of record that in 1706 town meetings were held in his house. His children were as follows: Thomas, who was killed in the battle of Canso, in the Eastern Country, Sept. 9, 1697, a gallant officer, who bore the rank of Captain; John; Timothy; Shubael; Joseph; Mehitable; Benjamin; Joanna; and Thankful.

Elder Thomas Dymoke, the father of Deacon Shubael, came to America from Barnstable, Eng., and was selectman in the town of Dorchester, Mass., in 1635. Three years later he moved to Hingham and in 1640 made his home in Barnstable. That year he was a representative in the General Assembly of the Province, and in 1650 was made ruling elder of the Church. He was beloved and revered by his people for his devotion to the faith and his discharge to the utmost of every burden, duty and responsibility. His wife, Anna Hammond, bore him the following children: Timothy, Mehitable and Shubael. Thomas Dymoke was a son of Edward Dymoke, who was the grandfather six times removed of Luther E. Dimock.

The traditional history of the Dimmick family began with John Dymoke, the Champion of England; this position was created by William the Conqueror, and to it was attached the manor of "Siriversbav." The male owner of this estate filled the office for many generations, but somewhere in the fourteenth century the owner of the manor was a woman. She married John Dymoke, and the position of Champion of England, became hereditary, descending to the oldest son in each generation. Their descendants migrated to America very early in the sixteenth century. The name, which is of Welsh origin, is variously written, as Dimmock, Dimmick, Dimack, Dimrick, Dimick and Dimock, and in the early records of Mansfield, Conn., it is written Dimmuck.

Luther E. Dimock was born in West Stafford, where he received his education, with the exception of one term spent at Wilbraham. In the spring of 1863 he left school, and began farm work on the place where he now lives, and which the family purchased at the death of the father. Until the spring of 1872 he continued farming, but that year took up a meat business that was his occupation for the ensuing ten years; he was associated with his brother, Randolph Abner, as the firm of Dimock Brothers. They sold out after a successful career of ten years to Bidwell & Company. Mr. Dimock then resumed his farming life, but in 1887 he went into the meat business again, under the firm name of the Stafford Meat Company. This was his occupation for six years, when he gave up the business, though it had proved decidedly remunerative. Coming back a second time to his 100-acre farm he resumed his farming career, and there he has been established to the present time. His place is known as the "Banner Stock and Vegetable Farm and Poultry Yards." Many prizes have been taken by him at various fairs.

Mr. Dimock is a member of the Methodist Church; Mrs. Dimock belongs to the Congregational Church at Willimantic. Mr. Dimock is independent in politics and has never been a candidate for office. He was married Jan. 1, 1873, to Margaret Harries, a native of Scotland, and a daughter of James and Mary (McMaster) Harries. Her father was a mill man. Mr. and Mrs. Dimock have one child, LaVergne, born Nov. 22, 1879, who is at home.

NOAH DANIEL WEBSTER, treasurer of the Willimantic Savings Institute, is one of the best known banking men of Willimantic, Windham county, and has been longer "behind the desk" than any other official in that city. He was born in Somers, Conn., Aug. 29, 1847, and has been connected with the Willimantic Savings Institute since his coming to the city, Jan. 12, 1870.

Mr. Webster belongs to the old New England family from which the celebrated Noah Webster came. His father, Daniel Webster, Jr., was born in Long Meadow, Mass., son of Daniel Webster, who had a family of three sons and two daughters: (1) Nathan went South when a young man, and married a French lady in Louisiana. He died in Napoleonville, La., when over ninety years old. Before the war he was a wealthy planter, and owned large plantations, but the vicissitudes of that struggle left him impoverished, and he never regained his former financial standing. (2) Calvin lived at Long Meadow, Mass. (3) Daniel, Jr., is mentioned below. (4) Frances married William Simons, and died at Long Meadow, Mass. (5) Caroline married Martin Pomeroy, and died in Willimantic. Mr. Webster, the father, was a carpenter and joiner by trade, and lived at Long Meadow, Mass., moving from that point to Somers, Conn., where his last years were spent.

Daniel Webster, Jr., took up the carpenter's trade under the instruction of his father. When a young man, like so many of the bright and capable youth of his time, he went to the South, peddling New England products, following that business some time. Later he came back to his native State, where he was married, and settled in Somers. By this union he had one son, Daniel S., who died in middle life in Willimantic, after having served as a soldier in the Civil war, enlisting from Erie, Pa. For his second wife Mr. Webster married Julia Andross, of South Windsor, Conn., who descended from an old and highly respected family of that part of the State, to which belonged the famous Gov. Andros, of Connecticut. Daniel (Jr.) and Julia (Andross) Webster became the parents of three children: Noah D.; Miss Alice, of Willimantic; and Julia, who never married, and died in Willimantic.

After his marriage Daniel Webster, Jr., made his home with his father, occupying a double house, and they engaged together in the work of contracting and building. The Corinthian columns of the Congregational Church at Somers are a sample of their work. Daniel Webster, Jr., became a prominent man in Somers. He was one of the directors of the Connecticut State Prison at Wethersfield, and upon the resignation of Warden Willard, in 1857, was appointed his successor by the board of directors. He removed his family to Wethersfield, and continued to fill the position to which he had been appointed until his tragic death, in March, 1862, at the hands of a prisoner under his charge. His remains were buried in Somers. A staunch Republican, he had represented Somers in the General Assembly, and was known in the party councils throughout the State as a man of ability and unquestioned integrity. His widow survived many years, dying in October, 1900, in Willimantic, where she had long made her home. Her remains were buried in Somers.

Noah D. Webster received his early schooling in Somers, in the public school between Somers Street and Somerville, and was a boy of ten years when his parents removed to Wethersfield, where he attended the high school. After the death of his father his widowed mother removed with her little family to a small farm near Somers, and there Noah remained until well on toward his majority. Leaving home to better his opportunities, he began for himself as a clerk in the grocery store of a Mr. Clark, at Broad Brook, Conn. He soon became bookkeeper for Moore & Johnson, on State street, in Hartford, remaining there four years, and at the expiration of this time, came to Willimantic to take a position in the Willimantic Savings Institute, with which he has since been identified. At that time the president was John Tracy, who had served as a member of the board of directors of the State Prison, and, having a personal acquaintance with the Websters, took a lively interest in the fortune of the son. The Savings Institute was then located in the building on Upper Main street where for years was established the Windham Cotton Mills Company's Store. In July, 1870, the Institute was moved to its present location, at the northeast corner of Main and Bank streets. Mr. Webster continued as bookkeeper until June, 1889, when he succeeded F. F. Webb as treasurer of the Institute, the position he holds at the present time, and in which he has so favorably brought himself to the notice of the Willimantic business world. He is a notary public.

Mr. Webster and Miss Sarah A. Royce were married in Franklin, Conn., in March, 1878. Mrs. Webster was born in Franklin, and is the youngest daughter of her parents, Amos F. and Jane B. (Peckham) Royce, who are mentioned elsewhere. The Royces are one of the old families in this part of the State, and have had many notable representatives. Mr. and Mrs. Webster have had one child, Faith Royce.

Mr. Webster is a Republican, and, while he has never sought an office, has taken a lively interest in the success of his party. He is a conspicuous figure in the circles of the I. O. O. F., having been a charter member of Obwebetuck Lodge, at Willimantic. Since 1870 he has been organist of the Willimantic Congregational Church, probably a longer term than that of any other organist in the State, his musical ability being much above the average, though his instruction was somewhat limited; however, he has made himself a superior organist by his own industry. Mr. Webster is popular and congenial, has hosts of friends, stands as one of the very best citizens, and is recognized as one of the most efficient men in banking circles in the State.

EDWARD LIVINGSTON BURNHAM, a representative farmer of North Windham, Windham county, traces his line of descent from Deacon John Burnham, Sr., of Chebasco, (Ipswich) Mass., who was born in England in 1618. In 1635 he came to Chebasco, and two years later joined the Pequot Expedition. For his services on that occasion he was awarded land in 1639, becoming an extensive land owner. He served the church as a deacon, and he died in 1694. By his wife, Mary, he had four children, John, Josiah, Anna and Elizabeth.

Josiah Burnham, son of the emigrant, was born in 1662, and died when only thirty years old, in 1692. In 1687 he married Abigail Varney; their children were: Josiah, Jacob and Ebenezer.

Ebenezer Burnham, son of Josiah, was born in 1691, and moved to Hampton, Windham Co., Conn., where he died in 1746. By his wife, Dorothy, he had issue: Joshua, Ebenezer, Joseph, Andrew, Isaac and Dorothy.

Andrew Burnham, son of Ebenezer, married, and became the father of Adonijah.

Adonijah Burnham, son of Andrew, was a native of Hampton, where his entire life was passed, with the exception of some two or three years when he lived at Williamstown, Vt. An extensive and prosperous farmer of Hampton, he died when only fifty-seven years old. In politics he was a strong Democrat. Abigail Fuller, his wife, was born in Hampton, and lived to the advanced age of eighty-four. Their children were: Luther is more fully mentioned below; Asa, born in 1802, was a farmer of Hampton, where he married Mary Burnham, and died in 1856; Anson, born in 1805, lived in Hampton, and died unmarried in 1858; Lyman, born in 1808, died in 1842, in Monson, Mass., where he had established his home; Chester, born in 1810, died unmarried in 1834; one born in 1813 died very young; Clarissa Fuller, born in 1815, married B. F. Robinson, had three sons, Albert (who died at Marshalltown, Iowa, in 1899), Abner (a banker at Armstrong, Iowa), and Benjamin Franklin (an express agent at Norwich, Conn.), and she died in 1860; and Jane E., born Aug. 21, 1819, married, in 1844, Chester D. Burnham, of Hartford (born in Willington in 1819), and their children were: Chester D. (who died in infancy), Herbert D. (born in 1846), Edgar F. (born in 1849, now a member of the firm of Gemmill & Burnham, of Hartford) and Ida J. (born in 1855).

Luther Burnham, son of Andrew, was born Nov. 2, 1800, and married May 3, 1821, Martha Lincoln a daughter of Jonah and Lucy (Webb) Lincoln. She died Feb. 21, 1848, and after her death Mr. Burnham married her niece, Jane Lincoln, who is now a resident of Willimantic. All the children were born to the first marriage, and were as follows: Martha N., born Feb. 19, 1828, died in 1831; Lucy A., born April 13, 1830, died the following year; Lucy N., born Dec. 6, 1831, died at the age of twenty years; Edward L., whose name appears at the beginning of this article; Ellen F., born Dec. 12, 1835, was married Jan. 2, 1850, to Hon. Lester Hunt, resided in Kenton, Ohio, and died Feb. 2, 1867; Stowell L., born Dec. 13, 1837, served in Company A, 82nd O. V. I., as lieutenant, and was killed at the battle of Gettysburg, July 1, 1863; and John Randolph, born in 1839, died at the age of six years.

Luther Burnham was reared in his native town where he followed farming. His education, which was better than the average, was chiefly obtained in the local schools, though he spent a short time in a select school at Philadelphia. As a young man he taught school in the winter and engaged in farming during the summer. All through his life he was a great reader, and amassed a valuable knowledge of the world and its doings. About 1838 Mr. Burnham located in North Windham, where he engaged quite extensively and industriously in farming. He owned a property of nearly 300 acres which included nearly all the present village of North Windham. As property was sold off from time to time for village purposes, more land was added so that the land holdings of the family at the present time amount to 325 acres. In politics he was a Whig, and became a Republican on the organization of that party. In 1849, and again in 1863 and 1864 he represented the town of Windham in the General Assembly. For years he was a member of the school board, and assessor, and filled from time to time other less important offices. In religion he was a liberal member of the North Windham Christian Society. He entered into rest April 28, 1878.

Edward L. Burnham, who was born Oct. 1, 1833, was the first member of the family born in Windham, and here he was reared and had his education in the public schools, being a student for a time in the Chaplin high school. When he was seventeen he left school to teach for two terms in the Pudding Hill district. At the expiration of his teaching on the hill he went to Rockford, Ill., where he engaged for about a year in well drilling, giving particular attention to flowing wells, which were secured at a depth of about 120 feet. From Rockford he went to Wisconsin, where he secured employment with Capt. Otis Webb, near Madison, on an extensive farm. Mr. Burnham was with Capt. Webb, who bore his title because of his whaling voyages, about a year, and then returned to Cor-necticut and settled on the old homestead, which in time came into his possession. Here he has taken up dairying, and since Stowell L. Burnham, his son, after having become familiar with Western farm methods, decided to try them on the old farm, the place is yielding better returns than ever.

Mr. Burnham cast his first Presidential vote for Fremont, and has been a Republican to the present time, always making it a point to vote, though he has never sought office. However, he has filled the position of treasurer and justice of the peace, as well as others less important. He is a member of the North Windham Christian Society, and is a member of the Society's committee. Mrs. Burnham is a member of the D. A. R.

On Dec. 13, 1865, Mr. Burnham married Miss Sarah E. Peck, daughter of Porter B. Peck, and children as follows have blessed the union: Anna Porter, born Nov. 28, 1866, died April 8, 1867; Stowell L., born April 15, 1870, is unmarried, and has charge of the family farm; Edward L., born Aug. 23, 1873, died July 28, 1874; Ellen Caroline, born June 8, 1880, graduated from Mt. Holyoke Seminary in 1901; and John Porter, born Oct. 31, 1884, is a graduate of the Willimantic high school.

Paul Peck, Mrs. Burnham's first American ancestor in the paternal line, is supposed to have been a native of the County of Essex, England, born in 1608, and to have come to this country in 1635, in the ship "Defiance." In Boston and in that vicinity he spent about a year, and in 1636 came to Hartford, Conn., with the party of Rev. Thomas Hooker. His name appears on the list of proprietors of Hartford in 1639, where he presently became a leading man. His residence was on Washington street, not far from Trinity College, and the place is still known among the antiquarians as the "Peck lot." He was a deacon in the Congregational Church from 1681 to 1695, the year of his death. His will, which was quite lengthy, is still in existence, and bears date June 25, 1695. It was passed upon Jan. 15, 1696, and is to be found on pages 217, 218 and 219 of Book 5. The total value of the property disposed of was £536, 5s. Bequests were made to his wife and mother, and to his sons, Paul and Joseph, his daughters, Martha Cornwall, Mary Andrew, Sarah Clark and Elizabeth How, his grandsons, Paul and Samuel, and his son-in-law, John Shepherd. He also named his granddaughter, Ruth Beach, and son-in-law, Joseph Bolton, to whom Samuel is requested to pay legacies. His children were: Paul, Martha, Elizabeth, John, Samuel, Joseph. Sarah and Mary.

The Connecticut Pecks are descended from Joseph Peck, of Milford; Deacon William and Henry, of New Haven, and Deacon Paul, of Hartford. They were among the early settlers of this country, and each became the ancestor of a numerous race, now scattered throughout the entire country. They mixed with one another, and with the Massachusetts

Pecks, and much labor would be required to separate them. The meaning of the name "Peck" is in controversy, but its antiquity is unquestioned, as the family had its location at a very early date in the Yorkshire village of Bolton, and from there representatives of the name spread over England and even penetrated into Continental Europe. The arms of "Peck" are in the British Museum, impaled with the arms of many other families into which they had married, but the early arms of the family are not found alone. The motto Probitas quam divitas (Probity rather than riches), has been added. Benjamin Peck was Mrs. Burnham's great-grandfather, and his son Reuben was her grandfather. Reuben Peck was a cloth dresser in Mansfield during his early life, but finally settled on a farm near North Windham, in the town of Chaplin, where Miss Julia M. Peck now resides. His death occurred at North Windham Oct. 23, 1855. Mr. Peck first married Lucy Morgan of Coventry, and they had one child, Lucy, who died in young womanhood. For his second wife he married Leona Lyon, of Canterbury, Conn., who died April 6, 1852, aged sixty-seven years. They had two children: Pearl L. and Porter B., the former of whom married Adeline Brown. He was a farmer, and resided at North Windham, where he died.

Porter Brown Peck was born July 16, 1816, in Mansfield, and spent his boyhood days there. His education was obtained partly in the public schools of his native town, and in a few terms' attendance at Squire Dewey's school, in Columbia, but largely by his own unaided efforts, and by observation and experience, stimulated by a desire to make the most and the best of himself in the highest sense. The earliest record of his teaching is this: "This may certify that I have examined Mr. Porter B. Peck and approved of him as a teacher of the school in district No. 1, First Society in Franklin," dated Oct. 30, 1834, and signed by Samuel Nott, A. Woodward, Job B. Gages, and N. C. Greenslit, examining committee. Mr. Peck taught in this district two successive winters, and the friends and experiences of those years formed an ever pleasant memory in his life. Of his teaching in 1836 there is no record, but he may have taught a term in Eagleville during that year. In 1837 he taught "South Center District School in the First School Society in Windham," probably the Windham Center School, where he taught one term. The winter of 1839-40 he taught in the "First District Willimantic School Society," and possibly the entire school year. It was in this year, on May 13, 1840, that he took to himself a helpmeet, Miss Emeline S. Burnham, of Mansfield, daughter of Daniel and Eunice (Clark) Burnham, and it may justly be said that she was a veritable helpmeet, aiding him in his work by her intelligent sympathy, keen intellect, wide range of reading, and ever absorbing cheerfulness in his times of depression and discouragement.

ment. Immediately after his marriage Mr. Peck established his home at his father's house at North Windham, where he lived until his death, June 28, 1884, at the age of sixty-eight. He commenced teaching in North Windham in October, 1840, in the old school house—still remembered by the old residents—which stood on the site of the present building, and taught every successive winter until 1858-59, except the winter of 1846-47, when Mason Lincoln taught. In the winter of 1858-59 E. Y. Fiske was in charge, followed by Stowell L. Burnham, who taught the winters of 1859-60 and 1860-61. In the fall of 1861 Mr. Peck resumed the work of teacher there, and continued for two winters, when M. E. Merrill was hired in his stead. Following Mr. Merrill came successively P. A. Browning, Caleb Bates, and Charles Stafford. In 1868 Mr. Peck again resumed his position, and continued teaching a part or the whole year until 1877. It is possible that he taught as late as 1879. During the interim of nearly forty years between his first and last terms of teaching in North Windham he was twice elected to serve in the State Legislature, as representative in 1857 and as Senator in 1859. But as those were the days when the law-makers made their advent in the capitol city simultaneously with the Connecticut river shad, Mr. Peck was still at liberty to teach in the winter months. Later he spent some months as assistant in the office of the United States Marshal at Hartford, and still later acted as clerk in the office of the Commissioners of the School fund for a year or more. As a teacher Mr. Peck was earnest, enthusiastic, helpful, ready to spend strength and money for the good of the school, and kindled in many minds a love of learning and a desire to do, not better than their classmates, but the very best. For he learned by experience that the spirit of emulation did not encourage a spirit of kindness and brotherly love, and that the true standard of success was in what was attempted rather than in what was done. That his teachings were calculated to inspire, encourage and train his pupils to become teachers is sufficiently proved by the fact that nearly fifty of them have taught and some have achieved reputation in that line—notably William Collar, the well-known principal of the Roxbury Latin School, and Osmar H. Parker, superintendent of Indian Schools. Mr. Peck was originally a Democrat in politics, finally becoming a Republican.

Mrs. Peck was born March 7, 1817, and died Aug. 31, 1894. To Mr. and Mrs. Peck came three children: (1) Cornelia M., born in 1841, married Mason A. Bates, of Windham, and has three children, Robert Peck (proprietor and principal of the Chicago Latin School), Emeline Clark and George Mortimer, a graduate of the Boston School of Technology. (2) Sarah E., born Aug. 30, 1843, is the wife of Edward L. Burnham. (3) Julia M., born in 1847, lives on the old homestead.

FULLER. Since long prior to the war of the Revolution the Fullers have been among the prominent and socially useful citizens in the counties of Windham and Tolland. The various members of this old established family in New England have from generation to generation, been noted for their patriotism, honesty of purpose and intellectual stamina. The remains of Sergt. Abijah Fuller, a patriot of the Revolution, and of whom further mention will presently be made, rest in one of the old places of burial in the town of Hampton, Windham county, where the family name appears on record not long after 1712, at which time the lands of Hampton Hill were open to purchase, and the settlement became known as Windham Village.

(I) Robert Fuller, the founder of the American branch of this family, who was born in England and in whose veins coursed both English and Scottish blood, came to America in 1638, in the ship Bevis, and made his home in Salem and Rehoboth, dying in the latter place May 10, 1706. His wife Sarah passed away Oct. 14, 1676. Robert Fuller was the first and for many years the only bricklayer and builder of brick structures in all New England.

(II) Jonathan Fuller, son of Robert, was born about 1740, in Salem, Mass., whence he moved to Attleboro, Mass., where he served as selectman and died Feb. 10, 1709. On Dec. 14, 1664, he married Elizabeth Wilmarth, daughter of Thomas Wilmarth.
